Then sudden all the base ignoble crowd,
Loud-clam'ring, seize the helpless, worried
wretch,

And, thirsting for his blood, drag different ways
His mangled carcass on th' ensanguin'd plain.
O beasts of pity void! to oppress the weak,
To point your vengeance at the friendless head,
And with one mutual cry insult the fallen!
Emblem too just of man's degenerate race.

Others apart, by native instinct led,
 Knowing instructor! 'mong the ranker grass
 Cull each salubrious plant, with bitter juice
 Concoctive stor'd, and potent to allay
 Each vicious ferment. Thus the hand divine
 Of Providence, beneficent and kind
 To all his creatures, for the brutes prescribes
 A ready remedy, and is himself [age
 Their great physician. Now grown stiff with
 And many a painful chace, the wise old hound,
 Regardless of the frolic pack, attends
 His master's side, or slumbers at his ease
 Beneath the bending shade: there many a ring
 Runs o'er in dreams; now on the doubtful soil
 Puzzles perplex'd, or doubles intricate,
 Cautious unfolds; then wing'd with all his speed
 Bounds o'er the lawn to seize his panting prey,
 And in imperfect whimp'ring speaks his joy.

A diff'rent hound for ev'ry diff'rent chace
 Select with judgement; nor the tim'rous hare
 O'ermatch'd destroy, but leave that vile offence
 To the mean murd'rous coursing crew, intent
 On blood and spoil. O, blast their hopes, just Heav'n!

And all their painful drudgeries repay
 With disappointment and severe remorse;
 But husband thou thy pleasures, and give scope
 To all her subtle play. By nature led,
 A thousand shifts she tries: t' unravel these
 Th' industrious beagle twists his waving tail,
 Through all her labyrinths pursues, and rings
 Her doleful knell. See there with count'nance blithe,

And with a courtly grin, the fawning hound
 Salutes thee cowering; his wide opening nose
 Upwards he curls: and his large sloe-black eyes
 Melt in soft blandishments and humbled joy:
 His glossy skin, or yellow pied, or blue,
 In lights or shades by Nature's pencil drawn,
 Reflects the various tints; his ears and legs,
 Fleck'd here and there, in gay enamell'd pride
 Rival the speckled pard; his rush-grown tail
 O'er his broad back bends in an ample arch:
 On shoulders clean upright and firm he stands:
 His round cat-foot, straight hams, and widespread thighs,

And his low drooping chest, confess his speed,
 His strength, his wind, or on the steepy hill
 Or far extended plain; in ev'ry part
 So well-proportion'd, that the nicer skill
 Of Phidias himself can't blame thy choice:
 Of such compose thy pack. But here a mean
 Observe, nor the large hound prefer, of size
 Gigantic; he in the thick-woven covert
 Painfully tugs, or in the thorny brake
 Torn and embarrass'd bleeds: but if too small,
 The pigmy brood in ev'ry furrow swims;
 Moil'd in the clogging clay, panting they lag
 Behind inglorious; or else shiv'ring creep, Benumb'd and faint, beneath the sheltering thorn:

For hounds of middle size, active and strong,
 Will better answer all thy various ends,
 And crown thy pleasing labors with success.

As some brave captain, curious and exact,
 By his fix'd standard forms in equal ranks
 His gay battalion, as one man they move
 Step after step, their size the same, their arms
 Far gleaming dart the same united blaze;
 Reviewing generals his merit own;
 How regular! how just! and all his cares
 Are well repaid if mighty George approve:
 So model thou thy pack, if honor touch
 Thy gen'rous soul, and the world's just applause
 But above all take heed, nor mix thy hounds
 Of diff'rent kinds; discordant sounds shall grate
 Thy ears offended, and a lagging line
 Of babbling curs disgrace thy broken pack.
 But if th' amphibious otter be thy chace,
 Or stately stag that o'er the woodland reigns;
 Or if th' harmonious thunder of the field
 Delight thy ravish'd ears; the deep-flew'd hound Breed up with care, strong, heavy, slow, but sure:

Whose ears down-hanging from his thick round
 head [voice
 Shall sweep the morning dew, whose clanging
 Awake the mountain Echo in her cell,
 And shake the forests: the bold talbot kind,
 Of these the prime, as white as Alpine snows,
 And great their use of old. Upon the banks
 Of Tweed, slow winding through the vale, the seat

Of war and rapine once, ere Britons knew
 The sweets of peace, or Anna's dread commands
 To lasting leagues the haughty rivals aw'd,
 There dwelt a pilf'ring race, well train'd and skill'd

In all the mysteries of theft, the spoil
 Their only substance, feuds and war their sport;
 Nor more expert in every fraudulent art
 Th' arch felon * was of old, who by the tail
 Drew back his lowing prize: in vain his wiles,
 In vain the shelter of the cowering rock,
 In vain the sooty cloud and ruddy flames
 That issued from his mouth: for soon he paid
 His forfeit life; a debt how justly due
 To wrong'd Alcides and avenging Heav'n!
 Veil'd in the shades of night they ford the
 stream,

Then prowling far and near, whate'er they seize Becomes their prey; nor flocks nor herds are safe,

Nor stalls protect the steer, nor strong-barr'd doors

Secure the fav'rite horse. Soon as the morn
 Reveals his wrongs, with ghastly visage wan
 The plunder'd owner stands, and from his lips
 A thousand thronging curses burst their way:
 He calls his stout allies, and in a line
 His faithful hound he leads, then with a voice
 That utters loud his rage, attentive cheers;
 Soon the sagacious brute, his curling tail
 Flourish'd in air, low-bending plies around
 His busy nose, the steaming vapor snuffs
 Inquisitive, nor leaves one turf untried,

* Cacus, Virg. Æn. lib. viii.

'Till, conscious of the recent strains, his heart
Beats quick; his snuffing nose, his active tail,
Attest his joy; then with deep op'ning mouth,
That makes the welkin tremble, he proclaims
Th' audacious felon: foot by foot he marks
His winding way, while all the list'ning crowd
Applaud his reasonings. O'er the wat'ry ford,
Dry sandy heaths, and stony barren hills,
O'er beaten paths with men and beasts distain'd,
Unerring he pursues, 'till at the cot
Arriv'd, and seizing by his guilty throat
The caitiff vile, redeems the captive prey:
So exquisitely delicate his sense! [quire

Should some more curious sportsman here in-
Whence this sagacity, this wondrous pow'r
Of tracing step by step or man or brute?
What guide invisible points out their way
O'er the dank marsh, bleak hill, and sandy plain?

The courteous Muse shall the dark cause reveal.
The blood that from the heart incessant rolls
In many a crimson tide, then here and there
In smaller rills disparted, as it flows
Propell'd, the serous particles evade
Through th' open pores, and with the ambient
Entangling mix. As fuming vapors rise, [air
And hang upon the gently-purling brook,
There by the incumbent atmosphere compress'd,
The panting chace grows warmer as he flies,
And through the net-work of the skin perspires,
Leaves a long streaming trail behind, which, by
The cooler air condens'd, remains, unless
By some rude storm dispers'd, or rarified
By the meridian sun's intenser heat.
To ev'ry shrub the warm effluvia cling,
Hang on the grass, impregnate earth and skies.
With nostrils op'ning wide, o'er hill, o'er dale,
The vig'rous hounds pursue, with ev'ry breath
Inhale the grateful steam, quick pleasures sting
Their tingling nerves, while they their thanks repay,

And in triumphant melody confess
The titillating joy. Thus on the air
Depend the hunter's hopes. When ruddy streaks
At eve forbode a blust'ring stormy day,
Or low'ring clouds blacken the mountain's
brow;

With nipping frosts, and the keen biting blasts
Of the dry parching east, menace the trees,
With tender blossoms teeming; kindly spare
Thy sleeping pack, in their warm beds of straw
Low-sinking at their ease! listless they shrink
Into some dark recess, nor hear thy voice,
Though oft invok'd; or haply if thy call
Rouse up the slumb'ring tribe with heavy eyes, Glaz'd, lifeless, dull, downward they drop their tails

Inverted: high on their bent backs erect
Their pointed bristles stare, or 'mong the tufts
Of ranker weeds each stomach-healing plant
Curious they crop, sick, spiritless, forlorn.
These inauspicious days on other cares
Employ thy precious hours; th' improving friend
With open arms embrace, and from his lips

Glean science, season'd with good-natur'd wit
But if th' inclement skies and angry Jove
Forbid the pleasing intercourse, thy books
Invite thy ready hand; each sacred page
Rich with the wise remarks of heroes old:
Converse familiar with the illustrious dead;
With great examples of old Greece or Rome
Enlarge thy free-born heart, and bless kind
That Britain yet enjoys dear Liberty, [Heaven
That balm of life, that sweetest blessing, cheap Though purchas'd with our blood. Well-bred, polite,

Credit thy calling. See! how mean, how low,
The bookless saunt'ring youth, proud of the skut

That dignifies his cap, his flourish'd belt,
And rusty couples jingling by his side!
Be thou of other mould; and know that such Transporting pleasures were by Heaven ordain'd
Wisdom's relief, and Virtue's great reward.

BOOK II.

THE ARGUMENT.

Of the power of instinct in brutes. Two remarkable instances in the hunting of the roebuck, and in the hare going to seat in the morning. Of the variety of seats or forms of the hare, according to the changes of the season, weather, or wind. Description of the hare-hunting in all its parts, interspersed with rules to be observed by those who follow that chace. Transition to the Asiatic way of hunting, particularly the magnificent manner of the Great Mogul, and other Tartarian princes, taken from Monsicur Bernier, and the History of Gengiskan the Great. Concludes with a short reproof of tyrants and oppressors of mankind.

NOR will it less delight th' attentive sage,
To observe that instinct which unerring guides
The brutal race, which mimics reason's lore,
And oft transcends. Heaven-taught, the roebuck swift

Loiters at ease before the driving pack,
And mocks their vain pursuit, nor far he flies:
But checks his ardor, till the steaming scent
That freshens on the blade provokes their rage.
Urg'd to their speed, his weak deluded foes
Soon flag fatigu'd; strain'd to excess, each nerve,
Each slacken'd sinew, fails: they pant, they foam: [hills

Then o'er the lawn he bounds, o'er the high
Stretches secure, and leaves the scatter'd crowd
To puzzle in the distant vale below.

'Tis instinct that directs the jealous hare
To choose her soft abode. With step revers'd
She forms the doubling inaze; then, ere the morn Peeps through the clouds, leaps to her close recess.

As wandering shepherds on th' Arabian plains
No settled residence observe, but shift
Their moving camp; now on some cooler hill,

With cedars crown'd, court the refreshing breeze ;

And then below, where trickling streams distil
From some penurious source, their thirst allay,
And feed their fainting flocks : so the wise hares
Oft quit their seats, lest some more curious eye
Should mark their haunts, and by dark treacherous wiles

Plot their destruction ; or perchance in hopes
Of plenteous forage, near the ranker mead
Or matted blade wary and close they sit.

When spring shines forth, season of love and joy,

In the moist marsh, 'mong beds of rushes hid,
They cool their boiling blood. When summer
suns

Bake the cleft earth, to thick wide-waving fields
Of corn full grown they lead their helpless
young ;

But when autumnal torrents and fierce rains
Deluge the vale, in the dry crumbling bank
Their forms they delve, and cautiously avoid
The dripping covert : yet when winter's cold
Their limbs benumbs, thither with speed re-turn'd,

In the long grass they sculk, or shrinking creep
Among the wither'd leaves : thus changing still
As fancy prompts them, or as food invites.

But ev'ry season carefully observ'd,
Th' inconstant winds, the fickle element,
The wise experienc'd huntsman soon may find
His subtle, various game, nor wastes in vain
His tedious hours, till his impatient hounds,
With disappointment vex'd, each springing lark
Babbling pursue, far scatter'd o'er the fields.

Now golden Autumn from her open lap
Her fragrant bounties show's ; the fields are shorn :

Inwardly smiling the proud farmer views
The rising pyramids that grace his yard,
And counts his large increase : his barns are stor'd ;

And groaning staddles bend beneath their load.
All now is free as air, and the gay pack
In the rough bristly stubbles range unblam'd.
No widows tears o'erflow, no secret curse
Swells in the farmer's breast, which his pale lips
Trembling conceal by his fierce landlord aw'd ;
But courteous now he levels ev'ry fence,
Joins in the common cry, and halloos loud,
Charm'd with the rattling thunder of the field.
O bear me, some kind pow'r invisible !

To that extended lawn, where the gay court
View the swift racers stretching to the goal ;
Games more renown'd, and a far nobler train,
Than proud Elean fields could boast of old ;
Oh were a Theban lyre not wanting here,
And Pindar's voice, to do their merit right !
Or to those spacious plains where the strain'd eye,
In the wide prospect lost, beholds at last
Sarum's proud spire, that o'er the hills ascends,
And pierces through the clouds : or to thy downs,
Fair Cotswold ! where the well-breath'd beagle climbs.

With matchless speed, thy green aspiring brow,
And leaves the lagging multitude behind.

Hail, gentle Dawn ! mild blushing goddess,
Rejoic'd I see thy purple mantle spread [hail !
O'er half the skies ; gems pave thy radiant way,
And orient pearls from ev'ry shrub depend.
Farewell, Cleora ! here, deep sunk in down,
Slumber secure, with happy dreams amus'd,
Till grateful steams shall tempt thee to receive
Thy early meal ; or thy officious maids,
The toilet plac'd, shall urge thee to perform
Th' important work. Me other joys invite ;
The horn sonorous calls, the pack awak'd
Their matins chant, nor brook my long delay ;
My courser hears their voice : see there ! with ears
And tail erect, neighing he paws the ground :
Fierce rapture kindles in his redd'ning eyes,
And boils in ev'ry vein. As captive boys,
Cow'd by the ruling rod and haughty frowns
Of pedagogues severe, from their hard tasks
If once dismiss'd, no limits can contain
The tumult rais'd within their little breasts,
But give a loose to all their frolic play ;
So from their kennel-rush the joyous pack ;
A thousand wanton gaieties express
Their inward ecstasy, their pleasing sport
Once more indulg'd, and liberty restor'd.
The rising sun, that o'er th' horizon peeps,
As many colors from their glossy skins
Beaming reflects, as paint the various how
When April show'rs descend. Delightful scene !
Where all around is gay—men, horses, dogs ;
And in each smiling countenance appears
Fresh blooming health, and universal joy.

Huntsman ! lead on : behind the clust'ring
pack

Submiss attend, hear with respect thy whip
Loud clanging, and thy harsher voice obey.
Spare not the straggling cur that wildly roves,
But let thy brisk assistant on his back
Imprint thy just resentment ; let each lash
Bite to the quick, till howling he return,
And whining creep amid the trembling crowd.

Here on this verdant spot, where Nature kind
With double blessings crowns the farmer's hopes, [mead
Where flow'rs autumnal spring, and the rank
Affords the wand'ring hares a rich repast, Throw off thy ready pack. See where they spread,

And range around, and dash the glitt'ring dew !
If some staunch hound, with his authentic voice,
Avow the recent trail, the jostling tribe
Attend his call, then with one mutual cry
The welcome news confirm, and echoing hills
Repeat the pleasing tale. See how they thread
The brakes, and up yon furrow drive along !
But quick they back recoil, and wisely check
Their eager haste ; then o'er the fallow'd ground
How leisurely they work, and many a pause
Th' harmonious concert breaks ; till, more assur'd,

With joy redoubled the low valleys ring.
What artful labyrinths perplex their way !

Ah! there she lies; how close! she pants; she doubts
 If now she lives: she trembles as she sits,
 With horror seiz'd. The wither'd grass that clings
 Around her head, of the same russet hue,
 Almost deceiv'd my sight, had not her eyes
 With life full-beaming her vain wiles betray'd.
 At distance draw thy pack; let all be hush'd;
 No clamor loud, no frantic joy, be heard;
 Lest the wild hound run gladding o'er the plain Untractable, nor hear thy chiding voice.
 Now gently put her off; see how direct [bring
 To her known mew she flies! Here, huntsman,
 (But without hurry) all thy jolly hounds,
 And calmly lay them in. How low they stoop,
 And seem to plough the ground! then all at once
 With greedy nostrils snuff the fuming steam
 That glads their flutt'ring hearts. As winds let loose
 From the dark caverns of the blust'ring god,
 They burst away, and sweep the dewy lawn.
 Hope gives them wings, while she's spurr'd on by fear. [woods,
 The welkin rings, men, dogs, hills, rocks, and
 In the full concert join. Now, my brave youths!
 Stripp'd for the chace, give all your souls to joy.
 See how their coursers, than the mountain roe
 More fleet, the verdant carpetskim! Thick clouds
 Snorting they breathe, their shining hoofs scarce print
 The grass unbruise'd; with emulation fir'd
 They strain to lead the field, top the barr'd gate,
 O'er the deep ditch exulting bound, and brush
 The thorny-twining hedge: the riders bend
 O'er their arch'd necks; with steady hands by turns
 Indulge their speed, or moderate their rage.
 Where are their sorrows, disappointments, wrongs,
 Vexations, sickness, cares? All, all are gone!
 And with the panting winds lag far behind.
 Huntsman! her gait observe; if in wide rings
 She wheel her mazy way, in the same round
 Persisting still, she'll foil the beaten tract;
 But if she fly, and with the fav'ring wind
 Urge her bold course, less intricate thy task;
 Push on thy pack. Like some poor exil'd wretch,
 The frighted chace leaves late her dear abodes,
 O'er plains remote she stretches far away,
 Ah, never to return! for greedy Death
 Hov'ring exults, secure to seize his prey.
 Hark! from yon covert, where those tow'ring
 Above the humble copse aspiring rise, [oaks
 What glorious triumphs burst in ev'ry gale
 Upon our ravish'd ears! The hunters shout,
 The clanging horns swell their sweet winding notes,
 The pack wide op'ning load the trembling air
 With various melody; from tree to tree
 The propagated cry redoubling bounds;
 And winged zephyrs waft the floating joy
 Through all the regions near. Afflictive birch
 No more the school-boy dreads; his prison broke,

Scamp'ring he flies, nor heeds his master's call.
 The weary traveller forgets his road, [leaves
 And climbs the adjacent hill. The ploughman
 Th' unfinish'd furrow; nor his bleating flocks
 Are now the shepherd's joy. Men, boys, and girls,
 Desert the unpeopled village; and wild crowds
 Spread o'er the plain, by the sweet phrensy seiz'd.
 Look how she pants! and o'er yon op'ning glade
 Slips glancing by; while at the further end
 The puzzling pack unravel wile by wile,
 Maze within maze. The covert's utmost bound
 Slily she skirts; behind them cautious creeps,
 And in that very track so lately stain'd
 By all the steaming crowd, seems to pursue
 The foe she flies. Let cavillers deny [more;
 That brutes have reason; sure 'tis something
 'Tis Heaven directs, and stratagems inspires
 Beyond the short extent of human thought.
 But hold—I see her from the covert break;
 Sad on yon little eminence she sits;
 Intent she listens with one ear erect.
 Pond'ring and doubtful what new course to take,
 And how to 'scape the fierce blood-thirsty crew
 That still urge on, and still in volleys loud
 Insult her woes, and mock her sore distress.
 As now in louder peals the loaded winds
 Bring on the gathering storm, her fears prevail,
 And o'er the plain, and o'er the mountain's ridge,
 Away she flies; nor ships with wind and tide,
 And all their canvass wings, scud half so fast.
 Once more, ye jovial train! your courage try,
 And each clean courser's speed. We scour along
 In pleasing hurry and confusion toss'd;
 Oblivion to be wish'd! The patient pack
 Hang on the scent unwearied; up they climb,
 And ardent we pursue; our lab'ring steeds
 We press, we gore; till, once the summit gain'd,
 Painfully panting, there we breathe a while;
 Then, like a foaming torrent pouring down
 Precipitant, we smoke along the vale.
 Happy the man who, with unrivall'd speed,
 Can pass his fellows, and with pleasure view
 The struggling pack! how in the rapid course
 Alternate they preside, and jostling push
 To guide the dubious scent; how giddy youth
 Oft blabb'ring errs, by wiser age reprov'd;
 How, niggard of his strength, the wise old hound
 Hangs in the rear, till some important point
 Rouse all his diligence, or till the chace
 Sinking he finds; then to the head he springs,
 With thirst of glory fir'd, and wins the prize.
 Huntsman! take heed; they stop in full career;
 Yon crowding flocks, that at a distance gaze,
 Have haply foil'd the turf. See that old hound,
 How busily he works, but dares not trust
 His doubtful sense! Draw yet a wider ring.
 Hark! now again the chorus fills; as bells,
 Sallied a while, at once their peal renew,
 And high in air the tuneful thunder rolls.
 See how they toss, with animated rage
 Recov'ring all they lost! That eager haste
 Some doubling wile foreshows. Ah! yet once
 more

They're check'd—hold back with speed—on either hand
 They flourish round—e'en yet persist—'tis right:
 Away they spring; the rustling stubbles bend
 Beneath the driving storm. Now the poor chace
 Begins to flag, to her last shifts reduc'd.
 From brake to brake she flies, and visits all
 Her well-known haunts, where once she rang'd secure, [goes;
 With love and plenty blest. See! there she
 She reels along, and by her gait betrays
 Her inward weakness. See how black she looks!
 The sweat that clogs th' obstructed pores scarce leaves

A languid scent. And now in open view
 See! see! she flies; each eager hound exerts
 His utmost speed, and stretches ev'ry nerve.
 How quick she turns, their gaping jaws eludes,
 And yet a moment lives, till round inclos'd
 By all the greedy pack, with infant screams
 She yields her breath, and there reluctant dies!
 So when the furious Bacchanals assail'd
 Threician Orpheus, poor ill-fated bard! [banks
 Loud was the cry; hills, woods, and Hebrus'
 Return'd their clam'rous rage: distress'd he flies,
 Shifting from place to place, but flies in vain:
 For eager they pursue; till panting, faint,
 By noisy multitudes o'erpower'd, he sinks
 To the relentless crowd a bleeding prey!

The huntsman now, a deep incision made,
 Shakes out with hands impure, and dashes down,
 Her reeking entrails and yet quiv'ring heart.
 These claim the pack, the bloody perquisite
 For all their toils: stretch'd on the ground she lies
 A mangled corse; in her dim-glaring eyes
 Cold Death exults, and stiffens ev'ry limb.
 Or by the threat'ning whip, the furious hounds
 Around her bay, or at their master's foot
 Each happy favorite courts his kind applause,
 With humble adulation cowering low. [wind
 All now is joy. With cheeks full-blown they
 Her solemn dirge, while the loud-opening pack
 The concert swell, and hills and dales return
 The sadly-pleasing sounds. Thus the poor hare,
 A puny dastard animal, but vers'd
 In subtle wiles, diverts the youthful train.
 But if thy proud aspiring soul disdains
 So mean a prey, delighted with the pomp,
 Magnificence, and grandeur of the chace;
 Hear what the muse from faithful record sings.

Why on the banks of Gemna, Indian stream,
 Line within line, rise the pavilions proud,
 Their silken streamers waving in the wind?
 Why neighs the warrior horse? From tent to tent

Why press in crowds the buzzing multitude?
 Why shines the polish'd helm and pointed lance,
 This way and that far beaming o'er the plain?
 Nor Visapour nor Golconda rebel,
 Nor the great Sophy, with his num'rous host,
 Lays waste the provinces, nor glory fires
 To rob and to destroy, beneath the name
 And specious guise of war. A nobler cause
 Calls Aurengzebe to arms. No cities sack'd,

No mother's tears, no helpless orphan's cries,
 No violated leagues, with sharp remorse
 Shall sting the conscious victor, but mankind
 Shall hail him good and just: for 'tis on beasts
 He draws his vengeful sword; on beasts of prey,
 Full fed with human gore. See, see, he comes!
 Imperial Delhi, op'ning wide her gates,
 Pours out her thronging legions, bright in arms
 And all the pomp of war. Before them sound
 Clarions and trumpets, breathing martial airs
 And bold defiance. High upon his throne,
 Borne on the back of his proud elephant,
 Sits the great chief of Timur's glorious race;
 Sublime he sits amid the radiant blaze
 Of gems and gold. Omrahs about him crowd,
 And rein the Arabian steed, and watch his nod,
 And potent rajahs, who themselves preside
 O'er realms of wide extent; but here submit
 Their homage pay, alternate kings and slaves;
 Next these, with prying eunuchs girt around,
 The fair sultanas of his court; a troop
 Of chosen beauties, but with care conceal'd
 From each intrusive eye; one look is death.
 Ah! cruel eastern law! (had kings a pow'r
 But equal to their wild tyrannic will)
 To rob us of the sun's all cheering ray
 Were less severe. The vulgar close the march,
 Slaves and artificers; and Delhi mourns
 Her empty and depopulated streets.
 Now at the camp arrived, with stern review
 Through groves of spears from file to file he darts
 His sharp experienc'd eye, their order marks,
 Each in his station rang'd, exact and firm,
 Till in the boundless line his sight is lost.
 Not greater multitudes in arms appear'd
 On these extended plains, when Ammon's son
 With mighty Porus in dread battle join'd,
 The vassal world the prize; nor was that host
 More numerous of old which the Great King*
 Pour'd out on Greece from all th' unpeopled East,
 That bridg'd the Hellespont from shore to shore,
 And drank the rivers dry. Meanwhile in troops
 The busy hunter-train mark out the ground,
 A wide circumference, full many a league
 In compass round; woods, rivers, hills, and Large provinces, enough to gratify [plains,
 Ambition's highest aim, could reason bound Man's erring will. Now sit in close divan
 The mighty chiefs of this prodigious host;
 He from the throne high eminent presides,
 Gives out his mandates proud, laws of the chace,
 From ancient records drawn. With rev'rence
 And prostrate at his feet, the chiefs receive [low,
 His irreversible decrees, from which
 To vary is to die. Then his brave bands
 Each to his station leads, encamping round
 Till the wide circle is completely form'd.
 Where decent order reigns, what these command
 Those execute with speed and punctual care,
 In all the strictest discipline of war,
 As if some watchful foe, with bold insult,
 Hung low'ring o'er their camp. The high re-

* Xerxes.

That flies on wings through all th' encircling line
Each motion steers, and animates the whole.
So, by the sun's attractive pow'r controll'd,
The planets in their spheres roll round his orb;
On all he shines, and rules the great machine.

Ere yet the morn dispels the fleeting mists,
The signal given by the loud trumpet's voice,
Now high in air th' imperial standard waves,
Emblazon'd rich with gold and glitt'ring gems,
And like a sheet of fire through the dun gloom
Streaming meteorous. The soldiers' shouts
And all the brazen instruments of war,
With mutual clamor and united din
Fill the large concave, while from camp to camp
They catch the varied sounds, floating in air.
Round all the wide circumference tigers fell
Shrink at the noise; deep in his gloomy den
The lion starts, and morsels yet unchew'd
Drop from his trembling jays. Now all at once
Onward they march embattled, to the sound
Of martial harmony; fifes, cornets, drums,
That rouse the sleepy soul to arms and bold
Heroic deeds. In parties here and there,
Detach'd o'er hill and dale, the hunters range
Inquisitive; strong dogs, that match in fight
The boldest brute, around their masters wait,
A faithful guard. No haunt unsearch'd, they
From ev'ry covert, and from ev'ry den, [drive
The lurking savages. Incessant shouts
Re-echo through the woods, and kindling fires
Gleam from the mountain tops; the forest seems

One mingling blaze; like flocks of sheep they fly
Before the flaming brand; fierce lions, pards,
Boars, tigers, bears, and wolves, a dreadful crew
Of grim blood-thirsty foes! Growling along
They stalk indignant, but fierce vengeance still Hangs pealing on their rear, and pointed spears
Present immediate death. Soon as the night,
Wrapp'd in her sable veil, forbids the chace,
They pitch their tents in even ranks around
The circling camp. The guards are plac'd, and fires

At proper distances ascending rise,
And paint th' horizon with their ruddy light.
So round some island's shore of large extent,
Amid the gloomy horrors of the night,
The billows breaking on the pointed rocks
Seem all one flame, and the bright circuit wide
Appears a bulwark of surrounding fire.
What dreadful howlings and what hideous roar Disturb those peaceful shades! where erst the bird [groves
That glads the night had cheer'd the list'ning
With sweet complainings. Through the silent gloom

Oft they the guards assail; as oft repell'd
They fly reluctant, with hot-boiling rage
Stung to the quick, and mad with wild despair.
Thus, day by day, they still the chace renew,
At night encamp; till now in straiter bounds
The circle lessens, and the beasts perceive
The wall that hems them in on ev'ry side.
And now their fury bursts, and knows no mean;

From man they turn, and point their ill-judg'd rage [claws

Against their fellow-brutes. With teeth and
The civil war begins; grappling they tear;
Lions on tigers prey, and bears on wolves;
Horrible discord! till the crowd behind
Shouting pursue, and part the bloody fray.
At once their wrath subsides; tame as the lamb
The lion hangs his head; the furious pard,
Cow'd and subdued, flies from the face of man,
Nor bears one glance of his commanding eye:
So abject is a tyrant in distress.

At last, within the narrow plain confin'd,
A listed field, mark'd out for bloody deeds,
An amphitheatre more glorious far [heaps,
Than ancient Rome could boast, they crowd in Dismay'd, and quite appall'd. In meet array,
Sheath'd in refulgent arms, a noble band
Advance; great lords of high imperial blood,
Early resolv'd t' assert their royal race,
And prove by glorious deeds their valor's growth
Mature, ere yet the callow down has spread
Its curling shade. On bold Arabian steeds
With decent pride they sit, that fearless hear
The lion's dreadful roar: and down the rock
Swift shooting plunge, or o'er the mountain's
Stretching along, the greedy tiger leave [ridge
Panting behind. On foot their faithful slaves
With jav'lin's arm'd attend; each watchful eye
Fix'd on his youthful care, for him alone
He fears; and, to redeem his life, unmov'd
Would lose his own. The mighty Aurengzebe
From his high elevated throne beholds
His blooming race, revolving in his mind
What once he was, in his gay spring of life,
When vigor strung his nerves. Parental joy
Melts in his eyes, and flushes in his cheeks.
Now the loud trumpet sounds a charge. The shouts

Of eager hosts through all the circling line,
And the wild howling of the beasts within,
Rend the welkin; the flights of arrows, wing'd
With death, and jav'lin's launch'd from every arm,
Gall sore the brutal bands, with many a wound Gor'd through and through. Despair at last prevails,

When fainting nature shrinks, and rouses all
Their drooping courage. Swell'd with furious rage,
Their eyes dart fire, and on the youthful band
They rush implacable. They their broad shields
Quick interpose; on each devoted head
Their flaming falchions, as the bolts of Jove,
Descend unerring. Prostrate on the ground
The grinning monsters lie, and their foul gore
Defiles the verdant plain. Nor idle stand
The trusty slaves: with pointed spears they pierce
Through their tough hides, or at their gaping
mouths

An easier passage find. The king of brutes
In broken roarings breathes his last; the bear
Grumbles in death; nor can his spotted skin,
Though sleek it shine, with varied beauties gay,
Save the proud pard from unrelenting fate.

The battle bleeds: grim Slaughter strides along,
Glutting her greedy jaws, grins o'er her prey—
Men, horses, dogs, fierce beasts of ev'ry kind,
A strange promiscuous carnage, drench'd in
blood,

And heaps on heaps amass'd. What yet remain
Alive, with vain assault contend to break
Th' impenetrable line. Others, whom fear Inspires, with self-preserving wiles, beneath
The bodies of the slain for shelter creep,
Aghast they fly, or hide their heads dispers'd.
And now perchance (had Heaven but pleas'd)
the work

Of death had been complete, and Aurengzebe
By one dread frown extinguish'd half their race;
When, lo! the bright sultanas of his court
Appear, and to his ravish'd eyes display
Those charms but rarely to the day reveal'd.

Lowly they bend, and humbly sue to save
The vanquish'd host. What mortal can deny
When suppliant Beauty begs! At his command,
Leave a large void for their retreating foes:
Away they fly, on wings of fear upborne,
To seek on distant hills their late abodes.

Ye proud oppressors! whose vain hearts exult
In wantonness of pow'r against the brutal race,
Fierce robbers like yourselves, a guiltless war Wage uncontroll'd; here quench your thirst of
blood;

But learn from Aurengzebe to spare mankind.

BOOK III.

THE ARGUMENT.

*Of king Edgar, and his imposing a tribute of wolves' heads upon the kings of Wales; from hence a transition to fox-hunting, which is described in all its parts. Censure of an over-numerous pack. Of the several engines to destroy foxes and other wild beasts. The steel-trap described, and the manner of using it.
Description of the pitfall for the lion, and another for the elephant. The ancient way of hunting the tiger with a mirror. The Arabian manner of hunting the wild boar. Description of the royal stag-chace at Windsor Forest.
Concludes with an address to his majesty, and an eulogy upon mercy.*

IN Albion's isle, when glorious Edgar reign'd,
He, wisely provident, from her white cliffs
Launch'd half her forests, and with num'rous fleets

Cover'd his wide domain; there proudly rode
Lord of the deep, the great prerogative
Of British monarchs: each invader bold,
Dane and Norwegian, at a distance gaz'd,
And, disappointed, gnash'd his teeth in vain.
He scour'd his seas, and to remotest shores
With swelling sails the trembling corsair fled.
Rich commerce flourish'd, and with busy oars
Dash'd the resounding surge. Nor less at land
His royal cares; wise, potent, gracious Prince!
His subjects from their cruel foes he sav'd,

And from rapacious savages their flocks.
Cambria's proud kings (though with reluctance)
Their tributary wolves, head after head, [paid
In full account; till the woods yield no more,
And all the rav'nous race extinct is lost.

In fertile pastures more securely graz'd
The social troops, and soon their large increase
With curling fleeces whiten'd all the plains.
But yet, alas! the wily fox remain'd,
A subtle, pilf'ring foe, prowling around
In midnight shades, and wakeful to destroy.
In the full fold the poor defenceless lamb,
Seiz'd by his guileful arts, with sweet warm
blood

Supplies a rich repast. The mournful ewe,
Her dearest treasure lost, through the dun night
Wanders perp ex'd, and darkling bleats in vain;
While in th' adjacent bush poor Philomel (Herself a parent once, till wanton churls Despoil'd her nest) joins in her loud laments
With sweeter notes and more melodious woe.

For these nocturnal thieves, huntsman, prepare Thy sharpest vengeance. Oh! how glorious 'tis
To right th' oppress'd, and bring the felon vile
To just disgrace! Ere yet the morning peep,
Or stars retire from the first blush of day,
With thy far-echoing voice alarm thy pack,
And rouse thy bold compeers: then to the copse,
Thick with entangling grass or prickly furze,
With silence lead thy many-color'd hounds,
In all their beauty's pride. See! how they range
Dispers'd, how busily this way and that
They cross, examining with curious nose
Each likely haunt. Hark! on the drag I hear
Their doubtful notes, preluding to a cry
More nobly full, and swell'd with every mouth.
As straggling armies at the trumpet's voice
Press to their standard, hither all repair,
And hurry through the woods with hasty step,
Rustling and full of hope; now driven on heaps
They push, they strive; while from his kennel sneaks

The conscious villain. See! he sculks along Sleek at the shepherd's cost, and plump with meals

Purloin'd: so thrive the wicked here below.
Though high his brush he bears, though tipt with white

It gaily shine, yet ere the sun declin'd
Recal the shades of night, the pamper'd rogue
Shall rue his fate revers'd, and at his heels
Behold the just avenger, swift to seize
His forfeit head, and thirsting for his blood.

Heavens! what melodious strains! how beat our hearts,

Big with tumultuous joy; the loaded gales
Breathe harmony; and as the tempest drives
From wood to wood, through every dark recess
The forest thunders, and the mountains shake.
The chorus swells; less various and less sweet
The thrilling notes, when in those very groves
The feather'd choristers salute the spring,
And ev'ry bush in concert joins; or when
The master's hand, in modulated air,

Bids the loud organ breathe, and all the pow'rs
Of music in one instrument combine,
An universal minstrelsy. And now
In vain each earth he tries; the doors are barr'd
Impregnable; nor is the covert safe:

He pants for purer air. Hark! what loud shouts
Re-echo through the groves; he breaks away:
Shrill horns proclaim his flight. Each straggling hound

Strains o'er the lawn to reach the distant pack.
'Tis triumph all and joy. Now, my brave youths!

Now give a loose to the clean gen'rous steed,
Flourish the whip, nor spare the galling spur;
But in the madness of delight forget
Your fears. Far o'er the rocky hills we range,
And dangerous our course; but in the brave
True courage never fails. In vain the streams
In foaming eddies whirl; in vain the ditch,
Wide-gaping, threatens death. The craggy steep,

Where the poor dizzy shepherd crawls with care,
And clings to ev'ry twig, gives us no pain,
But down we sweep, as stoops the falcon bold
To pounce his prey: then up th' opponent hill,
By the swift motion flung, we mount aloft.

So ships in winter-seas now sliding sink
Adown the steepy wave; then, tost on high,
Ride on the billows, and defy the storm.

What lengths we pass! where will the wand'ring
chace

Lead us bewilder'd! smooth as swallows skim
The new-shorn mead, and far more swift we fly.
See my brave pack! how to the head they press,
Jostling in close array, then more diffuse
Obliquely wheel; while from their op'ning
mouths

The volley'd thunder breaks. So when the cranes
Their annual voyage steer, with wanton wing
Their figure oft they change, and their loud clang
From cloud to cloud rebounds. How far behind
The hunter crew, wide straggling o'er the plain!
The panting courser now with trembling nerves
Begins to reel; urg'd by the goring spur,
Makes many a faint effort; he snorts, he foams;
The big round drops run trickling down his sides,
With sweat and blood distain'd. Look back and view

The strange confusion of the vale below.
Where sore vexation reigns; see yon poor jade;
In vain th' impatient rider frets and swears,
And galling spurs harrow his mangled sides;
He can no more; his stiff unpliant limbs
Rooted in earth, unmov'd and fix'd he stands;
For ev'ry cruel curse returns a groan, [grief
And sobs, and faints, and dies! Who without
Can view that pamper'd steed, his master's joy,
His minion, and his daily care, well cloth'd,
Well fed, with ev'ry nicer care; no cost,
No labor spar'd; who, when the flying chace
Broke from the copse, without a rival led
The num'rous train; now a sad spectacle
Of pride brought low, and humbled insolence,
Drove like a pannier'd ass, and scourg'd along!

While these, with loosen'd reins and dangling heels

Hang on their reeling palfreys, that scarce bear
Their weights; another in the treach'rous bog Lies flound'ring, half ingulph'd. What biting thoughts

Torment th' abandon'd crew! Old Age laments
His vigor spent; the tall, plump, brawny youth
Curses his cumbrous bulk, and envies now
The short pygmean race he whilom kenn'd
With proud insulting leer. A chosen few Alone the sport enjoy, nor droop beneath Their pleasing toils. Here, huntsman! from this height

Observe yon birds of prey: if I can judge,
'Tis there the villain lurks; they hover round,
And claim him as their own. Was I not right?
See! there he creeps along; his brush he drags,
And sweeps the mire impure; from his wide jaws
His tongue unmoisten'd hangs; symptoms too
sure

Of sudden death. Ha! yet he flies, nor yields
To black despair. But one loose more, and all His wiles are vain. Hark! through yon village
now

The rattling clamor rings. The barns, the cots,
And leafless elms, return the joyous sounds.

Through ev'ry homestall, and through ev'ry yard,

His midnight walks, panting, forlorn he flies;
Through ev'ry hole he sneaks, through ev'ry jakes

Plunging, he wades besmear'd, and fondly hopes
In a superior stench to lose his own;
But, faithful to the tract, th' unerring hounds
With peals of echoing vengeance close pursue.
And now distress'd, no shelt'ring covert near,
Into the hen-roost creeps, whose walls with gore
Distain'd attest his guilt. There, villain! there Expect thy fate deserv'd. And soon from thence
The pack, inquisitive, with clamor loud, Drag out their trembling prize, and on his
blood

With greedy transport feast. In bolder notes
Each sounding horn proclaims the felon dead,
And all th' assembled village shouts for joy.

The farmer, who beholds his mortal foe
Stretch'd at his feet, applauds the glorious deed,
And grateful calls us to a short repast;
In the full glass the liquid amber smiles,
Our native product; and his good old mate
With choicest viands heaps the liberal board,
To crown our triumphs and reward our toils.

Here must th' instructive Muse (but with respect)

Censure that num'rous pack, that crowd of state,
With which the vain profusion of the great Covers the lawn, and shakes the trembling copse.

Pompous encumbrance! a magnificence
Useless, vexatious! for the wily fox,
Safe in the increasing number of his foes,
Kens well the great advantage; slinks behind,
And slyly creeps through the same beaten track,

And hunts them step by step; then views
 escap'd,
 With inward ecstasy, the panting throng
 In their own footsteps puzzled, foil'd, and lost.
 So when proud Eastern kings summon to arms
 Their gaudy legions, from far distant climes
 They flock in crowds, unpeopling half a world;
 But when the day of battle calls them forth
 To charge the well-train'd foe, a band compact
 Of chosen veterans, they press blindly on,
 In heaps confus'd by their own weapons fall,
 A smoking carnage scatter'd o'er the plain.

Nor hounds alone this noxious brood destroy;

The plunder'd warrener full many a wile
 Devises to entrap his greedy foe,
 Fat with nocturnal spoils. At close of day
 With silence drags his tail: then, from the ground

Pares thin the close-graz'd turf; there with nice
 Covers the latent death, with curious springs
 Prepar'd to fly at once, when'er the tread
 Of man or beast unwarily shall press
 The yielded surface. By the indented steel
 With gripe tenacious held, the felon grins,
 And struggles, but in vain: yet oft 'tis known,
 When ev'ry art has fail'd, the captive fox
 Has shar'd the wounded joint, and with a limb
 Compounded for his life. But if perchance
 In the deep pitfall plung'd, there's no escape,
 But unrepriev'd he dies; and, bleach'd in air,
 The jest of clowns, his reeking carcase hangs.

Of these are various kinds: not even the king
 Of brutes evades this deep-devouring grave;
 But by the wily African betray'd,
 Heedless of fate, within its gaping jaws
 Expires indignant. When the orient beam
 With blushes paints the dawn, and all the race
 Carnivorous, with blood full gorg'd, retire
 Into their darksome cells, there satiate snore
 O'er dripping offals, and the mangled limbs
 Of men and beasts, the painful forester [tops,
 Climbs the high hills, whose proud aspiring
 With the tall cedar crown'd and taper fir,
 Assail the clouds; there, 'mong the craggy rocks
 And thickets intricate, trembling he views
 His footsteps in the sand, the dismal road
 And avenue to death. Hither he calls
 His watchful bands, and low into the ground
 A pit they sink, full many a fathom deep;
 Then in the midst a column high is rear'd,
 The butt of some fair tree, upon whose top
 A lamb is plac'd, just ravish'd from his dam;
 And next a wall they build, with stones and
 earth

Encircling round, and hiding from all view
 The dreadful precipice. Now when the shades
 Of night hang low'ring o'er the mountain's brow,
 And hunger keen, and pungent thirst of blood,
 Rouse up the slothful beast, he shakes his sides,
 Slow-rising from his lair, and stretches wide
 His rav'nous paws, with recent gore distain'd.
 The forest trembles as he roars aloud,
 Impatient to destroy. O'erjoy'd he hears

The bleating innocent, that claims in vain
 The shepherd's care, and seeks with piteous
 moan

The foodful teat; himself, alas! design'd
 Another's meal. For now the greedy brute
 Winds him from far, and leaping o'er the mound
 To seize his trembling prey, headlong is plung'd
 Into the deep abyss. Prostrate he lies,
 Astunn'd and impotent. Ah! what avail
 Thine eye-balls flashing fire, thy length of tail
 That lashes thy broad sides, thy jaws besmear'd
 With blood and offals crude, thy shaggy mane
 The terror of the woods, thy stately port,
 And bulk enormous, since by stratagem
 Thy strength is foil'd! Unequal is the strife,
 When sov'reign reason combats brutal rage.

On distant Ethiopia's sun-burnt coasts
 The black inhabitants a pitfall frame,
 But of a diff'rent kind, and diff'rent use.
 With slender poles the wide capacious mouth,
 And hurdles slight, they close; o'er these is spread

A floor of verdant turf, with all its flow'rs
 Smiling delusive, and from strictest search
 Concealing the deep grave that yawns below.
 Then boughs of trees they cut, with tempting fruit

Of various kinds surcharg'd; the downy peach,
 The clust'ring vine, and of bright golden rind
 The fragrant orange. Soon as evening gray
 Advances slow, besprinkling all around
 With kind refreshing dews the thirsty glebe,
 The stately elephant from the close shade
 With step majestic strides, eager to taste
 The cooler breeze, that from the sea-beat shore
 Delightful breathes, or in the limpid stream
 To lave his panting sides; joyous he scents
 The rich repast, unweeting of the death
 That lurks within. And soon he sporting breaks
 The brittle boughs, and greedily devours
 The fruit delicious. Ah! too dearly bought;
 The price is life. For now the treach'rous turf,
 Trembling, gives way; and the unwieldy beast,
 Self-sinking, drops into the dark profound.
 So when dilated vapors struggling heave
 Th' incumbent earth, if chance the cavern'd
 ground

Shrinking subside, and the thin surface yield, Down sinks at once the pond'rous dome, ingulph'd

With all its tow'rs. Subtle, delusive Man!
 How various are thy wiles! artful to kill
 Thy savage foes, a dull unthinking race!
 Fierce from his lair springs forth the speckled pard

Thirsting for blood, and eager to destroy;
 The huntsman flies, but to his flight alone
 Confides not; at convenient distance fix'd
 A polish'd mirror stops in full career
 The furious brute: he there his image views;
 Spots against spots with rage improving glow!
 Another pard his bristly whiskers curls,
 Grins as he grins, fierce-menacing and wide Distends his op'ning jaws; himself against

Himself oppos'd, and with dread vengeance
arm'd,

The huntsman, now secure, with fatal aim
Directs the pointed spear, by which transfix'd
He dies, and with him dies the rival shade.
Thus man innum'rous engines form'd t' assail
The savage kind; but most the docile horse,
Swift and confederate with man, annoys
His brethren of the plains; without whose aid
The hunter's arts were vain, unskill'd to wage
With the more active brutes an equal war;
But, borne by him, without the well-train'd
pack

Man dares his foe, on wings of wind secure.

Him the fierce Arab mounts, and with his troop
Of bold compeers ranges the deserts wild,
Where by the magnet's aid the traveller
Steers his untrodded course, yet oft on land
Is wreck'd, in the high rolling waves of sand
Immers'd and lost; while these intrepid bands,
Safe in their horses' speed, outfly the storm,
And, scouring round, make men and beasts their
The grisly boar is singled from his herd, [prey.
As large as that in Erymanthean woods,
A match for Hercules. Round him they fly
In circles wide, and each in passing sends
His feather'd death into his brawny sides:
But perilous th' attempt; for if the steed
Haply too near approach, or the loose earth
His footing fail, the watchful angry beast
Th' advantage spies, and at one sidelong glance
Rips up his groin. Wounded, he rears aloft;
And, plunging, from his back the rider hurls
Precipitant; then, bleeding, spurns the ground,
And drags his reeking entrails o'er the plain.
Meanwhile the surly monster trots along,
But with unequal speed; for still they wound,
Swift-wheeling in the spacious ring. A wood
Of darts upon his back he bears; adown
His tortur'd sides the crimson torrents roll
From many a gaping font; and now at last Stagg'ring he falls, in blood and foam expires.

But whither rolls my devious Muse, intent
On antique tales, while yet the royal stag
Unsung remains? Tread with respectful awe Windsor's green glades, where Denham, tuneful bard!

Charm'd once the list'ning Dryads with his song,
Sublimely sweet. Oh grant me, sacred shade!
To glean submiss what thy full sickle leaves.

The morning sun, that gilds with trembling
rays

Windsor's high tow'rs, beholds the courtly train
Mount for the chace, nor views in all his course
A scene so gay: heroic noble youths,
In arts and arms renown'd, and lovely nymphs,
The fairest of this isle, where beauty dwells
Delighted, and deserts her Paphian grove
For our more favor'd shades—in proud parade
These shine magnificent, and press around
The royal happy pair. Great in themselves,
They smile superior, of external show
Regardless, while their inbred virtues give
A lustre to their pow'r, and grace their court

With real splendors, far above the pomp
Of eastern kings in all their tinsel pride.
Like troops of Amazons, the female band
Prance round their cars, not in refulgent arms
As those of old; unskill'd to wield the sword
Or bend the bow, these kill with surer aim.
The royal offspring, fairest of the fair,
Lead on the splendid train. Anna, more bright
Than summer suns, or as the lightning keen,
With irresistible effulgence arm'd,
Fires ev'ry heart: he must be more than man
Who unconcern'd can bear the piercing ray.
Amelia, milder than the blushing dawn,
With sweet engaging air, but equal pow'r,
Insensibly subdues, and in soft chains
Her willing captives leads. Illustrious maids;
Ever triumphant! whose victorious charms,
Without the needless aid of high descent,
Had aw'd mankind, and taught the world's great lords

To bow and sue for grace. But who is he,
Fresh as a rose-bud newly blown, and fair
As op'ning lilies, on whom ev'ry eye
With joy and admiration dwells? See, see!
He reins his docile barb with manly grace.
Is it Adonis for the chace array'd,
Or Britain's second hope? Hail, blooming youth!
May all your virtues with your years improve,
Till in consummate worth you shine the pride
Of these our days, and to succeeding times
A bright example! As his guard of mutes
On the great Sultan wait, with eyes deject
And fix'd on earth, no voice, no sound is heard
Within the wide serail, but all is hush'd,
And awful silence reigns: thus stand the pack
Mute and unmov'd, and cowering low to earth,
While pass the glitt'ring court and royal pair:
So disciplin'd those hounds, and so reserv'd,
Whose honor 'tis to glad the hearts of kings:
But soon the winding horn and huntsman's voice
Let loose the gen'ral chorus: far around
Joy spreads its wings, and the gay morning
smiles.

Unharbour'd now, the royal stag forsakes
His wonted lair; he shakes his dappled sides,
And tosses high his beamy head; the copse
Beneath his antlers bends. What doubling shifts
He tries! not more the wily hare; in these Would still persist, did not the full-mouth'd
pack

With dreadful concert thunder in his rear.
The woods reply, the hunters' cheering shouts
Float thro' the glades, and the wide forest rings.
How merrily they chant! their nostrils deep
Inhale the grateful steam. Such is the cry,
And such th' harmonious din, the soldier deems
The battle kindling, and the statesman grave
Forgets his weighty cares: each age, each sex,
In the wild transport joins: luxuriant joy,
And pleasure in excess, sparkling exult
On ev'ry brow, and revel unrestrain'd.
How happy art thou, Man! when thou 'rt no
more [soul,
Thyself! when all the pangs that grind thy

In rapture and in sweet oblivion lost,
Yield a short interval and ease from pain !

See the swift courser strains, his shining hoofs
Securely beat the solid ground. Who now
The dang'rous pitfall fears, with tangling heath
High-overgrown ? or who the quiv'ring bog,
Soft-yielding to the step ? All now is plain,
Plain as the strand sea-lav'd, that stretches far
Beneath the rocky shore. Glades crossing glades,
The forest opens to our wond'ring view :
Such was the king's command. Let tyrants fierce Lay waste the world ; his the more glorious part
To check their pride ; and when the brazen voice

Of war is hush'd (as erst victorious Rome)
T' employ his station'd legions in the works
Of peace ; to smooth the rugged wilderness,
To drain the stagnate fen, to raise the slope
Depending road, and to make gay the face
Of nature with th' embellishments of art.

How melts my beating heart, as I behold
Each lovely nymph, our island's boast and pride,
Push on the gen'rous steed, that strokes along,
O'er rough, o'er smooth, nor heeds the steepy hill,
Nor falters in th' extended vale below ;
Their garments loosely waving in the wind,
And all the flush of beauty in their cheeks !
While at their sides their pensive lovers wait, Direct their dubious course, now chill'd with fear,

Solicitous, and now with love inflam'd.
Oh grant, indulgent Heaven ! no rising storm
May darken with black wings this glorious scene !
Should some malignant pow'r thus damp our joys,
Vain were the gloomy cave, such as of old
Betray'd to lawless love the Tyrian queen :
For Britain's virtuous nymphs are chaste as fair ;
Spotless, unblam'd, with equal triumph reign
In the dun gloom as in the blaze of day.

Now the blown stag, through woods, bogs,
roads, and streams,
Has measur'd half the forest ; but, alas !
He flies in vain ; he flies not from his fears.
Though far he cast the ling'ring pack behind,
His haggard fancy still with horror views
The fell destroyer ; still the fatal cry
Insults his ears, and wounds his trembling heart.
So the poor fury-haunted wretch (his hands
In guiltless blood distain'd) still seems to hear
The dying shrieks ; and the pale threat'ning ghost

Moves as he moves, and as he flies pursues.
See here his slot ; up yon green hill he climbs,
Pants on its brow a while, sadly looks back
On his pursuers, cov'ring all the plain ;
But, wrung with anguish, bears not long the sight, [vale ;
Shoots down the steep, and sweats along the
There mingles with the herd, where once he reign'd [beam
Proud monarch of the groves, whose clashing
His rivals aw'd, and whose exalted pow'r
Was still rewarded with successful love.
But the base herd have learn'd the ways of men ;

Averse they fly, or with rebellious aim Chase him from thence : needless their impious
deed,

The huntsman knows him by a thousand marks ;
Black, and imboss'd ; nor are his hounds deceiv'd ;

Too well distinguish these, and never leave
Their once devoted foe : familiar grows
His scent, and strong their appetite to kill.
Again he flies, and with redoubled speed
Skims o'er the lawn ; still the tenacious crew
Hang on the track, aloud demand their prey,
And push him many a league. If haply then Too far escap'd, and the gay courtly grain
Behind are cast, the huntsman's clanging whip
Stops full their bold career : passive they stand,
Unmov'd : an humble and obsequious crowd,
As if by stern Medusa gaz'd to stones.

So at their general's voice whole armies halt
In full pursuit, and check their thirst of blood.
Soon at the king's command, like hasty streams
Damm'd up a while, they foam and pour along With fresh-recruited might. The stag, who hop'd [tunn'd

His foes were lost, now once more hears as-
The dreadful din : he shivers ev'ry limb ;
He starts, he bounds ; each bush presents a foe.
Press'd by the fresh relay, no pause allow'd,
Breathless and faint, he falters in his pace,
And lifts his weary limbs with pain, that scarce
Sustain their load : he pants, he sol's appall'd ;
Drops down his heavy head to earth beneath His cumbrous beams oppress'd. But if perchance

Some prying eye surprise him, soon he rears
Erect his tow'ring front, bounds o'er the lawn
With ill-dissembled vigor, to amuse
The knowing forester, who inly smiles
At his weak shifts and unavailing frauds.
So midnight tapers waste their last remains,
Shine forth a while, and as they blaze expire.
From wood to wood redoubling thunders roll,
And bellow thro' the vales ; the moving storm
Thickens amain, and loud triumphant shouts,
And horns shrill warbling in each glade, prelude
To his approaching fate. And now in view,
With hobbling gait and high, exerts amaz'd
What strength is left : to the last dregs of life
Reduc'd, his spirits fail, on ev'ry side
Hemm'd in, besieg'd ; not the least op'ning left
To gleaming hope, th' unhappy's last reserve.
Where shall he turn, or whither fly ? Despair
Gives courage to the weak. Resolv'd to die,
He fears no more, but rushes on his foes,
And deals his deaths around ; beneath his feet
These grovelling lie, those by his antlers gor'd Defile th' ensanguin'd plain. Ah, see ! distress'd

He stands at bay against yon knotty trunk,
That covers well his rear ; his front presents
An host of foes. O shun, ye noble train,
The rude encounter, and believe your lives
Your country's due alone. As now aloof
They wing around, he finds his soul uprais'd

To dare some great exploit; he charges home
 Upon the broken pack, that on each side
 Fly diverse; then as o'er the turf he strains,
 He vents the cooling stream, and up the breeze
 Urges his course with eager violence;
 Then takes the soil, and plunges in the flood
 Precipitant: down the mid stream he wafts
 Along, till, (like a ship distress'd, that runs Into some winding creek) close to the verge
 Of a small island, for his weary feet
 Sure anchorage he finds, there sculks immers'd:
 His nose alone above the wave draws in
 The vital air; all else beneath the flood
 Conceal'd and lost, deceives each prying eye
 Of man or brute. In vain the crowding pack
 Draw on the margin of the stream, or cut
 The liquid wave with oary feet, that move
 In equal time. The gliding waters leave
 No trace behind, and his contracted pores
 But sparingly perspire: the huntsman strains
 His lab'ring lungs, and puffs his cheeks in vain.
 At length a blood-hound bold, studious to kill
 And exquisite of sense, winds him from far;
 Headlong he leaps into the flood, his mouth
 Loud op'ning spends amain, and his wide throat
 Swells ev'ry note with joy; then fearless dives Beneath the wave, hangs on his haunch, and wounds
 Th' unhappy brute, that flounders in the stream,
 Sorely distress'd, and struggling strives to mount
 The steepy shore. Haply once more escap'd,
 Again he stands at bay, amid the groves
 Of willows bending low their downy heads.
 Outrageous transport fires the greedy pack;
 These swim the deep, and those crawl up with pain
 The slipp'ry bank, while others on firm land
 Engage: the stag repels each bold assault,
 Maintains his post, and wounds for wounds returns,
 As when some wily corsair boards a ship
 Full freighted, or from Afric's golden coasts
 Or India's wealthy strand, his bloody crew
 Upon her deck he slings; these in the deep
 Drop short, and swim to reach her steepy sides,
 And clinging climb aloft, while those on board
 Urge on the work of fate; the master bold,
 Press'd to his last retreat, bravely resolves
 To sink his wealth beneath the whelming wave,
 His wealth, his foes, nor unreveng'd to die:
 So fares it with the stag, so he resolves
 To plunge at once into the flood below,
 Himself, his foes, in one deep gulph immers'd.
 Ere yet he executes this dire intent,
 In wild disorder once more views the light;
 Beneath a weight of woe he groans distress'd,
 The tears run trickling down his hairy cheeks:
 He weeps nor weeps in vain. The king be-holds
 His wretched plight, and tenderness innate Moves his great soul. Soon at his high command
 Rebuk'd, the disappointed hungry pack
 Retire submiss, and grumbling quit their prey.

Great Prince! from thee what may thy subjects hope,
 So kind and so beneficent to brutes!
 O Mercy, heavenly born! sweet attribute!
 Thou great, thou best, prerogative of pow'r!
 Justice may guard the throne; but, join'd with
 thee,
 On rocks of adamant it stands secure,
 And braves the storm beneath: soon as thy smiles [side,
 Gild the rough deep, the foaming waves sub-
 And all the noisy tumult sinks in peace.

BOOK IV.

THE ARGUMENT.

*Of the necessity of destroying some beasts, and preserving others for the use of man. Of breeding of hounds; the season for this business. The choice of a dog of great moment.
 Of the litter of whelps. Of the number to be reared. Of setting them out to their several walks. Care to be taken to prevent their hunting too soon. Of entering the whelps.
 Of breaking them from running at sheep. Of the diseases of hounds. Of their age. Of madness: two sorts of it described; the dumb, and outrageous, madness: its dreadful effects.
 Burning of the wound recommended as preventing all ill consequences. The infectious hounds to be separated, and fed apart. The vanity of trusting to the many infallible cures for this malady. The dismal effects of the biting of a mad dog upon man described.
 Description of the otter hunting. The conclusion.*

WHATE'ER of earth is form'd to earth returns
 Dissolv'd: the various objects we behold,
 Plants, animals, this whole material mass,
 Are ever changing, ever new. The soul
 Of man alone, that particle divine, [fail:
 Escapes the wreck of worlds, when all things
 Hence great the distance 'twixt the beasts that perish
 And God's bright image, man's immortal race.
 The brute creation are his property,
 Subservient to his will and for him made:
 As hurtful these he kills, as useful those
 Preserves; their sole and arbitrary king.
 Should he not kill (as erst the Samian sage Taught unadvis'd, and Indian brachmans now
 As vainly preach), the teeming rav'nous brutes
 Might fill the scanty space of this terrene,
 Encumb'ring all the globe: should not his care Improve his growing stock, their kinds might fail;
 Man might once more on roots and acorns feed,
 And through the desarts range, shiv'ring, forlorn,
 Quite destitute of ev'ry solace dear,
 And ev'ry smiling gaiety of life.

The prudent huntsman therefore will supply
 With annual large recruits his broken pack,
 And propagate their kind. As from the root

Fresh scions still spring forth, and daily yield
New blooming honors to the parent tree;
Far shall his pack be fam'd, far sought his breed;
And princes at their tables feast those hounds
His hand presents, an acceptable boon. [urg'd

Ere yet the sun through the bright Ram has
His steepy course, or mother earth unbound
Her frozen bosom to the western gale; [solv'd,
When feather'd troops, their social leagues dis-
Select their mates, and on the leafless elm
The noisy rook builds high her wicker nest;
Mark well the wanton females of thy pack,
That curl their taper tails, and frisking court
Their piebald mates enamour'd; their red eyes
Flash fires impure; nor rest nor food they take,
Goaded by furious love. In separate cells
Confine them now, lest bloody civil wars
Annoy thy peaceful state. If left at large,
The growling rivals in dread battle join,
And rude encounter; on Scamander's stream
Heroes of old with far less fury fought
For the bright Spartan dame, their valor's prize.
Mangled and torn thy fav'rite hounds shall lie
Stretch'd on the ground; thy kennels shall appear
A field of blood: like some unhappy town
In civil broils confus'd, while Discord shakes
Her bloody scourge aloft, fierce parties rage,
Staining their impious hands in mutual death;
And still the best belov'd and bravest fall:
Such are the dire effects of lawless love.

Huntsman! these ills by timely prudent care
Prevent: for ev'ry longing dame select
Some happy paramour; to him alone
In league connubial join. Consider well
His lineage; what his fathers did of old,
Chiefs of the pack, and first to climb the rock,
Or plunge into the deep, or thread the brake
With thorns sharp-pointed, plash'd, and briers inwoven.

Observe with care his shape, sort, color, size:
Nor will sagacious huntsmen less regard
His inward habits. The vain babbler shun,
Ever loquacious, ever in the wrong:
His foolish offspring shall offend thy ears
With false alarms and loud impertinence.
Nor less the shifting cur avoid, that breaks
Illusive from the pack; to the next hedge
Devious he strays, there ev'ry Muse he tries;
If haply then he cross the steaming scent,
Away he flies vain-glorious, and exults
As of the pack supreme, and in his speed
And strength unrivall'd. Lo! cast far behind
His vex'd associates pant, and lab'ring strain
To climb the steep ascent. Soon as they reach
Th' insulting boaster, his false courage fails,
Behind he lags, doom'd to the fatal noose,
His master's hate, and scorn of all the field.
What can from such be hop'd but a base brood
Of coward curs, a frantic, vagrant race?

When now the third revolving moon appears,
With sharpen'd horns, above the horizon's brink,
Without Lucina's aid expect thy hopes
Are amply crown'd: short pangs produce to light
The smoking litter, crawling, helpless, blind;

Nature their guide, they seek the pouting teat
That plenteous streams. Soon as the tender dam
Has form'd them with her tongue, with pleasure
The marks of their renown'd progenitors, [view
Sure pledge of triumphs yet to come. All these Select with joy; but to the merciless flood
Expose the dwindling refuge, nor o'erload
Th' indulgent mother. If thy heart relent,
Unwilling to destroy, a nurse provide,
And to the foster-parent give the care
Of thy superfluous brood; she'll cherish kind
The alien offspring; pleas'd thou shalt behold
Her tenderness and hospitable love.

If frolic now and playful they desert.
Their gloomy cell, and on the verdant turf,
With nerves improv'd, pursue the mimic chace
Coursing around, unto thy choicest friends
Commit thy valued prize; the rustic dames
Shall at thy kennel wait, and in their laps
Receive thy growing hopes, with many a kiss
Caress, and dignify their little charge
With some great title, and resounding name
Of high import. But cautious here observe
To check their youthful ardor; nor permit
The unexperienced youngster, immature,
Alone to range the woods, or haunt the brakes
Where dodging conies sport: his nerves unstrung
And strength unequal, the laborious chace
Shall stint his growth, and his rash forward youth
Contract such vicious habits as thy care
And late correction never shall reclaim.

When to full strength arriv'd, mature and bold,
Conduct them to the field: not all at once;
But, as thy cooler prudence shall direct,
Select a few, and form them by degrees
To stricter discipline. With these consort
The staunch and steady sages of thy pack,
By long experience vers'd in all the wiles
And subtle doublings of the various chace.
Easy the lesson of the youthful train [guides.
When instinct prompts, and when example
If the too forward youngster at the head
Press boldly on in wanton sportive mood,
Correct his haste, and let him feel abash'd
The ruling whip; but if he stoop behind
In wary modest guise, to his own nose
Confiding sure, give him full scope to work
His winding way, and with thy voice applaud
His patience and his care; soon shalt thou view
The hopeful pupil leader of his tribe,
And all the list'ning pack attend his call. [play,

Oft lead them forth where wanton lambkins
And bleating dams with jealous eyes observe
Their tender care. If at the crowding flock
He bay presumptuous, or with eager haste
Pursue them scatter'd o'er the verdant plain,
In the foul fact attach'd, to the strong ram
Tie fast the rash offender. See! at first
His horn'd companion, fearful and amaz'd
Shall drag him trembling o'er the rugged ground;
Then, with his load fatigu'd, shall turn ahead,
And with his curl'd hard front incessant peal
The panting wretch, till, breathless and astunn'd,
Stretch'd on the turf he lie. Then spare not thou

The twining whip, but ply his bleeding sides,
Lash after lash; and with thy threat'ning voice,
Harsh-echoing from the hills, inculcate loud
His vile offence. Sooner shall trembling doves,
Escap'd the hawk's sharp talons, in mid air
Assail their dang'rous foe, than he once more
Disturb the peaceful flocks. In tender age
Thus youth is train'd, as curious artists bend
The taper pliant twig, or potters form
Their soft and ductile clay to various shapes.

Nor is't enough to breed, but to preserve
Must be the huntsman's care. The staunch old hounds,

Guides of thy pack, though but in number few,
Are yet of great account; shall oft untie
The Gordian knot when reason at a stand
Puzzling is lost, and all thy art is vain.

O'er clogging fallows, o'er dry plaster'd roads,
O'er floated meads, o'er plains with flocks dis-tain'd

Rank-scenting, these must lead the dubious way.
As party-chiefs in senates who preside
With pleaded reason, and with well-turn'd speech
Conduct the staring multitude; so these Direct the pack, who with joint cry approve,
And loudly boasts discoveries not their own.

Unnumber'd accidents and various ills
Attend thy pack, hang hovering o'er their heads,
And point the way that leads to death's dark cave.
Short is their span: few at the date arrive
Of ancient Argus, in old Homer's song
So highly honor'd: kind, sagacious brute!
Not e'en Minerva's wisdom could conceal
Thy much lov'd master from thy nicer sense:
Dying, his lord he own'd, view'd him all o'er
With eager eyes, then clos'd those eyes well pleas'd.

Of lesser ills the Muse declines to sing,
Nor stoops so low; of these each groom can tell
The proper remedy. But, oh! what care,
What prudence, can prevent madness, the worst
Of maladies! Terrific pest! that blasts
The huntsman's hopes, and desolation spreads
Through all th' unpeopled kennel unrestrain'd,
More fatal than th' envenom'd viper's bite,
Or that Apulian spider's pois'nous sting,
Heal'd by the pleasing antidote of sounds.

When Sirius reigns, and the sun's parching
Bake the dry gaping surface, visit thou, [beams
Each even and morn, with quick observant eye,
Thy panting pack. If, in dark sullen mood
The glouting hound refuse his wonted meal,
Retiring to some close obscure retreat,
Gloomy, disconsolate, with speed remove
The poor infectious wretch, and in strong chains
Bind him suspected. Thus that dire disease,
Which art can't cure, wise caution may prevent.

But this neglected, soon expect a change,
A dismal change—confusion, phrensy, death;
Or in some dark recess the senseless brute
Sits sadly pining; deep melancholy
And black despair upon his clouded brow
Hang low'ring; from his half-op'ning jaws
The clammy venom and infectious froth

Distilling fall; and from his lungs, inflam'd,
Malignant vapors taint the ambient air,
Breathing perdition; his dim eyes are glaz'd,
He droops his pensive head; his trembling limbs
No more support his weight; abject he lies,
Dumb, spiritless, benumb'd; till death at last
Gracious attends, and kindly brings relief.

Or, if outrageous grown, behold, alas!
A yet more dreadful scene; his glaring eyes
Redden with fury; like some angry boar
Churning he foams, and on his back erect
His pointed bristles rise; his tail incurv'd
He drops, and with harsh broken howlings rends
The poison-tainted air; with rough hoarse voice
Incessant bays, and snuffs th' infectious breeze;
This way and that he stares aghast, and starts
At his own shade, jealous, as if he deem'd
The world his foes. If haply t'wards the stream
He cast his roving eye, cold horror chills
His soul; averse he flies, trembling, appall'd;
Now frantic to the kennel's utmost verge
Raving he runs, and deals destruction round:
The pack fly diverse; for whate'er he meets
Vengeful he bites, and ev'ry bite is death.

If now perchance, thro' the weak fence escap'd,
Far up the wind he roves, with open mouth
Inhales the cooling breeze, nor man nor beast
He spares implacable. The hunter horse,
Once kind associate of his sylvan toils
(Who haply now without the kennel's mound
Crops the rank mead, and list'ning hears with joy
The cheering cry that morn and eve salutes
His raptur'd sense), a wretched victim falls.
Unhappy quadruped! No more, alas!
Shall thy fond master with his voice applaud
Thy gentleness, thy speed; or with his hand
Stroke thy soft dappled sides, as he each day
Visits thy stall, well pleas'd: no more shalt thou
With sprightly neighings to the winding horn,
And the loud op'ning pack in concert join'd,
Glad his proud heart; for oh! the secret wound
Rankling inflames! He bites the ground, and dies!
Hence to the village with pernicious haste
Baneful he bends his course: the village flies
Alarm'd; the tender mother in her arms
Hugs close the trembling babe; the doors are barr'd,

And flying curs, by native instinct taught,
Shun the contagious bane: the rustic bands
Hurry to arms, the rude militia seize
Whate'er at hand they find; clubs, forks, or guns,
From ev'ry quarter charge the furious foe,
In wild disorder and uncouth array; [gor'd,
Till, now with wounds on wounds oppress'd and
At one short pois'nous grasp he breathes his last.

Hence to the kennel, Muse! return, and view
With heavy heart that hospital of woe,
Where Horror stalks at large! Insatiate Death
Sits growling o'er his prey; each hour presents
A different scene of ruin and distress.
How busy art thou, Fate! and how severe
Thy pointed wrath! The dying and the dead
Promiscuous lie: o'er these the living fight
In one eternal broil, not conscious why,

Nor yet with whom. So drunkards in their cups Spare not their friends, while senseless squabble reigns.

Huntsman, it much behoves thee to avoid
The perilous debate. Ah! rouse up all
Thy vigilance, and tread the treach'rous ground
With careful step. Thy fires unquench'd preserve,

As erst the vestal flame: the pointed steel
In the hot embers hide; and if surpris'd
Thou feel'st the deadly bite, quick urge it home
Into the recent sore, and cauterise [event:
The wound: spare not thy flesh, nor dread th'
Vulcan shall save when Æsculapius fails.

Here should the knowing Muse recount the means

To stop this growing plague: and here, alas!
Each hand presents a sov'reign cure, and boasts Infallibility; but boasts in vain.

On this depend—each to his sep'rate seat
Confine, in fetters bound; give each his mess
Apart, his range in open air; and then
If deadly symptoms to thy grief appear,
Devote the wretch, and let him greatly fall,
A gen'rous victim for the public weal.

Sing, philosophic Muse! the dire effects
Of this contagious bite on hapless man.
The rustic swains, by long tradition taught
Of leeches old, as soon as they perceive
The bite impress, to the sea-coasts repair.
Plung'd in the briny flood, th' unhappy youth
Now journeys home secure, but soon shall wish
The seas as yet had cover'd him beneath
The foaming surge full many a fathom deep.

A fate more dismal, and superior ills,
Hang o'er his head devoted. When the moon,
Closing her monthly round, returns again
To glad the night, or when full-orb'd she shines
High in the vault of heaven, the lurking pest Begins the dire assault. The pois'nous foam,
Through the deep wound instill'd with hostile
And all its fiery particles saline, [rage,
Invades th' arterial fluid, whose red waves
Tempestuous heave, and, their cohesion broke,
Fermenting boil; intestine war ensues,
And order to confusion turns embroil'd.
Now the distended vessels scarce contain
The wild uproar, but press each weaker part,
Unable to resist: the tender brain

And stomach suffer most: convulsions shake
His trembling nerves, and wand'ring pungent pains

Pinch sore the sleepless wretch: his flutt'ring
Oft intermits; pensive and sad, he mourns
His cruel fate, and to his weeping friends
Laments in vain; to hasty anger prone, [step,
Resents each slight offence, walks with quick
And wildly stares: at last with boundless sway
The tyrant phrensy reigns; for as the dog
Whose fatal bite convey'd th' infectious bane,
Raving he foams, and howls, and barks, and
Like agitations in his boiling blood [bites.
Present like species to his troubled mind,
His nature and his actions all canine.

So (as old Homer sung) th' associates wild
Of wand'ring Ithacus, by Circe's charms
To swine transform'd, ran grunting through the Dreadful example to a wicked world! [groves.
See there distress'd he lies! parch'd up with thirst,

But dares not drink; till now at last his soul
Trembling escapes, her noisome dungeon leaves,
And to some purer region wings away.

One labor yet remains, celestial Maid!

Another element demands thy song.

No more o'er craggy steeps, thro' coverts thick
With pointed thorn, and briers intricate,
Urge on with horn and voice the painful pack,
But skim with wanton wing th' irriguous vale,
Where winding streams amid the flow'ry meads
Perpetual glide along, and undermine
The cavern'd banks, by the tenacious roots
Of hoary willows arch'd, gloomy retreat
Of the bright scaly kind, where they at will
On the green wat'ry reed their pasture graze;
Suck the moist soil; or slumber at their ease,
Rock'd by the restless brook that draws aslope
Its humid train, and laves their dark abodes.

Where rages not oppression? where, alas!
Is Innocence secure? Rapine and Spoil Haunt e'en the lowest deeps; seas have their sharks,

Rivers and ponds inclose the rav'nous pike;
He in his turn becomes a prey, on him
Th' amphibious otter feasts. Just is his fate Deserv'd: but tyrants know no bounds; nor spears,

That bristle on his back, defend the perch
From his wide greedy jaws; nor burnish'd mail
The yellow carp; nor all his arts can save
Th' insinuating eel, that hides his head
Beneath the slimy mud; nor yet escapes
The crimson-spotted trout, the river's pride,
And beauty of the stream. Without remorse
This midnight pillager, raging around,
Insatiate, swallows all. The owner mourns
Th' unpeopled rivulet, and gladly hears
The huntsman's early call, and sees with joy
The jovial crew, that march upon its banks
In gay parade, with bearded lances arm'd.

This subtle spoiler, of the beaver kind,
Far off perhaps, where ancient alders shade
The deep still pool, within some hollow trunk
Contrives his wicker couch, whence he surveys
His long purlieu, lord of the stream, and all
The finny shoals his own. But you, brave youths!

Dispute the felon's claim; try ev'ry root,
And ev'ry reedy bank; encourage all
The busy spreading pack, that fearless plunge
Into the flood, and cross the rapid stream.
Bid rocks and caves, and each resounding shore,
Proclaim your bold defiance! Loudly raise
Each cheering voice, till distant hills repeat
The triumphs of the vale. On the soft sand
See there his seal impress'd! and on that bank
Behold the glitt'ring spoils, half-eaten fish,
Scales, fins, and bones, the leavings of his feast:

Ah! on that yielding sag-bed, see, once more
His seal I view. O'er yon dank rushy marsh
The sly goose-footed prowler bends his course,
And seeks the distant shallows. Huntsman, bring

Thy eager pack, and trail him to his couch.
Hark! the loud peal begins, the clam'rous joy,
The gallant chiding, loads the trembling air.

Ye Naiads fair, who o'er these floods preside,
Raise up your dripping heads above the wave,
And hear our melody. The harmonious notes
Float with the stream, and ev'ry winding creek
And hollow rock, that o'er the dimpling flood
Nods pendant, still improve from shore to shore
Our sweet reiterated joys. What shouts!
What clamor loud! what gay heart-cheering sounds

Urge thro' the breathing brass their mazy way!
Not choirs of Tritons glad with sprightlier strains
The dancing billows, when proud Neptune rides
In triumph o'er the deep. How greedily
They snuff the fishy steam that to each blade
Rank-scenting clings! See how the morning dews [drop

They sweep, that from their feet besprinkling
Dispers'd, and leave a track oblique behind.
Now on firm land they range; then in the flood
They plunge tumultuous, or through reedy pools
Rustling they work their way: no hole escapes
Their curious search. With quick sensation now
The fuming vapor stings; flutter their hearts,
And joy redoubled bursts from ev'ry mouth
In louder symphonies. Yon hollow trunk,
That with its hoary head incurv'd salutes
The passing wave, must be the tyrant's fort,
And dread abode. How these impatient climb,
While others at the root incessant bay!
They put him down. See, there he dives along!
Th' ascending bubbles mark his gloomy way.
Quick fix the nets, and cut off his retreat
Into the shelt'ring deeps. Ah! there he vents!
The pack plunge headlong, and protended spears
Menace destruction, while the troubled surge
Indignant foams, and all the scaly kind
Affrighted hide their heads. Wild tumult reigns,
And loud uproar. Ah! there once more he vents!
See! that bold hound has seiz'd him; down they sink,

Together lost; but soon shall he repent
His rash assault. See! there escap'd he flies Half drown'd, and clambers up the slippery bank,

With ouze and blood distain'd. Of all the brutes,
Whether by nature form'd, or by long use,
This artful diver best can bear the want
Of vital air. Unequal is the fight
Beneath the whelming element: yet there
He lives not long, but respiration needs
At proper intervals. Again he vents;
Again the crowd attack. That spear has pierc'd
His neck, the crimson waves confess the wound.
Fix'd is the bearded lance, unwelcome guest,
Where'er he flies; with him it sinks beneath,
With him it mounts; sure guide to ev'ry foe.

Inly he groans, nor can his tender wound
Bear the cold stream. Lo! to yon sedgy bank
He creeps disconsolate: his num'rous foes Surround him, hounds and men. Pierc'd through and through

On pointed spears they lift him high in air;
Wriggling he hangs, and grins, and bites in vain.
Bid the loud horns, in gaily-warbling strains,
Proclaim the felon's fate. He dies! he dies!

Rejoice, ye scaly tribes! and leaping dance
Above the wave, in sign of liberty
Restor'd; the cruel tyrant is no more.
Rejoice, secure and blest, did not as yet
Remain some of your own rapacious kind,
And man, fierce man! with all his various wiles.

O happy, if ye knew your happy state,
Ye rangers of the fields! whom Nature boon
Cheers with her smiles, and ev'ry element
Conspires to bless. What if no heroes frown
From marble pedestals, nor Raphael's works,
Nor Titian's lively tints, adorn our walls?
Yet these the meanest of us may behold,
And at another's cost may feast at will [more?
Our wond'ring eyes: what can the owner
But vain, alas! is wealth not grac'd with pow'r.
The flow'ry landscape and the gilded dome,
And vistas op'ning to the wearied eye,
Thro' all his wide domain; the planted grove,
The shrubby wilderness, with its gay choir
Of warbling birds, can't lull to soft repose
Th' ambitious wretch, whose discontented soul
Is harrow'd day and night: he mourns, he pines,
Until his prince's favor makes him great.
See there he comes, th' exalted idol comes!
The circle's form'd, and all his fawning slaves
Devoutly bow to earth; from ev'ry mouth
The nauseous flatt'ry flows, which he returns
With promises that die as soon as born.
Vile intercourse! where Virtue has no place.
Frown but the monarch, all his glories fade;
He mingles with the throng, outcast, undone,
The pageant of a day; without one friend
To sooth his tortur'd mind; all, all are fled;
For though they bask'd in his meridian ray,
The insects vanish as his beams decline.

Not such our friends; for here no dark design,
No wicked int'rest, bribes the venal heart;
But inclination to our bosom leads,
And weds them there for life; our social cups
Smile as we smile; open and unreserv'd,
We speak our inmost souls; good-humor, mirth,
Soft complaisance, and wit from malice free,
Smooth ev'ry brow, and glow from ev'ry cheek.

O happiness sincere! what wretch would groan
Beneath the galling load of pow'r, or walk
Upon the slipp'ry pavements of the great,
Who thus could reign unenvied and secure?

Ye guardian Pow'rs, who make mankind your care,
Give me to know wise Nature's hidden depths,
Trace each mysterious cause, with judgement
Th' expanded volume, and submissive adore [read
That great creative Will, who at a word
Spoke forth the wondrous scene. But if my soul,

To this gross clay confin'd, flutters on earth
 With less ambitious wing, unskill'd to range
 From orb to orb, where Newton leads the way,
 And view with piercing eyes the grand machine,
 Worlds above worlds; subservient to his voice
 Who, veil'd in clouded majesty, alone
 Gives light to all, bids the great system move,
 And changeful seasons in their turns advance,
 Unmov'd, unchang'd, himself; yet this at least
 Grant me propitious—an inglorious life
 Calm and serene, nor lost in false pursuits
 Of wealth or honors; but enough to raise
 My drooping friends, preventing modest want
 That dares not ask: and if, to crown my joys,
 Ye grant me health, that, ruddy in my cheeks,
 Blooms in my life's decline; fields, woods, and
     streams,
 Each tow'ring hill, each humble vale below,
 Shall hear my cheering voice: my hounds shall wake
 The lazy morn, and glad th' horizon round.

CANTO I.

YOU, who the sweets of rural life have known,
 Despise th' ungrateful hurry of the town;
 In Windsor groves your easy hours employ,
 And, undisturb'd, yourself and Muse enjoy.
 Thames listens to thy strains, and silent flows,
 And no rude wind through rustling osier blows;
 While all his wond'ring nymphs around thee
     throng,
 To hear the Syrens warble in thy song.
 But I, who ne'er was blest by fortune's hand,
 Nor brighten'd ploughshare in paternal land,
 Long in the noisy town have been immur'd,
 Respir'd its smoke, and all its cares endur'd;
 Where news and politics divide mankind,
 And schemes of state involve th' uneasy mind;
 Faction embroils the world; and ev'ry tongue
 Is mov'd by flatt'ry, or with scandal hung:
 Friendship, for sylvan shades, the palace flies,
 Where all must yield to int'rest's dearer ties;
 Each rival Machiavel with envy burns,
 And honesty forsakes them all by turns;
 While calumny upon each party's thrown,
 Which both promote, and both alike disown.
 Fatigued at last, a calm retreat I chose,
 And sooth'd the harass'd mind with sweet repose, [clime,
 Where fields and shades, and the refreshing
 Inspire the sylvan song, and prompt my rhyme.
 My Muse shall rove through flow'ry meads and
     plains,
 And deck with rural sports her native strains;
 And the same road ambitiously pursue,
 Frequented by the Mantuan swain and you.

'Tis not that rural sports alone invite,
 But all the grateful country beams delight;
 Here blooming health exerts her gentle reign,
 And strings the sinews of th' industrious swain.
 Soon as the morning lark salutes the day,
 Through dewy fields I take my frequent way,
 Where I behold the farmer's early care
 In the revolving labors of the year. [crown'd,
 When the fresh Spring in all her state is
 And high luxuriant grass o'erspreads the ground,
 The laborer with a bending sithe is seen,
 Shaving the surface of the waving green;
 Of all her native pride disrobes the land,
 And meads lays waste before his sweeping hand;
 While with the mounting sun the meadow
     glows,
 The fading herbage round he loosely throws:
 But, if some sign portend a lasting show'r,
 Th' experienc'd swain foresees the coming
     hour;
 His sun-burnt hands the scatt'ring fork forsake,
 And ruddy damsels ply the saving rake;
 In rising hills the fragrant harvest grows,
 And spreads along the field in equal rows.
 Now when the height of heaven bright Phœ-bus gains,
 And level rays cleave wide the thirsty plains;
 When heifers seek the shade and cooling lake,
 And in the middle path-way basks the snake;
 O lead me, guard me from the sultry hours,
 Hide me, ye forests, in your closest bow'rs,
 Where the tall oak his spreading arms entwines,
 And with the beech a mutual shade combines;
 Where flows the murn'ring brook, inviting dreams,
 Where bordering hazel overhangs the streams,
 Whose rolling current, winding round and
     round,
 With frequent falls makes all the wood resound;
 Upon the mossy couch my limbs I cast,
 And e'en at noon the sweets of ev'ning taste.
 Here I peruse the Mantuan's Georgic strains,
 And learn the labors of Italian swains;
 In ev'ry page I see new landscapes rise,
 And all Hesperia opens to my eyes;
 I wander o'er the various rural toil,
 And know the nature of each diff'rent soil:
 This waving field is gilded o'er with corn,
 That spreading trees with blushing fruit adorn:
 Here I survey the purple vintage grow,
 Climb round the poles, and rise in graceful row:
 Now I behold the steed curvet and bound,
 And paw with restless hoof the smoking ground:
 The dewlapp'd bull now chafes along the plain,
 While burning love ferments in ev'ry vein;
 His well-arm'd front against his rival aims,
 And by the dint of war his mistress claims:
 The careful insect 'midst his works I view
 Now from the flow'rs exhaust the fragrant dew;
 With golden treasures load his little thighs,
 And steer his distant journey through the skies;

* This Poem received many material corrections from the Author after it was first published.

Some against hostile drones the hive defend ;
Others with sweets the waxen cells distend ;
Each in the toil his destin'd office bears,
And in the little bulk a mighty soul appears.
Or when the ploughman leaves the task of day,
And trudging homeward whistles on the way ;
When the big-udder'd cows with patience
stand,

Waiting the strokings of the damsel's hand ;
No warbling cheers the woods ; the feather'd choir,

To court kind slumbers, to the sprays retire :
When no rude gale disturbs the sleeping trees,
Nor aspen leaves confess the gentlest breeze ;
Engag'd in thought, to Neptune's bounds I
To take my farewell of the parting day ; [stray,
Far in the deep the sun his glory hides,
A streak of gold the sea and sky divides :
The purple clouds their amber linings show,
And edg'd with flame rolls ev'ry wave below :
Here pensive I behold the fading light,
And o'er the distant billow lose my sight.

Now Night in silent state begins to rise,
And twinkling orbs bestrew th' uncloudy skies ;
Her borrow'd lustre growing Cynthia lends,
And on the main a glitt'ring path extends ;
Millions of worlds hang in the spacious air ;
Which round their suns their annual circles
steer ;

Sweet contemplation elevates my sense,
While I survey the works of Providence.
O, could the Muse in loftier strains rehearse
The glorious Author of the universe,
Who reins the winds, gives the vast ocean
bounds, [rounds,

And circumscribes the floating worlds their
My soul should overflow in songs of praise,
And my Creator's name inspire my lays !

As in successive course the seasons roll,
So circling pleasures recreate the soul.
When genial spring a living warmth bestows,
And o'er the year her verdant mantle throws,
No swelling inundation hides the grounds,
But crystal currents glide within their bounds ;
The finny brood their wonted haunts forsake,
Float in the sun, and skim along the lake :
With frequent leap they range the shallow
streams,

Their silver coats reflect the dazzling beams.
Now let the fisherman his toils prepare,
And arm himself with ev'ry wat'ry snare ;
His hooks, his lines, peruse with careful eye ;
Increase his tackle, and his rod re-tie. [drain,

When floating clouds their spongy fleeces
Troubling the streams with swift-descending rain ; [side,

And waters, tumbling down the mountain's
Bear the loose soil into the swelling tide ;
Then, soon as vernal gales begin to rise,
And drive the liquid burthen through the skies,
The fisher to the neighb'ring current speeds,
Whose rapid surface purls unknown to weeds :
Upon a rising border of the brook

He sits him down, and ties the treach'rous hook ;

Now expectation cheers his eager thought,
His bosom glows with treasures yet uncaught ;
Before his eyes a banquet seems to stand,
Where ev'ry guest applauds his skilful hand.

Far up the stream the twisted hair he throws,
Which down the murm'ring current gently
flows ;

When, if or chance or hunger's powerful sway
Directs the roving trout this fatal way,
He greedily sucks in the twining bait,
And tugs and nibbles the fallacious meat :
Now, happy fisherman, now twitch the line !
How thy rod bends ! behold, the prize is thine !
Cast on the bank, he dies with gasping pains,
And trickling blood his silver mail distains.

You must not ev'ry worm promiscuous use ;
Judgement will tell the proper bait to choose :
The worm that draws along immoderate size
The trout abhors, and the rank morsel flies :
And, if too small, the naked fraud's in sight,
And fear forbids, while hunger does invite.
Those baits will best reward the fisher's pains,
Whose polish'd tails a shining yellow stains ;
Cleanse them from filth, to give a tempting
gloss,

Cherish the sullied reptile race with moss ;
Amid the verdant bed they twine, they toil,
And from their bodies wipe their native soil.

But when the sun displays his glorious beams,
And shallow rivers flow with silver streams,
Then the deceit the scaly breed survey,
Bask in the sun, and look into the day :
You now a more delusive art must try,
And tempt their hunger with a curious fly.

To frame the little animal, provide
All the gay hues that wait on female pride ;
Let nature guide thee ; sometimes golden wire
The shining bellies of the fly require ;
The peacock's plumes thy tackle must not fail,
Nor the dear purchase of the sable's tail.
Each gaudy bird some slender tribute brings,
And lends the growing insect proper wings :
Silks of all colors must their aid impart,
And ev'ry fur promote the fisher's art.
So the gay lady, with expensive care,
Borrows the pride of land, of sea, and air ;
Furs, pearls, and plumes, the glitt'ring thing displays,

Dazzles our eyes, and easy hearts betrays.

Mark well the various seasons of the year,
How the succeeding insect race appear ;
In this revolving moon one color reigns,
Which in the next the fickle trout disdains.
Oft have I seen a skilful angler try
The various colors of the treach'rous fly :
When he with fruitless pain has skimm'd the brook,

And the coy fish rejects the skipping hook,
He shakes the boughs that on the margin grow,
Which o'er the stream a waving forest throw ;
When if an insect fall (his certain guide)
He gently takes him from the whirling tide ;
Examines well his form with curious eyes,
His gaudy vest, his wings, his horns, and size ;

Then round his hook the chosen fur he winds,
 And on the back a speckled feather binds;
 So just the colors shine through ev'ry part,
 That Nature seems again to live in Art.
 Let not thy wary step advance too near,
 While all thy hope hangs on a single hair;
 The new-form'd insect on the water moves,
 The speckled trout the curious snare approves:
 Upon the curling surface let it glide,
 With natural motion from thy hand supplied;
 Against the stream now gently let it play,
 Now in the rapid eddy roll away.
 The scaly shoals float by, and, seiz'd with fear,
 Behold their fellows tost in thinner air;
 But soon they leap, and catch the swimming bait,

Plunge on the hook, and share an equal fate.

When a brisk gale against the current blows,
 And all the wat'ry plain in wrinkles flows,
 Then let the fisherman his art repeat,
 Where bubbling eddies favor the deceit.

If an enormous salmon chance to spy
 The wanton errors of the floating fly;
 He lifts his silver gills above the flood,
 And greedily sucks in th' unfaithful food;
 Then downward plunges with the fraudulent prey,
 And bears with joy the little spoil away:
 Soon in smart pain he feels the dire mistake,
 Lashes the wave, and beats the foamy lake;
 With sudden rage he now aloft appears,
 And in his eye convulsive anguish bears:
 And now again, impatient of the wound,
 He rolls and writhes his shining body round;
 Then headlong shoots beneath the dashing tide;
 The trembling fins the boiling wave divide.
 Now hope exalts the fisher's beating heart;
 Now he turns pale, and fears his dubious art;
 He views the tumbling fish with longing eyes,
 While the line stretches with th' unwieldy
 prize;

Each motion humors with his steady hands,
 And one slight hair the mighty bulk commands:
 Till tir'd at last, despoil'd of all his strength,
 The game athwart the stream unfolds his length,
 He now with pleasure views the gasping prize
 Gnash his sharp teeth, and roll his blood-shot
 eyes;

Then draws him to the shore with artful care,
 And lifts his nostrils in the sick'ning air:
 Upon the burthen'd stream he floating lies,
 Stretches his quiv'ring fins, and gasping dies.

Would you preserve a num'rous finny race,
 Let your fierce dogs the rav'nous otter chase
 (The amphibious monster ranges all the shores, Darts through the waves, and ev'ry haunt explores):

Or let the gin his roving steps betray,
 And save from hostile jaws the scaly prey.

I never wander where the bord'ring reeds
 O'erlook the muddy stream, whose tangling
 Perplex the fisher; I nor choose to bear [weeds
 The thievish nightly net, nor barbed spear;
 Nor drain I ponds, the golden carp to take;
 Nor troll for pikes, dispeoplers of the lake:

Around the steel no tortur'd worm shall twine,
 No blood of living insect stain my line.
 Let me, less cruel, cast the feather'd hook,
 With pliant rod, athwart the pebbled brook,
 Silent along the mazy margin stray,
 And with the fur-wrought fly delude the prey.

CANTO II.

Now, sporting Muse, draw in the flowing reins,

Leave the clear streams awhile for sunny plains.
 Should you the various arms and toils rehearse,
 And all the fishermen adorn thy verse;
 Should you the wide encircling net display,
 And in its spacious arch inclose the sea;
 Then haul the plunging load upon the land,
 And with the sole and turbot hide the sand;
 It would extend the growing theme too long,
 And tire the reader with the wat'ry song.

Let the keen hunter from the chace refrain,
 Nor render all the ploughman's labor vain,
 When Ceres pours out plenty from her horn,
 And clothes the fields with golden ears of corn.
 Now, now, ye reapers, to your task repair,
 Haste! save the product of the bounteous year:
 To the wide gathering hook long furrows yield,
 And rising sheaves extend through all the field.

Yet, if for sylvan sports thy bosom glow,
 Let thy fleet greyhound urge his flying foe.
 With what delight the rapid course I view!
 How does my eye the circling race pursue!
 He snaps deceitful air with empty jaws;
 The subtle hare darts swift beneath his paws;
 She flies, he stretches, now with nimble bound
 Eager he presses on, but overshoots his ground;
 She turns; he winds, and soon regains the way,
 Then tears with gory mouth the screaming prey.

What various sport does rural life afford!
 What unbought dainties heap the wholesome board!

Nor less the spaniel, skilful to betray,
 Rewards the fowler with the feather'd prey.
 Soon as the laboring horse with swelling veins
 Has safely hous'd the farmer's doubtful gains,
 To sweet repast th' unwary partridge flies,
 With joy amid the scatter'd harvest lies:
 Wand'ring in plenty, danger he forgets,
 Nor dreads the slav'ry of entangling nets.
 The subtle dog scours with sagacious nose
 Along the field, and snuffs each breeze that blows;

Against the wind he takes his prudent way,
 While the strong gale directs him to the prey.
 Now the warm scent assures the covey near;
 He treads with caution, and he points with fear;
 Then (lest some sentry-fowl the fraud descry,
 And bid his fellows from the danger fly)
 Close to the ground in expectation lies,
 Till in the snare the flutt'ring covey rise.
 Soon as the blushing light begins to spread,
 And glancing Phœbus gilds the mountain's
 head,

His early flight th' ill-fated partridge takes,
 And quits the friendly shelter of the brakes.
 Or, when the sun casts a declining ray,
 And drives his chariot down the western way,
 Let your obsequious ranger search around,
 Where yellow stubble withers on the ground:
 Nor will the roving spy direct in vain,
 But num'rous coveys gratify thy pain.
 When the meridian sun contracts the shade,
 And frisking heifers seek the cooling glade;
 Or when the country floats with sudden rains,
 Or driving mists deface the moisten'd plains;
 In vain his toils th' unskilful fowler tries, [lies.
 While in thick woods the feeding partridge

Nor must the sporting verse the gun forbear,
 But what's the Fowler's be the Muse's care.
 See how the well-taught pointer leads the way:
 The scent grows warm; he stops; he springs
 the prey:

The flutt'ring coveys from the stubble rise,
 And on swift wing divide the sounding skies;
 The scatt'ring lead pursues the certain sight,
 And death in thunder overtakes their flight.
 Cool breathes the morning air, and Winter's hand

Spreads wide her hoary mantle o'er the land;
 Now to the copse thy lesser spaniel take,
 Teach him to range the ditch, and force the brake;

Not closest coverts can protect the game:
 Hark! the dog opens; take thy certain aim.
 The woodcock flutters; how he wav'ring flies!
 The wood resounds: he wheels, he drops, he dies.

The tow'ring hawk let future poets sing,
 Who terror bears upon his soaring wing:
 Let them on high the frightened hern survey,
 And lofty numbers paint their airy fray.
 Nor shall the mountain lark the Muse detain,
 That greets the morning with his early strain;
 When, 'midst his song, the twinkling glass
 betrays,

While from each aple flash the glancing rays,
 And in the sun the transient colors blaze,
 Pride lures the little warbler from the skies:
 The light-enamor'd bird deluded dies.

But still the chace, a pleasing task, remains;
 The hound must open in these rural strains.
 Soon as Aurora drives away the night,
 And edges eastern clouds with rosy light,
 The healthy huntsman with the cheerful horn,
 Summons the dogs, and greets the dappled morn;
 The jocund thunder wakes th' enliven'd hounds,
 They rouse from sleep and answer sounds for sounds; [take;

Wide through the furzy field their route they
 Their bleeding bosoms force the thorny brake:
 The flying game their smoking nostrils trace,
 No bounding hedge obstructs their eager pace;
 The distant mountains echo from afar,
 And hanging woods resound the flying war:
 The tuneful noise the sprightly courser hears,
 Paws the green turf, and pricks his trembling
 ears;

The slacken'd rein now gives him all his speed,
 Back flies the rapid ground beneath the steed;
 Hills, dales, and forests, far behind remain,
 While the warm scent draws on the deep-mouth'd train.

Where shall the trembling hare a shelter find?
 Hark! death advances in each gust of wind!
 New stratagems and doubling wiles she tries;
 Now circling turns, and now at large she flies;
 Till, spent at last, she pants, and heaves for breath,

Then lays her down, and waits devouring death.
 But stay, advent'rous Muse! hast thou the force

To wind the twisted horn, to guide the horse?
 To keep thy seat unmov'd, hast thou the skill,
 O'er the high gate, and down the headlong hill?

Canst thou the stag's laborious chace direct,
 Or the strong fox through all his arts detect?
 The theme demands a more experienc'd lay:
 Ye mighty hunters! spare this weak essay.

O happy plains, remote from war's alarms,
 And all the ravages of hostile arms!
 And happy shepherds, who, secure from fear,
 On open downs preserve your fleecy care!
 Whose spacious barns groan with increasing
 store,

And whirling flails disjoint the crackling floor!
 No barbarous soldier, bent on cruel spoil,
 Spreads desolation o'er your fertile soil:
 No trampling steed lays waste the ripen'd grain,
 Nor crackling fires devour the promis'd gain:
 No flaming beacons cast their blaze afar,
 The dreadful signal of invasive war:
 No trumpet's clangor wounds the mother's ear,
 And calls the lover from his swooning fair.

What happiness the rural maid attends,
 In cheerful labor while each day she spends!
 She gratefully receives what Heaven has sent,
 And, rich in poverty, enjoys content;
 (Such happiness, and such unblemish'd fame, Ne'er glad the bosom of the courtly dame:)
 She never feels the spleen's imagin'd pains,
 Nor melancholy stagnates in her veins;
 She never loses life in thoughtless ease;
 Nor on the velvet couch invites disease;
 Her home-spun dress in simple neatness lies,
 And for no glaring equipage she sighs:
 Her reputation, which is all her boast,
 In a malicious visit ne'er was lost;
 No midnight masquerade her beauty wears,
 And health, not paint, the fading bloom repairs.
 If love's soft passion in her bosom reign,
 An equal passion warms her happy swain:
 No home-bred jars her quiet state control,
 Nor watchful jealousy torments her soul;
 With secret joy she sees her little race
 Hang on her breast, and her small cottage grace;
 The fleecy ball their busy fingers cull,
 Or from the spindle draw the length'ning wool.
 Thus flow her hours with constant peace of
 mind,

Till age the latest thread of life unwind.

Ye happy fields, unknown to noise and strife,
The kind rewarders of industrious life;
Ye shady woods where once I us'd to rove,
Alike indulgent to the Muse and Love;
Ye murmur'ing streams that in meanders roll,
The sweet composers of the pensive soul;
Farewell!—the city calls me from your bow'rs:
Farewell, amusing thoughts, and peaceful hours!

§ 48. Love of Fame, the Universal Passion.

Young.

SATIRE I.

To his Grace the Duke of Dorset.

—Tanto major Famæ sitis est, quam
Virtutis— Juv. Sat. 10.

My verse is Satire; Dorset, lend your ear,
And patronise a Muse you cannot fear;
To Poets sacred is a Dorset's name,
Their wonted passport thro' the gates of fame;
It bribes the partial reader into praise,
And throws a glory round the shelter'd lays;
The dazzled judgement fewer faults can see,
And gives applause to B———e, or to me.
But you decline the mistress we pursue;
Others are fond of Fame, but Fame of you.

Instructive Satire, true to virtue's cause,
Thou shining supplement of public laws!
When flatter'd crimes of a licentious age
Reproach our silence, and demand our rage;
When purchas'd follies from each distant land,
Like arts, improve in Britain's skilful hand;
When the law shows her teeth, but dares not bite,

[light;

And South-Sea treasures are not brought to
When churchmen Scripture for the classics quit;
Polite apostates from God's grace to wit;
When men grow great from their revenue spent;
And fly from bailiffs into parliament;
When dying sinners to blot out their score,
Bequeath the church the leavings of a whore—
To chafe our spleen when themes like these increase,

Shall panegyric reign, and censure cease?
Shall poesy, like law, turn wrong to right,
And dedications wash an Æthiop white,
Set up each senseless wretch for nature's boast,
On whom praise shines as trophies on a post?
Shall funeral eloquence her colors spread,
And scatter roses on the wealthy dead?
Shall authors smile on such illustrious days,
And satirize with nothing—but their praise?

Why slumbers Pope, who leads the tuneful strain,

[plain?

Nor hears that virtue which he loves, com-
Donne, Dorset, Dryden, Rochester are dead,
And guilt's chief foe in Addison is fled;
Congreve, who, crown'd with laurels fairly won,
Sits smiling at the goal while others run,
He will not write; and (more provoking still!)
Ye gods! he will not write, and Mævius will.
Doubly distress, what author shall we find
Discreetly daring, and severely kind,

The courtly * Roman's shining path to tread,
And sharply smile prevailing folly dead?
Will no superior genius snatch the quill,
And save me, on the brink, from writing ill?
Though vain the strife, I'll strive my voice to raise:

What will not men attempt for sacred praise?

The love of praise, how'er conceal'd by art,
Reigns, more or less, and glows in ev'ry heart:
The proud, to gain it, toils on toils endure;
The modest shun it but to make it sure.

O'er globes and sceptres now on thrones it swells,
Now trims the midnight lamp in college cells.
'Tis Tory, Whig; it plots, prays, preaches, pleads,
Harangues in senates, squeaks in masquerades:
Here, to S——e's humor makes a bold pretence;
There, bolder, aims at Pult'ney's eloquence:
It aids the dancer's heel, the writer's head,
And heaps the plain with mountains of the dead:
Nor ends with life; but nods in sable plumes,
Adorns our hearse, and flatters on our tombs.
Who is not proud? the pimp is proud to see
So many like himself in high degree:

The whore is proud her beauties are the dread
Of peevish virtue, and the marriage bed;
And the brib'd cuckold, like crown'd victims
To slaughter, glories in his gilded horn. [borne
Some go to church, proud humbly to repent,
And come back much more guilty than they went:

One way they look, another way they steer;
Pray to the gods, but would have mortals hear;
And when their sins they set sincerely down,
They'll find that their religion has been one.

Others with wishful eyes on glory look,
When they have got their picture tow'ards a
Or pompous title, like a gaudy sign [book;
Meant to betray dull sots to wretched wine.

If at his title T—— had dropt his quill,
T—— might have pass'd for a great genius still;
But T——, alas! (excuse him if you can)
Is now a scribbler, who was once a man.

Imperious some a classic fame demand,
For heaping up with a laborious hand
A waggon load of meanings for one word,
While A's depos'd, and B with pomp restor'd.

Some for renown on scraps of learning dote,
And think they grow immortal as they quote.
To patchwork learn'd quotations are allied;
Both strive to make our poverty our pride.

On glass how witty is a noble peer!
Did ever diamond cost a man so dear?

Polite diseases make some idiots vain,
Which, if unfortunately well, they feign.
On death-beds some in conscious glory lie,
Since of the doctor in the mode they die;
Whose wondrous skill is, headsman-like, to
For better pay to give a surer blow. [know

Of folly, vice, disease, men proud we see:
And (stranger still) of blockheads' flattery,
Whose praise defames; as if a fool should mean
By spitting on your face to make it clean!

* Horace.

Nor is 't enough all hearts are swoln with
pride ;

Her pow'r is mighty, as her realm is wide.
What can she not perform ? 'The love of fame
Made bold Alphonsus his Creator blame,
Empedocles hurl'd down the burning steep,
And (stronger still !) made Alexander weep.
Nay it holds Delia from a second bed,
Though her lov'd lord has four half months been

This passion with a pimple have I seen [dead.
Retard a cause, and give a judge the spleen.
By this inspir'd (oh ne'er to be forgot !)
Some lords have learnt to spell, and some to knot.
It makes Globose a speaker in the house ;
He hems—and is delivered of his mouse.
It makes dear self on well-bred tongues prevail,
And I the little hero of each tale. [in,

Sick with the love of fame, what throngs pour
Unpeople court, and leave the senate thin !
My growing subject seems but just begun,
And, chariot-like, I kindle as I run.

Aid me, great Homer ! with thy epic rules,
To take a catalogue of British fools.

Satire ! had I thy Dorset's force divine,
A knave or fool should perish in each line :
Though for the first all Westminster should
And for the last all Gresham intercede. [plead,

Begin—who first the catalogue should grace ?
To quality belongs the highest place.

My lord comes forward ; forward let him come !
Ye vulgar, at your peril give him room !

He stands for fame on his forefathers' feet,
By heraldry prov'd valiant or discreet,
With what a decent pride he throws his eyes
Above the man by three descents less wise !

If virtues at his noble hand you crave,
You bid him raise his fathers from the grave.
Men should press forward in fame's glorious
chace ;

Nobles look backward, and so lose the race.

Let high birth triumph ! what can be more
Nothing —— but merit in a low estate. [great ?
To Virtue's humblest son let none prefer
Vice, though descended from the Conqueror.
Shall men, like figures, pass for high or base,
Slight or important, only by their place ?
Titles are marks of honest men and wise ;
The fool or knave that wears a title, lies.

They that on glorious ancestors enlarge,
Produce their debt instead of their discharge.
Dorset, let those who proudly boast their line,
Like thee, in worth hereditary shine.

Vain as false greatness is, the Muse must own
We want not fools to buy that Bristol stone.
Mean sons of Earth, who on a South Sea tide
Of full success swam into wealth and pride,
Knock with a purse of gold at Anstis' gate,
And beg to be descended from the great.

When men of infamy to grandeur soar,
They light a torch to show their shame the more.
Those governments which curb not evils, cause ;
And a rich knave's a libel on our laws.

Belus with solid glory will be crown'd ;
He buys no phantom, no vain empty sound ;

But builds himself a name ; and to be great,
Sinks in a quarry an immense estate ;
In cost and grandeur Chandos he'll outdo ;
And, Burlington, thy taste is not so true.
The pile is finish'd, ev'ry toil is past,
And full perfection is arriv'd at last ;
When, lo ! my Lord to some small corner runs,
And leaves state-rooms to strangers and to duns.

The man who builds, and wants wherewith
to pay,

Provides a home from which to run away.

In Britain what is many a lordly seat,
But a discharge in full for an estate ?

In smaller compass lies Pygmalion's fame ;
Not domes, but antique statues, are his flame.
Not F—t—n's self more Parian charms has
known,

Nor is good Pembroke more in love with stone.
The bailiffs come (rude men, profanely bold !)
And bid him turn his Venus into gold.

“ No, sirs,” he cries ; “ I'll sooner rot in jail !
“ Shall Grecian arts be truck'd for English bail ?”

Such heads might make their very bustos laugh:
His daughter starves, but * Cleopatra's safe.

Men overloaded with a large estate
May spill their treasure in a nice conceit ;

The rich may be polite ; but, oh ! 'tis sad
To say you're curious, when we swear you're
By your revenue measure your expense, [mad.
And to your funds and acres join your sense :

No man is blest by accident or guess ;
True wisdom is the price of happiness :
Yet few without long discipline are sage ;
And our youth only lays up sighs for age.

But how, my Muse, canst thou resist so long
The bright temptation of the courtly throng,
Thy most inviting theme ? The court affords
Much food for satire ; it abounds with lords.

“ What lords are those saluting with a grin ?”
One is just out, and one is lately in.

“ How comes it then to pass we see preside
“ On both their brows an equal share of pride ?”

Pride, that impartial passion, reigns through all ;
Attends our glory, nor deserts our fall :
As in its home, it triumphs in high place,
And frowns a haughty exile in disgrace.

Some lords it bids admire their wands so white,
Which bloom, like Aaron's, to their ravish'd
sight :

Some lords it bids resign, and turns their wands,
Like Moses', into serpents in their hands.

These sink, as divers, for renown ! and boast
With pride inverted of their honors lost.
But against reason sure 'tis equal sin
To boast of merely being out or in. [strive

What numbers here, through odd ambition,
To seem the most transported things alive !
As if by joy desert was understood,
And all the fortunate were wise and good.
Hence aching bosoms wear a visage gay,
And stifled groans frequent the ball and play.

* A famous statue.

Completely dress'd by *Monteuel, and grimace,
They take their birth-day suit, and public face;
Their smiles are only part of what they wear,
Put off at night with lady B——'s hair.
What bodily fatigue is half so bad?
With anxious care they labor to be glad.

What numbers here would into fame advance,
Conscious of merit in the coxcomb's dance!
The tavern, park, assembly, mask, and play,
Those dear destroyers of the tedious day!
That wheel of fops! that saunter of the town!
Call it diversion, and the pill goes down;
Fools grin on fools; and Stoic-like support,
Without one sigh, the pleasures of a court.
Courts can give nothing to the wise and good,
But scorn of pomp, and love of solitude.
High stations tumult, but not bliss, create:
None think the great unhappy, but the great.
Fools gaze and envy: envy darts a sting,
Which makes a swain as wretched as a king.

I envy none their pageantry and show;
I envy none the gilding of their woe.
Give me, indulgent gods! with mind serene,
And guiltless heart, to range the sylvan scene.
No splendid poverty, no smiling care,
No well-bred hate, or servile grandeur there;
There pleasing objects useful thoughts suggest,
The sense is ravish'd, and the soul is blest;
On ev'ry thorn delightful wisdom grows,
In ev'ry rill a sweet instruction flows:
But some untaught o'erhear the whispering rill,
In spite of sacred leisure, blockheads still;
Nor shoots up folly to a nobler bloom
In her own native soil, the drawing-room.

The squire is proud to see his courser strain,
Or well-breath'd beagles sweep along the plain.
Say, dear Hippolytus (whose drink is ale,
Whose erudition is a Christmas tale,
Whose mistress is deluded with a smack,
And friend receiv'd with thumps upon his back,

When thysleek gelding nimbly leaps the mound,
And Ringwood opens on the tainted ground,
Is that thy praise? Let Ringwood's fame alone,
Just Ringwood leaves each animal his own;
Nor envies when a gipsy you commit,
And shake the clumsy bench with country wit;
When you the dullest of dull things have said,
And then ask pardon for the jest you made.

Hear breathe, my Muse! and then thy task renew,

Ten thousand fools unsung are still in view.
Fewer lay atheists made by church debates;
Fewer great beggars fam'd for large estates;
Ladies, whose love is constant as the wind;
Cits, who prefer a guinea to mankind;
Fewer grave lords to Scroope discreetly bend;
And fewer shocks a statesman gives his friend.

Is there a man of an eternal vein,
Who lulls the town in winter with his strain,
At Bath in summer chants the reigning lass,
And sweetly whistles as the waters pass?

Is there a tongue, like Delia's o'er her cup,
That runs for ages without winding up?
Is there whom his tenth Epic mounts to fame?
Such, and such only, might exhaust my theme.
Nor would these heroes of the task be glad;
For who can write so fast as men run mad?

SATIRE II.

To the Right Honorable the Earl of Scarborough.

—Tanto major Famæ sitis est, quam
Virtutis.— Juv. Sat. 10.

MY Muse, proceed, and reach thy destin'd end;
Though toil and danger the bold task attend.
Heroes and gods make other poems fine,
Plain satire calls for sense in ev'ry line:
Then, to what swarms thy faults I dare expose!
All friends to vice and folly are thy foes;
When such the foe, a war eternal wage,
'Tis most ill-nature to repress thy rage,
And if these strains some nobler Muse excite,
I'll glory in the verse I did not write.

So weak are human kind by nature made,
Or to such weakness by their vice betray'd,
Almighty Vanity! to thee they owe
Their zest of pleasure, and their balm of woe.
Thou, like the sun, all colors dost contain,
Varying like rays of light on drops of rain;
For ev'ry soul finds reasons to be proud,
Though hiss'd and hooted by the pointing crowd.

Warm in pursuit of foxes and renown,
Hippolytus demands the sylvan crown †;
But Florio's fame, the product of a show'r!
Grows in his garden, an illustrious flow'r!
Why teems the earth! why melt the vernal skies?
Why shines the sun? To make Paul Diack ‡ rise.
From morn to night has Florio gazing stood,
And wonder'd how the gods could be so good.
What shape! what hue! was ever nymph so fair?
He dotes, he dies! he too is rooted there.
O solid bliss! which nothing can destroy
Except a cat, bird, snail, or idle boy.
In fame's full bloom lies Florio down at night,
And wakes next day a most inglorious wight;
The tulip's dead! See thy fair sister's fate,
O C——! and be kind ere 'tis too late.

Nor are those enemies I mention'd all;
Beware, O florist, thy ambition's fall.
A friend of mine indulg'd this noble flame;
A quaker serv'd him, Adam was his name.
To one lov'd tulip oft the master went,
Hung o'er it, and whole days in rapture spent;
But came and miss'd it one ill-fated hour,
He rag'd! he roar'd—"What dæmon cropp'd
"my flow'r?"

Serene, quoth Adam, "Lo! 'twas crush'd by me:
"Fall'n is the Baal to which thou bow'dst thy
"knee." [crime

But all men want amusement, and what
In such a Paradise to fool their time? [soar;
None, but why proud of this? To Fame they
We grant they're idle, if they'll ask no more.

* A famous tailor.

† This refers to the first Satire.

‡ The name of a tulip.

We smile at florists, we despise their joy,
And think their hearts enamour'd of a toy;
But are those wiser whom we most admire,
Survey with envy, and pursue with fire?
What's he who sighs for wealth, or fame, or Another Florio doting on a flow'r! [pow'r?
A short-liv'd flower, and which has often sprung
From solid arts, as Florio's out of dung.

With what, O Codrus! is thy fancy smit?
The flow'r of learning, and the bloom of wit.
Thy gaudy shelves with crimson bindings glow,
And Epictetus is a perfect beau.
How fit for thee bound up in crimson too,
Gilt, and like them devoted to the view!
Thy books are furniture. Methinks 'tis hard
That science should be purchas'd by the yard;
And Tonson, turn'd upholsterer, send home
The gilded leather to fit up thy room.

If not to some peculiar end design'd,
Study's the specious trifling of the mind;
Or is at best a secondary aim,
A chace for sport alone, and not for game:
If so, sure they who the mere volume prize,
But love the thicket where the quarry lies.

On buying books Lorenzo long was bent,
But found at length that it reduc'd his rent.
His farms were flown; when lo! a sale comes on,
A choice collection! What is to be done?
He sells his last, for he the whole will buy;
Sells e'en his house, nay wants whereon to lie;
So high the gen'rous ardor of the man
For Romans, Greeks, and Orientals ran.
To make the purchase, he gives all his store,
Except one darling diamond that he wore:
For what a mistress gave, 'tis death to pawn;
Yet when the terms were fix'd, and writings drawn,
The sight so ravish'd him, he gave the clerk
Love's sacred pledge, and sign'd them with his mark.

Unlearned men of books assume the care,
As eunuchs are the guardians of the fair.

Not in his authors' liveries alone
Is Codrus' erudite ambition shown.
Editions various, at high prices bought,
Inform the world what Codrus would be thought;
And to this cost another must succeed,
To pay a sage who says that he can read,
Who titles knows, and indexes has seen,
But leaves to ——— what lies between; [pense,
Of pompous books who shuns the proud ex-
And humbly is contented with their sense.

O Lumley, whose accomplishments make good
The promise of a long illustrious blood;
In arts and manners eminently grac'd,
The strictest honor, and the finest taste!
Accept this verse; if Satire can agree
With so consummate an humanity.
But know, my Lord, if you resist the wrong,
That on your candor I obtrude my song;
'Tis Satire's just revenge on that fair name,
Which all their malice cannot make her theme.

By your example would Hilario mend,
How would it grace the talents of my friend,
Who, with the charms of his own genius smit,
Conceives all virtues are compris'd in wit!
But time his fervent petulance may cool;
For, though he is a wit he is no fool.
In time he'll learn to use, not waste, his sense;
Nor make a frailty of an excellence.

His brisk attack on blockheads we should prize,
Were not his jest as flippant with the wise.
He spares nor friend nor foe; but calls to mind,
Like doom's-day, all the faults of all mankind.

What though wit tickles! tickling is unsafe,
If still 'tis painful while it makes us laugh.

Who, for the poor renown of being smart,
Would leave a sting within a brother's heart?

Parts may be prais'd, good nature is ador'd;
Then draw your wit as seldom as your sword,
And never on the weak; or you'll appear
As there no hero, no great genius here.
As in smooth oil the razor best is wet,
So wit is by politeness sharpest set.

Their want of edge from their offence is seen;
Both pain us least when exquisitely keen.

The fame men give, is for the joy they find;
Dull is the jester, when the joke's unkind.

Since Marcus doubtless thinks himself a wit,
To pay my compliment, what place so fit?
His most facetious letters* came to hand,
Which my first Satire sweetly reprimand.

If that a just offence to Marcus gave,
Say, Marcus, which art thou—a fool, or knave?
For all but such with caution I forbore;
That thou wast either, I ne'er knew before;
I know thee now, both what thou art, and who;
No mask so good but Marcus must shine through;
False names are vain, thy lines their author tell,
Thy best concealment had been writing well;
But thou a brave neglect for Fame hast shown,
Of others' fame, great genius! and thy own.
Write on unheeded, and this maxim know:
The man who pardons, disappoints his foe.

In malice to proud wits, some proudly lull
Their peevish reason, vain of being dull; [souls,
When some home-joke has stung their solemn
In vengeance they determine—to be fools;
Thro' spleen, that little nature gave, make less,
Quite zealous in the way of heaviness;
To lumps inanimate a fondness take,
And disinherit sons that are awake, [spit,
These, when their utmost venom they would
Most barbarously tell you—"he's a wit."

Poor negroes thus, to show their burning spite
To Cacodæmons, say they're devilish white.

Lampridius from the bottom of his breast
Sighs o'er one child, but triumphs in the rest.
How just his grief! one carries in his head
A less proportion of the father's lead;
And is in danger, without special grace,
To rise above a Justice of the Peace.
The dunghill-breed of men a diamond scorn,
And feel a passion for a grain of corn;

* Letters sent to the Author, signed Marcus.

Some stupid, plodding, money-loving wight,
Who wins their hearts by knowing black from white,

Who with much pains exerting all his sense,
Can range aright his shillings, pounds, and
The booby father craves a booby son, [pence.
And by Heaven's blessing thinks himself undone.

Wants of all kinds are made to Fame a plea;
One learns to lisp, another not to see;
Miss D—— tottering catches at your hand:
Was ever thing so pretty born to stand?
Whilst these what nature gave disown through
Others affect what nature has denied; [pride,
What nature has denied fools will pursue,
As apes are ever walking upon two.

Crassus, a graceful sage, our awe and sport!
Supports grave forms, for forms the sage support.
He hems—and cries, with an important air,
“If yonder clouds withdraw, it will be fair:”
Then quotes the Stagyrte to prove it true;
And adds, “The learn'd delight in something “new.”

Is't not enough the blockhead scarce can read,
But must he wisely look and gravely plead?
As far a formalist from wisdom sits,
In judging eyes, as libertines from wits.
Nay, of true wisdom there too much may be,
The gen'rous mind delights in being free;
Your men of parts an over-care despise;
Dull rogues have nought to do but to be wise.
Horace has said—and that decides the case—
‘Tis sweet to trifle in a proper place.

Yet subtle wights (so blind are mortal men,
Tho' Satire couch them with her keenest pen),
For ever will hang out a solemn face,
To put off nonsense with a better grace;
As pedlars with some hero's head make bold,
Illustrious mark where pins are to be sold.
What's the bent brow, or neck in thought reclin'd?

The body's wisdom to conceal the mind.
A man of sense can artifice disdain,
As men of wealth may venture to go plain:
And be this truth eternal ne'er forgot—
Solemnity's a cover for a sot.
I find the fool, when I behold the screen;
For 'tis the wise man's int'rest to be seen.
Hence, Scarborough, that openness of heart,
And just disdain for that poor mimic art;
Hence (manly praise!) that manner nobly free,
Which all admire, and I commend in thee.

With gen'rous scorn how oft has thou survey'd,
Of court and town the noon-tide masquerade,
Where swarms of knaves the vizard quite disgrace,
And hide secure behind a naked face!
Where nature's end of language is declin'd,
And men talk only to conceal the mind;
Where gen'rous hearts the greatest hazard run,
And he who trusts a brother is undone!
My brother swore it, therefore it is true;
O strange induction, and at court quite new!

As well thou mightst aver, thou simple swain,
“’Tis just, and therefore I my cause shall gain.”
With such odd maxims to thy flocks retreat,
Nor furnish mirth for ministers of state.

Some master spirit far beyond the throng
Refin'd in ill, more rightly bent on wrong,
With exquisite discernment play their game,
More nice of conduct, and more fair of fame.
The neatly injur'd thinks his thanks are due,
Robb'd of his right, and good opinion too:
Fale honor, pride's first-born, this clan controls.
Who wisely part with nothing but their souls.
Albertus hugs himself in ravish'd thought,
To find a peerage is so cheaply bought.
These all their care expend on outward show
For wealth and fame; for fame alone the beau.
Of late at White's was young Florello seen:
How blank his look, how discompos'd his mien!
So hard it proves in grief sincere to feign!
Sunk were his spirits, for his coat was plain.

Next day his breast regain'd its wonted peace,
His health was mended with a silver lace:
A curious artist long inur'd to toils
Of gentler sort, with combs and fragrant oils,
Whether by chance, or by some god inspir'd,
So touch'd his curls, his mighty soul was fir'd.
The well-swoln ties an equal homage claim,
And either shoulder has its share of fame:
His sumptuous watch-case, though, conceal'd
it lies,

Like a good conscience, solid joy supplies.
He only thinks himself (so far from vain)
Stanhope in wit, in breeding Deloraine.
Whene'er by seeming chance he throws his eye
On mirrors flushing with his Tyrian dye,
With how sublime a transport leaps his heart!
But fate ordains the dearest friends must part.
In active measures brought from France he wheels,

And triumphs conscious of his learned heels.
So have I seen, on some bright summer's day,
A calf of genius, debonair and gay,
Dance on the bank, as if inspir'd by fame,
Fond of the pretty fellow in the stream.

Morose is sunk with shame whene'er surpris'd
In linen clean, or peruke undisguis'd.
No sublunary chance his vestments fear,
Valued, like leopards as their spots appear.
A fam'd surtout he wears which once was blue,
And his foot swims in a capacious shoe.
One day his wife (for who can wives reclaim?)
Levell'd her barbarous needle at his fame.
But open force was vain; by night she went,
And when he slept surpris'd the darling rent;
Where yawn'd the frize is now become a doubt,
And glory at one entrance quite shut out*.

He scorns Florello, and Florello him;
This hates the filthy creature, that the prim.
Thus in each other both these fools despise
Their own dear selves, with undiscerning eyes;
Their methods various, but alike their aim;
The sloven and the fopling are the same.

* Milton.

Ye Whigs and Tories, thus it fares with you,
When party-rage too warmly you pursue;
Then both club nonsense and impetuous pride,
And folly joins whom sentiments divide;
You vent your spleen, as monkeys when they pass

Scratch at the mimic monkey in the glass,
While both are one; and henceforth be it
known,

Fools of both sides shall stand for fools alone.

"But who art thou!" methinks Florello cries:

"Of all thy species art thou only wise?"

Since smallest things can give our sins a twitch,

As crossing straws retard a passing witch,

Florello, thou my monitor shall be;

I'll conjure thus some profit out of thee.

O thou, myself! abroad our counsels roam,

And, like all husbands, take no care at home.

Come from thyself, and a by-stander be;

With others' eyes thy own deportment see;

And while their ails thou dost with pity view,

Conceive, hard task, that thou art mortal too,

Thou too art wounded with the common dart,

And love of Fame lies throbbing at thy heart:

And what wise means to gain it hast thou chose?

Know, Fame and Fortune both are made of prose.

Is thy ambition sweating for a rhyme,

Thou unambitious fool, at this late time?

This noon of life? The seasons mend their pace,

And with a nimbler step the seasons chase;

While I a moment name, a moment's past;

I'm nearer death in this verse than the last;

What then is to be done? Be wise with speed;

A fool at forty is a fool indeed.

And what so foolish as the chace of Fame?

How vain the prize: how impotent our aim!

For what are men who grasp at praise sublime,

But bubbles on the rapid stream of time,

That rise and fall, and swell, and are no more,

Born and forgot, ten thousand in an hour!

Should this verse live, O Lumley! may it be

A monument of gratitude to thee:

Whose early favor I must own with shame,

So long my patron, and so late my theme.

SATIRE III.

To the Right Honourable Mr. Dodington.

— Tanto major Famæ sitis est, quam

Virtutis — Juv. Sat. 10.

LONG, Dodington, in debt, I long have sought

To ease the burthen of my grateful thought:

And now a poet's gratitude you see—

Grant him two favours, and he'll ask for three;

For whose the present glory or the gain?

You give protection, I a worthless strain;

You love, and feel the poet's sacred flame,

And know the basis of a solid fame;

Though prone to like, yet cautious to commend,

You read with all the malice of a friend;

Nor favor my attempts that way alone,

But, more to raise my verse, conceal your own.

An ill-tim'd modesty! Turn ages o'er,

When wanted Britain bright examples more?

Her learning and her genius too decays,
And dark and cold are her declining days;

As if men now were of another cast,

They meanly live on alms of ages past.

Men still are men, and they who boldly dare,

Shall triumph o'er the sons of cold despair;

Or, if they fail, they justly still take place

Of such who run in debt for their disgrace;

Who borrow much, then fairly make it known,

And damn it with improvements of their own.

We bring some new materials, and what's old

New-cast with care, and in no borrow'd mould:

Late times the verse may read, if these refuse,

And from sour critics vindicate the Muse.

"Your work is long," the critics cry: 'tis true,

And lengthens still, to take in fools like you.

Shorten my labor, if its length you blame;

For, grow but wise, you rob me of my game:

As hunted hags, who, while the dogs pursue,

Renounce their four legs, and start up on two.

Like the bold bird upon the banks of Nile,

That picks the teeth of the dire crocodile,

Will I enjoy (dread feast!) the critic's rage,

And with the fell destroyer feed my page.

For what ambitious fools are more to blame

Than those who plunder in the critic's name?

Good authors damn'd, have their revenge in this,

To see what wretches gain the praise they miss.

Balbutius, muffled in his sable cloak,

Like an old Druid from his hollow oak,

As ravens solemn, and as boding, cries,

Ten thousand worlds for the three unities!

Ye doctors sage, who through Parnassus teach,

Or quit the tub, or practise what you preach.

One judges as the weather dictates; right

The poem is at noon, and wrong at night:

Another judges by a surer gage,

An author's principles or parentage:

Since his great ancestors in Flanders fell,

The poem, doubtless, must be written well.

Another judges by the writer's look:

Another judges for he bought the book.

Some judge, their knack of judging wrong to keep,

Some judge, because it is too soon to sleep.

Thus all will judge, and with one single aim;

To gain themselves, not give the writer fame.

The very best ambitiously advise,

Half to serve you, and half to pass for wise.

None are at leisure others to reward:

They scarce will damn but out of self-regard.

Critics on verse, as squibs on triumphs wait,

Proclaim the glory, and augment the state;

Hot, envious, noisy, proud, the scribbling fry

Burn, hiss, and bounce, waste paper, stink, and die.

Rail on, my friends! what more my verse can crown

Than Compton's smile, and your obliging frown?

Not all on books their criticism waste;

The genius of a dish some justly taste,

And eat their way to fame! with anxious thought

The salmon is refus'd, the turbot bought.

Impatient art rebukes the sun's delay,
And bids December yield the fruits of May.
Their various cares in one great point combine,
The business of their lives, that is——to dine;
Half of their precious day they give the feast,
And to a kind digestion spare the rest,
Apicius, here, the taster of the town,
Feeds twice a-week, to settle their renown.

These worthies of the palate guard with care
The sacred annals of their bills of fare;
In those choice books their panegyrics read,
And scorn the creatures that for hunger feed;
If man, by feeding well, commences great,
Much more the worm, to whom that man is meat.

To glory some advance a lying claim,
Thieves of renown, and pilferers of fame!
Their front supplies what their ambition lacks;
They know a thousand lords behind their backs.
Cottil is apt to wink upon a peer,
When turn'd away, with a familiar leer;
And Hervey's eyes, unmercifully keen,
Have murder'd fops by whom she ne'er was seen;
Niger adopts stray libels, wisely prone
To covet shame still greater than his own;
Bathyllus in the winter of threescore
Belies his innocence, and keeps a whore.
Absence of mind Brabantio turns to fame,
Learns to mistake, nor knows his brother's
name;

Has words and thoughts in nice disorder set,
And takes a memorandum to forget.
Thus vain, nor knowing what adorns or blots,
Men forge the patents that create them sots.

As love of pleasure into pain betrays,
So most grow infamous through love of praise.
But whence for praise can such an ardor rise,
When those who bring that incense we despise?
For such the vanity of great and small,
Contempt goes round, and all men laugh at all.

Nor can e'en Satire blame them, for 'tis true
They must have ample cause for what they do.
O fruitful Britain! doubtless thou wast meant
A nurse of fools to stock the Continent.
Though Phœbus and the Nine for ever mow,
Rank folly underneath the sithe will grow:
The plenteous harvest calls me forward still,
Till I surpass in length my lawyer's bill;
A Welch descent which well-paid heralds damn;

Or, longer still, a Dutchman's epigram.
When cloy'd, in fury I throw down my pen;
In comes a coxcomb, and I write again.
See! Tityrus, with merriment possest,
Is burst with laughter ere he hears the jest:
What need he stay? for, when the joke is o'er,
His teeth will be no whiter than before.

Is there of these, ye fair! so great a dearth,
That you need purchase monkies for your mirth?
Some, vain of paintings, bid the world admire;

Of houses some, nay, houses that they hire;
Some (perfect wisdom!) of a beauteous wife,
And boast, like Cordeliers, a scourge for life.

Sometimes through pride the sexes change
their airs;

My lord has vapors, and my lady swears:
Then (stranger still!) on turning of the wind,
My lord wears breeches, and my lady's kind.

To show the strength and infamy of pride,
By all 'tis follow'd, and by all denied.

What numbers are there who at once pursue
Praise, and the glory to condemn it, too!

Vincenna knows self-praise betrays to shame,

And therefore lays a stratagem for fame;

Makes his approach in modesty's disguise

To win applause, and takes it by surprise:

"To err," says he, "in small things, is my fate;"

You know your answer—he's exact in great.

"My style," says he, "is rude, and full of faults;"

But, oh what sense! what energy of thoughts!

That he wants algebra he must confess,

But not a soul to give our arms success.

"Ah! that's a hit indeed," Vincenna cries,

"But who in heat of blood was ever wise?"

"I own 'twas wrong, when thousands call'd me
back,

"To make that hopeless, ill-advis'd attack;

"All say 'twas madness, nor dare I deny;

"Sure never fool so well deserv'd to die."

Could this deceive in others, to be free,

It ne'er, Vincenna, could deceive in thee,

Whose conduct is a comment to thy tongue

So clear, the dullest cannot take thee wrong.

Thou in one suit wilt thy revenue wear,

And haunt the Court, without a prospect there.

Are these expedients for renown? confess

Thy little self, that I may scorn thee less.

Be wise, Vincenna, and the Court forsake;

Our fortunes there nor thou nor I shall make.

E'en men of merit, ere their point they gain,

In hardy service make a long campaign;

Most manfully besiege the patron's gate,

And, oft repuls'd, as oft attack the great

With painful art, and application warm,

And take at last some little place by storm;

Enough to keep two shoes on Sunday clean,

And starve upon discreetly in Shire-lane.

Already this thy fortune can afford,

Then starve without the favor of my lord.

'Tis true, great fortunes some great men confer;

But often, e'en in doing right, they err:

From caprice, not from choice, their favors
come;

They give, but think it toil to know to whom:

The man that's nearest, yawning they advance;

'Tis inhumanity to bless by chance.

If merit sues, and greatness is so loth

To break its downy trance, I pity both.

I grant, at Court, Philander at his need

(Thanks to his lovely wife!) finds friends indeed.

Of ev'ry charm and virtue she's possest.

Philander! thou art exquisitely blest;

The public envy! Now then, 'tis allow'd,

The man is found who may be justly proud.

But, see! how sickly is ambition's taste!
Ambition feeds on trash, and loaths a feast.
For, lo! Philander, of reproach afraid,
In secret loves his wife, but keeps her maid.

Some nymphs sell reputation, others buy,
And love a market where the rates run high.
Italian music's sweet because 'tis dear;
Their vanity is tickled, not their ear;
Their tastes would lessen, if the prices fell,
And Shakspeare's wretched stuff do quite as well;
Away the disenchanted fair would throng,
And own that English is their mother-tongue.

To show how much our northern tastes refine,
Imported nymphs our peeresses outshine;
While tradesmen starve, these Philomels are gay;

For generous lords had rather give than pay.
O lavish land! for sound at such expence;
But then she saves it in her bills for sense.

Music I passionately love, 'tis plain,
Since for its sake such dramas I sustain.
An opera, like a pillory, may be said
To nail our ears down, but expose our head.

Behold the masquerade's fantastic scene!
The legislature join'd with Drury-lane.
When Britain calls, th' embroidered patriots run,
And serve their country—if the dance is done;
"Are we not then allow'd to be polite?"
Yes, doubtless, but first set your notions right.
Worth of politeness is the needful ground;
Where that is wanting, this can ne'er be found.
Triflers not e'en in trifles can excel;
'Tis solid bodies only polish well.

Great, chosen prophet! for these latter days,
To turn a willing world from righteous ways!
Well, Heideger, dost thou thy master serve;
Well has he seen his servant should not starve;
Thou to his name hast splendid temples rais'd,
In various forms of worship seen him prais'd;
Gaudy devotion, like a Roman, shown;
And sung sweet anthems in a tongue unknown.
Inferior off'rings to thy god of vice
Are duly paid in fiddles, cards, and dice;
Thy sacrifice supreme a hundred maids!
That solemn rite of midnight masquerades!
If maids the quite exhausted town denies,
A hundred head of cuckolds must suffice.
Thou smil'st, well pleas'd with the converted
To see the fifty churches at a stand. [land,

And, that thy minister may never fail,
But what thy hand has planted still prevail,
Of minor prophets a succession sure
The propagation of thy zeal secure.

See commons, peers, and ministers of state,
In solemn council met, and deep debate!
What godlike enterprise is taking birth?
What wonder opens on th' expecting earth?
'Tis done! with loud applause the council rings;
Fix'd is the fate of whores and fiddle-strings!

Though bold these truths, thou, Muse, with truths like these,
Wilt none offend whom 'tis a praise to please;
Let others flatter to be flatter'd; thou,
Like just tribunals, bend an awful brow.

How terrible it were to common sense,
To write a Satire which gave none offence!
And, since from life I take the draughts you see,
If men dislike them, do they censure me?
Oh then, my Muse! both fools and knaves ex-
pose;

And, since thou canst not make a friend, make
The fool and knave 'tis glorious to offend,
And godlike an attempt the world to mend;
The world, where lucky throws to blockheads
fall,

Knaves know the game, and honest men pay all.

How hard for real worth to gain its price!
A man shall make his fortune in a trice,
If blest with pliant though but slender sense,
Feign'd modesty, and real impudence.

A supple knee, smooth tongue, an easy grace,
A curse within, a smile upon his face,
A beauteous sister, or convenient wife,
Are prizes in the lottery of life;
Genius and virtue they will soon defeat,
And lodge you in the bosom of the great.
To merit, is but to provide a pain
From men's refusing what you ought to gain.

May, Dodington, this maxim fail in you,
Whom my presaging thoughts already view,
By Walpole's conduct fir'd, and friendship
grac'd,

Still higher in your prince's favor plac'd;
And lending here, those awful councils aid,
Which you abroad with such success obey'd;
Bear this from one who holds your friendship
dear;

What most we wish, with ease we fancy near.

SATIRE IV.

To the Right Honorable Sir Spencer Compton.

——— Tanto major Famæ sitis est, quam
Virtutis ——— Juv. Sat. 10.

ROUND some fair tree th' ambitious woodbine
grows, [boughs:
And breathes her sweets on the supporting
So sweet the verse, th' ambitious verse, should be (Oh pardon mine!) that hopes support from
thee;

Thee, Compton, born o'er senates to preside,
Their dignity to raise, their councils guide;
Deep to discern, and widely to survey,
And kingdoms' fates without ambition weigh;
Of distant virtues nice extremes to blend,
The crown's asserter, and the people's friend.
Nor dost thou scorn, amid sublimer views,
To listen to the labors of the Muse:
Thy smiles protect her, while thy talents fire;
And 'tis but half thy glory to inspire.

Vex'd at a public fame so justly won,
The jealous Chremes is with spleen undone.
Chremes, for airy pensions of renown,
Devotes his service to the state and crown;
All schemes he knows, and knowing all improves; [loves.

Though Britain's thankless, still this patriot

But patriots differ : some may shed their blood,
He drinks his coffee, for the public good ;
Consults the sacred steam, and there foresees
What storms or sunshine Providence decrees ;
Knows for each day the weather of our fate :
A quidnunc is an almanack of state. [use,

You smile, and think this statesman void of
Why may not time his secret worth produce ?
Since apes can roast the choice Castanian nut,
Since steeds of genius are expert at put,
Since half the senate "not content" can say,
Geese nations save, and puppies plots betray.

What makes him model realms and counsel
kings ?

An incapacity for smaller things.

Poor Chremes can't conduct his own estate,
And thence has undertaken Europe's fate.

Gehenno leaves the realm to Chremes' skill,
And boldly claims a province higher still.
To raise a name, th' ambitious boy has got
At once a Bible and a shoulder-knot :
Deep in the secret he looks through the whole,
And pities the dull rogue that saves his soul ;
To talk with rev'rence you must take good heed,
Nor shock his tender reason with the Creed.
Howe'er, well-bred, in public he complies,
Obliging friends alone with blasphemies.

Peerage is poison, good estates are bad
For this disease ; poor rogues run seldom mad.
Have not attainders brought unhop'd relief,
And falling stocks quite cur'd an unbelief ?
While the sun shines Blunt talks with wond'rous
force ;

But thunder mars small beer, and weak discourse.
Such useful instruments the weather show,
Just as their mercury is high or low.

Health chiefly keeps an atheist in the dark ;
A fever argues better than a Clarke ;
Let but the logic in his pulse decay,
The Grecian he'll renounce, and learn to pray ;
While C—— mourns with an unfeign'd zeal
Th' apostate youth who reason'd once so well.
C——, who makes so merry with the Creed,
He almost thinks he disbelieves indeed ;
But only thinks so : to give both their due,
Satan and he believe and tremble too.

Of some for glory such the boundless rage,
That they're the blackest scandal of their age.

Narcissus the Tartarian club disclaims ;
Nay, a free-mason with some terror names :
Omits no duty, nor can envy say
He miss'd these many years the church or play ;
He makes no noise in parliament 'tis true ;
But pays his debt and visit when 'tis due :
His character and gloves are ever clean ;
And then, he can outbow the bowing dean !
A smile eternal on his lips he wears,
Which equally the wise and worthless shares.
In gay fatigues this most undaunted chief,
Patient of idleness beyond belief,
Most charitably lends the town his face
For ornament, in ev'ry public place :
As sure as cards he to th' assembly comes,
And is the furniture of drawing-rooms.

When ombre calls, his hand and heart are free :
And, join'd to two, he fails not—to make three.
Narcissus is the glory of his race ;
For who does nothing with a better grace ?

To deck my list by nature were design'd
Such shining expletives of human kind,
Who want, while through blank life they dream
along,

Sense to be right, and passion to be wrong.

To counterpoise this hero of the mode,
Some for renown are singular and odd :
What other men dislike is sure to please,
Of all mankind, these dear antipodes ;
Through pride, not malice, they run counter still ;
And birth-days are their days of dressing ill.
Arbuthnot is a fool, and F—— a sage,
S——ly will fright you, E—— engage ;
By nature streams run backward, flame descends, Stones mount, and S——x is the worst of friends.

They take their rest by day, and wake by night,
And blush if you surprise them in the right ;
If they by chance blurt out, ere well aware,
A swan is white, or Queensberry is fair.

Nothing exceeds in ridicule, no doubt,
A fool in fashion, but a fool that's out ;
His passion for absurdity's so strong,
He cannot bear a rival in the wrong.
Though wrong the mode, comply ; more sense is shown,

In wearing others' follies than your own.

If what is out of fashion most you prize,
Methinks you should endeavour to be wise.

But what in oddness can be more sublime
Than S——, the foremost toymen of his time ?
His nice ambition lies in curious fancies,
His daughter's portion a rich shell enhances ;
And Ashmole's baby-house is, in his view,
Britannia's golden mine, a rich Peru !
How his eyes languish ! how his thoughts adore
That painted coat which Joseph never wore !
He shows on holidays a sacred pin [chin.
That touch'd the ruff that touch'd queen Bess's
" Since that great dearth our chronicles deplore,

" Since the great plague that swept as many more,
" Was ever year unblest as this ?" he'll cry ;
" It has not brought us one new butterfly !"
In times that suffer such learn'd men as these,
Unhappy I——y ! how came you to please ?

Not gaudy butterflies are Lico's game ;
But, in effect, his chace is much the same.
Warm in pursuit, he levees all the great,
Staunch to the foot of title and estate.
Where'er their lordships go, they never find
Or Lico or their shadows lag behind :
He sets them sure, where'er their lordships run,
Close at their elbows as a morning dun ;
As if their grandeur by contagion wrought,
And fame was, like a fever, to be caught ;
But, after seven years dance from place to place,
The Dane* is more familiar with his grace.

* A Danish dog.

Who'd be a crutch to prop a rotten peer;
Or living pendant dangling at his ear,
For ever whisp'ring secrets which were blown
For months before, by trumpets, through the town?

Who'd be a glass, with flattering grimace,
Still to reflect the temper of his face?
Or happy pin to stick upon his sleeve,
When my lord's gracious, and vouchsafes it leave?
Or cushion, when his heaviness shall please
To loll, or thump it for his better ease?
Or a vile butt, for noon or night bespoke,
When the peer rashly swears he'll club his joke?
Who'd shake with laughter though he could not find

His lordship's jest? or, if his nose broke wind,
For blessings to the gods profoundly bow—
That can cry chimney-sweep, or drive a plough?
With terms like these how mean the tribe that close!

Scarce meaner they who terms like these impose.

But what's the tribe most likely to comply?
The men of ink, or ancient authors lie;
The writing tribe, who shameless auctions hold
Of praise, by inch of candle to be sold.
All men they flatter, but themselves the most
With deathless fame, their everlasting boast;
For fame no cully makes so much her jest,
As her old constant spark, the bard profest.
"Boyle shines in council, Mordaunt in the fight,

"Pelham's magnificent—but I can write;
"And what's to my great soul like glory dear?"
Till some god whispers in his tingling ear,
That fame's unwholesome, taken without meat;
And life is best sustain'd by what is eat;
Grown lean and wise, he curses what he writ;
And wishes all his wants were in his wit.

Ah! what avails it, when his dinner's lost,
That his triumphant name adorns a post?
Or that his shining page (provoking fate!)
Defends sirloins which sons of dullness eat?

What foe to verse without compassion hears,
What cruel prose-man can refrain from tears,
When the poor muse, for less than half-a-crown,
A prostitute on every bulk in town,
With other whores undone, though not in print,
Clubs credit for Geneva in the Mint?

Ye bards! why will you sing though uninspir'd?
Ye bards! why will you starve to be admir'd?
Defunct by Phœbus' laws, beyond redress,
Why will your spectres haunt the frightened
press?

Bad metre, that excrescence of the head,
Like hair, will sprout, although the poet's dead.

All other trades demand; verse-makers beg;
A dedication is a wooden leg;
And barren Labeo, the true mumper's fashion,
Exposes borrow'd brats to move compassion.
Though such myself, vile bards I discom-
mend;

Nay more, though gentle Damon is my friend.
"Is't then a crime to write?" If talents rare
Proclaim the god, the crime is to forbear;

For some, though few, there are large-minded
men,

Who watch unseen the labors of the pen,
Who know the muse's worth, and therefore court,

Their deeds her theme, their bounty her support,
Who serve unask'd the least pretence to wit;
My sole excuse, alas! for having writ.
Will Harcourt pardon, if I dare commend
Harcourt, with zeal a patron and a friend?
Argyle true wit is studious to restore,
And Dorset smiles if Phœbus smil'd before.
Pembroke in years the long-lov'd arts admires,
And Henrietta like a muse inspires.

But, ah! not inspiration can obtain
The fame which poets languish for in vain.
How mad their aim, who thirst for glory, strive

To grasp what no man can possess alive!
Fame's a reversion in which men take place
(O late reversion!) at their own decease.
This truth sagacious Lintot knows so well,
He starves his authors, that their works may sell.

That fame is wealth, fantastic poets cry;
That wealth is fame, another clan reply,
Who know no guilt, no scandal, but in rags;
And swell in just proportion to their bags.
Nor only the low-born, deform'd, and old,
Think glory nothing but the beams of gold;
The first young lord which in the Mall you meet

Shall match the veriest hunks in Lombard-street,
From rescued candles' ends who rais'd a sum,
And starves to join a penny to a plum.
A beardless miser! 'tis a guilt unknown
To former times, a scandal all our own.

Of ardent lovers, the true modern band
Will mortgage Celia to redeem their land.
For love, young, noble, rich Castalio dies;
Name but the fair, love swells into his eyes.
Divine Monimia, thy fond fears lay down,
No rival can prevail but—half-a-crown.

He glories to late times to be convey'd,
Nor for the poor he has reliev'd, but made.
Not such ambition his great fathers fir'd,
When Harry conquer'd, and half France expir'd.
He'd be a slave, a pimp, a dog, for gain;
Nay, a dull sheriff for his golden chain.

"Who'd be a slave?" the gallant colonel cries,
While love of glory sparkles from his eyes.
To deathless fame he loudly pleads his right;
Just is his title, for I will not fight;
All soldiers valor, all divines have grace,
As maids of honor beauty—by their place.
But when indulging on the last campaign,
His lofty terms climb o'er the hills of slain,
He gives the foes he slew, at each vain word,
A sweet revenge, and half absolves his sword.

Of boasting more than of a bomb afraid,
A soldier should be modest as a maid.
Fame is a bubble the reserv'd enjoy,
Who strive to grasp it, as they touch, destroy:
'Tis the world's debt to deeds of high degree;
But, if you pay yourself, the world is free.

Were there no tongue to speak them but his
own,
Augustus' deeds in arms had ne'er been known;
Augustus' deeds! if that ambiguous name
Confound my reader, and misguides his aim,
Such is the prince's worth of whom I speak,
The Roman would not blush at the mistake.

SATIRE V.

On Women.

O fairest of creation! last and best
Of all God's works! creature in whom excell'd,
Whatever can to sight or thought be form'd,
Holy, divine, good, amiable, or sweet!
How art thou lost! MILTON.

NOR reigns ambition in bold man alone;
Soft female hearts the rude invader own.
But there, indeed, it deals in nicer things
Than routing armies and dethroning kings.
Attend, and you discern it in the fair
Conduct a finger, or reclaim a hair;
Or roll the lucid orbit of an eye;
Or in full joy elaborate a sigh. [blame;

The sex we honor, though their faults we
Nay, thank their faults for such a fruitful theme.
A theme, fair——! doubly kind to me,
Since satirising those is praising thee;
Who wouldst not bear, too modestly refin'd,
A panegyric of a grosser kind. [nice,

Britannia's daughters, much more fair than
Too fond of admiration, lose their price;
Worn in the public eye, give cheap delight
To throngs, and tarnish to the sated sight.
As unreserv'd and beauteous as the sun,
Through ev'ry sign of vanity they run;
Assemblies, parks, coarse feasts in city-halls,
Lectures and trials, plays, committees, balls,
Wells, Bedlams, executions, Smithfield scenes,
And fortune-tellers' caves, and lions' dens,
Taverns, exchanges, Bridewells, drawing-rooms,
Instalments, pillories, coronations, tombs,
Tumblers, and funerals, puppet-shows, reviews,
Sales, races, rabbits, and (still stranger!) pews.

Clarinda's bosom burns, but burns for fame;
And love lies vanquish'd in a nobler flame;
Warm gleams of hope she now dispenses; then,
Like April suns, dives into clouds again.
With all her lustre now her lover warms;
Then, out of ostentation, hides her charms.
'Tis next her pleasure sweetly to complain,
And to be taken with a sudden pain;
Then she starts up all ecstasy and bliss,
And is, sweet soul! just as sincere in this.
Oh, how she rolls her charming eyes in spite!
And looks delightfully with all her might!
But like our heroes, much more brave than wise,
She conquers for the triumph, not the prize.

Zara resembles Ætna crown'd with snows;
Without she freezes, and within she glows.
Twice ere the sun descends, with zeal inspir'd,
From the vain converse of the world retir'd,
She reads the psalms and chapters for the day
In—Cleopatra, or the last new play.

Thus gloomy Zara, with a solemn grace,
Deceives mankind, and hides behind her face.

Nor far beneath her in renown is she
Who, through good-breeding, is ill company;
Whose manners will not let her larum cease,
Who thinks you are unhappy when at peace;
To find you news who racks her subtle head,
And vows—that her great grandfather is dead.

A dearth of words a woman need not fear;
But 'tis a task indeed to learn—to hear.
In that the skill of conversation lies:
That shows or makes you both polite and wise.
Xantippe cries, "Let nymphs who nought can say

"Be lost in silence, and resign the day;
"And let the guilty wife her guilt confess
"By tame behaviour, and a soft address."
Through virtue, she refuses to comply
With all the dictates of humanity;
Through wisdom, she refuses to submit
To wisdom's rules, and raves to prove her wit;
Then, her unblemish'd honor to maintain,
Rejects her husband's kindness with disdain.
But, if by chance an ill-adapted word
Drops from the lip of her unwary lord,
Her darling china, in a whirlwind sent,
Just intimates the lady's discontent.

Wine may indeed excite the meekest dame;
But keen Xantippe, scorning borrow'd flame,
Can vent her thunders, and her lightnings play,
O'er cooling gruel and composing tea;
Nor rests by night; but, more sincere than nice,
She shakes the curtains with her kind advice.
Doubly like Echo, sound is her delight,
And the last word is her eternal right.

Is't not enough plagues, wars, and famines rise
To lash our crimes, but must our wives be wise?

Famine, plague, war, and an unnumber'd
throng
Of guilt-avenging ills, to man belong;
What black, what ceaseless cares besiege our state!

What strokes we feel from fancy and from fate!
If fate forbears us, fancy strikes the blow;
We make misfortune, suicides in woe.
Superfluous aid! unnecessary skill!
Is nature backward to torment or kill?
How oft the noon, how oft the midnight bell,
(That iron tongue of death!) with solemn knell,
On folly's errands as we vainly roam,
Knocks at our hearts, and finds our thoughts from home!

Men drop so fast, ere life's mid stage we tread,
Few know so many friends alive as dead.
Yet, as immortal, in our up-hill chace
We press coy fortune with unslacken'd pace;
Our ardent labors for the toys we seek,
Join night to day, and Sunday to the week.
Our very joys are anxious, and expire
Between satiety and fierce desire.
Now what reward for all this grief and toil?
But one—a female friend's endearing smile;
A tender smile, our sorrow's only balm,
And, in life's tempest, the sad sailor's calm.

How have I seen a gentle nymph draw nigh,
Peace in her air, persuasion in her eye;
Victorious tenderness! it all o'ercame;
Husbands look'd mild, and savages grew tame.

The sylvan race our active nymphs pursue;
Man is not all the game they have in view:
In woods and fields their glory they complete,
There Master Betty leaps a five-barr'd gate;
While fair Miss Charles to toilets is confin'd,
Nor rashly tempts the barb'rous sun and wind.
Some nymphs affect a more heroic breed,
And vault from hunters to the manag'd steed;
Command his prancings with a martial air;
And Fobert has the forming of the fair.

More than one steed must Delia's empire feel,
Who sits triumphant o'er the flying wheel:
And, as she guides it through th' admiring
throng,

With what an air she smacks the silken thong!
Graceful as John she moderates the reins,
And whistles sweet her diuretic strains.
Sesostris-like, such charioteers as these
May drive six harness'd monarchs, if they please.
They drive, row, run, with love of glory smit;
Leap, swim, shoot flying, and pronounce on wit.

O'er the belles-lettres lovely Daphne reigns,
Again the god Apollo wears her chains.
With legs toss'd high on her sophee she sits,
Vouchsafing audience to contending wits;
Of each performance she's the final test;
One act read o'er, she prophesies the rest;
And then pronouncing with decisive air,
Fully convinces all the town—she's fair.
Had lovely Daphne Hecatessa's face,
How would her elegance of taste decrease!
Some ladies' judgement in their features lies,
And all their genius sparkles from their eyes.

But hold, she cries, lampooner! have a care;
Must I want common sense because I'm fair?
Oh no! see Stella: her eyes shine as bright
As if her tongue was never in the right;
And yet what real learning, judgement, fire!
She seems inspir'd, and can herself inspire.
How then (if malice rul'd not all the fair)
Could Daphne publish, and could she forbear?
We grant that beauty is no bar to sense,
Nor is't a sanction for impertinence.

Sempronia lik'd her man, and well she might,
The youth in person and in parts was bright;
Possess'd of ev'ry virtue, grace, and art,
That claims just empire o'er the female heart.
He met her passion, all her sighs return'd,
And in full rage of youthful ardor burn'd.
Large his possessions, and beyond her own;
Their bliss the theme and envy of the town.
The day was fix'd; when, with one acre more,
In stepp'd deform'd, debauch'd, diseas'd, three—
The fatal sequel I through shame forbear: [score.
Of pride and av'rice who can cure the fair?

Man's rich with little, were his judgement
Nature is frugal, and her wants are few; [true.
Those few wants answer'd bring sincere delights,

But fools create themselves new appetites.

Fancy and pride seek things at vast expense,
Which relish not to reason nor to sense.
When surfeit or unthankfulness destroys,
In nature's narrow sphere our solid joys,
In fancy's airy land of noise and show, [grow,
Where nought but dreams, no real pleasures
Like cats in air-pumps, to subsist we strive
On joys too thin to keep the soul alive.

Lemira's sick, make haste, the doctor call:
He comes: but where's his patient? At the ball.
The doctor stares, her woman curtsies low,
And cries, "My lady, sir, is always so."
"Diversions put her maladies to flight; [night.
"True, she can't stand, but she can dance all
"I've known my lady (for she loves a tune)
"For fevers take an opera in June; [bold,
"And though perhaps you'll think the practice
"A midnight park is sov'reign for a cold.
"With colics, breakfasts of green fruit agree;
"With indigestions, supper just at three."

A strange alternative! replies Sir Hans;
Must women have a doctor, or a dance?
Though sick to death abroad they safely roam;
But droop and die in perfect health at home.
For want—but not of health—are ladies ill;
And tickets cure beyond the doctor's pill.

Alas! my heart, how languishingly fair
Yon lady lolls! with what a tender air!
Pale as a young dramatic author, when
O'er darling lines fell Cibber waves his pen.
Is her lord angry, or has Veny* chid?
Dead is her father, or the mask forbid?
"Late sitting up has turn'd her roses white."
Why went she not to bed? "Because 'twas night." [that.
Did she then dance or play? "Nor this or Well night soon steals away in pleasing chat.
"No, all alone, her pray'rs she rather chose,
"Than be that wretch to sleep till morning rose."

Then Lady Cynthia, mistress of the shade,
Goes with the fashionable owls to bed.
This her pride covets, this her health denies;
Her soul is silly, but her body's wise.

Others with curious arts dim charms revive,
And triumph in the bloom of fifty-five.
You in the morning a fair nymph invite,
To keep her word a brown one comes at night;
Next day she shines in glossy black, and then
Revolves into her native red again. [charms,
Like a dove's neck, she shifts her transient
And is her own dear rival in your arms.

But one admirer has the painted lass;
Nor finds that one but in her looking-glass.
Yet Laura's beautiful to such excess,
That all her art scarce makes her please the less:
To deck the female cheek He only knows,
Who paints less fair the lily and the rose.

How gay they smile! Such blessings nature
pours,

O'erstock'd mankind enjoy but half her stores:
In distant wilds, by human eyes unseen,
She rears her flow'rs, and spreads her velvet green.

* Lap-dog.

Pure gurgling rills the lonely desert trace,
And waste their music on the savage race.
Is Nature then a niggard of her bliss?
Repine we guiltless in a world like this?
But our lewd tastes her lawful charms refuse,
And painted art's deprav'd allurements choose.
Such Fulvia's passion for the town; fresh air
(An odd effect!) gives vapors to the fair;
Green fields, and shady groves, and crystal springs,
And larks, and nightingales, are odious things;
But smoke, and dust, and noise, and crowds,
delight:

And to be prest to death transports her quite.
Where silver riv'lets play through flow'ry meads,
And woodbines give their sweets, and limes
their shades,

Black kennels' absent odors she regrets,
And stops her nose at beds of violets.

Is stormy life preferr'd to this serene?
Or is the public to the private scene?
Retir'd, we tread a smooth and open way!
Through briars and brambles, in the world we Stiff opposition, and perplex'd debate, [stray;
And thorny care, and rank and stinging hate,
Which choke our passage, our career control,
And wound the firmest temper of the soul.
O sacred solitude, divine retreat!

Choice of the prudent, envy of the great!
By thy pure stream, or in thy waving shade,
We court fair wisdom, that celestial maid:
The genuine offspring of her lov'd embrace
(Strangers on earth!) are Innocence and Peace.
There, from the ways of men laid safe ashore,
We smile to hear the distant tempest roar;
There, blest with health, with business unperplex'd,

This life we relish and ensure the next;
There too the Muses sport; these numbers free,
Pierian Eastbury! I owe to thee.

There sport the muses, but not here alone;
Their sacred force Amelia feels in town.
Nought but a genius can a genius fit;
A wit herself, Amelia weds a wit.
Both wits! Though miracles are said to cease,
Three days, three wondrous days, they liv'd in peace!

With the fourth sun a warm dispute arose
On Durfey's poesy, and Bunyan's prose.
The learned war both wage with equal force,
And the fifth morn concluded the divorce.

Phoebe, though she possesses nothing less,
Is proud of being rich in happiness;
Laboriously pursues delusive toys,
Content with pain, since they're reputed joys.
With what well-acted transport will she say,
"Well, sure, we were so happy yesterday!"
"And then that charming party for to-morrow!"
Though well she knows 'twill languish into sorrow.

But she dares never boast the present hour;
So gross that cheat, it is beyond her pow'r.
For such is or our weakness or our curse,
Or rather such our crime, which still is worse,

The present moment, like a wife, we shun,
And ne'er enjoy, because it is our own.

Pleasures are few, and fewer we enjoy;
Pleasure, like quicksilver, is bright and coy;
We strive to grasp it with our utmost skill,
Still it eludes us, and it glitters still:
If seiz'd at last, compute your mighty gains;
What is it but rank poison in your veins?

As Flavia in her glass an angel spies,
Pride whispers in her ear pernicious lies;
Tells her, while she surveys a face so fine,
There's no satiety of charms divine:
Hence, if her lover yawns, all chang'd appears
Her temper, and she melts (sweet soul!) in tears!

She, fond and young, last week her wish enjoy'd,
In soft amusement all the night employ'd;
The morning came, when Strephon, waking,
found

(Surprising sight!) his bride in sorrow drown'd.
"What miracle," says Strephon, "makes thee
weep?"

"Ah, barbarous man!" she cries, "how could you sleep?"

Men love a mistress as they love a feast;
How grateful one to touch, and one to taste;
Yet sure there is a certain time of day,
We wish our mistress and our meat away.
But soon the sated appetites return;
Again our stomachs crave, our bosoms burn.
Eternal love let man then never swear;
Let women never triumph, nor despair.
Nor praise nor blame too much the warm or chill;

Hunger and love are foreign to the will.

There is indeed a passion more refin'd,
For those few nymphs whose charms are of the
But not of that unfashionable set [mind;
Is Phillis: Phillis and her Damon met.

Eternal love exactly hits her taste;
Phillis demands eternal love at least.
Embracing Phillis, with soft smiling eyes,
Eternal love I vow, the swain replies;
But say, my all, my mistress, and my friend!
What day next week th' eternity shall end?

Some nymphs prefer astronomy to love:
Elope from mortal men, and range above.
The fair philosopher to Rowley flies,
Where in a box the whole creation lies.
She sees the planets in their turns advance:
And scorns, Poitier, thy sublunary dance.
Of Desagulier she bespeaks fresh air,
And Whiston has engagements with the fair.

What vain experiments Sophronia tries!
'Tis not in air-pumps the gay colonel dies.
But though to-day this rage of science reigns,
(O fickle sex!), soon end her learned pains.
Lo! Pug from Jupiter her heart has got,
Turns out the stars, and Newton is a sot.

To — turn; she never took the height
Of Saturn, yet is ever in the right;
She strikes each point with native force of
mind,

While puzzled learning blunders far behind.

Graceful to sight, and elegant to thought,
The great are vanquish'd, and the wise are taught.
Her breeding finish'd, and her temper sweet;
When serious, easy; and when gay, discreet;
In glitt'ring scenes, o'er her own heart severe;
In crowds collected, and in courts sincere;
Sincere and warm with zeal well understood,
She takes a noble pride in doing good.

Yet, not superior to her sex's cares,
The mode she fixes by the gown she wears;
Of silks and china she's the last appeal; [weal:
In these great points she leads the common-
And if disputes of empire rise between Mechlin, the queen of lace, and Colberteen,
'Tis doubt! 'tis darkness! till suspended fate
Assumes her nod to close the grand debate.

When such her mind, why will the fair express
Their emulation only in their dress? [skies,

But, oh! the nymph that mounts above the
And, gratis, clears religious mysteries!
Resolv'd the church's welfare to ensure,
And make her family a sinecure.

The theme divine at cards she'll not forget,
But takes in texts of Scripture at piquet;
In those licentious meetings acts the prude,
And thanks her maker that her cards are good.

What angels would these be, who thus excel
In theologies, could they sew as well!
Yet why should not the fair her text pursue?
Can she more decently the doctor woo?

'Tis hard too, she who makes no use but chat
Of her religion, should be barr'd in that.

Isaac, a brother of the canting strain,
When he has knock'd at his own skull in vain,
To beauteous Marcia often will repair
With a dark text, to light it at the fair.

Oh, how his pious soul exults to find
Such love for holy men in womankind!

Charm'd with her learning, with what rapture he Hangs on her bloom, like an industrious bee!
Hums round about her; and with all his pow'r
Extracts sweet wisdom from so fair a flow'r!

The young and gay declining, Appia flies
At nobler game, the mighty and the wise:
By nature more an eagle than a dove,
She impiously prefers the world to love. [see

Can wealth give happiness? look round, and
What gay distress! what splendid misery!
Whatever fortune lavishly can pour,
The mind annihilates, and calls for more.

Wealth is a cheat, believe not what it says:
Like any lord it promises—and pays.
How will the miser startle to be told
Of such a wonder as insolvent gold!

What nature wants has an intrinsic weight;
All more is but the fashion of the plate,
Which, for one moment, charms the fickle view:
It charms us now; anon we cast anew,

To some fresh birth of fancy more inclin'd:
Then wed not acres, but a noble mind.

Mistaken lovers! who make worth their care,
And think accomplishments will win the fair.
The fair, 'tis true, by genius should be won,
As flow'rs unfold their beauties to the sun;

And yet in female scales a fop outweighs,
And wit must wear the willow with the bays.
Nought shines so bright in vain Liberia's eye
As riot, impudence, and perfidy; [play'd,
The youth of fire, that has drunk deep, and
And kill'd his man, and triumph'd o'er his maid;

For him, as yet unhang'd, she spreads her charms,
Snatches the dear destroyer to her arms,
And amply gives (though treated long amiss)
The man of merit his revenge in this.

If you resent, and wish a woman ill,
But turn her o'er one moment to her will.

The languid lady next appears in state,
Who was not born to carry her own weight;
She lolls, reels, staggers, till some foreign aid
To her own stature lifts the feeble maid.

Then, if ordain'd to so severe a doom,
She by just stages journeys round the room;
But, knowing her own weakness, she despairs
To scale the Alps—that is, ascend the stairs.

My fan, let others say who laugh at toil;
Fan! hood! glove! scarf! is her laconic style;

And that is spoke with such a dying fall,
That Betty rather sees than hears the call:
The motion of her lips, and meaning eye,
Pierce out th' idea her faint words deny.

Oh listen with attention most profound!
Her voice is but the shadow of a sound.

And help! oh help! her spirits are so dead,
One hand scarce lifts the other to her head.

If there a stubborn pin it triumphs o'er,
She pants! she sinks away! and is no more.

Let the robust and the gigantic carve;
Life is not worth so much, she'd rather starve:
But chew she must, herself, ah, cruel fate!
That Rosalinda can't by proxy eat.

An antidote in female caprice lies
(Kind heaven!) against the poison of their eyes.

Thalestris triumphs in a manly mien:
Loud is her accent, and her phrase obscene,
In fair and open dealing where's the shame?
What nature dares to give, she dares to name.

This honest fellow is sincere and plain,
And justly gives the jealous husband pain.
(Vain is the task to petticoats assign'd,
If wanton language shows a naked mind.)

And now and then, to grace her eloquence,
An oath supplies the vacancies of sense.

Hark! the shrill notes transpierce the yielding
air,

And teach the neighb'ring echos how to swear.
'By Jove,' is faint, and for the simple swain;

She on the Christian system is profane.
But though the volley rattles in your ear,
Believe her dress, she's not a grenadier.

If thunder's awful, how much more our dread
When Jove deutes a lady in his stead!

A lady! pardon my mistaken pen;
A shameless woman is the worst of men.

Few to good breeding make a just pretence;
Good breeding is the blossom of good sense;
The last result of an accomplish'd mind,
With outward grace, the body's virtue, join'd.

A violated decency now reigns ;
 And nymphs for failings take peculiar pains,
 With Indian painters modern toasts agree,
 The point they aim at is deformity :
 They throw their persons with a hoyden air
 Across the room, and toss into the chair.
 So far their commerce with mankind is gone,
 They for our manners have exchange'd our own.
 The modest look, the castigated grace,
 The gentle movement, and slow-measur'd pace,
 For which her lovers died, her parents pray'd,
 Are indecorums with the modern maid.
 Stiff forms are bad, but let not worse intrude,
 Nor conquer art and nature to be rude.
 Modern good-breeding carry to its height,
 And Lady D——'s self will be polite.

Ye rising fair ! ye bloom of Britain's isle !
 When high-born Anna with a soften'd smile
 Leads on your train, and sparkles at your head,
 What seems most hard, is not to be well-bred.
 Her bright example with success pursue,
 And all but adoration is your due.

But adoration ! Give me something more,
 Cries Lyce, on the borders of threescore ;
 Nought treads so silent as the foot of Time ;
 Hence we mistake our autumn for our prime :
 'Tis greatly wise to know, before we're told,
 The melancholy news that we grow old.
 Autumnal Lyce carries in her face
Memento mori to each public place.
 Oh how your beating breast a mistress warms,
 Who looks thro' spectacles to see your charms !
 While rival undertakers hover round,
 And with his spade the sexton marks the ground,
 Intent not on her own, but others' doom,
 She plans new conquests, and defrauds the tomb.
 In vain the cock has summon'd sprites away,
 She walks at noon, and blasts the bloom of day.
 Gay rainbow silks her mellow charms infold,
 And nought of Lyce but herself is old.
 Her grizzled locks assume a smirking grace,
 And art has levell'd her deep-furrow'd face.
 Her strange demand no mortal can approve :
 We'll ask her blessing, but can't ask her love.
 She grants indeed a lady may decline
 (All ladies but herself) at ninety-nine.

O how unlike her was the sacred age
 Of prudent Portia ! her gray hairs engage ;
 Whose thoughts are suited to her life's decline :
 Virtue's the paint that can make wrinkles shine.
 That, and that only, can old age sustain ;
 Which yet all wish, nor know they wish for pain.
 Not numerous are our joys when life is new,
 And yearly some are falling of the few ;
 But when we conquer life's meridian stage,
 And downward tend into the vale of age,
 They drop apace ; by nature some decay,
 And some the blasts of fortune sweep away ;
 Till, naked quite of happiness, aloud
 We call for death, and shelter in a shroud.

Where's Portia now ? But Portia left behind
 Two lovely copies of her form and mind.
 What heart untouch'd their early grief can view,
 Like blushing rose-buds dipt in morning dew ?

Who into shelter takes their tender bloom,
 And forms their minds to fly from ills to come ?
 The mind when turn'd adrift, no rules to guide,
 Drives at the mercy of the wind and tide ;
 Fancy and passion toss it to and fro,
 Awhile torment, and then quite sink in woe.
 Ye beauteous orphans ! since in silent dust
 Your best example lies, my precepts trust.
 Life swarms with ills ; the boldest are afraid ;
 Where then is safety for a tender maid ?
 Unfit for conflict, round beset with woes,
 And man, whom least she fears, her worst of foes !

When kind, most cruel ; when oblig'd the most,
 The least obliging, and by favors lost.
 Cruel by nature, they for kindness hate,
 And scorn you for those ills themselves create.
 If on your fame our sex a blot has thrown,
 'Twill ever stick, through malice of your own.
 Most hard ! in pleasing your chief glory lies ;
 And yet from pleasing your chief dangers rise :
 Then please the best ; and know, for men of sense

Your strongest charms are native innocence.
 Arts on the mind, like paint upon the face,
 Fright him that's worth your love from your embrace.

In simple manners all the secret lies ;
 Be kind and virtuous, you'll be blest and wise,
 Vain show and noise intoxicate the brain,
 Begin with giddiness, and end in pain.
 Affect not empty fame and idle praise,
 Which all those wretches I describe betrays.
 Your sex's glory 'tis to shine unknown ;
 Of all applause be fondest of your own.
 Beware the fever of the mind ; that thirst
 With which this age is eminently curst.
 To drink of pleasure but inflames desire,
 And abstinence alone can quench the fire.
 Take pain from life, and terror from the tomb,
 Give peace in hand, and promise bliss to come.

SATIRE VI.

On Women.

Inscribed to the Right Honourable Lady Elizabeth Germain.

Interdum tamen et tollit Comœdia vocem.
 HOR.

I SOUGHT a patroness, but sought in vain :
 Apollo whisper'd in my ear—" Germain."
 I know her not. " Your reason's somewhat odd ;
 " Who knows his patron now ?" replied the god.
 " Men write, to me and to the world unknown ;
 " Then steal great names to shield them from
 " the town.
 " Detected worth, like beauty disarray'd,
 " To covert flies, of praise itself afraid ;
 " Should she refuse to patronise your lays,
 " In vengeance write a volume in her praise.

"Nor think it hard so great a length to run;
 "When such the theme, 'twill easily be done."

Ye fair! to draw your excellence at length,
 Exceeds the narrow bounds of human strength:
 You here in miniature your picture see;
 Nor hope from Zinck more justice than from me.

My portraits grace your mind, as his your side;
 His portraits will inflame, mine quench your pride:

He's dear, you frugal; choose my cheaper lay,
 And be your reformation all my pay.

Lavinia is polite, but not profane;
 To church as constant as to Drury-lane.
 She decently in form pays Heav'n its due;
 And makes a civil visit to her pew.

Her lifted fan, to give a solemn air,
 Conceals her face, which passes for a pray'r:
 Curt'sies to curt'sies then with grace succeed;
 Not one the fair omits, but at the creed.
 Or, if she joins the service, 'tis to speak;
 Through dreadful silence the pent heart might break;

Untaught to bear it, women talk away
 To God himself, and fondly think they pray.
 But sweet the accent, and their air refin'd;
 For they're before their Maker—and mankind:
 When ladies once are proud of praying well,
 Satan himself will toll the parish bell.

Acquainted with the world, and quite well bred,

Drusa receives her visitants in bed;
 But, chaste as ice, this Vesta, to defy
 The very blackest tongue of calumny,
 When from her sheets her lovely form she lifts,
 She begs you just would turn you while she shifts.

Those charms are greatest which decline the sight;

That makes the banquet poignant and polite.
 There is no woman where there's no reserve;
 And 'tis on plenty your poor lovers starve.

But, with the modern fair, meridian merit
 Is a fierce thing they call a nymph of spirit.
 Mark well the rollings of her flaming eye,
 And tread on tiptoe, if you dare draw nigh.

"Or if you take a lion by the beard,*
 "Or dare defy the fell Hyrcanian pard,
 "Or arm'd rhinoceros, or rough Russian bear,"
 First make your will, and then converse with her.

This lady glories in profuse expense,
 And thinks distraction is magnificence;
 To beggar her gallant, is some delight;
 To be more fatal still, is exquisite.

Had ever nymph such reason to be glad?
 In duel fell two lovers; one run mad.
 Her foes their honest execrations pour;
 Her lovers only should detest her more.
 Thrice happy they who think I boldly feign,
 And startle at a mistress of my brain.

Flavia is constant to her old gallant,
 And generously supports him in his want.

But marriage is a fetter, is a snare,
 And hell no lady so polite can bear.
 She's faithful, she's observant, and with pains
 Her angel brood of bastards she maintains,
 Nor least advantage has the fair to plead,
 But that of guilt above the marriage-bed.

Amasia hates a prude, and scorns restraint;
 Whate'er she is, she'll not appear a saint:
 Her soul superior flies formality;
 So gay her air, her conduct is so free,
 Some might suspect the nymph not over good—
 Nor would they be mistaken if they should.

Unmarried Abra puts on formal airs;
 Her cushion's threadbare with her constant pray'rs.

Her only grief is, that she cannot be
 At once engag'd in pray'r and charity.
 And this, to do her justice, must be said:
 "Who would not think that Abra was a maid?"

Some ladies are too beauteous to be wed;
 For where's the man that's worthy of their bed?

If no disease reduce her pride before,
 Lavinia will be ravish'd at threescore.
 Then she submits to venture in the dark;
 And nothing now is wanting—but her spark.

Lucia thinks happiness consists in state;
 She weds an idiot, but she eats in plate.
 The goods of fortune which her soul possess,
 Are but the ground of unmade happiness,
 The rude material; wisdom add to this,
 Wisdom the sole artificer of bliss.

She, from herself, if so compell'd by need,
 Of thin content can draw the subtle thread;
 But (no detraction to her sacred skill)
 If she can work in gold, 'tis better still.

If Tullia had been blest with half her sense,
 None could too much admire her excellence.
 But since she can make error shine so bright,
 She thinks it vulgar to defend the right.
 With understanding she is quite o'errun;
 And by too great accomplishments undone.
 With skill she vibrates her eternal tongue,
 For ever most divinely in the wrong.

Naked in nothing should a woman be,
 But veil her very wit with modesty;
 Let man discover, let not her display,
 But yield her charms of mind with sweet delay.

For pleasure form'd, perversely some believe,
 To make themselves important, men must grieve.
 Lesbia the fair, to fire her jealous lord,
 Pretends the fop she laughs at is ador'd.
 In vain she's proud of secret innocence;
 The fact she feigns were scarce a worse offence.

Mira, endow'd with ev'ry charm to bless,
 Has no design but on her husband's peace;
 He lov'd her much, and greatly was he mov'd
 At small inquietudes in her he lov'd.
 "How charming this!"—The pleasure lasted long:

Now ev'ry day the fit comes thick and strong:

At last he found the charmer only feign'd ;
And was diverted when he should be pain'd .
What greater vengeance have the Gods in store ?
How tedious life, now she can plague no more !
She tries her thousand arts, but none succeed ;
She's forc'd a fever to procure indeed :
Thus strictly prov'd this virtuous loving wife,
Her husband's pain was dearer than her life.

Anxious Melania rises to my view,
Who never thinks her lover pays his due :
Visit, present, treat, flatter, and adore ;
Her majesty to-morrow calls for more.
His wounded ears complaints eternal fill,
As uncoil'd hinges querulously shrill.
" You went last night with Celia to the ball."
You prove it false. " Not go ? that's worst of all."

Nothing can please her, nothing not inflame ;
And arrant contradictions are the same.
Her lover must be sad, to please her spleen ;
His mirth is an inexpiable sin :
For, of all rivals that can pain her breast,
There's one that wounds far deeper than the rest ;

To wreck her quiet, the most dreadful shelf
Is, if her lover dares enjoy himself.

And this, because she's exquisitely fair ;
Should I dispute her beauty, how she'd stare !
How would Melania be surpris'd to hear
She's quite deform'd ! and yet the case is clear.

What's female beauty but an air divine,
Thro' which the mind's all-gentle graces shine ?
They, like the sun, irradiate all between ;
The body charms because the soul is seen.
Hence men are often captives of a face,
They know not why, of no peculiar grace ;
Some forms, though bright, no mortal man can bear ;

Some none resist, though not exceeding fair.

Aspasia's highly born, and nicely bred,
Of taste refin'd, in life and manners read,
Yet reaps no fruit from her superior sense,
But to be teas'd by her own excellence.

" Folks are so awkward ! things so unpolite !"
She's elegantly pain'd from morn to night.
Her delicacy's shock'd where'er she goes ;
Each creature's imperfections are her woes.
Heaven by its favors has the fair distress'd,
And pour'd such blessings—that she can't be blest. [spring,

Ah ! why so vain, though blooming in thy
Thou shining, frail, ador'd, and wretched thing !
Old age will come, disease may come before ;
Fifteen is full as mortal as threescore :
Thy fortune and thy charms may soon decay ;
But grant these fugitives prolong their stay,
Their basis totters, their foundation shakes,
Life that supports them in a moment breaks :
Then wrought into the soul let virtue shine ;
The ground eternal, as the work divine.

Julia's a manager, she's born for rule,
And knows her wiser husband is a fool ;
Assemblies holds, and spins the subtle thread
That guides the lover to his fair one's bed ;

For difficult amours can smooth the way,
And tender letters dictate or convey.
But, if depriv'd of such important cares,
Her wisdom condescends to less affairs.
For her own breakfast she'll project a scheme,
Nor take her tea without a stratagem ;
Presides o'er trifles with a serious face,
Important by the virtue of grimace.

Ladies supreme among amusements reign,
By nature born to soothe and entertain ;
Their prudence in a share of folly lies ;
Why will they be so weak as to be wise ?
Syrena is for ever in extremes,
And with a vengeance she commends or blames.
Conscious of her discernment, which is good,
She strains too much to make it understood.
Her judgement just, her sentence is too strong ;
Because she's right, she's ever in the wrong.

Brunetta's wise in actions great and rare ;
But scorns on trifles to bestow her care.
Thus ev'ry hour Brunetta is to blame,
Because th' occasion is beneath her aim.
Think nought a trifle, though it small appear ;
Small sands the mountain, moments make the year,

And trifles life. Your care to trifles give,
Or you may die before you truly live.

Go breakfast with Alicia ; there you'll see
Simplex munditiis to the last degree.
Unlac'd her stays, her night-gown is untied,
And what she has of head-dress is aside.
She drawls her words, and waddles in her pace ;
Unwash'd her hands, and much besnuff'd her face.

A nail uncut, and head uncomb'd she loves ;
And would draw on jack-boots as soon as gloves.
Gloves by queen Bess's maidens might be mist ;
Her blessed eyes ne'er saw a female fist.
Lovers, beware ! to wound how can she fail
With scarlet finger and long jetty nail ?
For Hervey the first wit she cannot be ;
Nor, cruel Richard, the first toast for thee.
Since full each other station of renown,
Who would not be the greatest trapes in town ?
Women were made to give our eyes delight ;
A female sloven is an odious sight.

Fair Isabella is so fond of fame,
That her dear self is her eternal theme !
Through hopes of contradiction, oft she'll say,
" Methinks I look so wretchedly to-day !"
When most the world applauds you, most beware :

'Tis often less a blessing than a snare.
Distrust mankind ; with your own heart confer ;
And dread e'en there to find a flatterer.
The breath of others raises our renown ;
Our own as surely blows the pageant down :
Take up no more than you by worth can claim,
Lest soon you prove a bankrupt in your fame.

But own I must in this perverted age,
Who most deserve can't always most engage.
So far is worth from making glory sure,
It often hinders what it should procure.

Whom praise we most? the virtuous, brave,
and wise?

No; wretches whom in secret we despise.
And who so blind as not to see the cause?
No rival's rais'd by such discreet applause;
And yet of credit it lays in a store,
By which our spleen may wound true worth the more.

Ladies there are who think one crime is all;
Can women then no way but backward fall?
So sweet is that one crime they don't pursue,
To pay its loss, they think all others few.
Who hold that crime so dear, must never claim
Of injur'd modesty the sacred name.

But Clio thus: "What! railing without end?
"Mean task! how much more gen'rous to commend!"

Yes, to commend as you are wont to do,
My kind instructor and example too.

"Daphnis," says Clio, "has a charming eye:
"What pity 'tis her shoulder is awry!

"Aspasia's shape indeed—but then her air—
"The man has parts who finds destruction there.
"Almeria's wit has something that's divine;
"And wit's enough—how few in all things shine!

"Selina serves her friends, relieves the poor—
"Who was it said Selina's near threescore?
"At Lucia's match I from my soul rejoice,
"The world congratulates so wise a choice;
"His lordship's rent-roll is exceeding great—
"But mortgages will sap the best estate.
"In Shirley's form might cherubims appear,
"But then—she has a freckle on her ear."

Without a but, Hortensia she commends,
The first of women, and the best of friends;
Owns her in person, wit, fame, virtue, bright;
But how comes this to pass?—she died last night.

Thus nymphs commend, who yet at satire rail;

Indeed that's needless, if such praise prevail;
And whence such praise? our virulence is thrown

On others' fame, through fondness for our own.

Of rank and riches proud, Cleora frowns;
For are not coronets akin to crowns?
Her greedy eye, and her sublime address,
The height of avarice and pride confess.
You seek perfections worthy of her rank;
Go, seek for her perfections at the Bank.
By wealth unquench'd, by reason uncontroll'd,
For ever burns her sacred thirst of gold.
As fond of fivepence as the veriest cit,
And quite as much detested as a wit.

Can gold calm passion, or make reason shine?
Can we dig peace or wisdom from the mine?
Wisdom to gold prefer, for 'tis much less
To make our fortune, than our happiness;
That happiness which great ones often see,
With rage and wonder, in a low degree,
Themselves unblest: the poor are only poor;
But what are they who droop amid their store?
Nothing is meaner than a wretch of state,
The happy only are the truly great.

Peasants enjoy like appetites with kings,
And those best satisfied with cheapest things.
Could both our Indies buy but one new sense,
Our envy would be due to large expense:
Since not, those pomps which to the great belong,
Are but poor arts to mark them from the throng.
See, how they beg an alms of flattery!

They languish! oh support them with a lie!
A decent competence we fully taste;
It strikes our sense, and gives a constant feast:
More, we perceive by dint of thought alone;
The rich must labor to possess their own,
To feel their great abundance; and request
Their humble friends to help them to be blest;
To see their treasures, hear their glory told,
And aid the wretched impotence of gold.

But some, great souls! and touch'd with warmth divine,
Give gold a price, and teach its beams to shine.
All hoarded treasures they repute a load,
Nor think their wealth their own, till well bestow'd.

Grand reservoirs of public happiness,
Through secret streams diffusively they bless;
And while their bounties glide conceal'd from view,

Relieve our wants, and spare our blushes too.

But satire is my task, and these destroy
Her gloomy province and malignant joy.

Help me, ye misers! help me to complain,
And blast our common enemy, Germain:

But our invectives must despair success;
For next to praise, she values nothing less.

What picture's yonder, loosen'd from its
Or is't Asturia, that affected dame? [frame?
The brightest forms, through affectation, fade
To strange new things, which nature never made.

Frown not, ye fair! so much your sex we prize,
We hate those arts that take you from our eyes.

In Albucinda's native grace is seen
What you, who labor at perfection, mean.

Short is the rule, and to be learnt with ease;
Retain your gentle selves, and you must please.

Here might I sing of Memmia's mincing mien,
And all the movements of the soft machine;

How two red lips affected zephyrs blow,
To cool the bohea, and inflame the beau;

While one white finger and a thumb conspire
To lift the cup and make the world admire.

Tea! how I tremble at thy fatal stream!
As Lethe, dreadful to the love of fame.

What devastations on thy banks are seen!
What shades of mighty names which once have

A hecatomb of characters supplies [been!
Thy painted altar's daily sacrifice;

H—, P—, B—, aspers'd by thee decay,
As grains of finest sugars melt away,

And recommend thee more to mortal taste:
Scandal's the sweet'ner of a female feast.

But this inhuman triumph shall decline,
And thy revolving Naiads call for wine;

Spirits no longer shall serve under thee;
But reign in thy own cup, exploded tea!

Citronia's nose declares thy ruin nigh ;
And who dares give Citronia's nose the lie? *

The ladies long at men of drink exclaim'd,
And what impair'd both health and virtue blain'd.

At length, to rescue man, the gen'rous lass
Stole from her consort the pernicious glass.
As glorious as the British queen renown'd,
Who suck'd the poison from her husband's wound.

Nor to the glass alone are nymphs inclin'd,
But ev'ry bolder vice of bold mankind.

O Juvenal! for thy severer rage,
To lash the ranker follies of our age!
Are there among the females of our isle
Such faults at which it is a fault to smile?
There are. Vice, once by modest nature chain'd,
And legal ties, expatiates unrestrain'd;
Without thin decency held up to view,
Naked she stalks o'er law and gospel too.
Our matrons lead such exemplary lives,
Men sigh in vain for none but for their wives;
Who marry to be free, to range the more,
And wed one man to wanton with a score.
Abroad too kind, at home 'tis stedfast hate,
And one eternal tempest of debate.

What foul eruptions from a look most meek!
What thunders bursting from a dimpled cheek!
Their passions bear it with a lofty hand;
But then their reason is at due command.
Is there whom you detest, and seek his life?
Trust no soul with the secret—but his wife.
Wives wonder that their conduct I condemn,
And ask, what kindred is a spouse to them?

What swarms of am'rous grandmothers I see,
And misses, ancient in iniquity!
What blasting whispers, and what loud declaim-
ing!

What lying, drinking, bawding, swearing, gam-
Friendship so cold, such warm incontinence,
Such griping av'rice, such profuse expense,
Such dead devotion, such a zeal for crimes,
Such licens'd ill, such masquerading times,
Such venal faith, such misapplied applause,
Such flatter'd guilt, and such inverted laws,
Such dissolution through the whole I find,
'Tis not a world, but chaos of mankind.

Since Sundays have no balls, the well-dress'd belle

Shines in a pew, but smiles to hear of hell;
And casts an eye of sweet disdain on all
Who listen less to C——ns than St. Paul.
Atheists have been but rare since nature's birth;
Till now she-atheists ne'er appear'd on earth;
Ye men of deep researches, say whence springs
This daring character in tim'rous things,
Who start at feathers, from an insect fly,
A match for nothing—but the Deity? [own

But, not to wrong the fair, the Muse must
In this pursuit they court not fame alone;
But join to that a more substantial view—
“From thinking free, to be free agents too.”

They strive with their own hearts, and keep them down

In complaisance to all the fools in town.
Oh how they tremble at the name of prude!
And die with shame at thought of being good!
For what will Artimis, the rich and gay,
What will the wits, that is, the coxcombs say?
They Heaven defy, to earth's vile dregs a slave;
Through cowardice most execrably brave.
With our own judgements durst we to comply,
In virtue should we live, in glory die.
Rise then, my Muse, in honest fury rise!
They dread a Satire who defy the skies.

Atheists are few; most nymphs a god-head
own,

And nothing but his attributes dethrone.
From Atheists far, they stedfastly believe
God is, and is almighty—to forgive.
His other excellence they'll not dispute;
But mercy, sure, is his chief attribute.
Shall pleasures of a short duration chain
A lady's soul in everlasting pain?
Will the great Author us poor worms destroy,
For now, and then, a sip of transient joy?
No, he's for ever in a smiling mood;
He's like themselves, or how could he be good?
And they blaspheme who blacker schemes suppose.

Devoutly, thus, Jehovah they depose,
The pure! the just! and set up in his stead
A Deity that's perfectly well-bred.

“Dear Tillotson!—be sure the best of men—
“Nor thought he more than thought great Origen.

“Though once upon a time he misbehav'd—
“Poor Satan! doubtless he'll at length be sav'd.
“Let priests do something for their one in ten;
“It is their trade; so far they're honest men.
“Let them cant on, since they have got the knack,
“And dress their notions like themselves in black.

“Fright us with terrors of a world unknown
“From joys of this, to keep them all their own.
“Of earth's fair fruits, indeed, they claim a fee;
“But then they leave our untith'd virtue free.
“Virtue's a pretty thing to make a show:
“Did ever mortal write like Rochefoucault?”

Thus pleads the Devil's fair apologist,
And pleading safely enters on his list.

Let angel forms angelic truths maintain;
Nature disjoins the beauteous and profane.
For what's true beauty but fair virtue's face,
Virtue made visible in outward grace?
She, then, that's haunted with an impious mind,
The more she charms, the more she shocks mankind.

But charms decline; the fair long virgils keep;
They sleep no more! Quadrille has murder'd
sleep.†

“Poor K—p! cries Livia; I have not been there “These two nights; the poor creature will despair.

* S——— Solem quis dicere falsum audeat? VIRGIL.

† Shakspeare.

"I hate a crowd—but to do good, you know—
 "And people of condition should bestow."
 Convinc'd, o'ercome, to K—p's grave matrons run,

Now set a daughter, and now stake a son;
 Let health, fame, temper, beauty, fortune fly;
 And beggar half their race—through charity.

Immortal were we, or else mortal quite,
 I less should blame this criminal delight;
 But since the gay assembly's gayest room
 Is but an upper story to some tomb,
 Methinks we need not our short beings shun,
 And, thought to fly, content to be undone:
 We need not buy our ruin with our crime,
 And give eternity to murder time.

The love of gaming is the worst of ills;
 With ceaseless storms the blacken'd soul it fills;
 Inveighs at heaven, neglects the ties of blood,
 Destroys the pow'r and will of doing good;
 Kills health, pawns honor, plunges in disgrace,
 And, what is still more dreadful, spoils your face.

See yonder set of thieves that live on spoil,
 The scandal and the ruin of our isle!
 And see (strange sight!) amid that ruffian band,
 A form divine high wave her snowy hand;
 That rattles loud a small enchanted box,
 Which loud as thunder on the board she knocks.
 And as fierce storms, which earth's foundation shook,

From Æolus's cave impetuous broke,
 From this small cavern a mix'd tempest flies,
 Fear, rage, convulsion, tears, oaths, blasphemies!

For men, I mean—the fair discharges none;
 She, guiltless creature! swears to Heaven alone.

See her eyes start, cheeks glow, and muscles
 swell!

Like the mad maid in the Cumean cell.
 Thus that divine one her soft night employs!
 Thus tunes her soul to tender nuptial joys!
 And when the cruel morning calls to bed,
 And on her pillow lays her aching head,
 With the dire images her dreams are crown'd,
 The die spins lovely, or the cards go round:
 Imaginary ruin charms her still;
 Her happy lord is cuckold by Spadille;
 And, if she's brought to bed, 'tis ten to one,
 He marks the forehead of her darling son.

Oh scene of horror, and of wild despair!
 Why is the rich Atrides' splendid heir
 Constrain'd to quit his ancient lordly seat,
 And hide his glories in a mean retreat?
 Why that drawn sword? and whence that dismal cry?

Why pale distraction through the family?
 See my lord threaten and my lady weep,
 And trembling servants from the tempest creep.
 Why that gay son to distant regions sent?
 What fiends that daughter's destin'd match prevent?

Why the whole house in sudden ruin laid?
 Oh nothing but—last night my lady play'd.

But wanders not my Satire from my theme?
 Is this too owing to the love of fame?

Though now your hearts on lucre are bestow'd;
 'Twas first a vain devotion to the mode.
 Nor cease we here, since 'tis a vice so strong,
 The torrent sweeps all womankind along.
 This may be said in honor of our times,
 That none now stand distinguish'd by their crimes.

If sin you must, take nature for your guide,
 Love has some soft excuse to soothe your pride;
 Ye fair apostates from love's ancient pow'r!
 Can nothing ravish but a golden show'r?
 Can cards alone your glowing fancy seize?
 Must Cupid learn to punt, ere he can please?
 When you're enamour'd of a lift or cast,
 What can the preacher more to make us chaste?
 Can fame, like a repique, the soul entrance!
 And what is virtue to the lucky chance?
 Why must strong youths unmarried pine away?
 They find no woman disengag'd—from play.
 Why pine the married? oh severer fate!
 They find from play no disengag'd—estate.
 Flavia, at lovers false, untouch'd, and hard,
 Turns pale and trembles at a cruel card.
 Nor Arria's Bible can secure her age;
 Her threescore years are shuffling with her page:
 While death stands by but till the game is done,
 To sweep that stake in justice long his own;
 Like old cards ting'd with sulphur, she takes fire;
 Or, like snuffs sunk in socket, blazes higher.
 Ye gods! with new delights inspire the fair;
 Or give us sons, and save us from despair!

Sons, brothers, fathers, husbands, tradesmen,
 close

In my complaint, and brand your sins in prose:
 Yet I believe as firmly as my creed,
 In spite of all our wisdom, you'll proceed.
 Our pride so great, our passion is so strong,
 Advice to right confirms us in the wrong.
 I hear you cry, "This fellow's very odd!"
 When you chastise, who would not kiss the rod?
 But I've a charm your anger shall control,
 And turn your eyes with coldness on the vole.

The charm begins! To yonder flood of light
 That bursts o'er gloomy Britain, turn your sight.
 What guardian pow'r o'erwhelms your soul with awe?

Her deeds are precepts, her example law.
 'Midst empire's charms, how Carolina's heart
 Glows with a love of virtue and of art!
 Her favor is diffus'd to that degree,
 Excess of goodness! it has dawn'd on me,
 When in my page, to balance num'rous faults,
 Or god-like deeds were shown, or gen'rous
 thoughts,

She smil'd, industrious to be pleas'd, nor knew
 From whom my pen the borrow'd lustre drew.

* Thus the majestic mother of mankind,
 To her own charms most amiably blind,
 On the green margin innocently stood,
 And gaz'd indulgent on the crystal flood,
 Survey'd the stranger in the painted wave,
 And smiling prais'd the beauties which she gave.

• Milton.

 While genius is but cold, their passion warm ;
 While public good aloft, in pomp they wield ;
 And private int'rest sculks behind the shield ;
 While Mist and Wilkins rise in weekly might,
 Make presses groan, lead senators to fight ;
 Exalt our coffee with lampoons, and treat
 The pamper'd mob with ministers of state :
 " † While Até, hot from hell, makes heroes shrink,
 " Cries havoc, and lets loose the dogs of ink :
 Nor rank nor sex escapes the gen'ral frown,
 But ladies are ripp'd up and cits knock'd down :
 Tremendous force ! where e'en the victor bleeds ;
 And he deserves our pity that succeeds :
 Immortal Juvenal ! and thou of France !
 In your fam'd field my Satire dares advance ;
 But cuts herself a track to you unknown ;
 Nor crops your laurel, but would raise her own :
 A bold adventure ! but a safe one too !
 For though surpass'd, I am surpass'd by you.

SATIRE VII.

To the Right Honorable Sir Robert Walpole.

Carmina tum melius, cum venerit Ipse, canemus. VIRG.

ON this last labor, this my closing strain,
 Smile, Walpole, or the Nine inspire in vain.
 To thee 'tis due ; that verse how justly thine,
 Where Brunswick's glory crowns the whole design !

That glory which thy counsels make so bright,
 That glory which on thee reflects a light.
 Illustrious commerce, and but rarely known !
 To give and take a lustre from the throne.

Nor think that thou art foreign to my theme ;
 The fountain is not foreign to the stream.
 How all mankind will be surpris'd to see
 This flood of British folly charg'd on thee !
 Yet, Britain, whence this caprice of thy sons,
 Which through their various ranks with fury runs ?

The cause is plain, a cause which we must bless,
 For caprice is the daughter of success,
 (A bad effect, but from a pleasing cause)
 And gives our rulers undesign'd applause ;
 Tells how their conduct bids our wealth increase,
 And lulls us in the downy lap of peace.

While I survey the blessings of our isle,
 Her arts triumphant in the royal smile,
 Her public wounds bound up, her credit high,
 Her commerce spreading sails in ev'ry sky,
 The pleasing scene recalls my theme again,
 And shows the madness of ambitious men,
 Who, fond of bloodshed, draw the murd'ring sword,

And burn to give mankind a single lord.

The follies past are of a private kind,
 Their sphere is small, their mischief is confin'd :

* Lucan.

† Shakspeare.

But daring men there are (awake, my Muse !
 And raise thy verse,) who bolder phrenzy choose ;

Who, stung by glory, rave and bound away ;
 The world their friend, and human kind their prey.

The Grecian chief, th' enthusiast of his pride,
 With Rage and Terror stalking by his side,
 Raves round the globe ; he soars into a god !
 Stand fast, Olympus ! and sustain his nod.
 The pest divine in horrid grandeur reigns,
 And thrives on mankind's miseries and pains.
 What slaughter'd hosts ! what cities in a blaze !
 What wasted countries ! and what crimson seas !
 With orphans' tears his impious bowl o'erflows,
 And cries of kingdoms lull him to repose.

And cannot thrice ten hundred years unpraise
 The boist'rous boy, and blast his guilty bays ?
 Why want we then encomiums on the storm,
 Or famine, or volcano ? they perform
 Their mighty deeds ; they, hero-like, can slay,
 And spread their ample deserts in a day.

O great alliance ! O divine renown !
 With dearth and pestilence to share the crown.
 When men extol a wild destroyer's name,
 Earth's Builder and Preserver they blaspheme.

One to destroy is murder by the law ;
 And gibbets keep the lifted hand in awe.
 To murder thousands takes a specious name,
 War's glorious art, and gives immortal fame.

When after battle I the field have seen
 Spread o'er with ghastly shapes, which once were men ;

A nation crush'd ! a nation of the brave !
 A realm of death ! and on this side the grave !
 Are there, said I, who from this sad survey,
 This human chaos, carry smiles away ?

How did my heart with indignation rise !
 How honest nature swell'd into my eyes !
 How was I shock'd, to think the hero's trade
 Of such materials, fame and triumph made !

How guilty these ! yet not less guilty they
 Who reach false glory by a smoother way ;
 Who wrap destruction up in gentle words,
 And bows, and smiles, more fatal than their swords ;

Who stifle nature, and subsist on art ;
 Who coin the face, and petrify the heart ;
 All real kindness for the show discard,
 As marble polish'd and as marble hard ;
 Who do for gold what Christians do through grace,

" With open arms their enemies embrace ;"
 Who give a nod when broken hearts repine ;
 " The thinnest food on which a wretch can dine,"

Or if they serve you, serve you disinclin'd ;
 And in their height of kindness are unkind.
 Such courtiers were, and such again may be,
 Walpole, when men forget to copy thee.

Here cease, my Muse ! the catalogue is writ,
 Nor one more candidate for fame admit ;
 Though disappointed thousands justly blame
 Thy partial pen, and boast an equal claim,

Be this their comfort—fools omitted here
 May furnish laughter for another year.
 Then let Crispino, who was ne'er refus'd
 The justice yet of being well abus'd,
 With patience wait, and be content to reign
 The pink of puppies in some future strain;
 Some future strain, in which the Muse shall tell

How science dwindles, and how volumes swell;
 How commentators each dark passage shun,
 And hold their farthing candle to the sun;

How tortur'd texts to speak our sense are made,
 And ev'ry vice is to the Scripture laid;

How misers squeeze a young voluptuous peer,
 His sins to Lucifer not half so dear;

How Verres is less qualified to steal
 With sword and pistol, than with wax and seal;

How lawyers' fees to such excess are run,
 That clients are redress'd till they're undone;

How one man's anguish is another's sport,
 And e'en denials cost us dear at court;

How man eternally false judgements makes,
 And all his joys and sorrows are mistakes.

This swarm of themes that settles on my pen,
 Which I, like summer-flies, shake off again,
 Let others sing; to whom my weak essay
 But sounds a prelude, and points out their prey.
 That duty done, I hasten to complete
 My own designs; for Tonson's at the gate.

The love of fame, in its effects survey'd,
 The Muse has sung; be now the cause display'd,
 Since so diffusive and so wide its sway,
 What is this Pow'r whom all mankind obey?

Shot from above, by Heav'n's indulgence came
 This gen'rous ardor, this unconquer'd flame,
 To warm, to raise, to deify mankind,
 Still burning brightest in the noblest mind.
 By large-soul'd men, for thirst of fame renown'd,
 Wise laws were fram'd, and secret arts were
 found;

Desire of praise first broke the patriot's rest,
 And made a bulwark of the warrior's breast;
 It bids Argyle in fields and senates shine:
 What more can prove its origin divine?

But, oh! this passion planted in the soul,
 On eagles' wings to mount her to the pole,
 The flaming minister of virtue meant,
 Set up false gods, and wrong'd her high descent.

Ambition, hence, exerts a doubtful force,
 Of blots and beauties an alternate source;
 Hence Gildon rails, the raven of the pit,
 Who thrives upon the carcasses of wit:
 And in art-loving Scarborough is seen,
 How kind a patron Pollio might have been.
 Pursuit of fame with pedants fills our schools,
 And into coxcombs burnishes our fools;
 Pursuit of fame makes solid learning bright,
 And Newton lifts above a mortal height:
 That key of nature, by whose wit she clears
 Her long, long secrets of five thousand years.

Would you then fully comprehend the whole,
 Why, and in what degrees, Pride sways the soul?
 (For, though in all not equally she reigns)
 Awake to knowledge, and attend my strains.

Ye doctors! hear the doctrine I disclose,
 As true as if 'twere writ in dullest prose;
 As if a letter'd dunce had said, "'Tis right,"
 And imprimatur usher'd it to light.

To glorious deeds this passion fires the mind,
 And closer draws the ties of human kind;
 Confirms society; since what we prize,
 As our chief blessing, must from others rise.

Ambition in the truly noble mind,
 With sister-virtue is for ever join'd;
 As in fam'd Lucrece, who with equal dread
 From guilt, and shame, by her last conduct fled;
 Her virtue long rebell'd in firm disdain,
 And the sword pointed at her heart in vain;
 But, when the slave was threaten'd to be laid
 Dead by her side, her love of fame obey'd.

In meaner minds ambition works alone;
 But with such art puts virtue's aspect on,
 That not more like in feature, and in mien,
 The god and mortal in the comic scene*.
 False Julius, ambush'd in his fair disguise,
 Soon made the Roman liberties his prize.

No mask in basest minds ambition wears,
 But in full light pricks up her ass's ears;
 All I have sung are instances of this,
 And prove my theme unfolded, not amiss.

Ye vain! desist from your erroneous strife;
 Be wise, and quit the false sublime of life.
 The true ambition there alone resides,
 Where justice vindicates, and wisdom guides;
 Where inward dignity joins outward state,
 Our purpose good, as our achievement great;
 Where public blessings public praise attend,
 Where glory is our motive, not our end.
 Wouldst thou be fam'd? have those high deeds
 in view, [ensue.

Brave men would act, though scandal should Behold a prince whom no swoln thoughts in-
 flame,

No pride of thrones, no fever after fame;
 But when the welfare of mankind inspires,
 And death in view to dear-bought glory fires,
 Proud conquests then, then regal pomps delight;
 Then crimes, then triumphs, sparkle in his sight; [bring

Tumult and noise are dear, which with them
 His people's blessings to their ardent king:
 But, when those great heroic motives cease,
 His swelling soul subsides to native peace;
 From tedious grandeur's faded charms withdraws,

A sudden foe to splendor and applause;
 Greatly deferring his arrears of fame,
 Till men and angels jointly shout his name.
 O pride celestial, which can pride disdain!
 O blest ambition, which can ne'er be vain!

From one fam'd Alpine hill, which props the sky,

In whose deep womb unfathom'd waters lie,
 Here burst the Rhone and sounding Po, there
 shine

In infant rills the Danube and the Rhine;

* Amphytrion.

From the rich store one fruitful urn supplies,
Whole kingdoms smile, a thousand harvests
rise.

In Brunswick such a source the Muse adores,
Which public blessings through half Europe
pours.

When his heart burns with such a god-like aim,
Angels and George are rivals for the fame;
George, who in foes can soft affections raise,
And charm envenom'd Satire into praise.

Nor human rage alone his pow'r perceives,
But the mad winds and the tumultuous waves*.
E'en storms (death's fiercest ministers!) forbear,
And, in their own wild empire, learn to spare.

Thus nature's self, supporting man's decree,
Styles Britain's Sovereign, Sovereign of the Sea, While sea and air, great Brunswick! shook
our state,

And sported with a king's and kingdom's fate,
Depriv'd of what she lov'd, and press'd by fear
Of ever losing what she held most dear,
How did Britannia, like Achilles†, weep,
And tell her sorrows to the kindred deep!
Hang o'er the floods, and in devotion warm,
Strive for thee with the surge, and fight the storm!

What felt thy Walpole, pilot of the realm?
Our Palinurus‡ slept not at the helm;
His eyes ne'er clos'd; long since inur'd to wake,
And outwatch ev'ry star, for Brunswick's sake;
By thwarting passions tost, by cares oppress'd,
He found thy tempest pictur'd in his breast.
But now what joys that gloom of heart dispel,
No pow'rs of language—but his own, can tell;
His own, which Nature, and the Graces form,
At will to raise or hush the civil storm.

§ 49. The Castle of Indolence. An Allegorical Poem. THOMSON.

The Castle hight of Indolence,
And its false luxury;
Where for a little time, alas!
We liv'd right jollily.

O MORTAL man, who livest here by toil,
Do not complain of this thy hard estate:
That like an emmet thou must ever moil,
Is a sad sentence of an ancient date;
And, certes, there is for it reason great;
For, though sometimes it makes thee weep
and wail,
And curse thy star, and early drudge and late;
Withouten that would come an heavier bale,
Loose life, unruly passions, and diseases pale.

In lowly dale, fast by a river's side,
With woody hill o'er hill encompass'd round,
A most enchanting wizard did abide,
Than whom a fiend more fell is no where
found.

It was, I ween, a lovely spot of ground:

And there a season atween June and May,
Half prankt with spring, with summer half imbrown'd,

A listless climate made, where, sooth to say,
No living wight could work, ne cared even for play.

Was nought around but images of rest:
Sleep-soothing groves, and quiet lawns between,
And flow'ry beds that slumb'rous influence
kest,

From poppies breath'd; and beds of pleasant
green,

Where never yet was creeping creature seen;
Meantime unnumber'd glittering streamlets
play'd,

And hurled every where their waters sheen;
That, as they bicker'd through the sunny
glade, [mur made.

Though restless still themselves, a lulling mur-

Join'd to the prattle of the purling rills
Were heard the lowing herds along the vale,
And flocks loud-bleating from the distant hills,

And vacant shepherds piping in the dale;
And now and then sweet Philomel would wail,

Or Stock-doves 'plain amid the forest deep,
That drowsy rustled to the sighing gale;
And still a coil the grasshopper did keep:
Yet all these sounds yblent inclin'd all to sleep.

Full in the passage of the vale above,
A sable, silent, solemn forest stood;
Where nought but shadowy forms was seen
to move,

As Idleness fancied in her dreaming mood:
And up the hills on either side a wood
Of blackening pines, ay waving to and fro,
Sent forth a sleepy horror through the blood;
And where this valley winded out below,
The inurmuring main was heard, and scarcely heard, to flow.

A pleasing land of drowsied it was,
Of dreams that wave before the half-shut eye;
And of gay castles in the clouds that pass,
For ever flushing round a summer sky;
There eke the soft delights that witchingly
Instil a wanton sweetness through the breast,
And calm the pleasures, always hover'd nigh,
But whate'er smack'd of noyance, or unrest,
Was far, far off expell'd from this delicious nest.

The landscape such, inspiring perfect ease,
Where Indolence (for so the wizard hight)
Close hid his castle 'mid embow'ring trees,
That half shut out the beams of Phœbus
bright, [night:
And made a kind of checquer'd day and

Meanwhile, unceasing at the massy gate,
Beneath a spacious palm, the wicked wight
Was plac'd; and, to his lute, of cruel fate
And labor harsh complain'd, lamenting man's estate.

Thither continual pilgrims crowded still,
From all the roads of earth that pass thereby;
For, as they chanc'd to breathe on neigh-b'ring hill,
The freshness of this valley smote their eye,
And drew them ever and anon more nigh;
Till clust'ring round th' enchanter false they hung,
Ymolten with his syren melody;
While o'er th' enfeebling lure his hand he flung
And to the trembling chords those tempting verses sung:

" Behold! ye pilgrims of this earth, behold!
" See all but man, with unearn'd pleasure
" gay,
" See her bright robes the butterfly unfold,
" Broke from her wintry tomb in prime of
" May!
" What youthful bride can equal her array?
" Who can with her for easy pleasure vie?
" From mead to mead with gentle wing to

" From flow'r to flow'r on balmy gales to

" Behold the merry minstrels of the morn,
" The swarming songsters of the careless

" Ten thousand throats! that from the flower-

" love,
" Such grateful kindly raptures them emove:
" They neither plough nor sow; ne, fit for
" flail,
" E'er to the barn the nodding sheaves they
" drove;
" Yet theirs each harvest dancing in the gale,
" Whatever crowns the hill, or smiles along
" vale.

" Outcast of nature, man! the wretched thrall
" Of bitter-dropping sweat, of sweltry pain,
" Of cares that eat away thy heart with gall,
" And of the vices, an inhuman train,
" That all proceed from savage thirst of gain:
" For when hard-hearted interest first began
" To poison earth, Astrea left the plain;
" Guile, violence, and murder seiz'd on man,
" And, for soft milky streams, with blood the

" Come ye who still the cumbrous load of

" With me you need not rise at early dawn,
" To pass the joyless day in various sounds;
" Or, louting low, on upstart fortune fawn,
" And sell fair honor for some paltry pounds:
" Or through the city take your dirty rounds,
" To cheat, and dun, and lie, and visit pay,
" Now flattering base, now giving secret

" Or prowl in courts of law for human prey,
" In venal senate thief, or rob on broad high-

" No cocks with me to rustic labor call,

" To tardy swains no shrill-voic'd matrons

" No dogs, no babes, no wives, to stun your

" No noisy tradesmen your sweet slumbers

" But all is calm, as would delight the heart

" Here nought but candor reigns, indulgent

" On others' ways they never squint a frown,
" Nor heed what haps in hamlet or in town.
" Thus, from the source of tender indolence,
" With milky blood the heart is overflown,
" Is sooth'd and sweeten'd by the social sense:
" For int'rest, envy, pride, and strife are
" banish'd hence.

" What, what is virtue, but repose of mind?
" A pure ethereal calm, that knows no storm;
" Above the reach of wild ambition's wind,
" Above those passions that this world de-

" And torture man, a proud malignant

" And gently stir the heart, thereby to form
" A quicker sense of joy; as breezes stray
" Across th' enliven'd skies, and make them
" still more gay.

" The best of men have ever lov'd repose;
" They hate to mingle in the filthy fray,
" Where the soul sours, and gradual rancor

He ceas'd. But still their trembling ears retain'd
 The deep vibrations of his 'witching song;
 That by a kind of magic pow'r constrain'd
 To enter in, pell-mell, the list'ning throng.
 Heaps pour'd on heaps, and yet they slipp'd
 along,
 In silent ease; as when beneath the beam
 Of summer moons, the distant woods among,
 Or by some flood all silver'd with the gleam,
 The soft embodied fays through airy portal
 stream.

By the smooth demon so it order'd was,
 And here his baneful bounty first began:
 Though some there were who would not further pass,
 And his alluring baits suspected han.
 The wise distrust the too fair spoken man;
 Yet through the gate they cast a wishful
 eye:
 Not to move on, forsooth, is all they can;
 For, do their very best, they cannot fly;
 But often each way look, and often sorely sigh.

When this the watchful wicked wizard saw,
 With sudden spring he leap'd upon them
 straight,
 And, soon as touch'd by his unhallow'd paw
 They found themselves within the cursed gate;
 Full hard to be repass'd, like that of fate.
 Not stronger were of old the giant crew
 Who sought to pull high Jove from regal
 state; [hue,
 Though feeble wretch he seem'd of sallow
 Certes, who bides his grasp, will that encounter rue.

For, whomsoe'er the villain takes in hand,
 Their joints unknit, their sinews melt apace,
 As lithe they grow as any willow wand,
 And of their vanquish'd force remains no
 trace.
 So when a maiden fair, of modest grace,
 In all her buxom blooming May of charms,
 Is seized in some losel's hot embrace,
 She waxeth very weakly as she warms,
 Then sighing yields her up to love's delicious harms.

Wak'd by the crowd, slow from his bench arose
 A comely full-spread porter, swoln with sleep;
 His calm, broad, thoughtless aspect breath'd repose,
 And in sweet torpor he was plunged deep.
 He could himself from ceaseless yawning
 keep,
 While o'er his eyes the drowsy liquor ran,
 Through which his half-wak'd soul would faintly peep.
 Then taking his black staff, he call'd his man,
 And rous'd himself as much as rouse himself he can.

The lad leap'd lightly at his master's call,
 He was, to weet, a little roguish page,
 Save sleep and play who minded not at all,
 Like most the untaught striplings of his age.
 This boy he kept each band to disengage,
 Garters, and buckles, task for him unfit,
 But ill-becoming his grave personage,
 And which his portly paunch would not permit;
 So this same limber page to all performed it.

Meantime the master-porter wide display'd Great store of caps, of slippers, and of gowns;
 Wherewith he those who enter'd in array'd,
 Loose as the breeze that plays along the downs,
 And waves the summer-woods when evening
 frowns.
 O fair undress, best dress! it checks no vein,
 But ev'ry flowing limb in pleasure drowns,
 And heightens ease with grace. This done,
 right fain, [again.
 Sir porter sat him down, and turn'd to sleep

Thus easy rob'd, they to the fountain sped,
 That in the middle of the court up-threw
 A stream, high spouting from its liquid bed,
 And falling back again in drizzly dew:
 There each deep draughts, as deep he thirsted,
 drew.
 It was a fountain of Nepenthe rare:
 Whence, as Dan Homer sings, huge plea-saunce grew,
 And sweet oblivion of vile earthly care;
 Fair gladsome waking thoughts, and joyous dreams more fair.

This rite perform'd, all inly pleas'd and still,
 Withouten tromp was proclamation made :
 " Ye sons of Indolence, do what you will ;
 " And wander where you list, through hall
 " or glade !
 " Be no man's pleasure for another's staid ;
 " Let each as likes him best his hours employ ;
 " And curs'd be he who minds his neigh-
 " bour's trade !
 " Here dwells kind ease and unreprieving joy :
 " He little merits bliss who others can annoy."

Straight of these endless numbers, swarming
 round,
 As thick as idle motes in sunny ray,
 Not one eftsoons in view was to be found,
 But ev'ry man stroll'd off his own glad way.
 Wide o'er this ample court's blank area,
 With all the lodges that thereto pertain'd,
 No living creature could be seen to stray ;
 While solitude and perfect silence reign'd :
 So that to think you dream'd you almost was constrain'd.

As when a shepherd of the * Hebrid Isles,
 Plac'd far amid the melancholy main,
 (Whether it be lone fancy him beguiles,
 Or that ærial beings sometimes deign
 To stand, embodied, to our senses plain)
 Sees on the naked hill, or valley low,
 The whilst in ocean Phœbus dips his wain,
 A vast assembly moving to and fro :
 Then all at once in air dissolves the wondrous show.

Ye gods of quiet and of sleep profound,
 Whose soft dominion o'er this castle sways,
 And all the wildly silent places round,
 Forgive me if my trembling pen displays
 What never yet was sung in mortal lays.
 But how shall I attempt such arduous string,
 I who have spent my nights and nightly days
 In this soul-deadening place, loose loitering ?
 Ah ! how shall I for this uprear my moulted wing ?

Come on, my Muse, nor stoop to low despair
 Thou imp of Jove, touch'd by celestial fire !
 Thou yet shalt sing of war, and actions fair,
 Which the bold sons of Britain will inspire ;
 Of ancient bards thou yet shalt sweep the
 lyre ;
 Thou yet shalt tread in tragic pall the stage,
 Paint love's enchanting woes, the hero's ire,
 The sage's calm, the patriot's noble rage,
 Dashing corruption down through ev'ry worthless age.

The doors, that knew no shrill alarming bell,
 Ne cursed knocker plied by villain's hand,
 Self-open'd into halls, where, who can tell
 What elegance and grandeur wide expand,

The pride of Turkey and of Persian land ?
 Soft quilts on quilts, on carpets carpets spread,
 And couches stretch around in seemly band ;
 And endless pillows rise to prop the head ;
 So that each spacious room was one full-swelling bed.

And every where huge cover'd tables stood,
 With wines high flavor'd and rich viands
 crown'd ;
 Whatever sprightly juice or tasteful food
 On the green bosom of this earth are found,
 And all old ocean genders in his round :
 Some hand unseen these silently display'd,
 E'en undemanded by a sign or sound :
 You need but wish ; and instantly obey'd,
 Fair rang'd the dishes rose, and thick the glasses
 play'd.

Here freedom reign'd without the least alloy ;
 Nor gossip's tale, nor ancient maiden's gall,
 Nor saintly spleen, durst murmur at our joy,
 And with envenom'd tongue our pleasures
 pall. [all ;
 For why ? there was but one great rule for
 To wit, that each should work his own desire,
 And eat, drink, study, sleep, as it may fall,
 Or melt the time in love, or wake the lyre,
 And carol what, unbid, the Muses might inspire.

The rooms with costly tapestry were hung,
 Where was enwoven many a gentle tale ;
 Such as of old the rural poets sung,
 Or of Arcadian or Sicilian vale :
 Reclining lovers, in the lonely dale, [heart,
 Pour'd forth at large the sweetly tortur'd
 Or, sighing tender passion, swell'd the gale,
 And taught charm'd echo to resound their smart ; [and peace impart.
 While flocks, woods, streams around repose

Those pleas'd the most, where, by a cunning
 Depainted was the patriarchal age ; [hand,
 What time Dan Abraham left the Chaldee
 land,
 And pastur'd on from verdant stage to stage,
 Where fields and fountains fresh could best engage. [heed,
 Toil was not then. Of nothing took they
 But with wild beasts the sylvan war to wage,
 And o'er vast plains their herds and flocks to feed : [indeed !
 Blest sons of Nature they ! true golden age

Sometimes the pencil, in cool airy halls,
 Bade the gay bloom of vernal landscapes rise,
 Or autumn's varied shades imbrown the walls :
 Now the black tempest strikes th' astonish'd
 eyes ;

* Those islands on the western coast of Scotland, called the Hebrides.

Now down the steep the flashing torrent flies;
The trembling sun now plays o'er ocean blue,
And now rude mountains frown amid the skies; [hue,
Whate'er Lorrain light-touch'd with soft'ning
Or savage Rosa dash'd, or learned Poussin drew.

Each sound too here to languishment inclin'd,
Lull'd the weak bosom, and induced ease.
Aërial music in the warbling wind,
At distance rising oft, by small degrees
Nearer and nearer came, till o'er the trees
It hung, and breath'd such soul-dissolving
As did alas! with soft perdition please: [airs,
Entangled deep in its enchanting snares,
The list'ning heart forgot all duties and all cares.

A certain music, never known before,
Here lull'd the pensive melancholy mind,
Full easily obtain'd. Behoves no more,
But sidelong, to the gently-waving wind,
To lay the well-tun'd instrument reclin'd;
From which with airy flying fingers light,
Beyond each mortal touch the most refin'd,
The god of winds drew sounds of deep delight;
Whence, with just cause, the Harp of Æolus*
it hight.

Ah me! what hand can touch the string so
Who up the lofty diapason roll [fine?
Such sweet, such sad, such solemn airs divine,
Then let them down again into the soul?
Now rising love they fann'd; now pleasing dole [heart;
They breath'd, in tender musings, through the
And now a graver sacred strain they stole,
As when seraphic hands a hymn impart:
Wild warbling nature all, above the reach of art!

Such the gay splendor, the luxurious state
Of caliphs old, who on the Tigris' shore,
In mighty Bagdat, populous and great, [store;
Held their bright court, where was of ladies
And verse, love, music still the garland wore:
When sleep was coy, the bard in waiting
there [lore;
Cheer'd the lone midnight with the Muse's
Composing music bade his dreams be fair,
And music lent new gladness to the morning
air.†

Near the pavilions where we slept, still ran
Soft tinkling streams, and dashing waters fell,
And sobbing breezes sigh'd, and oft began (So work'd the wizard) wintry storms to swell,
As heaven and earth they would together
mell: [call
At doors and windows, threat'ning seem'd to

The demons of the tempest, growling fell,
Yet the least entrance found they none at all;
Whence sweeter grew our sleep, secure in massy hall.

And hither Morpheus sent his kindest dreams,
Raising a world of gayer tinct and grace;
O'er which were shadowy cast elysian gleams
That play'd in waving lights, from place to place,
And shed a roseate smile on nature's face.
Not Titian's pencil e'er could so array,
So fleece with clouds, the pure ethereal space;
Nor could it e'er such melting forms display,
As loose on flow'ry beds all languishingly lay.

No, fair illusions! artful phantoms, no!
My Muse will not attempt your fairy land:
She has no colors that like you can glow;
To catch your vivid scenes too gross her hand.
But sure it is, was ne'er a subtler band
Than these same guileful angel-seeming spi-
rites,
Who thus in dreams voluptuous, soft, and bland,
Pour'd all the Arabian heaven upon our nights,
And bless'd them oft besides with more refin'd delights.

They were, in sooth, a most enchanting train,
E'en feigning virtue; skilful to unite
With evil good, and strew with pleasure pain.
But for those fiends whom blood and broils
delight,
Who hurl the wretch, as if to hell outright,
Down, down black gulphs, where sullen waters sleep,
Or hold him clamb'ring all the fearful night
On beetling cliffs, or pent in ruins deep:
They, till due time should serve, were bid far hence to keep.

Ye guardian spirits, to whom man is dear,
From these foul demons shield the midnight
Angels of fancy and of love be near, [gloom:
And o'er the blank of sleep diffuse a bloom:
Evoke the sacred shades of Greece and Rome,
And let them virtue with a look impart:
But chief, a while, oh lend us from the tomb
Those long-lost friends for whom in love we smart, [heart.
And fill with pious awe and joy-mixt woe the

Or, are you sportive, bid the morn of youth
Rise to new light, and beam afresh the days
Of innocence, simplicity, and truth, [ways.
To cares estrang'd, and manhood's thorny
What transport, to retrace our boyish plays,
Our easy bliss, when each thing joy supplied;

* This is not an imagination of the author; there being in fact such an instrument, called Æolus's Harp, which, when placed against a little rushing or current of air, produces the effect here described.

† The Arabian caliphs had poets among the officers of their court, whose office it was to do what is here mentioned.

The woods, the mountains, and the warbling
 maze [wide,
 Of the wild brooks!—But, fondly wand'ring
 My Muse, resume the task that yet doth thee abide.

One great amusement of our household was,
 In a huge crystal magic globe to spy,
 Still as you turn'd it, all things that do pass
 Upon this ant-hill earth; where constantly
 Of idly busy men the restless fry
 Run bustling to and fro in foolish haste,
 In search of pleasures vain that from them fly,
 Or which obtain'd the catiffs dare not taste:
 When nothing is enjoy'd, can there be greater waste?

Of vanity the mirror this was call'd:
 Here you a muckworm of the town might see
 At his dull desk, amid his ledgers stall'd,
 Eat up with carking care and penurie;
 Most like to carcase pitch'd on gallows-tree.
 "A penny saved is a penny got;"
 Firm to this scoundrel maxim keepeth he,
 Ne of its rigor will he bate a jot,
 Till it has quench'd his fire, and banished his pot.

Straight from the filth of this low grub, behold! [heir,
 Comes fluttering forth a gaudy spendthrift
 All glossy gay; enamell'd all with gold,
 The silly tenant of the summer air,
 In folly lost, of nothing takes he care;
 Pimps, lawyers, stewards, harlots, flatterers
 vile, [share:
 And thieving tradesmen him among them
 His father's ghost from limbo-lake, the while,
 Sees this, which more damnation does upon him pile.

This globe portray'd the race of learned men,
 Still at their books, and turning o'er the page
 Backwards and forwards: oft they snatch the
 As if inspir'd, and in a Thespian rage; [pen,
 Then write and blot, as would your ruth engage. [sore,
 Why, Authors, all this scrawl and scribbling
 To lose the present, gain the future age,
 Praised to be when you can hear no more,
 And much enrich'd with fame when useless worldly store.

Then would a splendid city rise to view,
 With carts, and cars, and couches roaring all.
 Wide pour'd abroad behold the giddy crew:
 See how they dash along from wall to wall!
 At ev'ry door, hark! how they thund'ring call!
 Good Lord! what can this giddy rout excite?
 Why on each other with fell tooth to fall;
 A neighbour's fortune, fame, or peace to blight,
 And make new tiresome parties for the coming night.

The puzzling sons of party next appear'd,
 In dark cabals and nightly juntos met; [rear'd
 And now they whisper'd close, now shrugging
 The important shoulder; then, as if to get

New light, their twinkling eyes were inward
 No sooner Lucifer * recalls affairs, [set,
 Than forth they various rush in mighty fret!
 When, lo! push'd up to pow'r, and crown'd their cares, [stairs.

But what most show'd the vanity of life,
 Was to behold the nations all on fire,
 In cruel broils engag'd, and deadly strife:
 Most Christian kings, inflam'd by black de-
 With honorable ruffians in their hire, [sire!
 Cause war to rage, and blood around to pour:
 Of this sad work when each begins to tire,
 They sit them down just where they were be-

To number up the thousands dwelling here,
 An useless were, and eke an endless task;
 From kings, and those who at the helm appear, [bask.
 To gypsies brown in summer-glades who
 Yea many a man, perdie, I could unmask,
 Whose desk and table make a solemn show,
 With tape-tied trash, and suits of fools that ask
 For place or pension, laid in decent row;
 But these I passen by, with nameless numbers moe.

Of all the gentle tenants of the place,
 There was a man of special grave remark:
 A certain tender gloom o'erspread his face,
 Pensive, not sad, in thought involv'd not dark.
 As sooth this man could sing as morning lark,
 And teach the noblest morals of the heart;
 But these his talents were yburied stark;
 Of the fine stores he nothing would impart,
 Which or boon nature gave, or nature-painting
 art.

To noon-tide shades incontinent he ran,
 Where purls the brook with sleep-inviting sound,
 Or when Dan Sol to slope his wheels began,
 Amid the broom he bask'd him on the ground,
 Where the wild thyme and camomile are
 found:
 There would he linger, till the latest ray
 Of light sat trembling on the welkin's bound;
 Then homeward through the twilight shadows stray, [a day.

Sauntering and slow. So had he passed many Yet not in thoughtless slumber were they past,

For oft the heavenly fire that lay conceal'd
 Beneath the sleeping embers, mounted fast,
 And all its native light anew reveal'd:
 Oft as he travers'd the cœrulean field, [wind,
 And mark'd the clouds that drove before the Ten thousand glorious systems would he build,
 Ten thousand great ideas fill'd his mind;
 But with the clouds they fled, and left no trace behind.

* The Morning Star.

With him was sometimes join'd in silent walk
 (Profoundly silent, for they never spoke)
 One shyer still, who quite detested talk :
 Oft, stung by spleen, at once away he broke
 To groves of pine, and broad o'ershadowing oak ;
 There, inly thrill'd, he wander'd all alone,
 And on himself his pensive fury wroke,
 Ne ever utter'd word, save when first shone
 The glittering star of eve—"Thank heaven!
 "the day is done."

Here lurch'd a wretch who had not crept abroad
 For forty years, ne face of mortal seen ;
 In chamber brooding like a loathly toad :
 And sure his linen was not very clean. [been Through secret loop-holes, that had practis'd
 Near to his bed, his dinner vile he took ;
 Unkempt, and rough, of squalid face and mien, [nook,
 Our castle's shame! whence, from his filthy
 We drove the villain out for fitter lair to look.

One day there chanc'd into these halls to rove
 A joyous youth, who took you at first sight :
 Him the wild wave of pleasure hither drove,
 Before the sprightly tempest-tossing light :
 Certes, he was a most engaging wight,
 Of social glee, and wit humane though keen,
 Turning the night to day and day to night :
 For him the merry bells had rung, I ween,
 If in this nook of quiet bells had ever been.

But not e'en pleasure to excess is good :
 What most elates then sinks the soul as low :
 When spring-tide joy pours in with copious
 flood,
 The higher still the exulting billows flow,
 The farther back again they flagging go,
 And leave us groveling on the dreary shore :
 Taught by this son of joy, we found it so ;
 Who, whilst he staid, kept in a gay uproar
 Our madden'd castle all, the abode of sleep no
 more.

As when in prime of June a burnish'd fly
 Sprung from the meads, o'er which he sweeps
 along,
 Cheer'd by the breathing bloom and vital sky,
 Tunes up amid these airy halls his song,
 Soothing at first the gay reposing throng :
 And oft he sips their bowl ; or nearly drown'd,
 He, thence recovering, drives their beds
 among, [profound ;
 And scares their tender sleep, with tromp
 Then out again he flies, to wing his mazy round.

Another guest there was, of sense refin'd,
 Who felt each worth, for ev'ry worth he had,
 Serene yet warm, humane yet firm his mind,
 As little touch'd as any man's with bad ;
 Him thro' their inmost walks the Muses lad,
 To him the sacred love of nature lent,

And sometimes would he make our valley
 glad : [pent,
 When as we found he would not here be
 To him the better sort this friendly message sent :

"Come, dwell with us! true son of virtue,
 "come!
 "But if, alas! we cannot thee persnade
 "To lie content beneath our peaceful dome,
 "Ne ever more to quit our quiet glade ;
 "Yet when at last thy toils but ill apaid
 "Shall dead thy fire, and damp its heavenly
 "spark,
 "Thou wilt be glad to seek the rural shade,
 "There to indulge the Muse, and nature
 "mark : [Park."
 "We then a lodge for thee will rear in Hagley

Here whilom ligg'd the Esopus * of the age ;
 But call'd by fame, in soul ypricked deep,
 A noble pride restor'd him to the stage,
 And rous'd him like a giant from his sleep.
 Even from his slumbers we advantage reap :
 With double force the enliven'd scene he wakes, [to keep
 Yet quits not nature's bounds. He knows
 Each due decorum : now the heart he shakes,
 And now with well-urg'd sense the enlighten'd judgement takes.

A bard here dwelt, more fat than bard be-
 seems ;
 Who†, void of envy, guile, and lust of gain,
 On virtue still, and nature's pleasing themes,
 Pour'd forth his unpremeditated strain :
 The world forsaking with a calm disdain,
 Here laugh'd he careless in his easy seat ;
 Here quaff'd encircled with the joyous train,
 Oft moralising sage : his ditty sweet
 He loathed much to write, ne cared to repeat.

Full oft by holy feet our ground was trod,
 Of clerks good plenty here you mote espy.
 A little, round, fat, oily man of God,
 Was one I chiefly mark'd among the fry ;
 He had a roguish twinkle in his eye,
 And shone all glittering with ungodly dew,
 If a tight damsel chanc'd to trippen by ;
 Which when observ'd, he shrunk into his mew,
 And straight would recollect his piety anew.

Nor be forgot a tribe, who minded nought,
 (Old inmates of the place) but state affairs :
 They look'd, perdie, as if they deeply thought ;
 And on their brow sat ev'ry nation's care :
 The world by them is parcell'd out in shares,
 When in the Hallor Smoke they congress hold,
 And the sage berry sun-burnt Mocha bears
 Has clear'd their inward eye : then smokeenroll'd,
 Their oracles break forth mysterious as of old.

* Mr. Quin.

† The following lines of this stanza were written by a friend of the author.

Here languid beauty kept her pale-fac'd court :
 Bevvies of dainty dames, of high degree,
 From every quarter hither made resort ;
 Where from gross mortal care and business free,
 They lay, pour'd out in ease and luxury.
 Or should they a vain show of work assume,
 Alas ! and well-a-day ! what can it be ?
 To knot, to twist, to range the vernal bloom :
 But far is cast the distaff, spinning-wheel, and loom.

Their only labor was to kill the time :
 And labor dire it is, and weary woe.
 They sit, they loll, turn o'er some idle rhyme :
 Then rising sudden, to the glass they go,
 Or saunter forth, with tottering step and slow ;
 This soon too rude an exercise they find ;
 Straight on the couch their limbs again they throw,

Where hours on hours they sighingly reclin'd,
 And court the vapory god soft-breathing in the wind.

Now must I mark the villany we found,
 But ah ! too late, as shall eftsoons be shown.
 A place here was, deep, dreary, under ground ;
 Where still our inmates, when unpleasing grown,
 Diseas'd and loathsome, privily were thrown.
 Far from the light of heaven, they languish'd there
 Unpitied, uttering many a bitter groan ;
 For of those wretches taken was no care :
 Fierce fiends, and hags of hell, their only nurses were.

Alas ! the change ! from scenes of joy and rest
 To this dark den, where sickness toss'd alway.
 Here Lethargy, with deadly sleep oppress,
 Stretch'd on his back, a mighty lubbard, lay,
 Heaving his sides, and snored night and day !
 To stir him from his trance it was not eath,
 And his half-open'd eye he shut straightway :
 He led, I wot, the softest way to death,
 And taught withouten pain and strife to yield the breath.

Of limbs enormous, but withal unsound,
 Soft-swoln and pale, here lay the Hydropy :
 Unwieldy man ; with belly monstrous round,
 For ever fed with watery supply ;
 For still he drank, and yet he still was dry.
 And moping here did Hypochondria sit,
 Mother of spleen, in robes of various dye,
 Who vexed was full oft with ugly fit,
 And some her frantic deem'd, and some her deem'd a wit.

A lady proud she was, of ancient blood,
 Yet oft her fear her pride made crouchen low :
 She felt, or fancied in her fluttering mood,
 All the diseases which the spittals know.
 And sought all physic which the shops bestow,
 And still new leeches and new drugs would try,

Her humor ever wavering to and fro :
 For sometimes she would laugh, and sometimes cry, [not why.
 Then sudden waxed wroth ; and all she knew
 Fast by her side a listless maiden pin'd,
 With aching head, and squeamish heart-burn-
 ings ; [kind,
 Pale, bloated, cold, she seem'd to hate man-
 Yet lov'd in secret all forbidden things.
 And here the Tertian shakes his chilling
 wings, [cocks,
 The sleepless gout here counts the crowing
 A wolf now gnaws him, now a serpent stings ;
 Whilst apoplexy cramm'd intemperance knocks [ox.
 Down to the ground at once, as butcher felleth

CANTO II.

The Knight of Arts and Industry,
 And his achievements fair ;
 That by this castle's overthrow,
 Secur'd and crowned were.

ESCAP'D the castle of the sire of sin,
 Ah ! where shall I so sweet a dwelling find ?
 For all around, without, and all within,
 Nothing save what delightful was and kind,
 Of goodness savoring and a tender mind,
 E'er rose to view. But now another strain,
 Of doleful note, alas ! remains behind ;
 I now must sing of pleasure turn'd to pain,
 And of the false inchanter Indolence complain.

Is there no patron to protect the Muse,
 And fence for her Parnassus' barren soil ?
 To every labor its reward accrues, [moil ;
 And they are sure of bread who swink and
 But a fell tribe the Aonian hive despoil,
 As ruthless wasps oft rob the painful bee.
 Thus while the laws not guard that noblest
 Ne for the Muses other meed decree, [toil,
 They praised are alone, and starve right merrily.

I care not, Fortune, what you me deny :
 You cannot rob me of free nature's grace ;
 You cannot shut the windows of the sky,
 Through which Aurora shows her bright'ning
 face ;
 You cannot bar my constant feet to trace
 The woods and lawns, by living stream, at eve :

Let health my nerves and finer fibres brace,
 And I their toys to the great children leave :
 Of fancy, reason, virtue, nought can me bereave.

Come then, my Muse, and raise a bolder song ;
 Come, lig no more upon the bed of sloth,
 Dragging the lazy languid line along,
 Fond to begin, but still to finish loth ;
 Thy half-writ scrolls all eaten by the moth :
 Arise, and sing that generous imp of fame,
 Who with the sons of softness nobly wroth,
 To sweep away this human lumber came,
 Or in a chosen few to rouse the slumbering
 flame.

In Fairy-land there liv'd a knight of old,
 Of features stern, Selvagio yclep'd;
 A rough unpolish'd man, robust and bold,
 But wondrous poor: he neither sow'd nor reap'd,
 Ne stores in summer for cold winter heap'd;
 In hunting all his days away he wore;
 Now scorch'd by June, now in November
     steep'd,
 Now pinch'd by biting January sore, [boar.
 He still in woods pursued the libbard and the

As he one morning, long before the dawn,
 Prick'd thro' the forest to dislodge his prey,
 Deep in the winding bosom of a lawn, [ray,
 With wood wild-fringed, he mark'd a taper's
 That from the beating rain, and wintry fray,
 Did to a lonely cot his steps decoy;
 There, up to earn the needments of the day,
 He found dame Poverty, nor fair nor cōy:
 Her he compress'd, and fill'd her with a lusty
     boy.

Amid the green-wood shade this boy was bred,
 And grew at last a knight of muchel fame,
 Of active mind and vigorous lustyhed,
 The Knight of Arts and Industry by name.
 Earth was his bed, the boughs his roof did
     frame;
 He knew no beverage but the flowing stream;
 His tasteful well-earn'd food the sylvan game,
 Or the brown fruit with which the woodlands
     teem; [breme.
 The same to him glad summer, or the winter

So pass'd his youthly morning, void of care,
 Wild as the colts that thro' the commons run:
 For him no tender parents troubled were,
 He of the forest seem'd to be the son;
 And certes had been utterly undone,
 But that Minerva pity of him took,
 With all the gods that love the rural wonne,
 That teach to tame the soil and rule the crook;
 Ne did the sacred Nine disdain a gentle look.

Of fertile genius him they nurtur'd well,
 In ev'ry science, and in ev'ry art, [excel,
 By which mankind the thoughtless brutes
 That can or use, or joy, or grace impart,
 Disclosing all the powers of head and heart:
 Ne were the goodly exercises spar'd, [alert,
 That brace the nerves, or make the limbs
 And mix elastic force with firmness hard:
 Was never knight on ground mote be with him
     compar'd.

Sometimes, with early morn, he mounted gay
 The hunter-steed, exulting o'er the dale,
 And drew the roseate breath of orient day!
 Sometimes retiring to the secret vale,
 Yclad in steel and bright with burnish'd
     mail, [spear,
 He strain'd the bow, or toss'd the sounding

Or darting on the goal outstripp'd the gale,
 Or wheel'd the chariot in its mid career,
 Or strenuous wrestled hard with many a tough compeer.

At other times he pried through nature's store,
 Whate'er she in th' etherial round contains,
 Whate'er she hides beneath her verdant floor,
 The vegetable and the mineral reigns;
 Or else he scann'd the globe, those small domains,
 Where restless mortals such a turmoil keep,
 Its seas, its floods, its mountains, and its plains, [from sleep
 But more he search'd the mind, and rous'd
 Those moral seeds whence we heroic actions reap.

Nor would he scorn to stoop from high pursuits [taught.
 Of heavenly truth, and practise what she
 Vain is the tree of knowledge without fruits.
 Sometimes in hand the spade or plough he caught, [fraught;
 Forth-calling all with which boon earth is Sometimes he plied the strong mechanic tool;
 Or rear'd the fabric from the finest draught;
 And oft he put himself to Neptune's school,
 Fighting with winds and waves on the vex'd ocean pool.

To solace then these rougher toils, he tried
 To touch the kindling canvas into life;
 With nature his creating pencil vied,
 With nature joyous at the mimic strife;
 Or, to such shapes as grac'd Pygmalion's wife
 He hew'd the marble; or with varied fire,
 He rous'd the trumpet and the martial fife,
 Or bade the lute sweet tenderness inspire;
 Or verses fram'd that well might wake Apollo's
     lyre.

Accomplish'd thus he from the woods issued,
 Full of great aims, and bent on bold emprise;
 The work which long he in his breast had brew'd,
 Now to perform he ardent did devise;
 To wit, a barbarous world to civilize.
 Earth was till then a boundless forest wild;
 Nought to be seen but savage wood and skies;
 No cities nourish'd arts, no culture smil'd,
 No government, no laws, no gentle manners
     mild.

A rugged wight, the worst of brutes was man:
 On his own wretched kind he ruthless prey'd:
 The strongest still the weakest over-ran;
 In ev'ry country mighty robbers sway'd,
 And guile and ruffian force were all their trade.
 Life was a scene of rapine, want, and woe;
 Which this brave knight, in noble anger,
     made [throw,
 To swear, he would the rascal rout o'er-
 For, by the pow'rs divine, it should no more be so!

It would exceed the purport of my song,
To say how this best sun from orient climes
Came beaming life and beauty all along,
Before him chasing indolence and crimes.
Still as he pass'd, the nations he sublimed,
And calls forth arts and virtues with his ray;
Then Egypt, Greece, and Rome their golden times

Successive, had; but now in ruins grey
They lie to slavish sloth and tyranny a prey.

To crown his toils, Sir Industry then spread
The swelling sail, and made for Britain's coast.
A sylvan life till then the natives led, [lost,
In the brown shades and greenwood forest
All careless rambling where it lik'd them most:

Their wealth the wild deer bouncing through the glade: [cost;

They lodg'd at large, and liv'd at nature's
Save spear and bow, withouten other aid;
Yet not the Roman steel their naked breast dis-may'd.

He lik'd the soil, he lik'd the clement skies,
He lik'd the verdant hills and flow'ry plains.
Be this my great, my chosen isle (he cries;)
This, whilst my labors Liberty sustains,
This queen of ocean all assault disdains.
Nor lik'd he less the genius of the land,
To freedom apt and persevering pains:
Mild to obey, and gen'rous to command,
Temper'd by forming heaven with kindest firmest hand.

Here, by degrees, his master-work arose,
Whatever arts and industry can frame;
Whatever finish'd agriculture knows,
Fair queen of arts! from heaven itself who came,
When Eden flourish'd in unspotted fame.
And still with her sweet innocence we find
And tender peace, and joys without a name,
That, while they ravish, tranquillise the mind,
Nature and art at once, delight and use combin'd.

Then towns he quicken'd by mechanic arts,
And bade the fervent city glow with toil;
Bade social commerce raise renowned marts,
Join land to land, and narry soil to soil,
Unite the poles, and without bloody spoil
Bring home of either Ind the gorgeous stores;
Or, should despotic rage the world embroil,
Bade tyrants tremble on remotest shores;
While o'er th' encircling deep Britannia's thunder roars.

The drooping Muses then he westward call'd,
From the fam'd city * by Propontic sea,
What time the Turk the enfeebled Grecian
thrall'd; [free,
Thence from their cloister'd walks he set them

And brought them to another Castalie,
Where Isis many a famous nursling breeds;
Or where old Cam soft paces o'er the lea
In pensive mood, and tunes his Doric reeds,
The whilst his flocks at large the lonely shepherd feeds.

Yet the fine arts were what he finish'd least.
For why? they are the quintessence of all;
The growth of laboring time, and slow en-creast;

Unless, as seldom chances, it should fall,
That mighty patrons the coy sisters call
Up to the sunshine of uncumber'd ease,
Where no rude care the mounting thought may thrall,

And where they nothing have to do but please:
Ah! gracious God! thou know'st they ask no
other fees.

But now, alas! we live too late in time:
Our patrons now even grudge that little claim,
Except to such as sleek the soothing rhyme;
And yet, forsooth, they wear Mæcenas' name:
Poor sons of puffed-up vanity, not fame.
Unbroken spirits cheer! still, still remains
The eternal patron, Liberty; whose flame,
While she protects, inspires the noblest strains:
The best, and sweetest far, are toil-created gains.

When as the knight had fram'd in Britain-
land
A matchless form of glorious government,
In which the sov'reign laws alone command,
Laws 'stablish'd by the public free consent,
Whose majesty is to the sceptre lent:
When this great plan, with each dependent
art,
Was settled firm, and to his heart's content,
Then sought he from the toilsome scene to part,
And let life's vacant eve breathe quiet through the heart.

For this he chose a farm in Deva's vale,
Where his long alleys peep'd upon the main;
In this calm seat he drew the healthful gale,
Here mix'd the chief, the patriot, and the swain.

The happy monarch of his sylvan train,
Here, sided by the guardians of the fold,
He walk'd his rounds, and cheer'd his blest domain:

His days, the days of unstain'd nature, roll'd,
Replete with peace and joy, like patriarchs of old.

Witness, ye lowing herds, who gave him milk;
Witness, ye flocks, whose woolly vestments far
Exceed soft India's cotton or her silk; [car,
Witness, with autumn charg'd, the nodding
That homeward came beneath sweet evening's star;
Or of September moons the radiance mild.

* Constantinople.

O hide thy head, abominable war!
Of crimes and ruffian idleness the child!
From heaven this life ysprung, from hell thy glories wild!

Nor from his deep retirement banish'd was
The musing care of rural industry.
Still as with grateful change the seasons pass,
New scenes arise, new landscapes strike the
eye,
And all the enliven'd country beautify:
Gay plains extend where marshes slept before;
O'er recent meads the exulting streamlets fly;
Dark frowning heaths grow bright with Ceres'
store,
And woods embrown the steep, or wave along
the shore.

As nearer to his farm you made approach,
He polish'd nature with a finer hand:
Yet on her beauties durst not art encroach;
'Tis art's alone these beauties to expand.
In graceful dance immingled, o'er the land,
Pan, Pales, Flora, and Pomona play'd:
Here too, brisk gales the rude wild common fann'd,
An happy place: where free and unafraid,
Amid the flow'ring brakes each coyer creature
stray'd.

But in prime vigor what can last for ay?
That soul-enfeebling wizard Indolence,
I whilom sung, wrought in his works decay:
Spread far and wide was his curs'd influence;
Of public virtue much he dull'd the sense,
Even much of private; ate our spirit out,
And fed our rank luxurious vices; whence
The land was overlaid with many a lout;
Not, as old fame reports, wise, gen'rous, bold,
and stout.

A rage of pleasure madden'd ev'ry breast,
Down to the lowest lees the ferment ran:
To his licentious wish each must be bless'd,
With joy be fever'd; snatch it as he can.
Thus vice the standard rear'd; her arrier-ban
Corruption call'd, and loud she gave the word,
"Mind, mind yourselves! why should the "vulgar man,
"The lacquey be more virtuous than his lord?
"Enjoy this span of life! 'tis all the gods afford."

The tidings reach'd to where, in quiet hall,
The good old knight enjoy'd well-earn'd re-
pose.

"Come, come, Sir Knight! thy children on "thee call;

"Come, save us yet, ere ruin round us close;

"The demon Indolence thy toil o'erthrows."
On this the noble color stain'd his cheeks,

Indignant, glowing through the whitening
snows
Of venerable eld; his eye full speaks
His ardent soul, and from his couch at once he breaks.

I will (he cried), so help me, God! destroy That villain Archimage. — His page then straight

He to him call'd, a fiery-footed boy
Benempt Dispatch. "My steed be at the gate,
"My bard attend; quick, bring the net of Fate."

This net was twisted by the sisters three;
Which when once cast o'er harden'd wretch,
too late

Repentance comes: replevy cannot be
From the strong iron grasp of vengeful destiny.

He came, the bard, a little druid wight,
Of wither'd aspect; but his eye was keen,
With sweetness mix'd. In russet brown be-
As is his sister in the copses green,* [dight,
He crept along, unpromising of mien.
Gross he who judges so. His soul was fair,
Bright as the children of yon azure sheen.
True comeliness, which nothing can impair,
Dwells in the mind: all else is vanity and glare.

Come (quoth the knight), a voice has reach'd mine ear:

The demon Indolence threatens overthrow
To all that to mankind is good and dear:
Come, Philomelus; let us instant go,
O'erturn his bowers, and lay his castle low.
Those men, those wretched men, who will be slaves,

Must drink a bitter wrathful cup of woe:
But some there be, thy song, as from their graves,
Shall raise. Thrice happy he! who without rigor saves.

Issuing forth, the knight bestrode his steed,
Of ardent bay, and on whose front a star
Shone blazing bright: sprung from the generous breed

That whirl of active day the rapid car;
He pranc'd along, disdaining gate or bar.
Mean time, the bard on milk-white palfrey rode;

An honest sober beast, that did not mar
His meditations, but full softly trode:
And much they moraliz'd as thus yfere they yode.

They talk'd of virtue, and of human bliss;
What else so fit for man to settle well?
And still their long researches met in this,
This truth of truths, which nothing can refel:
"From virtue's fount the purest joys out-well,
"Sweet rills of thought that cheer the conscious soul;

* The Nightingale.

“ While vice pours forth the troubled streams
 “ of hell, [dole
 “ The which, howe’er disguis’d, at last with “ Will through the tortur’d breast their fiery “ torrent roll.”

At length it dawn’d, that fatal valley gay,
 O’er which high wood-crown’d hills their summits rear.
 On the cool height a while our palmers stay,
 And spite even of themselves their senses cheer; [steer.
 Then to the wizard’s wonne their steps they Like a green isle, it broad beneath them
 spread, [clear,
 With gardens round, and wandering currents
 And tufted groves to shed the meadow bed,
 Sweet airs and song: and without hurry all seem’d glad.

“ As God shall judge me, knight, we must forgive
 (The half-enraptur’d Philomelus cried)
 “ The frail good man deluded here to live,
 “ And in these groves his musing fancy hide.
 “ Ah! nought is pure. It cannot be denied,
 “ That virtue still some tincture has of vice,
 “ And vice of virtue. What should then betide,
 “ But that our charity be not too nice?
 “ Come, let us those we can to real bliss entice.

“ Ay, sicker (quoth the knight) all flesh is frail,
 “ To pleasant sin and joyous dalliance bent;
 “ But let not brutish vice of this avail,
 “ And think to ’scape deserved punishment.
 “ Justice were cruel weakly to relent;
 “ From mercy’s self she got her sacred glaive:
 “ Grace be to those who will, and can repent:
 “ But penance long, and dreary to the slave,
 “ Who must in floods of fire his gross foul spirit “ lave.”

Thus, holding high discourse, they came to where
 The cursed carle was at his wonted trade,
 Still tempting heedless men into his snare,
 In witching wise, as I before have said.
 But when he saw, in goodly gear array’d,
 The grave majestic knight approaching nigh,
 And by his side the bard so sage and staid,
 His count’nance fell; yet oft his anxious eye
 Mark’d them, like wily fox who roosted cock doth spy.

Nathless, with feign’d respect, he bade give back [kind;
 The rabble-rout, and welcom’d them full
 Struck with the noble twain, they were not
 His orders to obey, and fall behind. [slack
 Then he resum’d his song; and unconfin’d Pour’d all his music, ran through all his strings:

With magic dust their eyne he tries to blind,
 And virtue’s tender airs o’er nature flings.
 What pity base his song who so divinely sings!

Elate in thought, he counted them his own,
 They listen’d so intent with fix’d delight:
 But they instead, as if transmew’d to stone,
 Marvel’d he could with such sweet art unite Thé lights and shades of manners, wrong and right.
 Meantime, the silly crowd the charm devour,
 Wide pressing to the gate. Swift on the knight
 He darted fierce, to drag him to his bower,
 Who back’ning shunn’d his touch, for well he knew its power.

As in throng’d amphitheatre of old,
 The weary Retiarius* trapp’d his foe;
 E’en so the knight, returning on him bold,
 At once involv’d him in the net of woe,
 Whereof I mention made not long ago.
 Enrag’d at first, he scorn’d so weak a jail,
 And leap’d, and flew, and flounced to and fro;
 But when he found that nothing could avail,
 He sat him felly down, and gnaw’d his bitter nail.

Alarm’d, the inferior demons of the place
 Rais’d rueful shrieks and hideous yells around;
 Black stormy clouds deform’d the welkin’s
 face,
 And from beneath was heard a wailing sound,
 As of infernal sprights in cavern bound;
 A solemn madness ev’ry creature strook,
 And lightnings flash’d, and horror rock’d the
 ground;
 Huge crowds on crowds out-pour’d with ble-mish’d look,
 As if on time’s last verge this frame of things had shook.

Soon as the short-liv’d tempest was yspent,
 Steam’d from the jaws of vex’d Avernus’ hole,
 And hush’d the hubbub of the rabblement,
 Sir Industry the first calm moment stole:
 “ There must, (he cried,) amid so vast a shoal
 “ Be some who are not tainted at the heart,
 “ Not poison’d quite by this same villain’s bowl:
 “ Come then, my bard, thy heavenly fire impart:
 “ Touch soul with soul, till forth the latent spirit start.”

The bard obey’d; and taking from his side,
 Where it in seemly sort depending hung,
 His British harp, its speaking strings he tried,
 The which with skilful touch he deftly
 strung,
 Till tinkling in clear symphony they rung.
 Then, as he felt the Muses come along,

* A Gladiator, who made use of a net, which he threw over his adversary.

Light o'er the chords his raptur'd hand he flung,
And play'd a prelude to his rising song :
The whilst, like midnight mute, ten thousands round him throng.

Thus ardent burst his strain—

“ Ye hapless race,
“ Dire-laboring here to smother reason's ray,
“ That lights our Maker's image in our face,
“ And gives us wide o'er earth unquestion'd
“ sway;
“ What is the ador'd Supreme Perfection,
“ say ?
“ What, but eternal never-resting soul,
“ Almighty power, and all-directing day ;
“ By whom each atom stirs, the planets roll ;
“ Who fills, surrounds, informs, and agitates
“ the whole !

“ Come, to the beaming God your hearts “ unfold ! [alone
“ Draw from its fountain life ! 'Tis hence
“ We can excel. Up from unfeeling mold,
“ To seraphs burning round the Almighty's “ throne,
“ Life rising still on life, in higher tone,
“ Perfection forms, and with perfection bliss.
“ In universal nature this clear shown,
“ Not needeth proof: to prove it were, I wis,
“ To prove the beauteous world excels the “ brute abyss.

“ Is not the field, with lively culture green,
“ A joyous sight more than the green morass ?
“ Do not the skies, with active ether clean,
“ And fann'd by sprightly zephyrs, far sur“ pass [mass,
“ The foul November fogs, and slumb'rous
“ With which sad Nature veils her drooping “ face ? [glass,
“ Does not the mountain-stream, as clear as “ Gay dancing on, the putrid pool disgrace ?
“ The same in all holds true, but chief in hu“ man race.

“ It was not by vile loitering in ease [art,
“ That Greece obtain'd the brighter palm of “ That soft yet ardent Athens learn'd to “ please,
“ To keen the wit, and to sublime the heart,
“ In all supreme ! complete in every part !
“ It was not thence majestic Rome arose,
“ And o'er the nations shook her conquering “ dart :
“ For sluggard's brow the laurel never grows ;
“ Renown is not the child of indolent repose.

“ Had unambitious mortals minded nought,
“ But in loose joy their time to wear away,
“ Had they alone the lap of dalliance sought,
“ Pleas'd on her pillow their dull heads to lay, “ Rude nature's state had been our state to“ day ;
“ No cities e'er their tow'ry fronts had rais'd,

“ No arts had made us opulent and gay ;
“ With brother brutes the human race had “ graz'd ;
“ None e'er had soar'd to fame, none honor'd
“ been, none prais'd.

“ Great Homer's song had never fir'd the breast
“ To thirst of glory and heroic deeds ;
“ Sweet Maro's Muse, sunk in inglorious rest,
“ Had silent slept amid the Mincian reeds :
“ The wits of modern time had told their “ beads,
“ And monkish legends been their only strains :
“ Our Milton's Eden had lain wrapt in weeds,
“ Our Shakspeare stroll'd and laugh'd with “ Warwick swains ; [plains.
“ Ne had my master Spenser charm'd his Mulla's

“ Dumb too had been the sage historic Muse,
“ And perish'd all the sons of ancient fame ;
“ Those starry lights of virtue that diffuse
“ Through the dark depth of time their vivid
“ flame,
“ Had all been lost with such as have no name.
“ Who then had scorn'd his ease for others'
“ good ?
“ Who then had toil'd rapacious men to tame ?
“ Who in the public breach devoted stood,
“ And for his country's cause been prodigal of “ blood ?

“ But should to fame your hearts unfeeling be,
“ If right I read, you pleasure all require :
“ Then hear how best may be obtain'd this “ fee,
“ How best enjoy'd this nature's wide desire.
“ Toil, and be glad ! let industry inspire
“ Into your quicken'd limbs her buoyant “ breath !
“ Who does not act is dead : absorpt entire
“ In miry sloth, no pride, no joy he hath ;
“ O leaden-hearted men, to be in love with “ death !

“ Ah ! what avail the largest gifts of Heaven
“ When drooping health and spirits go amiss ?
“ How tasteless then whatever can be given !
“ Health is the vital principle of bliss,
“ And exercise of health. In proof of this,
“ Behold the wretch, who slugs his life away,
“ Soon swallow'd in disease's sad abyss ;
“ While he whom toil has brac'd, or manly
“ play,
“ Has light as air each limb, each thought as “ clear as day.

“ O who can speak the vigorous joys of health ?
“ Unclogg'd the body, unobscur'd the mind ;
“ The morning rises gay ; with pleasing stealth,
“ The temperate evening falls serene and “ kind : [find.
“ In health the wiser brutes true gladness
“ See ! how the younglings frisk along the “ meads,

" As May comes on, and wakes the balmy
wind;
" Rampant with life, their joy all joy exceeds;
" Yet what but high-strung health this dancing
" pleasaunce breeds?

" But here, instead, is fostered every ill,
" Which or distemper'd minds or bodies know.
" Come then, my kindred spirits! do not spill
" Your talents here. This place is but a show,
" Whose charms delude you to the den of
" woe:
" Come, follow me, I will direct you right,
" Where pleasure's roses void of serpents
" grow, [knight,
" Sincere as sweet; come, follow this good
" And you will bless the day that brought him
" to your sight.

" Some he will lead to courts, and some to camps;
" To senates some, and public sage debates,
" Where, by the solemn gleam of midnight
" lamps, [states:
" The world is pois'd, and manag'd mighty
" To high-discovery some, that new-creates
" The face of earth; some to the thriving
" mart;
" Some to the rural reign, and softer fates;
" To the sweet Muses some, who raise the
" heart:
" All glory shall be yours, all nature and all art.

" There are, I see, who listen to my lay,
" Who wretched sigh for virtue, but despair.
" All may be done, (methinks I hear them
" say) [fair:
" Even death despis'd by generous actions
" All, but for those who to these bowers re-
" Their very power dissolv'd in luxury, [pair,
" To quit of torpid sluggishness the lair,
" And from the powerful arms of sloth get
" free, [be!
" 'Tis rising from the dead—Alas!—It cannot

" Would you then learn to dissipate the band
" Of these huge threatening difficulties dire,
" That in the weak man's way like lions
" stand,
" His soul appal, and damp his rising fire?
" Resolve, resolve, and to be men aspire.
" Exert that noblest privilege, alone
" Here to mankind indulg'd: control desire:
" Let godlike Reason, from her sovereign
" throne, [it is done.
" Speak the commanding word—I will!—and

" Heavens! can you then thus waste, in
" shameful wise,
" Your few important days of trial here?
" Heirs of eternity! yborn to rise [near " Through endless states of being, still more
" To bliss approaching, and perfection clear;
" Can you renounce a fortune so sublime,

" Such glorious hopes, your backward steps
" to steer, [and slime?
" And roll, with vilest brutes, through mud
" No! no!—Your heaven-touch'd hearts dis-
" dain the sordid crime!"

" Enough! enough!" they cry'd—straight from the crowd
The better sort on wings of transport fly,
As when amid the lifeless summits proud
Of Alpine cliffs, where to the gelid sky
Snows pil'd on snows in wintry torpor lie,
The rays divine of vernal Phœbus play;
Th' awaken'd heaps, in streamlets from on Rous'd into action, lively leap away, [high,
Glad-warbling through the vales, in their new being gay.

Not less the life, the vivid joy serene,
That lighted up these new-created men,
Than that which wings th' exulted spirit clean
When, just deliver'd from this fleshly den,
It soaring seeks its native skies agen: [pow'rs,
How light its essence! how unclogg'd its
Beyond the blazon of my mortal pen!
Even so we glad forsook these sinful bowers,
Even such enraptur'd life, such energy was ours.

But far the greater part, with rage inflam'd,
Dire-mutter'd curses, and blasphem'd high Jove:

" Ye sons of hate! (they bitterly exclaim'd)
" What brought you to this seat of peace
" and love? [grove,
" While with kind nature, here amid the
" We pass'd the harmless sabbath of our time,
" What to disturb it could, fell men, emove
" Your barbarous hearts? Is happiness a " crime? [sublime."
" Then do the fiends of hell rule in yon heaven

" Ye impious wretches, (quoth the knight in wrath,)
" Your happiness behold!"—Then straight a wand
He wav'd, an anti-magic power that hath,
Truth from illusive falsehood to command.
Sudden, the landscape sinks on ev'ry hand;
The pure quick streams are marshy puddles
found; [stand;
On baleful heaths the groves all blacken'd
And o'er the weedy, foul, abhorred ground, Snakes, adders, toads, each loathsome creature crawls around.

And here and there, on trees by lightning
scath'd,
Unhappy wights who loathed life yhung:
Or, in fresh gore and recent murder bath'd,
They welt'ring lay; or else infuriate flung
Into the gloomy flood, while ravens sung
The funeral dirge, they down the torrent
rowl'd:

These, by distemper'd blood to madness stung,
Had doom'd themselves; whence oft, when night controll'd [howl'd.
The world, returning hither their sad spirits

Meantime a moving scene was open laid ;
That lazar house, I whilom in my lay
Depainted have, its horrors deep display'd,
And gave unnumber'd wretches to the day,
Who tossing there in squalid misery lay.
Soon as of sacred light the unwonted smile
Pour'd on these living catacombs its ray,
Through the drear caverns stretching many a mile, [woes a while.
The sick uprais'd their heads, and dropp'd their

" O heaven ! (they cried) and do we once

 " Yon blessed sun and this green earth so fair ?
 " Are we from noisome damps of pest-house

 " And drink our souls the sweet ethereal air ?
 " O thou ! or Knight ! or God ! who holdest
 there

This said, his pow'ful wand he wav'd anew ;
Instant a glorious angel-train descends,
The Charities, to wit, of rosy hue ;
Sweet love their looks a gentle radiance lends ;
And with seraphic flame compassion blends.
At once, delighted, to their charge they fly :
When, lo ! a goodly hospital ascends ;
In which they bade each lenient aid be nigh,
That could the sick-bed smoothe of that sad company.

It was a worthy edifying sight,
And gives to human kind peculiar grace,
To see kind hands attending day and night,
With tender ministry, from place to place.
Some prop the head ; some from the pallid face [sheds.
Wipe off the faint cold dew's weak nature
Some reach the healing draught : the whilst,
to chase
The fear supreme around their soften'd beds,
Some holy man by prayer all op'ning heaven
dispreeds,

Attended by a glad acclaiming train,
Of those he rescued had from gaping hell,
Then turn'd the Knight, and to his hall again
Soft-pacing, sought of Peace the mossy cell:
Yet down his cheeks the gems of pity fell,
To see the helpless wretches that remain'd,
There left through delves and deserts dire to yell; [stain'd,
Amaz'd, their looks with pale dismay were
And spreading wide their hands they meek repentance feign'd.

But, ah! their scorned day of grace was past:
For (horrible to tell!) a desert wild [vast;
Before them stretch'd, bare, comfortless, and
With gibbets, bones, and carcases defil'd.
There nor trim field, nor lively culture smil'd;
Nor waving shade was seen, nor fountain fair;
But sands abrupt on sands lay loosely pil'd,
Through which they floundering toil'd with painful care,
Whilst Phœbus smote them sore, and fir'd the cloudless air.

Then, varying to a joyless land of bogs,
The sadden'd country a grey waste appear'd ;
Where nought but putrid streams and noisome fogs
For ever hung on drizzly Auster's beard ;
Or else the ground by piercing Caurus sear'd,
Was jagg'd with frost, or heap'd with glazed
snow : [steer'd,
Through these extremes a ceaseless round they
By cruel fiends still hurried to and fro,
Gaunt Beggary, and Scorn, with many hell-hounds moe.

The first was with base dunghill rags yclad,
Tainting the gale, in which they flutter'd
light;
Of morbid hue his features, sunk and sad;
His hollow eyne shook forth a sickly light:
And o'er his lank jaw-bone, in piteous plight,
His black rough beard was matted, rank, and vile;
Direful to see! and heart-appalling sight!
Meantime foul scurf and blotches him defile;
And dogs, where'er he went, still barked all the while.

The other was a fell despightful fiend:
Hell holds none worse in baleful bow'r below:
By pride, and wit, and rage, and rancour
keen'd;
Of man alike if good or bad, the foe:
With nose up-turn'd, he always made a show
As if he smelt some nauseous scent; his eye
Was cold and keen, like blast from boreal
snow;
And taunts he casten forth most bitterly: [fry.
Such were the twain that off drove this ungodly

Even so through Brentford town, a town of mud,
An herd of bristly swine is prick'd along;
The filthy beasts, that never chew the cud,
Still grunt and squeak, and sing their troublous song. [among:
And oft they plunge themselves the mire
But ay the ruthless driver goads them on,
And ay of barking dogs the bitter throng
Makes them renew their unmelodious moan;
Ne ever find they rest from their unresting fone.

§ 50. To the Memory of Sir Isaac Newton.

THOMSON.

Inscribed to the Right Honorable Sir Robert Walpole.

SHALL the great soul of Newton quit this earth,
To mingle with his stars; and every Muse,
Astonish'd into silence, shun the weight
Of honors due to his illustrious name? [light,
But what can man?—Even now the sons of
In strains high warbled to seraphic lyre,
Hail his arrival on the coast of bliss.
Yet am I not deterr'd, though high the theme,
And sung to harps of angels; for with you,
Ethereal flames! ambitious I aspire
In Nature's general symphony to join. [guest?

And what new wonders can you show your
Who, while on this dim spot, where mortals toil
Clouded in dust, from Motion's simple laws
Could trace the secret hand of Providence
Wide-working through this universal frame.

Have ye not listen'd, while he bound the suns
And planets to their spheres? th' unequal task
Of human kind till then. Oft had they roll'd
O'er erring man the year, and oft disgrac'd
The pride of schools, before their course was Full in its causes and effects, to him, [known
All-piercing sage! who sat not down and dream'd

Romantic schemes, defended by the din
Of specious words, and tyranny of names;
But bidding his amazing mind attend,
And, with heroic patience, years and years
Deep searching saw at last the system dawn,
And shine of all his race on him alone. [strong!
What were his raptures then: how pure! how
And what the triumphs of old Greece and Rome,
By his diminish'd, but the pride of boys
In some small fray victorious! when instead
Of shatter'd parcels of this earth usurp'd
By violence unmanly, and sore deeds
Of cruelty and blood, Nature herself
Stood all-subdued by him, and open laid
Her ev'ry latent glory to his view.

All intellectual eye, our solar round
First gazing through, he, by the blended pow'r
Of gravitation and projection, saw
The whole in silent harmony revolve.
From unassisted vision hid, the moons,
To cheer remoter planets numerous form'd,
By him in all their mingled tracts were seen.
He also fix'd our wand'ring queen of night;
Whether she wanes into a scanty orb,
Or, waxing broad, with her pale shadowy light,
In a soft deluge overflows the sky.

Her ev'ry motion clear discerning, he Adjusted to the mutual main, and taught
Why now the mighty mass of water swells
Resistless, heaving on the broken rocks,
And the full river turning; till again
The tide revertive, unattracted leaves
A yellow waste of idle sands behind. [flight

Then breaking hence, he took his ardent
Through the blue infinite; and every star,
Which the clear concave of a winter's night
Pours on the eye, or astronomic tube,
Far-stretching snatches from the dark abyss,
Or such as farther in successive skies
To fancy shine alone, at his approach
Blaz'd into suns, the living centre each
Of an harmonious system: all combin'd,
And ruled unerring by that single pow'r
Which draws the stone projected to the ground.

O unprofuse magnificence divine!
O wisdom truly perfect! thus to call,
From a few causes such a scheme of things,
Effects so various, beautiful, and great,
An universe complete! and, O belov'd
Of Heaven, whose well-purg'd penetrative eye,
The mystic veil transpiercing, inly scann'd
The rising, moving, wide-establish'd frame.

He first of men, with awful wing pursued
The Comet through the long elliptic curve,
As round in num'rous worlds he wound his way;
Till, to the forehead of our evening sky
Return'd, the blazing wonder glares anew,
And o'er the trembling nations shakes dismay.

The heavens are all his own; from the wild
Of whirling vortices and circling spheres, [rule
To their first great simplicity restor'd.
The schools astonish'd stood; but found it vain
To combat still with demonstration strong,
And, unawaken'd, dream beneath the blaze

Of truth. At once their pleasing visions fled,
With the gay shadows of the morning mix'd,
When Newton rose, our philosophic sun.

The aerial flow of sound was known to him,
From whence it first in wavy circles breaks,
Till the touch'd organ takes the message in.
Nor could the darting beam, of speed immense
Escape his swift pursuit, and measuring eye.
Even light itself, which every thing displays,
Shone undiscover'd, till his brighter mind
Untwisted all the shining robe of day;
And from the whitening undistinguish'd blaze
Collecting ev'ry ray into his kind,
To the charm'd eye educ'd the gorgeous train
Of parent-colors. First the flaming red
Sprung vivid forth; the tawny orange next;
And next delicious yellow, by whose side
Fell the kind beams of all-refreshing green;
Then the pure blue, that swells autumnal skies,
Ethereal play'd; and then, of sadder hue,
Emerg'd the deepen'd indigo, as when
The heavy-skirted evening droops with frost;
While the last gleamings of refracted light
Died in the fainting violet away.

These, when the clouds distil the rosy show'r,
Shine out distinct adown the wat'ry bow;
While o'er our heads the dewy vision bends
Delightful, melting on the fields beneath.
Myriads of mingling dyes from these result
And myriads still remain—Infinite source
Of beauty, ever blushing, ever new!

Did ever poet image aught so fair, [brook!
Dreaming in whispering groves by the hoarse
Or prophet, to whose rapture heaven descends!
Even now the setting sun and shifting clouds,
Seen, Greenwich, from thy lovely heights, declare
How just, how beauteous the refractive law.

The noiseless tide of time, all bearing down
To vast eternity's unbounded sea,
Where the green islands of the happy shine,
He stemm'd alone: and to the source (involv'd Deep in primæval gloom) ascending, rais'd
His lights at equal distances, to guide
Historian, wilder'd on his darksome way.

But who can number up his labors? who
His high discov'ries sing? when but a few
Of the deep studying race can stretch their minds
To what he knew: in fancy's lighter thought
How shall the Muse then grasp the mighty theme?

What wonder thence that his devotion swell'd
Responsive to his knowledge? for could he,
Whose piercing mental eye diffusive saw
The finish'd university of things,
In all its order, magnitude, and parts,
Forbear incessant to adore that Pow'r
Who fills, sustains, and actuates the whole?

Say, ye who best can tell, ye happy few,
Who saw him in the softest lights of life,
All unwithheld, indulging to his friends
The vast unborrow'd treasures of his mind;
Oh speak the wondrous man! how mild, how
How greatly humble, how divinely good; [calm,
How firm establish'd on eternal truth;
Fervent in doing well, with ev'ry nerve

Still pressing on, forgetful of the past,
And panting for perfection: far above
Those little cares and visionary joys
That so perplex the fond impassion'd heart
Of ever-cheated, ever-trusting man!

And you, ye hopeless gloomy-minded tribe,
You who, unconscious of those nobler flights
That reach impatient at immortal life,
Against the prime endearing privilege
Of being dare contend, say, can a soul
Of such extensive, deep, tremendous pow'rs,
Enlarging still, be but a finer breath
Of spirits dancing through their tubes a while,
And then for ever lost in vacant air?

But hark! methinks I hear a warning voice,
Solemn as when some awful change is come,
Sound through the world—" 'Tis done! the

"measure's full; [stones,
"And I resign my charge."—Ye mould'ring
That build the tow'ring pyramid, the proud
Triumphal arch, the monument effac'd
By ruthless ruin, and whate'er supports
The worshipp'd name of hoar antiquity,
Down to the dust! what grandeur can ye boast,
While Newton lifts his column to the skies,
Beyond the waste of time? Let no weak drop
Be shed for him. The virgin in her bloom
Cut off, the joyous youth, and darling child,
These are the tombs that claim the tender tear
And elegiac song. But Newton calls
For other notes of gratulation high,
That now he wanders through those endless worlds

He here so well descried, and wond'ring talks,
And hymns their Author with his glad compeers.

O Britain's boast! whether with angels thou
Sittest in dread discourse, or fellow-blest,
Who joy to see the honor of their kind;
Or whether, mounted on cherubic wing,
Thy swift career is with the whirling orbs,
Comparing things with things, in rapture lost,
And grateful adoration, for that light
So plenteous ray'd into thy mind below,
From Light himself; O look with pity down
On human kind, a frail erroneous race!
Exalt the spirit of a downward world!
O'er thy dejected country chief preside,
And be her Genius call'd! her studies raise,
Correct her manners, and inspire her youth:
For, though deprav'd and sunk, she brought thee forth,

And glories in thy name; she points thee out
To all her sons, and bids them eye thy star:
While, in expectance of the second life,
When time shall be no more, thy sacred dust
Sleeps with her kings, and dignifies the scene.

§ 51. Hymn on Solitude. THOMSON.

HAIL, mildly-pleasing Solitude,
Companion of the wise and good;
But from whose holy piercing eye
The herd of fools and villains fly.

Oh! how I love with thee to walk,
And listen to thy whisper'd talk,

Which innocence and truth imparts,
And melts the most obdurate hearts !

A thousand shapes you wear with ease,
And still in ev'ry shape you please.

Now wrapt in some mysterious dream,
A lone philosopher you seem ;

Now quick from hill to vale you fly,
And now you sweep the vaulted sky.

A shepherd next, you haunt the plain,
And warble forth your oaten strain ;

A lover now, with all the grace
Of that sweet passion in your face ;

Then, calm'd to friendship, you assume
The gentle-looking Hartford's bloom,

As, with her Musidora, she (Her Musidora fond of thee)

Amid the long withdrawing vale
Awakes the rival'd nightingale.

Thine is the balmy breath of morn,
Just as the dew-bent rose is born ;

And while meridian fervors beat
Thine is the woodland dumb retreat ;

But chief, when evening scenes decay ;
And the faint landscape swims away,

Thine is the doubtful soft decline,
And that best hour of musing thine.

Descending angels bless thy train,
The virtues of the sage and swain ;

Plain innocence, in white array'd,
Before thee lifts her fearless head :

Religion's beams around thee shine,
And cheer thy glooms with light divine :

About thee sports sweet Liberty ;
And rapt Urania sings to thee.

Oh, let me pierce thy secret cell
And in thy deep recesses dwell.

Perhaps from Norwood's oak-clad hill,
When meditation has her fill,

I just may cast my careless eyes
Where London's spiry turrets rise ;

Think of its crimes, its cares, its pain,
Then shield me in the woods again.

SEN. Ep. 88.

O GOODLY Discipline! from Heaven ysprung,
Parent of Science, queen of Arts refin'd !

To whom the Graces and the Nine belong,
Oh ! bid those Graces, in fair chorus join'd
With each bright virtue that adorns the mind,
Oh ! bid the Muses, thine harmonious train,
Who by thy aid erst humaniz'd mankind,
Inspire, direct, and moralize the strain
That doth essay to teach thy treasure how to gain.

And thou, whose pious and maternal care,
The substitute of heavenly Providence,
With tend'rest love my orphan life did rear,
And train me up to manly strength and sense,
With mildest awe and virtuous influence
Directing my unpractis'd wayward feet
To the smooth walks of Truth and Innocence,
Where Happiness heartfelt, Contentment sweet,
Philosophy divine, aye hold their blest retreat ;

Thou, most belov'd, most honor'd, most rever'd!
Accept this Verse, to thy large merit due !
And blame me not, if, by each tie endear'd
Of nature, gratitude, and friendship true,
The whiles this moral thesis I pursue,
And trace the plan of goodly nurture * o'er,
I bring thy modest virtues into view,
And proudly boast that from thy precious store,
Which erst enrich'd my heart, I drew this secred lore.

And thus, I ween, thus shall I best repay
The valu'd gifts thy careful love bestow'd,
If imitating thee well as I may,
I labor to diffuse th' important good,
Till this great truth by all be understood—
“ That all the pious duties which we owe

CANTO I.

THE ARGUMENT.

The Knight, as to Pædia's † house
He his young son conveys,
Is staid by Custom, with him fights,
And his vain pride disdains.

A GENTLE knight there was whose noble deeds
O'er Fairyland by Fame were blazon'd round ;
For warlike enterprise and sage areeds ‡
Among the chief alike was he renown'd,
Whence with the marks of highest honors
By Gloriana, in domestic peace, [crown'd
That port to which the wise are ever bound,
He anchor'd was, and chang'd the tossing seas
Of bustling busy life for calm sequester'd ease.
There in domestic virtue rich and great,
As erst in public, 'mid his wide domain
Long in primeval patriarchal state,
The lord, the judge, the father of the plain
He dwelt ; and with him in the golden chain

* Nurture, education. † Pædia is a Greek word, signifying education. ‡ Areeds, counsels.

Of wedded faith ylink'd a matron sage
Aye dwelt, sweet partner of his joy and pain!
Sweet charmer of his youth, friend of his age,
Skill'd to improve his bliss, his sorrows to assuage!

From this fair union, not of sordid gain,
But merit similar and mutual love,
True source of lineal virtue, sprung a train
Of youths and virgins, like the beauteous grove
Which round the temple of Olympic Jove
Begirt with youthful bloom the parent tree *,
The sacred olive, whence old Elis wove
Her verdant crowns of peaceful victory,
The guerdons † of bold strength and swift activity.

So round their noble parents goodly rose
These gen'rous scions; they with watchful care,
Still as the swelling passions 'gan disclose
The buds of future virtues, did prepare
With prudent culture the young shoots to rear,
And aye in this endearing pious toil
They by a palmer ‡ sage instructed were, [while
Who from deep thought and studious search ere-
Had learnt to mend the heart and till the human soil.

For by celestial Wisdom whilom led [mind,
Through all the apartments of th' immortal
He view'd the secret stores, and mark'd the sted §

To judgement, wit, and memory, assign'd;
And now sensation and reflection join'd
To fill with images her darksome grotte,
Where variously disjointed or combin'd,
As reason, fancy, or opinion, wrought,
Their various masks they play'd, and fed her pensive thought.

Als || through the fields of Science had he stray'd
With eager search, and sent his piercing eye
Through each learn'd school, each philosophic
shade,

Where Truth and Virtue erst were deem'd to lie,
If haply the fair vagrants he mote ¶ spy,
Or hear the music of their charming lore;
But all unable there to satisfy
His curious soul, he turn'd him to explore
The sacred writ of Faith, to learn, believe, adore.

Thence foe profess'd of Falsehood and Deceit,
Those sly artificers of Tyranny,
Aye holding up before uncertain feet
His faithful light to knowledge, Liberty,
Mankind he led to civil policy,
And mild Religion's charitable law,
That, fram'd by Mercy and Benignity,
The persecuting sword forbids to draw,
And free-created souls with penal terrors awe.

Ne with the glorious gifts elate and vain
Lock'd he his wisdom up in churlish pride,
But stooping from his height would even deign
The feeble steps of infancy to guide:
Eternal glory him therefore betide;
Let ev'ry gen'rous youth his praise proclaim,
Who wand'ring through the world's rude forest
wide,

By him hath been ytaught his course to frame
To Virtue's sweet abodes and heaven-aspiring Fame!

For this the Fairy knight with anxious thought
And fond paternal care his counsel pray'd,
And him of gentlest courtesy besought
His guidance to vouchsafe and friendly aid,
The while his tender offspring he convey'd
Through devious paths to that secure retreat
Where sage Pædia with each tuneful maid
On a wide mount had fix'd her rural seat, [feet.
'Mid flow'ry gardens plac'd, untrod by vulgar
And now forth-pacing with his blooming heir,
And that same virtuous palmer them to guide,
Arm'd all to point, and on a courser fair
Ymounted high, in military pride,
His little train before he slow did ride:
Him eke behind a gentle 'squire ensues,
With his young lord aye marching side by side,
His counsellor and guard in goodly thews **,
Who well had been brought up and nurs'd by ev'ry Muse.

Thus, as their pleasing journey they pursu'd,
With cheerful argument beguiling pain,
Ere long descending from an hill they view'd
Beneath their eyes outstretch'd a spacious plain,
That fruitful show'd and apt for ev'ry grain,
For pastures, vines, and flow'rs, while Nature
fair

Sweet smiling all around with count'nance fain ††
Seem'd to demand the tiller's art and care
Her wildness to correct, her lavish waste repair.
Right good I ween and bounteous was the soil,
Aye wont in happy season to repay
With tenfold usury the peasant's toil,
But now 'twas ruin all and wild decay;
Untill'd the garden and the fallow lay;
The sheep-shorn down with barren brakes ††
o'ergrown,

The whiles the merry peasants sport and play
All as the public evil were unknown,
Or ev'ry public care from ev'ry breast was flown.

Astonish'd at a scene at once so fair
And so deform'd, with wonder and delight
At man's neglect and Nature's bounty rare,
In studious thought a while the Fairy knight

* Parent tree, the sacred olive.] This tree grew in the Altis, or sacred grove of Olympic Jupiter, at Olympia, having, as the Eleans pretended, been originally planted there by Hercules. It was esteemed sacred; and from that were taken the Olympic crowns.

Bent on that goodly lond * his eager sight,
Then forward rush'd impatient to descry
What towns and castles therein were empight†;
For towns him seem'd and castles he did spy,
As to th' horizon round he stretch'd his roaming
eye.

Nor long way had they travell'd ere they came
To a wide stream that with tumultuous roar,
Amongst rude rocks its winding course did
frame,

Black'd was the wave and sordid, cover'd o'er
With angry foam, and stain'd with infants' gore;
Thereto, along th' unlovely margin stood
A birchen grove, that waving from the shore,
Aye cast upon the tide its falling bud,
And with its bitter juice empoison'd all the flood.

Right in the centre of the vale empight,
Not distant far, a forked mountain rose,
In outward form presenting to the sight
That fam'd Parnassian hill on whose fair brows
The Nine Aonian Sisters wont repose,
List'ning to sweet Castalia's sounding stream,
Which through the plains of Cirrha murm'ring
flows;

But this to that compar'd mote justly seem Ne fitting haunt for gods, ne worthy man's esteem.

For this, nor founded deep nor spreaden wide,
Nor high uprais'd above the level plain,
By toiling art through tedious years applied,
From various parts compil'd with studious pain,
Was erst upthrown, if so it mote attain,
Like that poetic mountain, to be hight‡
The noble seat of Learning's goodly train;
Thereto, the more to captivate the sight
It like a garden fair most curiously was dight§.

In figur'd plots with leafy walls enclos'd,
By measure and by rule it was outlay'd,
With symmetry so regular dispos'd
That plot to plot still answer'd, shade to shade;
Each correspondent twain alike array'd
With like embellishments of plants and flow'rs,
Of statues, vases, spouting founts, that play'd
Through shells of Tritons their ascending show'rs,
And labyrinths involv'd and trelice-woven bow'rs.

There likewise mote be seen on ev'ry side
The yew obedient to the planter's will,
And shapely box of all their branching pride
Ungently shorn, and with prepost'rous skill
To various beasts and birds of sundry quill Transform'd, and human shapes of monstrous size,

Huge as that giant race who hill on hill
High-heaping, sought with inipious vain em-
prise || [skies.
Despite of thund'ring Jove to scale the steepy

Als other wonders of the sportive shears,
Fair Nature misadorning, there were found,
Globes, spiral columns, pyramids, and piers,
With sprouting urns and budding statues
crown'd,

And horizontal dials on the ground
In living box by cunning artists trac'd,
And galleys trim on no long voyage bound,
But by their roots there ever anchor'd fast,
All ¶ were their bellying sails outspread to ev'ry blast.

O'er all appear'd the mountain's forked brows
With terrasses on terrasses upthrown,
And all along arrang'd in order'd rows
And vistas broad, the velvet slopes adown,
The ever verdant trees of Daphne shone;
But aliens to the clime, and brought of old
From Latian plains and Grecian Helicon,
They shrunk and languish'd in a foreign mould,
By changeful summers starv'd, and pinch'd by winter's cold.

Amid this verdant grove with solemn state,
On golden thrones of antic form reclin'd,
In mimic majesty Nine Virgins sat,
In features various as unlike in mind:
Als boasted they themselves of heavenly kind,
And to the sweet Parnassian nymphs allied;
Thence round their brows the Delphic bay they
twin'd,
And matching with high names their apish pride,
O'er ev'ry learned school aye claim'd they to preside.

In antic garbs (for modern they disdain'd)
By Greek and Roman artists whilom ** made,
Of various woofs and variously distain'd
With tints of ev'ry hue were they array'd;
And here and there ambitiously display'd
A purple shred of some rich robe, prepar'd
Erst by the Muses or th' Aonian Maid,
To deck great Tullius or the Mantuan bard,
Which o'er each motley vest with uncouth splendor glar'd.

And well their outward vesture did express
The bent and habit of their inward mind,
Affecting Wisdom's antiquated dress,
And usages by time cast far behind:
Thence to the charms of younger Science blind,
The customs, laws, the learning, arts, and phrase

Of their own countries they with scorn declin'd;
Ne sacred Truth herself would they embrace
Unwarranted, unknown in their forefathers' days.

Thus ever backward casting their survey
To Rome's old ruins, and the groves forlorn
Of elder Athens, which in prospect lay [turn Stretch'd out against the mountain, would they
Their busy search, and o'er the rubbish mourn,

Then gath'ring up with superstitious care
Each little scrap, however foul or torn,
In grave harangues they boldly would declare,
This Ennius, Varro, this the Stagyrte, did wear.

Yet under names of venerable sound, [rod,
While o'er the world they stretch'd their awful
Through all the provinces of Learning own'd
For teachers of whate'er is wise and good ;
Als from each region to their drad * abode
Came youth unnumber'd, crowding all to taste
The streams of science, which united flow'd
Adown the mount from nine rich sources cast,
And to the vale below in one rude torrent past.

O'er ev'ry source, protectress of the stream,
One of those Virgin Sisters did preside,
Who dignifying with her noble name
Her proper flood, aye pour'd into the tide,
The heady vapors of scholastic pride,
Despotical and abject, bold and blind,
Fierce in debate, and forward to decide.
Vain love of praise with adulation join'd,
And disingenuous scorn and impotence of mind.

Extending from the hill on ev'ry side,
In circuit vast a verdant valley spread,
Across whose uniform flat bosom glide
Ten thousand streams, in winding mazes led
By various sluices from one common head ;
A turbid mass of waters, vast, profound !
Hight of Philology the lake, and fed
By that rude torrent which with roaring sound Came tumbling from the hill, and flow'd the level round.

And ev'ry where this spacious valley o'er,
Fast by each stream was seen a numerous throng
Of beardless striplings, to the birch-crown'd shore
By nurses, guardians, fathers, dragg'd along,
Who, helpless, meek, and innocent of wrong,
Were torn reluctant from the tender side
Of their fond mothers, and by faitours † strong,
By pow'r made insolent, and hard by pride,
Were driv'n with furious rage, and lash'd into the tide.

On the rude bank with trembling feet they stood,
And casting round their oft reverted eyes,
If haply they mote 'scape the hated flood,
Fill'd all the plain with lamentable cries :
But far away th' unheeding father flies,
Constrain'd his strong compunctions to repress ;
While close behind, assuming the disguise
Of nurt'ring Care and smiling Tenderness,
With secret scourges arm'd those grisly faitours
press.

As on the steepy margin of a brook,
When the young Sun with flow'ry Maia rides,
With innocent dismay a bleating flock
Crowd back affrighted at the rolling tides,
The shepherd-swain at first exhorting chides

Their seely ‡ fear ; at length, impatient grown,
With his rude crook he wounds their tender
sides,
And, all regardless of their piteous moan,
Into the dashing wave compels them furious
down.

Thus, urg'd by mast'ring fear and dolorous teen §,
Into the current plung'd that infant crowd :
Right piteous was the spectacle I ween,
Of tender striplings stain'd with tears and blood,
Perforce conflicting with the bitter flood,
And lab'ring to attain the distant shore,
Where holding forth the gown of manhood, stood
The Siren Liberty, and evermore
Solicited their hearts with her enchanting lore.

Irk some and long the passage was, perplex'd
With rugged rocks, on which the raving tide
By sudden bursts of angry tempests vex'd
Oft dash'd the youth, whose strength mote ill
abide

With head uplifted o'er the waves to ride ;
Whence many wearied ere they had o'erpast
The middle stream (for they in vain have tried)
Again return'd astounded || and aghast,
Ne one regardful look would ever backward cast.

Some, of a rugged more enduring frame,
Their toilsome course with patient pain pursu'd,
And though with many a bruise and muchel ¶
blame,

Eft hanging on the rocks, and eft embru'd
Deep in the muddy stream, with hearts subdu'd,
And quail'd by labor, gain'd the shore at last ;
But in life's practis'd lear** unskill'd and rude,
Forth to that forked hill they silent pac'd,
Where hid in studious shades their fruitless hours they waste.

Others of rich and noble lineage bred, [strain'd,
Though with the crowd to pass the flood con-
Yet o'er the crags with fond indulgence led
By hireling guides, and in all depths sustain'd,
Skimm'd lightly o'er the tide, undipt, unstain'd,
Save with the sprinkling of the wat'ry spray,
And aye their proud prerogative maintain'd
Of ignorance, and ease, and wanton play,
Soft harbingers of vice and premature decay.

A few, alas ! how few ! by Heaven's high will
With subtle spirits endow'd and sinews strong,

That bellow'd fierce and rose the rocks among,
By their own native vigor borne along,
Cut briskly through the waves, and forces new Gath'ring from toil, and ardor from the throng
Of rival youths, outstript the lab'ring crew,
And to the true Parnasse §§ and heaven-throng'd glory flew.

Dire was the tumult! and from ev'ry shore
Discordant echoes struck the deafen'd ear,
Heart-thrilling cries, with sobs and singults*
Short interrupted, the imploring tear, [sore
And furious stripes and angry threats severe,
Confus'dly mingled with the jarring sound
Of all the various speeches that whilere†
On Shinar's wide spread champaign did astound
High Babel's builders vain, and their proud works confound.

Much was the knight impassion'd at the scene,
But more his blooming son, whose tender breast
Empierced deep with sympathizing teen
On his pale cheek the sign of drad impress'd,
And fill'd with tears his eyes, which sore distress'd
Up to his sire he rais'd in mournful wise,
Who with sweet smiles paternal soon redress'd
His troublous thoughts, and clear'd each sad surmise:

Then turns his ready steed, and on his journey
hies.

But far he had not march'd ere he was stay'd
By a rude voice, that like th' united sound
Of shouting myriads through the valley bray'd
And shook the groves, the floods, and solid
ground:

The distant hills rebellow'd all around.

"Arrest, sir Knight," it cried, "thy fond career,
"Nor with presumptuous disobedience wound
"That awful majesty which all revere!

"In my commands, sir Knight, the voice of nations hear."

Quick turn'd the knight, and saw upon the plain
Advancing tow'rds him, with impetuous gait,
And visage all inflam'd with fierce disdain,
A monstrous giant, on whose brow elate
Shone the bright ensign of imperial state;
Albeit lawful kingdom he had none
But laws and kingdoms wont he oft create,
And oft-times over both erect his throne,
While senates, priests, and kings, his sovran †
sceptre own.

Custom he hight, and aye in ev'ry land
Usurp'd dominion with despotic sway
O'er all he holds, and to his high command
Constrains e'en stubborn Nature to obey,
Whom dispossessing oft he doth essay
To govern in her right; and with a pace
So soft and gentle doth he win his way,
That she unwares is caught in his embrace;
And though deflour'd and thrall'd nought feels her foul disgrace.

For nurt'ring even from their tenderest age
The docile sons of men withouten pain,
By disciplines and rules to every stage

Of life accommodate, he doth them train
Insensibly to wear and hug his chain;
Als his behests or gentle or severe,
Or good or noxious, rational or vain,
He craftily persuades them to revere
As institutions sage and venerable lear.

Protector therefore of that forked hill,
And mighty patron of those Sisters Nine,
Who there enthron'd with many a copious rill,
Feed the full streams that through the valley
shine,

He deemed was, and aye with rites divine,
Like those which Sparta's § hardy race of yore
Were wont perform at fell Diana's shrine,
He doth constrain his vassals to adore
Perforce their sacred names, and learn their sacred lore.

And to the Fairy knight now drawing near
With voice terrific and imperious mien
(All was he wont less dreadful to appear [seen)
When known and practis'd than at distance
And kingly stretching forth his sceptre sheen,
Him he commandeth, upon threaten'd pain
Of his displeasure high and vengeance keen,
From his rebellious purpose to refrain, [train.
And all due honors pay to Learning's rev'rend

So saying, and forestalling all reply,
His peremptory hand without delay,
As one who little car'd to justify
His princely will, long used to boundless sway,
Upon the Fairy youth with great dismay
In ev'ry quaking limb convuls'd he lay'd,
And proudly stalking o'er the verdant lay ||
Him to those scientific streams convey'd,
With many his young compeers, therein to be embay'd ¶.

The knight his tender son's distressful stour**
Perceiving, swift to his assistance flew,
Ne vainly stay'd to deprecate that pow'r
Which from submission aye more haughty grew:
For that proud giant's force he wisely knew
Not to be meanly dreaded, nor defied
With rash presumption; and with courage true,
Rather than step from virtue's path aside,
Oft had he singly scorn'd his all-dismaying pride.
And now, disdaining parle, his courser hot
He fiercely prick'd, and couch'd his vengeful spear,

Wherewith the giant he so rudely smote,
That him perforce constrain'd to wend arreart††;
Who much abash'd at such rebuke severe,
Yet his accusom'd pride recov'ring soon,
Forthwith his massy sceptre 'gan uprear,
For other warlike weapon he had none,
Ne other him behov'd to quell his boldest fane††.

 Of so tempestuous strokes; but he was stay'd,
 And ever with delib'rate valor weigh'd
 The sudden changes of the doubtful fray,
 From cautious prudence oft deriving aid,
 When force unequal did him hard assay;
 So lightly from the steed he leapt upon the lay.
 Then swiftly drawing forth his trenchant ‡ blade,
 High o'er his head he held his fenceful shield,
 And warily forecasting to evade
 The giant's furious arm about him wheel'd,
 With restless steps aye traversing the field,
 And ever as his foe's intemp'rate pride
 Through rage defenceless mote advantage yield,
 With his sharp sword so oft he did him gride §,
 That his gold sandal'd feet in crimson floods were dy'd.

His baser parts he maim'd with many a wound;
 But far above his utmost reach were pight ||
 The forts of life; ne never to confound
 With utter ruin, and abolish quite
 A pow'r so puissant, by his single might
 Did he presume to hope: himself alone
 From lawless force to free in bloody fight
 He stood, content to bow to custom's throne,
 So reason mote not blush his sovran rule to own.
 So well he warded and so fiercely prest
 His foe, that weary wax'd he of the fray.
 Yet nould he algates ¶ lower his haughty crest,
 But making in contempt his sore dismay,
 Disdainfully releas'd the trembling prey
 As one unworthy of his princely care;
 Then proudly casting on the warlike Fay **
 A smile of scorn and pity, through the air
 'Gan blow his shrilling horn; the blast was heard afar.

Eftsoons astonish'd at th' alarming sound,
 The signal of distress and hostile wrong,
 Confus'dly trooping from all quarters round,
 Came pouring o'er the plain a numerous throng
 Of ev'ry sex and order, old and young,
 The vassals of great Custom's wide domain,
 Who to his lore inur'd by usage long
 His ev'ry summons heard with pleasure fain,
 And felt his ev'ry wound with sympathetic pain.
 They, when their bleeding king they did behold,
 And saw an armed knight him standing near,
 Attended by that palmer sage and bold,
 Whose vent'rous search of devious truth whilere
 Spread through the realms of learning horrors
 drear,
 Yseized were at first with terrors great,
 And in their boding hearts began to fear
 Dissension factious, controversial hate,
 And innovation strange, in Custom's peaceful
 state.

But when they saw the knight his falchion
 sheath,
 And climbing to his steed march thence away
 With all his hostile train, they 'gan to breathe
 With freer spirit, and with aspect gay
 Soon chas'd the gath'ring clouds of black affray:
 Als their great monarch, cheered with the view
 Of myriads who confess his sovran sway,
 His ruffled pride began to plume anew,
 And on his bugle clear a strain of triumph blew.

Thereat the multitude that stood around
 Sent up at once a universal roar
 Of boistrous joy: the sudden-bursting sound,
 Like the explosion of a warlike store
 Of nitrous grain, th' afflicted welkin †† tore:
 Then turning tow'rd the knight with scoffings
 lewd,
 Heart-piercing insults, and revilings sore,
 Loud bursts of laughter vain, and hisses rude
 As through the throng he pass'd his parting steps pursued,

Als from that forked hill, the boasted seat
 Of studious Peace, and mild philosophy,
 Indignant murmurs mote be heard to threat,
 Must'ring their rage; eke baleful Infamy,
 Rous'd from her den of base obscurity
 By those fam'd Maidens Nine, began to sound
 Her brazen trump of black'ning obloquy,
 While Satire, with dark clouds encompass'd round, [wound.

Sharp secret arrows shot, and aim'd his back to
 But the brave Fairy knight no whit dismay'd,
 Held on his peaceful journey o'er the plain,
 With curious eye observing, as he stray'd
 Through the wide provinces of Custom's reign,
 What mote afresh admonish him remain
 Fast by his virtuous purpose; all around
 So many objects mov'd his just disdain,
 Him seem'd that nothing serious, nothing sound,
 In city, village, bow'r, or castle mote be found.

In village, city, castle, bow'r, and hall,
 Each sex, each age, each order and degree,
 To vice and idle sport abandon'd all,
 Kept one perpetual gen'ral jubilee,
 Ne suffer'd aught disturb their merry glee;
 Ne sense of private loss, ne public woes,
 Restraint of law, religion's drad decree,
 Intestine desolation, foreign foes,
 Nor Heaven's tempestuous threats, nor earth's convulsive throes.

But chiefly they whom Heaven's disposing hand
 Had seated high on Fortune's upper stage,
 And plac'd within their call the sacred band
 That waits on Nurture and Instruction sage,
 If haply their wise hests †† mote them engage
 To climb through knowledge to more noble
 praise,

* Bet, beat.

† Bray'd, resounded.

‡ Trenchant, cutting.

§ Gride, cut, hack.

|| Pight, placed.

** Fay, Fairy.

†† Welkin, sky.

‡‡ Hests, behests, precepts, commands.

And, as they mount, enlighten ev'ry age
With the bright influence of fair virtue's rays,
Which from the awful heights of grandeur
brighter blaze:

They, O perverse and base ingratitude!
Despising the great ends of Providence,
For which above their mates they were endued
With wealth, authority, and eminence,
To the low services of brutal sense
Abus'd the means of pleasures more refin'd,
Of knowledge, virtue, and beneficence;
And, fett'ring on her throne th' immortal Mind,
The guidance of her realm to passions wild re-
sign'd.

Hence, thoughtless, shameless, reckless, spirit-less,

Nought worthy of their kind did they essay,
But, or benumb'd with palsied idleness,
In merely living loiter'd life away,
Or by false taste of pleasure led astray,
For ever wand'ring in the sensual bow'rs
Of feverish Debauch and lustful Play,
Spent on ignoble toils their active pow'rs,
And with untimely blasts diseas'd their vernal
hours.

E'en they to whom kind Nature did accord
A frame more delicate and purer mind,
Though the foul brothel and the wine-stain'd
board

Of beastly Comus loathing they declin'd,
Yet their soft hearts to idle joys resign'd;
Like painted insects through the summer air
With random flight aye ranging unconfin'd,
And tasting ev'ry flow'r and blossom fair
Withouten any choice, withouten any care.

For choice them needed none who only sought
With vain amusements to beguile the day;
And wherefore should they take or care or thought

Whom Nature prompts and Fortune calls to "Lords of the earth, be happy as ye may!"
So learn'd, so taught, the leaders of mankind;
Th' unreasoning vulgar willingly obey,
And, leaving toil and poverty behind,
Ran forth by diff'rent ways the blissful boon to find.

Nor tedious was the search; for ev'ry where,
As nigh great Custom's royal tow'rs the knight
Pass'd through th' adjoining hamlets, mote he
The merry voice of festival delight [hear
Saluting the return of morning bright,
With matin revels by the mid-day hours
Scarce ended, and again with dewy night
In cover'd theatres or leafy bow'rs,
Off'ring her evening vows to Pleasure's joyous pow'rs.

And ever on the way mote he espy
Men, women, children, a promiscuous throng
Of rich, poor, wise, and simple, low and high,
By land, by water, passing aye along
With murmurs, anticks, music, dance, and song,
To Pleasure's num'rous temples, that beside

The glist'ning streams, or tufted groves among,
To ev'ry idle foot stood open wide,
And ev'ry gay desire with various joys supplied.

For there each heart with diverse charms to move
The sly enchantress summon'd all her train;
Alluring Venus, queen of vagrant love,
The boon companion Bacchus loud and vain,
And tricking Hermes, god of fraudulent gain,
Who when blind Fortune throws directs the die,
And Phœbus, tuning his soft Lydian strain
To wanton motions and the lover's sigh,
And thought-beguiling show and masking revelry.

Unmeet associates these for noble youth
Who to true honor meaneth to aspire,
And for the works of virtue, faith, and truth,
Would keep his manly faculties entire;
The which avizing well the cautious sire
From that soft Siren land of pleasure vain
With timely haste was minded to retire,
Or ere the sweet contagion mote attain
His son's unpractis'd heart, yet free from vicious stain.

So turning from that beaten road aside,
Through many a devious path at length he pac'd,
As that experienc'd palmer did him guide
Till to a mountain hoare they came at last,
Whose high-rais'd brows, with sylvan honon
grac'd,

Majestically frown'd upon the plain,
And over all an awful horror cast;
Seem'd as those villas gay it did disdain,
Which spangled all the vale like Flora's painted train.

The hill ascended straight, erewhile they came
To a tall grove, whose thick embow'ring shade,
Impervious to the sun's meridian flame,
E'en at mid-noon a dubious twilight made,
Like to that sober light which, disarray'd
Of all its gorgeous robe, with blunted beams;
Through windows dim with holy acts pourtray'd
Along some cloister'd abbey faintly gleams, Abstracting the rapt thought from vain earth-musing themes.

Beneath this high o'erarching canopy
Of clust'ring oaks, a sylvan colonnade,
Aye list'ning to the native melody
Of birds sweet echoing through the lonely shade,
On to the centre of the grove they stray'd;
Which in a spacious circle op'ning round,
Within its shelt'ring arms securely laid,
Disclos'd to sudden view a vale profound,
With Nature's artless smiles and tranquil beauties crown'd.

There on the basis of an ancient pile,
Whose cross-surmounted spire o'erlook'd the
A venerable matron they erewhile [wood,
Discover'd have beside a murm'ring flood,
Reclining in right sad and pensive mood:
Retir'd within her own abstracted breast,

She seem'd o'er various woes by turns to brood,
The which her changing cheer by turns ex-press'd, [kest*.
Now glowing with disdain, with grief now over-

Her thus immers'd in anxious thoughts profound
When as the knight perceiv'd, he nearer drew,
To weet what bitter bale did her astound,
And whence th' occasion of her anguish grew;
For that right noble matron well he knew,
And many perils huge and labors sore
Had for her sake endur'd, her vassal true,
Train'd in her love, and practis'd evermore
Her honor to respect, and reverence her lore.

"O dearest Drad!" he cried, "fair Island
Queen!
"Mother of heroes! Empress of the main!
"What means that stormy brow of troublous
"teen,
"Sith† heaven-born Peace, with all her smiling
train
"Of Sciences and arts, adorns thy reign
"With wealth and knowledge, splendor and

"Each port how throng'd! how fruitful ev'ry
plain!
"How blithe the country! and how gay the
"town!
"While Liberty secures and heightens ev'ry boon!"

Awaken'd from her trance of pensive wo
By these fair flatt'ring words, she rais'd her head,
And bending on the knight her frowning brow,
"Mock'st thou my sorrows, Fairy Son?" she said;

"Or is thy judgement by thy heart misled
"To deem that certain which thy hopes suggest?
"To deem them full of life and lustihead‡
"Whose cheeks in Hebe's vivid tints are dress'd,
"And with joy's careless mien and dimpled
"smiles impress'd!

"Thy unsuspecting heart how nobly good
"I know, how sanguine in thy country's cause,
"And mark'd thy virtue singly how it stood
"Th' assaults of mighty Custom, which o'erawes
"The faint and tim'rous mind, and oft with-
"draws
"From Reason's lore th' ambitious and the vain,
"By the sweet lure of popular applause,
"Against their better knowledge to maintain
"The lawless throne of Vice, or Folly's childish
"reign.

"How vast his influence, how wide his sway,
"Thyself erewhile by proof didst understand,
"And saw'st, as through his realms thou took'st
"thy way,
"How vice and folly had o'erspread the land:
"And canst thou then, O Fairy Son! demand
"The reason of my wo? or hope to ease

"The throbbings of my heart with speeches
"bland,
"And words more apt my sorrows to increase,
"The once-dear names of wealth, and liberty,
"and peace?

"Peace, wealth, and liberty that noblest boon,
"Are blessings only to the wise and good;
"To weak and vicious minds their worth un-
"known,
"And thence abus'd, but serve to furnish food
"For riot and debauch, and fire the blood
"With high-spiced luxury, whence strife, de"bate,
"Ambition, envy, Faction's vip'rous brood,
"Contempt of order, manners profligate,
"The symptoms of a foul, diseas'd, and bloated
"state.

"E'en Wit and Genius, with their learned train
"Of Arts and Muses, though from heav'n above
"Descended, when their talents they profane
"To varnish folly, kindle wanton love,
"And aid eccentric sceptic pride to rove
"Beyond celestial truth's attractive sphere,
"This moral system's central sun, aye prove
"To their fond votaries a curse severe,
"And only make mankind more obstinately err.

"And stand my sons herein from censure clear?
"Have they consider'd well and understood
"The use and import of those blessings dear
"Which the great Lord of Nature hath bestow'd
"As well to prove as to reward the good?
"Whence are these torrents then, these billowy
"seas

"Of vice, in which as in his proper flood
"The fell Leviathan licentious plays,
"And upon shipwreck'd Faith and sinking
"Virtue preys?

"To you, ye noble, opulent, and great!
"With friendly voice I call and honest zeal;
"Upon your vital influence await
"The health and sickness of the common weal:
"The maladies you cause yourselves must heal.
"In vain to the unthinking harden'd crowd
"Will truth and reason make their just appeal;
"In vain will sacred wisdom cry aloud,
"And justice drench in vain her vengeful sword
"in blood.

"With you must reformation first take place:
"You are the head, the intellectual mind
"Of this vast body politic, whose base
"And vulgar limbs to drudgery consign'd,
"All the rich stores of science have resign'd
"To you, that, by the craftsman's various toil,
"The sea-worn mariner and sweating hind,
"In peace and affluence maintain'd the while
"You for yourselves and them may dress the "mental soil.

 " Of worthies shall succeed, with equal pace
 " Aye following their sires in virtue's glorious
 " race."

Fir'd with th' idea of her future fame,
 She rose majestic from her lowly stead,
 While from her vivid eyes a sparkling flame
 Outbeaming, with unwonted light o'erspread
 That monumental pile ; and, as her head
 To ev'ry front she turn'd, discover'd round
 The venerable forms of heroes dead,
 Who for their various merit, erst renown'd,
 In this bright fane of glory shrines of honor
 found.

On these that royal dame her ravish'd eyes
 Would often feast ; and ever as she spied Forth from the ground the length'ning structure
 rise,

With new-plac'd statues deck'd on ev'ry side,

Her parent breast would swell with gen'rous
pride.

And now with her in that sequester'd plain
The knight a while constraining to abide,
She to the Fairy youth with pleasure fain
Those sculptur'd chiefs did show, and their great lives explain.

§ 53. A Birth-Day Thought.

CAN I, all-gracious Providence!

Can I deserve thy care?

Ah! no: I've not the least pretence
To bounties which I share.

Have I not been defended still
From dangers and from death;
Been safe preserv'd from ev'ry ill
E'er since thou gav'st me breath?

I live once more, to see the day
That brought me first to light;
O! teach my willing heart the way
To take thy mercies right.

Though dazzling splendor, pomp, and show,
My fortune has denied;
Yet more than grandeur can bestow
Content hath well supplied.

No strife has e'er disturb'd my peace,
No mis'ries have I known;
And, that I'm bless'd with health and ease,
With humble thanks I own.

I envy no one's birth or fame,
Their titles, train, or dress;
Nor has my pride e'er stretch'd its aim
Beyond what I possess.

I ask and wish, not to appear
More beauteous, rich, or gay;
Lord, make me wiser ev'ry year,
And better ev'ry day.

§ 54. A Moral Reflection. Written on the first Day of the Year 1782.

SEVENTEEN Hundred Eighty-one
Is now for ever past;
Seventeen Hundred Eighty-two
Will fly away as fast.

But whether life's uncertain scene
Shall hold an equal pace;
Or whether death shall come between,
And end my mortal race:

Or whether sickness, pain, or health,
My future lot shall be;
Or whether poverty or wealth;
Is all unknown to me.

One thing I know, that needful 'tis
To watch with careful eye;
Since ev'ry season spent amiss
Is register'd on high.

Too well I know what precious hours
My wayward passions waste;

And oh! I find my mortal pow'rs
To dust and darkness haste.

Earth rolls her rapid seasons round,
To meet her final fire;
But virtue is with glory crown'd,
Though suns and stars expire.

What awful thoughts! what truths sublime!
What useful lesson this!
O! let me well improve my time!
Oh! let me die in peace!

§ 55. *The Triumph of Isis, occasioned by Isis:
an Elegy. T. WARTON.*

Quid mihi nescio quam proprio cum Tybride
Romam

Semper in ore geris? Referunt si vera parentes,
Hanc Urbem insano nullus qui Marte petivit,
Lætatus violâsse redit. Nec Numina Sedem
Destituent. — CLAUDIAN.

ON closing flow'rs when genial gales diffuse
The fragrant tribute of refreshing dew;
When chants the milk-maid at her balmy pail,
And weary reapers whistle o'er the vale;
Charm'd by the murmurs of the quivering shade,
O'er Isis' willow-fringed banks I stray'd:
And calmly musing through the twilight way,
In pensive mood I fram'd the Doric lay.
When lo! from op'ning clouds a golden gleam
Pour'd sudden splendors o'er the shadowy
stream;

And from the wave arose its guardian queen,
Known by her sweeping stole of glossy green,
While in the coral crown that bound her brow,
Was wove the Delphic laurel's verdant bough.

As the smooth surface of the dimply flood
The silver-slipper'd virgin lightly trod,
From her loose hair the dropping dew she press'd,
And thus mine ear in accents mild address'd:

No more, my son, the rural reed employ,
Nor trill the tinkling strain of empty joy;
No more thy love-resounding sonnets suit
To notes of past'ral pipe or oaten flute.
For hark! high-thron'd on yon majestic walls,
To the dear Muse afflicted Freedom calls:
When Freedom calls, and Oxford bids thee sing,
Why stays thy hand to strike the sounding string?

While thus, in Freedom's and in Phœbus' spite,
The venal sons of slavish Cam unite;
To shake yon towers when malice rears her crest,
Shall all my sons in silence idly rest?

Still sing, O Cam, your fav'rite freedom's
cause,

Still boast of freedom, while you break her laws;
To Pow'r your songs of gratulation pay;
To Courts address soft flattery's servile lay.
What though your gentle Mason's plaintive verse
Has hung with sweetest wreaths Museus' herse:
What though your vaunted bard's ingenuous
woe,

Soft as my stream, in tuneful numbers flow;
Yet strove his Muse, by fame or envy led,
To tear the laurels from a sister's head? —

Misguided youth! with rude unclassic rage
To blot the beauties of thy whiter page;
A rage that sullies e'en thy guiltless lays,
And blasts the vernal bloom of half thy bays.

Let * * * boast the patrons of her name,
Each splendid fool of fortune and of fame:
Still of preferment let her shine the queen,
Prolific parent of each bowing dean:
Be hers each prelate of the pamper'd cheek,
Each courtly chaplain, sanctify'd and sleek:
Still let the drones of her exhaustless hive
On rich pluralities supinely thrive:
Still let her senates titled slaves revere,
Nor dare to know the patriot from the peer;
No longer charm'd by virtue's lofty song,
Once heard sage Milton's manly tones among,
Where Cam, meand'ring through the matted
reeds,

With loit'ring wave his groves of laurel feeds.
'Tis ours, my son, to deal the sacred bay,
Where honor calls, and justice points the way;
To wear the well-earn'd wreath that merit brings,

And snatch a gift beyond the reach of kings.
Scorning and scorn'd by courts, yon Muse's
bow'r
Still nor enjoys nor seeks the smile of pow'r.

Though wakeful vengeance watch my crystal
spring,

Though persecution wave her iron wing,
And o'er yon spiry temples as she flies,
"These destin'd seats be mine," exulting cries;
Fortune's fair smiles on Isis still attend:
And, as the dew of gracious heaven descend
Unask'd, unseen, in still but copious show'rs,
Her stores on me spontaneous bounty pours.
See, Science walks with recent chaplets crown'd,
With Fancy's strain my fairy shades resound;
My Muse divine still keeps her custom'd state,
The mien erect, and high majestic gait:
Green as of old each oliv'd portal smiles,
And still the Graces build my Grecian piles:
My Gothic spires in ancient glory rise,
And dare with wonted pride to rush into the skies.

E'en late when Radcliffe's delegated train
Auspicious shone in Isis' happy plain: [shrine,
When yon proud dome*, fair learning's amplest
Beneath its Attic roofs received the Nine;
Was rapture mute, or ceas'd the glad acclaim,
To Radcliffe due, and Isis' honor'd name?
What free-born crowds adorn'd the festive day,
Nor blush'd to wear my tributary bay!
How each brave breast with honest ardors heav'd,
When Shelton's fane the patriot band receiv'd;
While, as we loudly hail'd the chosen few,
Rome's awful senate rush'd upon the view!

O may the day in latest annals shine,
That made a Beaufort and an Harley mine;
That bade them leave the loftier scene a while,
The pomp of guiltless state, the patriot toil,
For bleeding Albion's aid the sage design,
To hold short dalliance with the tuneful Nine!

* The Radcliffe Library.

Then Music left her silver sphere on high,
And bore each strain of triumph from the sky;
Swell'd the loud song, and to my chiefs around
Pour'd the full pæans of mellifluous sound.
My Naiads blythe the dying accents caught,
And listening danc'd beneath their pearly grot:
In gentler eddies play'd my conscious wave,
And all my reeds their softest whispers gave;
Each lay with brighter green adorn'd my bow'rs,
And breath'd a fresher fragrance on my flow'rs.

But lo! at once the pealing concerts cease,
And crowding theatres are hush'd in peace.
See, on yon stage, how all attentive stand,
To catch his parting eye, and waving hand.
Hark, he begins with all a Tully's art,
To pour the dictates of a Cato's heart; [spire,
Skill'd to pronounce what noblest thoughts in-
He blends the speaker's with the patriot's fire;
Bold to conceive, nor tim'rous to conceal,
What Britons dare to think he dares to tell.

'Tis his alike the ear and eyes to charm,
To win with action, and with sense to warm.
Untaught in flow'ry periods to dispense
The lulling sound of sweet impertinence;
In frowns or smiles he gains an equal prize,
Nor meanly fears to fall, nor creeps to rise;
Bids happier days to Albion be restor'd,
Bids ancient Justice rear her radiant sword;
From me, as from my country, claims applause,
And makes an Oxford's a Britannia's cause.

While arms like these my stedfast sages wield,
While mine is Truth's impenetrable shield;
Say, shall the puny champion fondly dare
To wage with force like this scholastic war?
Still vainly scribble on with pert pretence,
With all the rage of pedant impotence?
Say, shall I foster this domestic pest,
This parricide, that wounds a mother's breast?

Thus in some gallant ship that long has bore
Britain's victorious cross from shore to shore,
By chance, beneath her close sequester'd cells
Some low-born worm, a lurking mischief dwells;
Eats his blind way, and saps with secret guile
The deep foundations of the floating pile.
In vain the forest lent its stateliest pride,
Rear'd her tall mast, and fram'd her knotty side;
The martial thunder's rage in vain she stood,
With ev'ry conflict of the stormy flood;
More sure the reptile's little arts devour
Than wars or waves, or Eurus' wintry pow'r.

Ye fretted pinnacles, ye fanes sublime.
Ye tow'rs that wear the mossy vest of time!
Ye massy piles of old munificence,
At once the pride of learning and defence;
Ye cloisters pale, that length'ning to the sight,
To contemplation, step by step, invite; [clear,
Ye high arch'd walks, where oft the whispers
Of harps unseen have swept the poet's ear;
Ye temples dim, where pious duty pays
Her holy hymns for ever echoing praise;
Lo! your lov'd Isis, from the bord'ring vale,
With all a mother's fondness bids you hail!
Hail, Oxford, hail! of all that's good and great,
Of all that's fair, the guardian and the seat;

Nurse of each brave pursuit, each gen'rous aim,
By truth exalted to the throne of fame!
Like Greece in science and in liberty,
As Athens learn'd, as Lacedemon free!

E'en now, confess'd to my adoring eyes,
In awful ranks thy gifted sons arise.
Tuning to knightly tale his British reeds,
Thy genuine bards immortal Chaucer leads:
His hoary head o'erlooks the gazing quire,
And beams on all around celestial fire.
With graceful steps see Addison advance,
The sweetest child of Attic elegance:
See Chillingworth the depths of doubt explore,
And Selden ope the rolls of ancient lore:
To all but his belov'd embrace deny'd,
See Locke lead Reason, his majestic bride:
See Hammond pierce religion's golden mine,
And spread the treasur'd stores of truth divine.

All who to Albion gave the arts of peace,
And best the labors plann'd of letter'd ease;
Who taught with truth, or with persuasion
mov'd, [prov'd,
Who sooth'd with numbers, or with sense im-
Who rang'd the power of reason, or refin'd
All that adorn'd or humaniz'd the mind;
Each priest of health, that mix'd the balmy
bowl,

To rear frail man, and stay the fleeting soul;
All crowd around, and, echoing to the sky,
Hail! Oxford, hail! with filial transport cry.

And see yon sapient train! with lib'ral aim,
'Twas theirs new plans of liberty to frame;
And on the Gothic gloom of slavish sway
To shed the dawn of intellectual day.
With mild debate each musing feature glows,
And well-weigh'd counsels mark their meaning brows.

"Lo! these the leaders of thy patriot line,"
A Raleigh, Hampden, and a Somers shine.
These from thy source the bold contagion caught,
Their future sons the great example taught;
While in each youth th' hereditary flame
Still blazes, unextinguish'd and the same!

Nor all the tasks of thoughtful peace engage,
'Tis thine to form the hero as the sage.
I see the sable-suited prince advance [France,
With lilies crown'd, the spoils of bleeding
Edward. The Muses in yon cloister's shade
Bound on his maiden thigh the martial blade:
Bade him the steel for British freedom draw;
And Oxford taught the deeds that Cressy saw.

And see, great father of the sacred band,
The * patriot king before me seems to stand.
He, by the bloom of this gay vale beguil'd,
That cheer'd with lively green the shaggy wild,
Hither of yore, forlorn forgotten maid,
The Muse in prattling infancy convey'd;
From Vandal rage the helpless virgin bore,
And fix'd her cradle on my friendly shore:
Soon grew the maid beneath his fost'ring hand,
Soon stream'd her blessings o'er th' enlighten'd
land.

* Alfred.

Though simple was the dome, where first to dwell

She deign'd, and rude her early Saxon cell,
Lo! now she holds her state in sculptur'd bow'rs,
And proudly lifts to heav'n her hundred tow'rs,
'Twas Alfred first, with letters and with laws,
Adorn'd, as he advanc'd, his country's cause:
He bade relent the Briton's stubborn soul,
And sooth'd to soft society's control
A rough untutor'd age. With raptur'd eye
Elate he views his laurell'd progeny:
Serene he smiles to find, that not in vain
He form'd the rudiments of learning's reign:
Himself he marks in each ingenuous breast,
With all the founder in the race express'd;
Conscious he sees fair Freedom still survive
In yon bright domes, ill-fated fugitive!
(Glorious, as when the Goddess pour'd the beam Unsully'd on his ancient diadem)
Well pleas'd, that at his own Pierian springs
She rests her weary feet, and plumes her wings;
That here at last she takes her destin'd stand,
Here deigns to linger ere she leave the land.

§ 56. Inscription in a Hermitage at Ansley-Hall, in Warwickshire. T. Warton.

BENEATH this stony roof reclin'd,
I soothe to peace my pensive mind:
And while to shade my lowly cave,
Embow'ring elms their umbrage wave;
And while the maple dish is mine,
The beechen cup, unstain'd with wine;
I scorn the gay licentious crowd,
Nor heed the toys that deck the proud.

Within my limits lone and still,
The blackbird pipes in artless trill;
Fast by my couch, congenial guest,
The wren has wove her mossy nest;
From busy scenes and brighter skies,
To lurk with innocence, she flies;
Here hopes in safe repose to dwell,
Nor aught suspects the sylvan cell.

At morn I take my custom'd round,
To mark how buds yon shrubby mound,
And ev'ry op'ning primrose count
That trimly paints my blooming mount:
Or o'er the sculptures, quaint and rude,
That grace my gloomy solitude.
I teach in winding wreaths to stray
Fantastic ivy's gadding spray.

At eve, within yon studious nook,
I ope my brass-embossed book,
Portrayed with many a holy deed
Of martyrs, crown'd with heavenly meed.
Then, as my taper waxes dim,
Chant, ere I sleep, my measur'd hymn;
And, at the close, the gleams behold
Of parting wings bedropt with gold.

While such pure joys my bliss create,
Who but would smile at guilty state?
Who but would wish his holy lot
In calm Oblivion's humble grot?

Who but would cast his pomp away,
To take my staff and amice gray ;
And to the world's tumultuous stage
Prefer the blameless hermitage ?

§ 57. Monody, written near Stratford-upon-Avon. T. Warton.

Avon, thy rural views, thy pastures wild,
The willows that o'erhang thy twilight edge,
Their boughs entangling with th' embattled sedge ;
Thy brink with wat'ry foliage quaintly fring'd,
Thy surface with reflected verdure ting'd,
Soothe me with many a pensive pleasure mild.
But while I muse, that here the bard divine
Whose sacred dust yon high-arch'd aisles inclose,
Where the tall windows rise in stately rows
Above th' embow'ring shade,
Here first, at Fancy's fairy circled shrine,
Of daisies pied his infant off'ring made ;
Here playful yet, in stripling years unripe,
Fram'd of thy reeds a shrill and artless pipe ;
Sudden thy beauties, Avon, all are fled,
As at the waving of some magic wand ;
An holy trance my charmed spirit wings,
And awful shape of warriors and of kings,
People the busy mead,
Like spectres swarming to the wizard's hall ;
And slowly pace, and point with trembling hand
The wounds ill cover'd by the purple pall.
Before me Pity seems to stand
A weeping mourner, smote with anguish sore,
To see Misfortune rend in frantic mood
His robe with regal woes embroider'd o'er.
Pale Terror leads the visionary band,
And sternly shakes his sceptre, dropping blood.

§ 58. On the Death of King George the Second. T. Warton.

So stream the sorrows that embalm the brave,
The tears that science sheds on glory's grave !
So pure the vows which classic duty pays
To bless another Brunswick's rising rays !
O Pitt, if chosen strains have power to steal
Thy watchful breast a while from Britain's weal,
If votive verse, from sacred Isis sent,
Might hope to charm thy manly mind, intent
On patriotic plans, which ancient freedom drew,
A while with fond attention deign to view
This ample wreath, which all th' assembled Nine
With skill united have conspir'd to twine.
Yes, guide and guardian of thy country's cause !
Thy conscious heart shall hail with just applause
The duteous Muse, whose haste officious brings
Her blameless off'ring to the shrine of kings :
Thy tongue, well tutor'd in historic lore,
Can speak her office and her use of yore :
For such the tribute of ingenuous praise
Her harp dispens'd in Grecia's golden days ;
Such were the palms, in isles of old renown,
She cull'd, to deck the guiltless monarch's crown ;

When virtuous Pindar told, with Tuscan gore
How sceptred Hiëro stain'd Sicilia's shore,
Or to mild Theron's raptur'd eye disclos'd
Bright vales, where spirits of the brave repos'd :
Yet still beneath the throne, unbrib'd, she sat,
The decent handmaid, not the slave, of state ;
Pleas'd in the radiance of the regal name
To blend the lustre of her country's fame :
For, taught like ours, she dar'd with prudent
Obedience from dependence to divide : [pride
Though princes claim'd her tributary lays,
With truth severe she temper'd partial praise ;
Conscious she kept her native dignity,
Bold as her flights, and as her numbers free.

And sure if e'er the Muse indulg'd her strains,
With just regard to grace heroic reigns,
Where could her glance a theme of triumph own
So dear to fame as George's trophy'd throne ?
At whose firm base thy stedfast soul aspires
To wake a mighty nation's ancient fires ;
Aspires to baffle Faction's specious claim,
Rouse England's rage, and give her thunder aim.
Once more the main her conqu'ring banners sweep,

Again her commerce darkens all the deep.
Thy fix'd resolve renews each firm decree
That made, that kept of yore, thy country free.
Call'd by thy voice, nor deaf to war's alarms,
Its willing youth the rural empire arms ;
Again the lords of Albion's cultur'd plains
March the firm leaders of their faithful swains ;
As erst stout archers, from the farm or fold,
Flam'd in the van of many a baron bold.

Nor thine the pomp of indolent debate,
The war of words, the sophistries of state ;
Nor frigid caution checks thy free design,
Nor stops thy stream of eloquence divine :
For thine the privilege, on few bestow'd,
To feel, to think, to speak, for public good.
In vain Corruption calls her venal tribes :
One common cause, one common end prescribes ;

Nor fear nor fraud or spares or screens the foe,
But spirit prompts, and valor strikes the blow.

O Pitt, while honor points thy lib'ral plan,
And o'er the minister exalts the man,
Isis congenial greets thy faithful sway,
Nor scorns to bid a statesman grace her lay.
For 'tis not hers, by false connexions drawn,
At splendid slavery's sordid shrine to fawn ;
Each native effort of the feeling breast
To friends, to foes, in equal fear, suppress ;
'Tis not for her to purchase or pursue
The phantom favors of the cringing crew ;
More useful toils her studious hours engage,
And fairer lessons fill her spotless page :
Beneath ambition, but above disgrace,
With nobler arts she forms the rising race :
With happier tasks, and less refin'd pretence,
In elder times, she woo'd Munificence
To rear her arched roofs in regal guise,
And lift her temples nearer to the skies ;
Princes and prelates stretch'd the social hand
To form, diffuse, and fix, her high command :

From kings she claim'd, yet scorn'd to seek, the prize ; [wise.
From kings, like George, benignant, just, and Lo, this her genuine lore.—Nor thou refuse
This humble present of no partial Muse,
From that calm bow'r*, which nurs'd thy thoughtful youth
In the pure precepts of Athenian truth ;
Where first the form of British Liberty
Beam'd in full radiance on thy musing eye ;
That form, whose mien sublime, with equal
awe,
In the same shade unblemish'd Somers saw ;
Where once (for well she lov'd the friendly
grove
Which ev'ry classic Grace had learn'd to rove)
Her whispers wak'd sage Harrington to feign
The blessings of her visionary reign ;
That reign, which now, no more an empty
Adorns Philosophy's ideal dream, [theme,
But crowns at last, beneath a George's smile,
In full reality this favor'd isle.

§ 59. On the Marriage of the King, MDCCLXI. to her Majesty. T. Warton.

WHEN first the kingdom to thy virtues due
Rose from the billowy deep in distant view ;
When Albion's isle, old Ocean's peerless pride,
Tow'r'd in imperial state above the tide ;
What bright ideas of the new domain
Form'd the fair prospect of thy promis'd reign !
And well with conscious joy thy breast might
That Albion was ordain'd thy regal seat : [beat
Lo ! this the land, where Freedom's sacred rage
Has glow'd untam'd through many a martial age.
Here patriot Alfred, stain'd with Danish blood, Rear'd on one base, the king's, the people's
good :
Here Henry's archers fram'd the stubborn bow
That laid Alençon's haughty helmet low ;
Here walk'd the flame, that still superior braves
The proudest threats of Gaul's ambitious slaves ;
Here Chivalry, stern school of valor old,
Her noblest feats of knightly fame enroll'd ;
Heroic champions caught the clarion's call,
And throng'd the feast in Edward's banner'd
hall ; [alone,
While chiefs, like George, approv'd in worth
Unlock'd chaste Beauty's adamant zone.
Lo ! the fam'd isle, which hails thy chosen sway,
What fertile fields her temp'rate suns display !
Where Property secures the conscious swain,
And guards, while Plenty gives, the golden grain ;
Hence with ripe stores her villages abound,
Her airy downs with scatter'd sheep resound ;
Fresh are her pastures with unceasing rills,
And future navies crown her darksome hills.

To bear her formidable glory far,
Behold her opulence of hoarded war !
See, from her ports a thousand banners stream ;
On ev'ry coast her vengeful lightnings gleam !
Meantime, remote from Ruin's armed hand,
In peaceful majesty her cities stand ;
Whose splendid domes and busy streets declare
Their firmest fort, a king's parental care.

And oh ! blest Queen, if e'er the magic
pow'rs
Of warbled truth have won thy musing hours ;
Here Poesy, from awful days of yore,
Has pour'd her genuine gifts of raptur'd lore.
Mid oaken bow'rs, with holy verdure wreath'd,
In Druid songs her solemn spirit breath'd :
While cunning bards at ancient banquets sung
Of paynim foes defied, and trophies hung.
Here Spenser tun'd his mystic minstrelsy,
And dress'd in fairy robes a queen like thee.
Here, boldly mark'd with ev'ry living hue,
Nature's unbounded portrait Shakspeare drew :
But chief the dreaded group of human woes
The daring artist's tragic pencil chose ;
Explor'd the pangs that rend the royal breast,
Those wounds that lurk beneath the tissued vest.

Lo ! this the land, whence Milton's muse of fire
High soar'd to steal from heaven a seraph's lyre ;
And told the golden ties of wedded love
In sacred Eden's amaranthine grove.

Thine too ! majestic Bride, the favor'd clime,
Where Science sits enshrin'd in roofs sublime.
O mark, how green her wood of ancient bays
O'er Isis' marge in many a chaplet strays !
Thither, if haply some distinguish'd flow'r
Of these mix'd blooms from that ambrosial
bow'r
Might catch thy glance, and, rich in Nature's Entwine thy diadem with honor due ; [hue,
If seemly gifts the train of Phœbus pay,
To deck imperial Hymen's festive day ;
Thither thyself shall haste, and mildly deign
To tread with nymph-like step the conscious
plain ;
Pleas'd in the muse's nook, with decent pride,
To throw the sceptred pall of state aside.
Nor from the shade shall George be long away,
Which claims Charlotta's love, and courts her stay.

These are Britannia's praises. Deign to trace
With rapt reflection Freedom's fav'rite race !
But though the gen'rous isle in arts and arms
Thus stand supreme in Nature's choicest charms ;
Though George and conquest guard her sea-girt
throne,
One happier blessing still she calls her own ;
And, proud to cull the fairest wreath of Fame,
Crowns her chief honors with a Charlotte's
name.

* Trinity College, Oxford ; in which also Lord Somers, and Sir James Harrington, author of the Oceana, were educated.

§ 60. On the Birth of the Prince of Wales.
T. Warton.

Written after the Installation at Windsor, in the same Year.

IMPERIAL dome of Edward wise and brave!
Where warlike Honor's brightest banners wave;
At whose proud tilts, unmatch'd for hardy deeds,
Heroic kings have frown'd on barbed steeds;
Though now no more thy crested chiefs advance

In arm'd array, nor grasp the glitt'ring lance;
Though Knighthood boasts the martial pomp
no more

That grac'd its gorgeous festivals of yore;
Say, conscious Dome, if e'er thy marshall'd knights

So nobly deck'd their old majestic rites
As when, high-thron'd amid thy trophy'd shrine,
George shone the leader of the garter'd line?

Yet future triumphs, Windsor, still remain;
Still may thy bow'rs receive as brave a train;
For lo! to Britain and her favor'd pair,
Heaven's high command has sent a sacred Heir!
Him the bold pattern of his patriot sire
Shall fill with early fame's immortal fire;
In life's fresh spring, ere buds the promis'd prime,
His thoughts shall mount to virtue's meed sublime:

The patriot fire shall catch, with sure presage,
Each lib'ral omen of his op'ning age;
Then to thy courts shall lead, with conscious joy,
In stripling beauty's bloom, the princely boy;
There firmly wreath the braid of heavenly dye,
True valor's badge, around his tender thigh.

Meantime, thy royal piles that rise elate
With many an antique tow'r in massy state,
In the young champion's musing mind shall raise
Vast images of Albion's elder days;
While, as around his eager glance explores Thy chambers, rough with war's constructed stores,

Rude helms, and bruised shields, barbaric spoils
Of ancient chivalry's undaunted toils;
Amid the dusky trappings hung on high,
Young Edward's sable mail shall strike his eye;
Shall fire the youth to crown his riper years
With rival Cressys, and a new Poictiers;
On the same wall, the same triumphal base,
His own victorious monuments to place.

Nor can a fairer kindred title move
His emulative age to glory's love
Than Edward, laureate prince. In letter'd truth,
Oxford, sage mother, school'd his studious youth:
Her simple institutes and rigid lore
The royal nursling unreluctant bore;
Nor shunn'd, at pensive eve, with lonesome pace,
The cloister's moon-light checquer'd floor to
trace;

Nor scorn'd to make the sun, at matins due,
Stream through the storied window's holy hue.

And oh, young Prince, be thine his moral
praise;

Nor seek in fields of blood his warrior bays.

War has its charms terrific. Far and wide
When stands th' embattled host in banner'd
pride;

O'er the vext plain when the shrill clangors run,
And the long phalanx flashes in the sun:
When now no dangers of the deathful day
Mar the bright scene, nor break the firm array;
Full oft too rashly glows with fond delight
The youthful breast, and asks the future fight;
Nor knows that Horror's form, a spectre wan,
Stalks yet unseen along the gleamy van.

May no such rage be thine! no dazzling ray
Of specious fame thy stedfast feet betray!
Be thine domestic glory's radiant calm,
Be thine the sceptre wreath'd with many a palm: hung,

Be thine the throne with peaceful emblems
The silver lyre to milder conquests strung!

Instead of glorious feats achiev'd in arms,
Bid rising arts display their mimic charms:
Just to thy country's fame, in tranquil days,
Record the past, and rouse the future praise:
Before the public eye, in breathing brass,
Bid thy fam'd father's mighty triumphs pass:
Swell the broad arch with haughty Cuba's fall,
And clothe with Minden's plain th' historic hall. [cient boast,

Then mourn not, Edward's Dome, thine an-
Thy tournaments and listed combats lost!
From Arthur's Board, no more, proud castle, mourn

Adventurous Valor's Gothic trophies torn!
Those elfin charms, that held in magic night
Its elder fame, and dimm'd its genuine light,
At length dissolve in Truth's meridian ray,
And the bright Order bursts to perfect day:
The mystic round, begirt with bolder peers,
On Virtue's base its rescued glory rears;
Sees civil Prowess mightier acts achieve;
Sees meek Humanity distress relieve;
Adopts the Worth that bids the conflict cease,
And claims its honors from the Chiefs of Peace.

§ 61. Ode to Sleep. T. WARTON.

ON this my pensive pillow, gentle Sleep!
Descend, in all thy downy plumage drest:
Wipe with thy wing these eyes that wake to
weep,

And place thy crown of poppies on my breast.

O steep my senses in oblivion's balm, [hand;
And soothe my throbbing pulse with lenient
This tempest of my boiling blood becalm!
Despair grows mild at thy supreme command.

Yet ah! in vain, familiar with the gloom,
And sadly toiling through the tedious night,
I seek sweet slumber, while that virgin bloom,
For ever hov'ring, haunts my wretched sight.

Nor would the dawning day my sorrows charm:
Black midnight, and the radiant noon, alike
To me appear, while with uplifted arm
Death stands prepar'd, but still delays, to strike.

§ 62. The Hamlet, written in Whichwood Forest.

T. WARTON.

THE hinds how blest, who ne'er beguil'd
To quit their hamlet's hawthorn-wild,
Nor haunt the crowd, nor tempt the main,
For splendid care and guilty gain!

When morning's twilight tinctur'd beam
Strikes their low thatch with slanting gleam,
They rove abroad in ether blue,
To dip the sithe in fragrant dew;
The sheaf to bind, the beech to fell,
That nodding shades a craggy dell.

'Midst gloomy glades, in warbles clear,
Wild nature's sweetest notes they hear;
On green untrodden banks they view
The hyacinth's neglected hue:
In their lone haunts and woodland rounds,
They spy the squirrel's airy bounds;
And startle from her ashen spray,
Across the glen, the screaming jay:
Each native charm their steps explore
Of solitude's sequester'd store.
For them the moon with cloudless ray
Mounts, to illumine their homeward way:
Their weary spirits to relieve,
The meadows incense breathe at eve.
No riot mars the simple fare
That o'er a glimm'ring hearth they share:
But when the curfew's measur'd roar
Duly, the dark'ning valleys o'er,
Has echo'd from the distant town,
They wish no beds of cygnet-down,
No trophied canopies, to close
Their drooping eyes in quick repose.

Their little sons, who spread the bloom
Of health around the clay-built room,
Or through the primros'd coppice stray,
Or gambol in the new-mown hay;
Or quaintly braid the cowslip-twine,
Or drive afield the tardy kine;
Or hasten from the sultry hill
To loiter at the shady rill;
Or climb the tall pine's gloomy crest
To rob the raven's ancient nest.

Their humble porch with honey'd flow'rs
The curling woodbine's shade embow'rs
From the trim garden's thymy mound
Their bees in busy swarms resound.
Nor fell Disease, before his time,
Hastes to consume life's golden prime;
But when their temples long have wore
The silver crown of tresses hoar;
As studious still calm peace to keep,
Beneath a flow'ry turf they sleep.

§ 63. Ode. The First of April. T. WARTON.

WITH dalliance rude young Zephyr woos
Coy May. Full oft with kind excuse
The boist'rous boy the fair denies,
Or with a scornful smile complies.

Mindful of disaster past,
And shrinking at the northern blast,
The sleety storm returning still,
The morning hoar and evening chill;
Reluctant comes the timid Spring.
Scarce a bee, with airy ring,
Murmurs the blossom'd boughs around,
That clothe the garden's southern bound:
Scarce a sickly straggling flow'r
Decks the rough castle's rifted tow'r:
Scarce the hardy primrose peeps
From the dark dell's entangled steeps:
O'er the field of waving broom
Slowly shoots the golden bloom:
And, but by fits, the furze-clad dale
Tinctures the transitory gale;
While from the shrubb'ry's naked maze,
Where the vegetable blaze
Of Flora's brightest 'broidery shone,
Ev'ry chequer'd charm is flown;
Save that the lilac hangs to view
Its bursting gems in clusters blue.

Scant along the ridgy land
The beans their new-born ranks expand:
The fresh-turn'd soil with tender blades
Thinly the sprouting barley shades:
Fringing the forest's devious edge,
Half-rob'd appears the hawthorn hedge;
Or to the distant eye displays
Weakly green its budding sprays.

The swallow, for a moment seen,
Skims in haste the village green:
From the grey moor, on feeble wing,
The screaming plovers idly spring:
The butterfly, gay-painted soon,
Explores awhile the tepid noon,
And fondly trusts its tender dyes
To fickle suns and flatt'ring skies.

Fraught with a transient, frozen show'r,
If a cloud should haply low'r,
Sailing o'er the landscape dark,
Mute on a sudden is the lark;
But when gleams the sun again
O'er the pearl-besprinkled plain,
And from behind his wat'ry veil
Looks through the thin-descending hail,
She mounts, and less'ning to the sight,
Salutes the blythe return of light,
And high her tuneful track pursues
Mid the dim rainbow's scatter'd hues.

Where in venerable rows
Widely waving oaks inclose
The moat of yonder antique hall,
Swarm the rooks with clam'rous call;
And, to the toils of nature true,
Wreath their capacious nests anew.

Musing through the lawny park,
The lonely poet loves to mark
How various greens in faint degrees
Tinge the tall groups of various trees:
While, careless of the changing year,
The pine cerulean, never sere,

Tow'rs distinguish'd from the rest,
And proudly vaunts her winter vest.

Within some whispering osier isle,
Where Glym's low banks neglected smile;
And each trim meadow still retains
The wint'ry torrent's oozy stains:
Beneath a willow long forsook,
The fisher seeks his custom'd nook;
And bursting through the crackling sedge
That crowns the current's cavern'd edge,
He startles from the bordering wood
The bashful wild-duck's early brood.

O'er the broad downs, a novel race,
Frisk the lambs, with faltering pace,
And with eager bleatings fill
The foss that skirts the beacon'd hill.

His free-born vigor yet unbroke
To lordly man's usurping yoke,
The bounding colt forgets to play,
Basking beneath the noontide ray,
And stretch'd among the daisies, pride
Of a green dingle's sloping side:
While far beneath, where nature spreads
Her boundless length of level meads,
In loose luxuriance taught to stray,
A thousand tumbling rills inlay
With silver veins the vale, or pass
Redundant through the sparkling grass.

Yet in these presages rude,
'Midst her pensive solitude,
Fancy, with prophetic glance,
Sees the teeming months advance;
The field, the forest, green and gay,
The dappled slope, the tedded hay;
Sees the reddening orchard blow,
The harvest wave, the vintage flow;
Sees June unfold his glossy robe
Of thousand hues o'er all the globe;
Sees Ceres grasp her crown of corn,
And plenty load her ample horn.

§ 64. Ode. The Suicide. T. WARTON.

BENEATH the beech, whose branches bare,
Smit with the lightning's vivid glare,
O'erhang the craggy road,
And whistle hollow as they wave;
Within a solitary grave,
A wretched Suicide holds his accurs'd abode.

Lower'd the grim morn, in murky dies
Damp mists involv'd the scowling skies,
And dimm'd the struggling day;
As by the brook that ling'ring laves
Yon rush-grown moor with sable waves,
Full of the dark resolve he took his sullen way.

I mark'd his desultory pace,
His gestures strange, and varying face,
With many a mutter'd sound;
And ah! too late aghast I view'd
The reeking blade, the hand embru'd;
He fell, and groaning grasp'd in agony the
ground.

Full many a melancholy night
He watch'd the slow return of light;
And sought the pow'rs of sleep,
To spread a momentary calm
O'er his sad couch, and in the balm [steep.
Of bland oblivion's dew his burning eyes to

Full oft, unknowing and unknown,
He wore his endless noons alone,
Amid the autumnal wood:
Oft was he wont in hasty fit,
Abrupt the social board to quit,
And gaze with eager glance upon the tumbling
flood.

Beck'ning the wretch to torments new,
Despair, for ever in his view,
A spectre pale, appear'd;
While, as the shades of eve arose,
And brought the day's unwelcome close,
More horrible and huge her giant-shape she rear'd.

"Is this," mistaken Scorn will cry,
"Is this the youth, whose genius high
Could build the genuine rhyme?
"Whose bosom mild the fav'ring Muse
"Had stor'd with all her ample views,
"Parent of fairest deeds, and purposes sublime?"

Ah! from the Muse that bosom mild
By treach'rous magic was beguil'd,
To strike the deathful blow:
She fill'd his soft ingenuous mind
With many a feeling too refin'd, [woe.
And rous'd to livelier pangs his wakeful sense of

Though doom'd hard penury to prove,
And the sharp stings of hopeless love;
To griefs congenial prone,
More wounds than nature gave he knew,
While misery's form his fancy drew
In dark ideal hues, and horrors not its own.

Then wish not o'er his earthly tomb
The baleful nightshade's lurid bloom
To drop its deadly dew:
Nor, oh! forbid the twisted thorn,
That rudely binds his turf forlorn, [anew.
With spring's green-swelling buds to vegetate

What though no marble-piled bust
Adorn his desolated dust,
With speaking sculpture wrought;
Pity shall woo the weeping Nine
To build a visionary shrine, [brought.
Hung with unfading flow'rs, from fairy regions

What though refus'd each chanted rite;
Here viewless mourners shall delight
To touch the shadowy shell:
And Petrarch's harp, that wept the doom
Of Laura lost, in early bloom,
In melancholy tones shall ring his pensive knell.

To soothe a lone unhallow'd shade,
 This votive dirge sad duty paid,
 Within an ivy'd nook:
 Sudden the half-sunk orb of day
 More radiant shot its parting ray, [took:
 And thus a cherub-voice my charm'd attention

“ Forbear, fond bard, thy partial praise;
 “ Nor thus for guilt in specious lays
 “ The wreath of glory twine:
 “ In vain with hues of gorgeous glow
 “ Gay Fancy gives her vest to flow,
 “ Unless Truth's matron-hand the floating folds “ confine.

“ Just Heaven, man's fortitude to prove,
 “ Permits through life at large to rove
 “ The tribes of hell-born woe;
 “ Yet the same pow'r that wisely sends “ Life's fiercest ills, indulgent lends
 “ Religion's golden shield to break th' embat“ tled foe.

“ Her aid divine had lull'd to rest
 “ Yon foul self-murderer's throbbing breast,
 “ And stay'd the rising storm:
 “ Had bade the sun of hope appear
 “ To gild the darken'd hemisphere, [form.
 “ And give the wonted bloom to nature's blasted

“ Vain man! 'tis Heaven's prerogative
 “ To take, what first it deign'd to give,
 “ Thy tributary breath:
 “ In awful expectation plac'd,
 “ Await thy doom, nor impious haste
 “ To pluck from God's right hand his instru“ ments of death.”

§ 65. Ode. Sent to a Friend on his leaving a favorite Village in Hampshire. T. WARTON.

AH, mourn thy lov'd retreat! No more
 Shall classic steps thy scenes explore!
 When morn's pale rays but faintly peep
 O'er yonder oak-crown'd airy steep:
 Who now shall climb its brows, to view
 Thy length of landscapes ever new;
 Where summer flings, in careless pride,
 Her varied vesture far and wide?
 Who mark, beneath, each village-charm,
 Or grange, or elm-encircled farm:
 The flinty dove-cote's crowded roof,
 Watch'd by the kite that sails aloof:
 The tufted pines whose umbrage tall
 Darkens the long-deserted hall:
 The vet'ran beech, that on the plain
 Collects at eve the playful train:
 The cot that smokes with early fire,
 The low-roof'd fane's embosom'd spire?
 Who now shall indolently stray
 Through the deep forest's tangled way:
 Pleas'd at his custom'd task to find
 The well-known hoary-tressed hind,
 That toils with feeble hands to glean
 Of wither'd boughs his pittance mean?

Who mid thy nooks of hazle sit,
 Lost in some melancholy fit;
 And list'ning to the raven's croak,
 The distant flail, the falling oak?
 Who, through the sunshine and the show'r,
 Descry the rainbow-painted tow'r?
 Who, wandering at return of May,
 Catch the first cuckow's vernal lay?
 Who, musing waste the summer hour,
 Where high o'er-arching trees embow'r
 The grassy lane so rarely pac'd,
 With azure flow'rets idly grac'd?
 Unnotic'd now, at twilight's dawn
 Returning reapers cross the lawn:
 Nor fond attention loves to note
 The wether's bell from folds remote:
 While, own'd by no poetic eye,
 The pensive evening shade the sky!

For lo! the bard who rapture found
 From ev'ry rural sight or sound;
 Whose genius warm, and judgement chaste,
 No charm of genuine nature pass'd;
 Who felt the Muse's purest fires,
 Far from thy favor'd haunt retires:
 Who peopled all thy vocal bow'rs
 With shadowy shapes and airy pow'rs.

Behold, a dread repose resumes,
 As erst, thy sad sequester'd glooms!
 From the deep dell, where shaggy roots
 Fringe the rough brink with wreathed shoots,
 Th' unwilling genius flies forlorn,
 His primrose-chaplet rudely torn.
 With hollow shriek the nymphs forsake
 The pathless copse, and hedge-row brake,
 Where the delv'd mountain's headlong side
 Its chalky entrails opens wide;
 On the green summit, ambush'd high,
 No longer echo loves to lie,
 No pearl-crown'd maid, with wily look,
 Rise beck'ning from the reedy brook.
 Around the glow-worm's glimm'ring bank,
 No fairies run in fiery rank;
 Nor brush, half seen, in airy tread,
 The violet's unprinted head.
 But Fancy, from the thickest brown,
 The glades that wear a conscious frown,
 The forest-oaks, that pale and lone
 Nod to the blast with hoarser tone,
 Rough glens, and sullen waterfalls,
 Her bright ideal offspring calls.

So by some sage enchanter's spell,
 (As old Arabian fables tell)
 Amid the solitary wild,
 Luxuriant gardens gaily smil'd:
 From sapphire rocks the fountain stream'd,
 With golden fruit the branches beam'd;
 Fair forms, in ev'ry wondrous wood,
 Or lightly tripp'd, or solemn stood;
 And oft, retreating from the view,
 Betray'd at distance beauties new:
 While, gleaming o'er the crisped bow'rs,
 Rich spires arose, and sparkling tow'rs.

If bound on service new to go,
 The master of the magic show

His transitory charm withdrew,
 Away th' illusive landscape flew :
 Dun clouds obscur'd the groves of gold,
 Blue lightning smote the blooming mold ;
 In visionary glory rear'd,
 The gorgeous castle disappear'd :
 And a bare heath's unfruitful plain
 Usurp'd the wizard's proud domain.

§ 66. The Art of preserving Health. ARMSTRONG.

BOOK I. AIR.

DAUGHTER of Pæan, queen of ev'ry joy,
 Hygeia * ; whose indulgent smile sustains
 The various race luxuriant nature pours,
 And on th' immortal essences bestows
 Immortal youth ; auspicious, O descend !
 Thou, cheerful guardian of the rolling year,
 Whether thou wanton'st on the western gale,
 Or shak'st the rigid pinions of the north,
 Diffusest life and vigor through the tracts
 Of air, through earth, and ocean's deep domain.
 When through the blue serenity of heaven
 Thy pow'r approaches, all the wasteful host
 Of pain and sickness, squalid and deform'd,
 Confounded sink into the loathsome gloom,
 Where in deep Erebus involv'd the fiends Grow more profane. Whatever shapes of
 death,
 Shook from the hideous chambers of the globe,
 Swarm through the shuddering air ; whatever plagues
 Or meagre famine breeds, or with slow wings
 Rise from the putrid wat'ry element,
 The damp waste forest, motionless and rank,
 That smothers earth and all the breathless
 winds,
 Or the vile carnage of th' inhuman field ;
 Whatever baneful breathes the rotten south ;
 Whatever ills, th' extremes of sudden change
 Of cold and hot, or moist and dry, produce ;
 They fly thy pure effulgence : they, and all
 The secret poisons of avenging Heaven,
 And all the pale tribes halting in the train
 Of vice and heedless pleasure : or if aught
 The comet's glare amid the burning sky,
 Mournful eclipse, or planets ill combin'd,
 Portend disastrous to the vital world,
 Thy salutary pow'r averts their rage,
 Averts the general bane : and but for thee,
 Nature would sicken, nature soon would die.
 Without thy cheerful active energy
 No rapture swells the breast, no poet sings,
 No more the maids of Helicon delight.
 Come then with me, O goddess, heavenly-gay,
 Begin the song ; and let it sweetly flow,
 And let it wisely teach thy wholesome laws :
 " How best the fickle fabric to support
 " Of mortal man ; in healthful body how
 " A healthful mind the longest to maintain."

'Tis hard, in such a strife of rules to choose
 The best, and those of most extensive use ;
 Harder in clear and animated song
 Dry philosophic precepts to convey.
 Yet with thy aid the secret wilds I trace
 Of Nature, and with daring steps proceed
 Through paths the Muses never trod before.

Nor should I wander doubtful of my way,
 Had I the lights of that sagacious mind
 Which taught to check the pestilential fire,
 And quell the deadly Python of the Nile.
 O thou, belov'd by all the graceful arts,
 Thou, long the fav'rite of the healing pow'rs,
 Indulge, O Mead ! a well-design'd essay,
 Howe'er imperfect ; and permit that I
 My little knowledge with my country share,
 Till you the rich Asclepian stores unlock,
 And with new graces dignify the theme.

Ye, who amid this feverish world would wear
 A body free of pain, of cares a mind,
 Fly the rank city, shun its turbid air ;
 Breathe not the chaos of eternal smoke
 And volatile corruption, from the dead,
 The dying, sick'ning, and the living world
 Exhal'd, to sully heaven's transparent dome
 With dim mortality. It is not Air
 That from a thousand lungs reeks back to thine,
 Sated with exhalations rank and fell,
 The spoil of dunghills, and the putrid thaw
 Of nature, when from shape and texture she Relapses into fighting elements,—
 It is not Air, but floats a nauseous mass
 Of all obscene, corrupt, offensive things.
 Much moisture hurts ; but here a sordid bath,
 With oily rancor fraught, relaxes more
 The solid frame than simple moisture can.
 Beside, immur'd in many a sullen bay
 That never felt the freshness of the breeze,
 This slumbering Deep remains, and ranker grows
 With sickly rest : and (though the lungs abhor
 To drink the dun fuliginous abyss)
 Did not the acid vigor of the mine,
 Roll'd from so many thundering chimneys, tame
 The putrid streams that over-swarm the sky,
 This caustic venom would perhaps corrode
 Those tender cells that draw the vital air,
 In vain with all their unctuous rills bedew'd ;
 Or by the drunken venous tubes, that yawn
 In countless pores o'er all the pervious skin,
 Imbib'd, would poison the balsamic blood,
 And rouse the heart to ev'ry fever's rage.
 While yet you breathe, away ! The rural wilds
 Invite ; the mountains call you, and the vales ;
 The woods, the streams, and each ambrosial
 That fans the ever-undulating sky ; [breeze
 A kindly sky ! whose fostering pow'r regales
 Man, beast, and all the vegetable reign.
 Find, then, some woodland scene where Nature
 smiles
 Benign, where all her honest children thrive.
 To us there wants not many a happy seat ;

* Hygeia, the goddess of Health, was, according to the genealogy of the heathen deities, the daughter of Æsculapius ; who, as well as Apollo, was distinguished by the name of Pæan.

Look round the smiling land, such numbers rise,
 We hardly fix, bewilder'd in our choice.
 See where, enthron'd in adamantinè state,
 Proud of her bards, imperial Windsor sits;
 There choose thy seat, in some aspiring grove
 Fast by the slowly-winding Thames; or where Broader she laves fair Richmond's green retreats (Richmond, that sees an hundred villas rise Rural or gay). Oh! from the summer's rage,
 Oh! wrap me in the friendly gloom that hides
 Umbrageous Ham! But, if the busy town
 Attract thee still to toil for pow'r or gold,
 Sweetly thou mayst thy vacant hours possess
 In Hampstead, courted by the western wind:
 Or Greenwich, waving o'er the winding flood;
 Or lose the world amid the sylvan wilds
 Of Dulwich, yet by barbarous arts unspoil'd.
 Green rise the Kentish hills in cheerful air;
 But on the marshy plains that Essex spreads
 Build not, nor rest too long thy wandering feet.
 For on a rustic throne of dewy turf,
 With baneful fogs her aching temples bound,
 Quartana there presides: a meagre fiend,
 Begot by Eurus, when his brutal force
 Compress'd the slothful Naiad of the fens.
 From such a mixture sprung, this fitful pest
 With feverish blasts subdues the sick'ning land:
 Cold tremors come, with mighty love of rest,
 Convulsive yawnings, lassitude and pains
 That sting the burthen'd brows, fatigue the loins,
 And rack the joints, and ev'ry torpid limb;
 Then parching heat succeeds, till copious sweats
 O'erflow—a short relief from former ills.
 Beneath repeated shocks the wretches pine:
 The vigor sinks, the habit melts away;
 The cheerful, pure, and animated bloom
 Dies from the face with squalid Atrophy
 Devour'd, in sallow melancholy clad.
 And oft the sorceress, in her sated wrath,
 Resigns them to the furies of her train;
 The bloated Hydrops, and the yellow fiend
 Ting'd with her own accumulated gall.
 In quest of sites, avoid the mournful plain
 Where osiers thrive, and trees that love the lake;
 Where many lazy muddy rivers flow:
 Nor, for the wealth that all the Indies roll,
 Fix near the marshy margin of the main.
 For from the humid soil, and wat'ry reign,
 Eternal vapors rise; the spongy air
 For ever weeps; or, turgid with the weight
 Of waters, pours a sounding deluge down.
 Skies such as these let ev'ry mortal shun
 Who dreads the dropsy, palsy, or the gout,
 Tertian, corrosive scurvy, or moist catarrh;
 Or any other injury that grows
 From raw-spun fibres idle and unstrung,
 Skin ill perspiring, and the purple flood
 In languid eddies loit'ring into phlegm.
 Yet not alone from humid skies we pine;
 For air may be too dry. The subtle heaven,
 That winnows into dust the blasted downs,
 Bare, and extended wide without a stream,
 Too fast imbibes th' attenuated lymph,
 Which by the surface from the blood exhales.

The lungs grow rigid, and with toil essay
 Their flexible vibrations; or inflam'd,
 Their tender ever-moving structure thaws.
 Spoil'd of its limpid vehicle, the blood
 A mass of lees remains, a drossy tide
 That slow as Lethe wanders through the veins;
 Unactive in the services of life,
 Unfit to lead its pitchy current through
 The secret mazy channels of the brain.
 The melancholy Fiend (that worst despair
 Of physic) hence the rust-complexion'd man
 Pursues, whose blood is dry, whose fibres gain
 Too stretch'd a tone: and hence in climes adust
 So sudden tumults seize the trembling nerves,
 And burning fevers glow with double rage.
 Fly, if you can, these violent extremes
 Of air, the wholesome is nor moist nor dry.
 But as the pow'r of choosing is denied
 To half mankind, a further task ensues;
 How best to mitigate these fell extremes,
 How breathe unhurt the withering element,
 Or hazy atmosphere: though custom moulds
 To ev'ry clime the soft Promethean clay;
 And he who first the fogs of Essex breath'd
 (So kind is native air) may in the fens
 Of Essex from inveterate ills revive
 At pure Montpellier or Bermuda caught.
 But, if the raw and oozy heaven offend,
 Correct the soil and dry the sources up
 Of wat'ry exhalation; wide and deep
 Conduct your trenches through the quaking bog;
 Solicitous, with all your winding arts,
 Betray th' unwilling lake into the stream;
 And weed the forest, and invoke the winds
 To break the toils where strangled vapors lie;
 Or through the thickets send the crackling flames.

Meantime at home with cheerful fires dispel
 The humid air: and let your table smoke
 With solid roast or bak'd; or what the herds
 Of tamer breed supply; or what the wilds
 Yield to the toilsome pleasures of the chace.
 Generous your wine, the boast of rip'ning years,
 But frugal be your cups. The languid frame,
 Vapid and sunk from yesterday's debauch,
 Shrinks from the cold embrace of wat'ry heavens.
 But neither these, nor all Apollo's arts,
 Disarm the dangers of the dropping sky,
 Unless with exercise and manly toil
 You brace your nerves, and spur the lagging
 blood.

The fatt'ning clime let all the sons of ease
 Avoid; if indolence would wish to live,
 Go, yawn and loiter out the long slow year
 In fairer skies. If droughty regions parch
 The skin and lungs, and bake the thick'ning
 blood,
 Deep in the waving forest choose your seat,
 Where fuming trees refresh the thirsty air;
 And wake the fountains from their secret beds,
 And into lakes dilate the rapid stream.
 Here spread your gardens wide; and let the cool,
 The moist relaxing vegetable store
 Prevail in each repast: your food supplied

By bleeding life, be gently wasted down,
 By soft decoction and a mellowing heat,
 To liquid balm; or if the solid mass
 You choose, tormented in the boiling wave;
 That through the thirsty channels of the blood
 A smooth diluted chyle may ever flow,
 The fragrant dairy from its cold recess
 Its nectar acid or benign will pour
 To drown your thirst; or let the mantling bowl
 Of keen sherbet the fickle taste relieve.
 For with the vicious blood the simple stream
 Will hardly mingle; and fermented cups
 Oft dissipate more moisture than they give.
 Yet when pale seasons rise, or winter rolls
 His horrors o'er the world, thou mayst indulge
 In feast more genial, and impatient broach
 The mellow cask. Then too the scourging air
 Provokes to keener toils than sultry droughts
 Allow. But rarely we such skies blaspheme.
 Bedew'd, our seasons droop: incumbent still Steep'd in continual rains, or with raw fogs
 A pond'rous heaven o'erwhelms the sinking soul:

Lab'ring with storms, in heapy mountains rise
 Th' embattled clouds, as if the Stygian shades
 Had left the dungeon of eternal night,
 Till black with thunder all the South descends.
 Scarce in a show'less day the heavens indulge
 Our melting clime; except the baleful East
 Withers the tender spring, and sourly checks
 The fancy of the year. Our fathers talk
 Of summers, balmy airs, and skies serene.
 Good Heaven! for what unexpiated crimes
 This dismal change! The brooding elements,
 Do they, your pow'ful ministers of wrath,
 Prepare some fierce exterminating plague?
 Or is it fix'd in the decrees above
 That lofty Albion melt into the main?
 Indulgent nature! O dissolve this gloom!
 Bind in eternal adamant the winds
 That drown or wither: give the genial West
 To breathe, and in its turn the sprightly North:
 And may once more the circling seasons rule
 The year; not mix'd in ev'ry monstrous day!

Meantime, the moist malignity to shun
 Of burthen'd skies, mark where the dry champaign
 Swells into cheerful hills; where marjoram
 And thyme, the love of bees, perfume the air;
 And where the cynorrhodon* with the rose
 For fragrance vies; for in the thirsty soil
 Most fragrant breathe the aromatic tribes.
 There bid thy roofs high on the basking steep
 Ascend; there light the hospitable fires,
 And let them see the winter morn arise;
 The summer evening blushing in the West:
 While with umbrageous oaks the ridge behind
 O'erhung, defends you from the blust'ring
 And bleak affliction of the peevish East. [North,
 Oh! when the growling winds contend, and all
 The sounding forest fluctuates in the storm;
 To sink in warm repose, and hear the din

Howl o'er the steady battlements, delights
 Above the luxury of vulgar sleep.
 The murmur'ing rivulet, and the hoarser strain
 Of waters rushing o'er the slippery rocks,
 Will nightly lull you to ambrosial rest.
 To please the fancy is no trifling good,
 Where health is studied; for whatever moves
 The mind with calm delight, promotes the just
 And natural movements of th' harmonious frame.
 Besides, the sportive brook for ever shakes
 The trembling air, that floats from hill to hill,
 From vale to mountain, with incessant change
 Of purest element, refreshing still
 Your airy seat, and uninfected gods.
 Chiefly for this I praise the man who builds
 High on the breezy ridge, whose lofty sides
 Th' ethereal deep with endless billows chafes.
 His purer mansion nor contagious years
 Shall reach, nor deadly putrid airs annoy.

But may no fogs, from lake or fenny plain,
 Involve my hill! And whereso'er you build;
 Whether on sun-burnt Epsom, or the plains;
 Wash'd by the silent Lee; in Chelsea low,
 Or high Blackheath with wint'ry winds assail'd,
 Dry be your house; but airy more than warm.
 Else ev'ry breath or ruder wind will strike
 Your tender body through with rapid pains;
 Fierce coughs will tease you, hoarseness bind
 your voice,

Or moist Gravedo load your aching brows.
 These to defy, and all the fates that dwell
 In cloister'd air, tainted with steaming life,
 Let lofty ceilings grace your ample rooms;
 And still at azure noontide may your dome
 At ev'ry window drink the liquid sky.

Need we the sunny situation here,
 And theatres open to the south, commend;
 Here, where the morning's misty breath infests
 More than the torrid noon? How sickly grow,
 How pale, the plants in those ill-fated vales
 That, circled round with the gigantic heap
 Of mountains, never felt, nor ever hope
 To feel, the genial vigor of the sun!
 While on the neighb'ring hill the rose inflames
 The verdant spring; in virgin beauty blows
 The tender lily, languishingly sweet;
 O'er ev'ry hedge the wanton woodbine roves,
 And autumn ripens in the summer's ray.
 No less the warmer living tribes demand
 The fost'ring sun; whose energy divine
 Dwells not in mortal fire; whose gen'rous heat
 Grows through the mass of grosser elements,
 And kindles into life the pond'rous spheres.
 Cheer'd by thy fond invigorating warmth,
 We court thy beams, great majesty of day!
 If not the soul, the regent of this world,
 First-born of heaven, and only less than God!

BOOK II. DIET.

ENOUGH of Air. A desert subject now,
 Rougher and wilder, rises to my sight:
 A barren waste, where not a garland grows

* The wild rose, or that which grows on the common brier.

To bind the Muse's brow ; nor even a proud
 Stupendous solitude frowns o'er the heath,
 To rouse a noble horror in the soul :
 But rugged paths fatigue, and error leads
 Through endless labyrinths the devious feet.
 Farewell, ethereal fields ! The humbler arts
 Of life, the Table and the homely Gods
 Demand my song. Elysian gales, adieu !

The blood, the fountain whence the spirits
 flow,

The gen'rous stream that waters ev'ry part,
 And motion, vigor, and warm life conveys
 To every particle that moves or lives ;
 This vital fluid, through unnumber'd tubes
 Pour'd by the heart, and to the heart again
 Refunded ; scourg'd for ever round and round ;
 Enrag'd with heat and toil, at last forgets
 Its balmy nature ; virulent and thin
 It grows ; and now, but that a thousand gates
 Are open to its flight, it would destroy
 The parts it cherish'd and repair'd before.
 Besides, the flexible and tender tubes
 Melt in the mildest most nectareous tide
 That ripening nature rolls ; as in the stream
 Its crumbling banks : but what the vital force
 Of plastic fluids hourly batters down,
 That very force, those plastic particles
 Rebuild : so mutable the state of man.
 For this the watchful appetite was given,
 Daily with fresh materials to repair
 This unavoidable expence of life,
 This necessary waste of flesh and blood.
 Hence the concoctive pow'rs, with various art,
 Subdue the cruder aliments to chyle ;
 The chyle to blood ; the foamy purple tide
 To liquors, which through finer arteries
 To different parts their winding course pursue ;
 To try new changes, and new forms put on,
 Or for the public, or some private use.

Nothing so foreign but the athletic hind
 Can labor into blood. The hungry meal
 Alone he fears, or aliments too thin ;
 By violent powers too easily subdu'd,
 Too soon expell'd. His daily labor thaws
 To friendly chyle the most rebellious mass
 That salt can harden, or the smoke of years ;
 Nor does his gorge the rancid bacon rue,
 Nor that which Cestria sends, tenacious paste
 Of solid milk. But ye of softer clay,
 Infirm and delicate ! and ye who waste
 With pale and bloated sloth the tedious day !
 Avoid the stubborn element, avoid
 The full repast ; and let sagacious age
 Grow wiser, lesson'd by the dropping teeth.

Half subtiliz'd to chyle, the liquid food
 Readiest obeys th' assimilating powers ;
 And soon the tender vegetable mass
 Relents ; and soon the young of those that tread
 The stedfast earth, or cleave the green abyss,
 Or pathless sky. And if the steer must fall,
 In youth and sanguine vigor let him die ;
 Nor stay till rigid age or heavy ails
 Absolve him ill-requited from the yoke.
 Some with high forage and luxuriant ease

Indulge the vet'ran ox ; but wiser thou,
 From the bald mountain or the barren downs
 Expect the flocks by frugal nature fed ;
 A race of purer blood, with exercise
 Refin'd, and scanty fare : for, old or young
 The stall'd are never healthy, nor the cram'd.
 Not all the culinary arts can tame
 To wholesome food th' abominable growth
 Of rest and gluttony ; the prudent taste
 Rejects like bane such loathsome lusciousness.
 The languid stomach curses even the pure
 Delicious fat, and all the race of oil :
 For more the oily aliments relax
 Its feeble tone ; and with the eager lymph
 (Fond to incorporate with all it meets)
 Coyly they mix, and shun with slipp'ry wiles
 The woo'd embrace. The irresoluble oil,
 So gentle late and blandishing, in floods
 Of rancid bile o'erflows : what tumults hence,
 What horrors rise, were nauseous to relate.
 Choose leaner viands, ye whose jovial make
 Too fast the gummy nutriment imbibes :
 Choose sober meals, and rouse to active life
 Your cumbrous clay ; nor on th' enfeebling down,
 Irresolute, protract the morning hours.
 But let the man, whose bones are thinly clad,
 With cheerful ease and succulent repast
 Improve his slender habit. Each extreme
 From the best mean of sanity departs.

I could relate what table this demands
 Or that complexion ; what the various pow'rs
 Of various foods ; but fifty years would roll,
 And fifty more, before the tale were done.
 Besides, there often lurks some nameless,
 strange,

Peculiar thing ; nor on the skin display'd,
 Felt in the pulse, nor in the habit seen ;
 Which finds a poison in the food that most
 The temp'ature affects. There are, whose blood
 Impetuous rages through the turgid veins,
 Who better bear the fiery fruits of Ind
 Than the moist melon, or pale cucumber.
 Of chilly nature others fly the board
 Supplied with slaughter ; and the vernal pow'rs
 For cooler, kinder, sustenance implore.
 Some e'en the gen'rous nutriment detest
 Which in the shell, the sleeping embryo rears.
 Some, more unhappy still, repent the gifts
 Of Pales—soft, delicious, and benign ;
 The balmy quintessence of ev'ry flow'r,
 And ev'ry grateful herb that decks the spring ;
 The fost'ring dew of tender sprouting life ;
 The best refection of declining age ;
 The kind restorative of those who lie
 Half dead, and panting from the doubtful strife
 Of nature struggling in the grasp of death.
 Try all the bounties of this fertile globe,
 There is not such a salutary food
 As suits with ev'ry stomach. But (except
 Amid the mingled mass of fish and fowl,
 And boil'd and bak'd, you hesitate by which
 You sunk oppress'd, or whether not by all)
 Taught by experience, soon you may discern
 What pleases, what offends. Avoid the cates

That lull the sicken'd appetite too long;
Or heave with feverish flushings all the face,
Burn in the palms, and parch the rough'ning
tongue;

Or much diminish or too much increase
Th' expense, which nature's wise economy,
Without or waste or avarice, maintains.
Such cates abjur'd, let prowling hunger loose,
And bid the curious palate roam at will;
They scarce can err amid the various stores
That burst the teeming entrails of the world.

Led by sagacious taste, the ruthless king
Of beasts on blood and slaughter only lives;
The tiger, form'd alike to cruel meals,
Would at the manger starve; of milder seeds,
The generous horse to herbage and to grain
Confines his wish; though fabling Greece re-
sound

The Thracian steeds with human carnage wild.
Prompted by instinct's never-erring pow'r
Each creature knows its proper aliment;
But man, th' inhabitant of ev'ry clime,
With all the commoners of nature feeds.
Directed, bounded, by this pow'r within,
Their cravings are well aim'd: voluptuous Man
Is by superior faculties misled,
Misled from pleasure e'en in quest of joy.
Sated with nature's boons, what thousands seek,
With dishes tortur'd from their native taste,
And mad variety, to spur beyond
Its wiser will the jaded appetite!

Is this for pleasure? Learn a juster taste;
And know that temperance is true luxury.
Or is it pride? Pursue some nobler aim:
Dismiss your parasites, who praise for hire;
And earn the fair esteem of honest men, Whose praise is fame. Form'd of such clay as
yours,

The sick the famish'd, shiver at your gates.
E'en modest want may bless your hand unseen,
Though hush'd in patient wretchedness at home.
Is there no virgin grac'd with ev'ry charm
But that which binds the mercenary vow?
No youth of genius, whose neglected bloom
Unfoster'd sickens in the barren shade?
No worthy man, by fortune's random blows,
Or by a heart too gen'rous and humane,
Constrain'd to leave his happy natal seat,
And sigh for wants more bitter than his own?
There are, while human miseries abound,
A thousand ways to waste superfluous wealth,
Without one fool or flatterer at your board,
Without one hour of sickness or disgust.

But other ills th' ambiguous feast pursue,
Besides provoking the lascivious taste.
Such various foods, though harmless each alone,
Each other violate; and oft we see
What strife is brew'd, and what pernicious bane,
From combinations of innoxious things.
Th' unbounded taste I mean not to confine
To hermit's diet, needlessly severe.

But would you long the sweets of health enjoy,
Or husband pleasure; at one impious meal
Exhaust not half the bounties of the year,

Of ev'ry realm. It matters not meanwhile
How much to-morrow differ from to-day;
So far indulge: 'tis fit, besides, that man,
To change obnoxious, be to change inur'd.
But stay the curious appetite, and taste
With caution fruits you never tried before.
For want of use, the kindest aliment
Sometimes offends; while custom tames the rage
Of poison to mild amity with life.

So Heaven has form'd us to the general taste
Of all its gifts, so custom has improv'd
This bent of nature, that few simple foods,
Of all that earth, or air, or ocean yield,
But by excess offend. Beyond the sense
Of light refection, at the genial board
Indulge not often; nor protract the feast
To dull satiety; till soft and slow
A drowsy death creeps on, th' expansive soul
Oppress'd, and smother'd the celestial fire.
The stomach, urg'd beyond its active tone,
Hardly to nutrimental chyle subdues
The softest food; unfinish'd and deprav'd,
The chyle in all its future wand'rings owns
Its turbid fountain; not by purer streams
So to be clear'd, but foulness will remain.
To sparkling wine what ferment can exalt
Th' unripen'd grape? Or what mechanic skill
From the crude ore can spin the ductile gold?

Gross riot treasures up a wealthy fund
Of plagues; but more immedicable ills,
Attend the lean extreme. For physic knows
How to disburden the too tumid veins,
E'en how to ripen the half-labor'd blood:
But to unlock the elemental tubes,
Collaps'd and shrunk with long inanity,
And with balsamic nutriment repair,
The dried and worn out habit, were to bid
Old age grow green, and wear a second spring;
Or the tall ash, long ravish'd from the soil,
Through wither'd veins imbibe the vernal dew.
When hunger calls, obey; nor often wait
Till hunger sharpen to corrosive pain:
For the keen appetite will feast beyond
What nature well can bear; and one extreme
Ne'er without danger meets its own reverse.
Too greedily th' exhausted veins absorb
The recent chyle, and load enfeebled pow'rs
Oft to th' extinction of the vital flame.
To the pale cities, by the firm-set siege
And famine humbled, may this verse be borne.
And hear, ye hardiest sons that Albion breeds!
Long toss'd and famish'd on the wintry main;
The war shook off, or hospitable shore
Attain'd, with temp'rance bear the shock of joy;

Nor crown with festive rites th' auspicious day:
Such feasts might prove more fatal than the waves,

Than war or famine. While the vital fire
Burns feebly, heap not the green fuel on;
But prudently foment the wand'ring spark
With what the soonest feels its kindred touch:
Be frugal e'en of that; a little give
At first: that kindled, add a little more;

Till by delib'rate nourishing, the flame
Reviv'd with all its wonted vigor glows.

But though the two (the full and the jejune)
Extremes have each their vice; it much avails
Ever with gentle tide to ebb and flow
From this to that: so nature learns to bear
Whatever chance or headlong appetite
May bring. Besides, a meagre day subdues
The cruder clods by sloth or luxury
Collected, and unloads the wheels of life.
Sometimes a coy aversion to the feast
Comes on, while yet no blacker omen low'rs;
Then is a time to shun the tempting board,
Were it your natal or your nuptial day.
Perhaps a fast so seasonable starves
The latent seeds of woe, which rooted once
Might cost you labor. But, the day return'd
Of festal luxury, the wise indulge
Most in the tender vegetable breed:
Then chiefly when the summer beams inflame
The brazen heavens, or angry Sirius sheds
A fev'rish taint through the still gulph of air.
The moist cool viands then, and flowing cup
From the fresh dairy-virgin's lib'ral hand,
Will save your head from harm, though round
the world

The dreaded Causos * roll his wasteful fires.
Pale humid Winter loves the gen'rous board,
The meal more copious, and a warmer fare;
And longs with old wood and old wine to cheer
His quaking heart. The seasons which divide
Th' empires of heat and cold; by neither claim'd,
Influenc'd by both; a middle regimen
Impose. Through autumn's languishing domain Descending, nature by degrees invites
To growing luxury. But from the depth
Of winter when th' invigorating year
Emerges; when Favonius, flush'd with love,
Toyful and young, in every breeze descends
More warm and wanton on his kindling bride;
Then, shepherds, then begin to spare your flocks;

And learn, with wise humanity to check [mits
The lust of blood. Now pregnant earth com-
A various offspring to th' indulgent sky:
Now bounteous nature feeds with lavish hand;
The prone creation yields what once suffic'd
Their dainty sov'reign, when the world was young,

Ere yet the barb'rous thirst of blood had seiz'd
The human breast. Each rolling month matures
The food that suits it most: so does each clime.

Far in the horrid realms of winter, where
Th' establish'd ocean heaps a monstrous waste
Of shining rocks and mountains to the pole,
There lives a hardy race, whose plainest wants
Relentless earth, their cruel step-mother,
Regards not. On the waste of iron fields,
Untam'd, intractable, no harvests wave;
Pomona hates them, and the clownish god
Who tends the garden. In this frozen world
Such cooling gifts were vain: a fitter meal

Is earn'd with ease; for here the fruitful spawn
Of Ocean swarms, and heaps their genial board
With gen'rous fare and luxury profuse.

These are their bread, the only bread they know;
These, and their willing slave, the deer that crops
The shrubby herbage on their meagre hills.

Girt by the burning zone, not thus the South
Her swarthy sons in either Ind maintains;
Or thirsty Libya, from whose fervid loins
The lion bursts, and ev'ry fiend that roams
Th' affrighted wilderness. The mountain herd,
Aust and dry, no sweet repast affords;

Nor does the tepid main such kinds produce,
So perfect, so delicious, as the shoals

Of icy Zembla. Rashly where the blood [tain
Brews fev'rish frays; where scarce the tubes sus-
Its tumid fervor and tempestuous course,
Kind Nature tempts not to such gifts as these.

But here in livid ripeness melts the grape;
Here, finish'd by invigorating suns, [glow:

Through the green shade the golden orange
Spontaneous here the turgid melon yields
A gen'rous pulp; the cocoa swells on high
With milky riches; and in horrid mail

The crisp ananas wraps its poignant sweets,
Earth's vaunted progeny; in ruder air

Too coy to flourish, e'en too proud to live,
Or hardly rais'd by artificial fire

To vapid life. Here, with a mother's smile,
Glad Amalthea pours a copious horn:

Here buxom Ceres reigns: th' autumnal sea
In boundless billows fluctuates o'er their plains.

What suits the climate best, what suits the men,
Nature profuses most, and most the taste

Demands. The fountain, edg'd with racy wine
Or acid fruit, bedews their thirsty souls;

The breeze eternal breathing round their limbs,
Supports in else intolerable air;

While the cool palm, the plantain, and the grove
That waves on gloomy Lebanon, assuage

The torrid hell that beams upon their heads.

Now come, ye Naiads, to the fountain lead;
Now let me wander through your gelid reign.

I burn to view th' enthusiastic wilds
By mortal else untrod. I hear the din

Of waters thund'ring o'er the ruin'd cliffs.
With holy rev'rence I approach the rocks [song.

Whence glide the streams renown'd in ancient
Here from the desert down the rumbling steep

First springs the Nile; here bursts the sounding Po

In angry waves; Euphrates hence devolves
A mighty flood to water half the east;

And there, in Gothic solitude reclin'd,
The cheerless Tanais pours his hoary urn.

What solemn twilight, what stupendous shades,
Inwrap these infant floods! Through ev'ry nerve

A sacred horror thrills, a pleasing fear
Glides o'er my frame. The forest deepens round;

And, more gigantic still, th' impending trees
Stretch their extravagant arms athwart the

gloom.

* The burning Fever.

Are these the confines of some fairy world,
A land of Genii? Say, beyond these wilds
What unknown nations, if indeed beyond
Aught habitable lies? And whither leads,
To what strange regions, or of bliss or pain,
That subterraneous way? Propitious maids,
Conduct me, while with fearful steps I tread
This trembling ground. The task remains to sing

Your gifts (so Pæan, so the pow'rs of health Command) to praise your crystal element:
The chief ingredient in Heaven's various works,
Whose flexile genius sparkles in the gem,
Grows firm in oak, and fugitive in wine;
The vehicle, the source, of nutriment
And life to all that vegetate or live.

O comfortable streams! With eager lips,
And trembling hand, the languid thirsty quaff
New life in you: fresh vigor fills their veins.
No warmer cups the rural ages knew;
None warmer sought the sires of human kind
Happy in temperate peace! Their equal days
Felt not th' alternate fits of sev'rish mirth
And sick dejection. Still serene and pleas'd,
They knew no pains but what the tender soul
With pleasure yields to, and would ne'er forget.
Blest with divine immunity from ails,
Long centuries they liv'd; their only fate
Was ripe old age, and rather sleep than death.
Oh! could those worthies from the world of gods
Return to visit their degen'rate sons,
How would they scorn the joys of modern time,
With all our art and toil improv'd to pain!
Too happy they! But wealth brought luxury,
And luxury on sloth begot disease. [disdain

Learn temp'rance, friends; and hear without The choice of water. Thus the Coan sage *
Opin'd, and thus the learn'd of ev'ry school:
What least of foreign principles partakes
Is best; the lightest then; what bears the touch
Of fire the least, and sooner mounts in air;
The most insipid, the most void of smell,
Such the rude mountain from its horrid sides
Pours down; such waters in the sandy vale
For ever boil, alike of winter frosts

And summer's heat secure. The crystal stream,
Through rocks resounding, or for many a mile
O'er the chaf'd pebbles hurl'd, yields wholesome, pure, [thaws,

And mellow draughts; except when winter
And half the mountains melt into the tide.
Though thirst was ne'er so resolute, avoid
The sordid lake, and all such drowsy floods
As fill from Lethe Belgia's slow canals
With rest corrupt, with vegetation green;
Squalid with generation, and the birth
Of little monsters, till the pow'r of fire
Has from profane embraces disengag'd
The violated lymph. The virgin stream,
In boiling, wastes its finer soul in air.

Nothing like simple element dilutes
The food, or gives the chyle so soon to flow:

But where the stomach, indolently given,
Toys with its duty, animate with wine
Th' insipid stream: though golden Ceres yields
A more voluptuous, a more sprightly draught,
Perhaps more active. Wine unmix'd, and all
The gluy floods that from the vex'd abyss
Of fermentation spring, with spirit fraught
And furious with intoxicating fire,
Retard concoction, and preserve unthaw'd
Th' embodied mass. You see what countless Embalm'd in fiery quintessence of wine, [years,
The puny wonders of the reptile world,
The tender rudiments of life, the slim
Unravellings of minute anatomy,
Maintain their texture, and unchang'd remain.

We curse not wine; the vile excess we blame,
More fruitful than th' accumulated board
Of pain and misery. From the subtle draught
Faster and surer swells the vital tide;
And with more active poison, than the floods
Of grosser crudity convey, pervades
The far remote meanders of our frame.

Ah! sly deceiver! branded o'er and o'er,
Yet still believ'd! exulting o'er the wreck
Of sober vows! But the Parnassian Maids
Another time, † perhaps, shall sing the joys,
The fatal charms, the many woes, of wine;
Perhaps its various tribes and various pow'rs.

Meantime, I would not always dread the bowl,
Nor ev'ry trespass shun. The sev'rish strife,
Rous'd by the rare debauch, subdues, expels
The loit'ring crudities that burthen life;
And, like a torrent full and rapid, clears
Th' obstructed tubes. Besides, this restless world

Is full of chances, which by habit's pow'r
To learn to bear, is easier than to shun.
Ah! when ambition, meagre love of gold,
Or sacred country calls, with mellowing wine
To moisten well the thirsty suffrages;
Say how, unseason'd to the midnight frays
Of Comus and his rout, wilt thou contend
With Centaurs long to hardy deeds inur'd?
Then learn to revel, but by slow degrees;
By slow degrees the lib'ral arts are won,
And Hercules grew strong. But when you smooth

The brows of care, indulge your festive vein
In cups by well-inform'd experience found
The least your bane, and only with your friends:
There are sweet follies; frailties to be seen
By friends alone, and men of gen'rous minds.

Oh seldom may the fated hours return
Of drinking deep! I would not daily taste,
Except when life declines, e'en sober cups.
Weak withering age no rigid law forbids,
With frugal nectar, smooth and slow, with balm
The sapless habit daily to bedew,
And give the hesitating wheels of life
Gliblier to play. But youth has better joys:
And is it wise, when youth with pleasure flows,
To squander the reliefs of age and pain?

* Hippocrates.

† See Book IV.

What dext'rous thousands just within the goal
 Of wild debauch direct their nightly course !
 Perhaps no sickly qualms bedim their days,
 No morning admonitions shock the head.
 But ah ! what woes remain ! Life rolls apace,
 And that incurable disease, old age,
 In youthful bodies more severely felt,
 More sternly active, shakes their blasted prime,
 Except kind Nature by some hasty blow
 Prevent the ling'ring fates. For know, whate'er Beyond its natural fervor hurries on
 The sanguine tide ; whether the frequent bowl,
 High-season'd fare, or exercise to toil
 Protracted ; spurs to its last stage tir'd life,
 And sows the temples with untimely snow.
 When life is new, the ductile fibres feel
 The heart's increasing force ; and day by day,
 The growth advances : till the larger tubes,
 Acquiring (from their elemental veins
 Condens'd to solid chords) a firmer tone *,
 Sustain, and just sustain, th' impetuous blood.
 Here stops the growth. With overbearing pulse
 And pressure, still the great destroy the small ;
 Still with the ruins of the small grow strong.
 Life glows meantime amid the grinding force
 Of viscous fluids and elastic tubes ;
 Its various functions vigorously are plied
 By strong machinery, and in solid health
 The man confirm'd long triumphs o'er disease.
 But the full ocean ebbs ; there is a point, [tend ;
 By nature fix'd, whence life must downwards
 For still the beating tide consolidates
 The stubborn vessels, more reluctant still
 To the weak throbs of th' ill-supported heart ;
 These languishing, those strength'ning by de-
 To hard, unyielding, unelastic bone. [grees
 Through tedious channels the congealing flood Crawls lazily, and hardly wanders on :
 It loiters still ; and now it stirs no more.
 This is the period few attain, the death
 Of nature. Thus (so Heaven ordain'd it) life Destroys itself : and, could these laws have chang'd,
 Nestor might now the fates of Troy relate,
 And Homer live immortal as his song.

What does not fade ? The tow'r that long had stood
 The crush of thunder and the warring winds,
 Shook by the slow but sure destroyer Time,
 Now hangs in doubtful ruins o'er its base ;
 And flinty pyramids, and walls of brass,
 Descend : the Babylonian spires are sunk ;
 Achaia, Rome, and Egypt moulder down.
 Time shakes the stable tyranny of thrones,
 And tottering empires rush by their own weight.

This huge rotundity we tread grows old,
 And all those worlds that roll around the sun.
 The sun himself shall die, and ancient night
 Again involve the desolate abyss,
 Till the great Father through the lifeless gloom
 Extend his arm to light another world,
 And bid new planets roll by other laws.
 For through the regions of unbounded space,
 Where unconfin'd Omnipotence has room,
 Being, in various systems, fluctuates still
 Between creation and abhor'd decay ;
 It ever did, perhaps, and ever will.
 New worlds are still emerging from the deep ;
 The old decending, in their turns to rise.

BOOK III. EXERCISE.

THROUGH various toils th' adventurous Muse
 has pass'd ;
 But half the toil, and more than half, remains.
 Rude is her theme, and hardly fit for song ;
 Plain, and of little ornament ; and I
 But little practised in the Aonian arts.
 Yet not in vain such labors have we tried,
 If aught these lays the fickle health confirm.
 To you, ye delicate, I write ; for you
 I tame my youth to philosophic cares,
 And grow still paler by the midnight lamp.
 Not to debilitate with timorous rules
 A hardy frame ; nor heedlessly to brave
 Inglorious dangers, proud of mortal strength,
 Is all the lesson that in wholesome years [stow'd, Concerns the strong. His care were ill be-
 Who would with warm effeminacy nurse
 The thriving oak which on the mountain's brow
 Bears all the blasts that sweep the wintry heaven.
 Behold the laborer of the glebe, who toils
 In dust, in rain, in cold and sultry skies ;
 Save but the grain from mildews and the flood,
 Nought anxious he what sickly stars ascend.
 He knows no laws by Esculapius given,
 He studies none. Yet him nor midnight fogs
 Infest, nor those envenom'd shafts that fly
 When rapid Sirius fires th' autumnal noon.
 His habit pure with plain and temperate meals,
 Robust with labor, and by custom steel'd
 To ev'ry casualty of varied life ;
 Serene he bears the peevish Eastern blast,
 And uninfected breathes the mortal South.
 Such the reward of rude and sober life,
 Of labors such. By health the peasant's toil
 Is well repaid, if exercise were pain
 Indeed, and temp'rance pain. By arts like these Laconia nurs'd of old her hardy sons ;
 And Rome's unconquer'd legions urg'd their Unhurt, through ev'ry toil, in ev'ry clime. [way

* In the human body, as well as in those of other animals, the larger blood-vessels are composed of smaller ones ; which, by the violent motion and pressure of the fluids in the large vessels lose their cavities by degrees, and degenerate into impervious chords or fibres. In proportion as these small vessels become solid, the larger must of course grow less extensive, more rigid, and make a stronger resistance to the action of the heart and force of the blood. From this gradual condensation of the smaller vessels, and consequently rigidity of the larger ones, the progress of the human body from infancy to old age is accounted for.

Toil, and be strong. By toil the flaccid nerves
Grow firm, and gain a more compacted tone;
The greener juices are by toil subdued,
Mellow'd and subtiliz'd; the vapid old
Expell'd, and all the rancor of the blood.
Come, my companions, ye who feel the charms
Of nature and the year; come, let us stray
Where chance or fancy leads our roving walk:
Come, while the soft voluptuous breezes fan
The fleecy heavens, inwrap the limbs with balin,

And shed a charming languor o'er the soul.
Nor when bright Winter sows the prickly frost,
The vigorous ether, in unmanly warmth
Indulge at home; nor even when Eurus' blasts
This way and that convolve the lab'ring woods.
My liberal walks, save when the skies in rain
Or fogs relent, no season should confine
Or to the cloister'd gallery or arcade. [source
Go, climb the mountain: from the ethereal
Imbibe the recent gale. The cheerful morn Beams o'er the hills; go, mount the exulting steed.

Already, see, the deep-mouth'd beagles catch
The tainted mazes; and, on eager sport
Intent, with emulous impatience try
Each doubtful trace. Or, if a nobler prey
Delight you more, go chase the desp'rate deer;
And through its deepest solitudes awake
The vocal forest with the jovial horn.

But if the breathless chace o'er hill and dale
Exceed your strength, a sport of less fatigue,
Not less delightful, the prolific stream
Affords. The crystal rivulet, that o'er
A stony channel rolls its rapid maze, [bounds
Swarms with the silver fry. Such through the
Of pastoral Stafford, runs the brawling Trent;
Such Eden, sprung from Cumbrian mountains;
such [stream

The Esk, o'erhung with woods; and such the
On whose Arcadian banks I first drew air,
Liddal; till now, except in Doric lays
Tun'd to her murmurs by her love-sick swains,
Unknown in songs; though not a purer stream,
Through meads more flow'ry, or more romantic
groves,

Rolls toward the western main. Hail, sacred
May still thy hospitable swains be blest [flood!
In rural innocence; thy mountains still
Teem with the fleecy race; thy tuneful woods
For ever flourish; and thy vales look gay
With painted meadows, and the golden grain!
Oft, with thy blooming sons, when life was
new,

Sportive and petulant, and charm'd with toys,
In thy transparent eddies have I lav'd;
Oft trac'd with patient steps thy fairy banks,
With the well-imitated fly to hook
The eager trout, and, with the slender line
And yielding rod, solicit to the shore [clouds
The struggling panting prey; while vernal
And tepid gales obscur'd the ruffled pool,
And from the deeps call'd forth the wanton swarms.

Form'd on the Samian school, or those of Ind,
There are who think these pastimes scarce hu-
Yet in my mind (and not relentless I) [mane;
His life is pure that wears no fouler stains.
But if through genuine tenderness of heart,
Or secret want of relish for the game,
You shun the glories of the chace, nor care
To haunt the peopled stream; the garden yields
A soft amusement, an humane delight.
To raise th' insipid nature of the ground,
Or tame its savage genius to the grace
Of careless sweet rusticity, that seems
The amiable result of happy chance,
Is to create; and gives a godlike joy,
Which every year improves. Nor thou disdain
To check the lawless riot of the trees,
To plant the grove, or turn the barren mould.
O happy he, whom, when his years decline,
(His fortune and his fame by worthy means
Attain'd, and equal to his moderate mind:
His life approv'd by all the wise and good,
E'en envied by the vain) the peaceful groves
Of Epicurus, from this stormy world,
Receive to rest, of all ungrateful cares
Absolv'd, and sacred from the selfish crowd!
Happiest of men, if the same soil invites
A chosen few, companions of his youth,
Once fellow-rakes perhaps, now rural friends;
With whom in easy commerce to pursue
Nature's free charms, and vie for sylvan fame!
A fair ambition, void of strife or guile,
Or jealousy, or pain to be outdone,
Who plans th' enchanted garden, who directs
The vista best, and best conducts the stream:
Whose groves the fastest thicken and ascend;
Whom first the welcome spring salutes; who shows

The earliest bloom; the sweetest, proudest charms
Of Flora; who best gives Pomona's juice
To match the sprightly genius of champagne.
Thrice happy day in rural business pass'd;
Blest winter nights! when, as the genial fire
Cheers the wide hall, his cordial family
With soft domestic arts the hours beguile,
And pleasing talk, that starts no timorous fame,
With witless wantonness to hunt it down;
Or through the fairy-land of tale or song
Delighted wanders, in fictitious fates
Engag'd, and all that strikes humanity:
Till, lost in fable, they the stealing hour
Of timely rest forget. Sometimes, at eve,
His neighbours lift the latch, and bless unbid
His festal roof; while, o'er the light repast
And sprightly cups, they mix in social joy,
And, through the maze of conversation, trace
Whate'er amuses or improves the mind.
Sometimes at eve (for I delight to taste
The native zest and flavor of the fruit [nure)
Where sense grows wild, and takes of no ma-
The decent, honest, cheerful husbandman
Should drown his labors in my friendly bowl,
And at my table find himself at home.

Whate'er you study, in whate'er you sweat,
Indulge your taste. Some love the manly foils;

The tennis some; and some the graceful dance:
Others, more hardy, range the purple heath
Or naked stubble, where from field to field
The sounding coveys urge the lab'ring flight;
Eager amid the rising cloud to pour
The gun's unerring thunder: and there are Whom still the meed* of the green archer charms.

He chooses best, whose labor entertains
His vacant fancy most: the toil you hate Fatigues you soon, and scarce improves your limbs.

As beauty still has blemish, and the mind
The most accomplish'd its imperfect side,
Few bodies are there of that happy mould
But some one part is weaker than the rest:
The legs perhaps, or arms, refuse their load,
Or the chest labors. These assiduously,
But gently, in their proper arts employ'd,
Acquire a vigor and springy activity
To which they were not born. But weaker parts
Abhor fatigue and violent discipline.

Begin with gentle toils; and, as your nerves
Grow firm, to hardier by just steps aspire.
The prudent, e'en in ev'ry moderate walk,
At first but saunter, and by slow degrees
Increase their pace. This doctrine of the wise
Well knows the master of the flying steed.
First from the goal the manag'd coursers play
On bended reins; as yet the skilful youth
Repress their foamy pride: but ev'ry breath
The race grows warmer, and the tempest swells;
Till all the fiery mettle has its way,
And the thick thunder hurries o'er the plain.
When all at once from indolence to toil
You spring, the fibres by the hasty shock
Are tir'd and crack'd, before their unctuous coats,

Compress'd, can pour the lubricating balm.
Besides, collected in the passive veins,
The purple mass a sudden torrent rolls,
O'erpow'rs the heart, and deluges the lungs
With dangerous inundation: oft the source
Of fatal woes; a cough that foams with blood,
Asthma, and feller peripneumony†,
Or the slow minings of the hectic fire.

Th' athletic fool, to whom what Heaven de-
Of soul is well compensated in limbs, [nied
Oft, from his rage or brainless frolic, feels
His vegetation and brute force decay.
The men of better clay and finer mould
Know nature, feel the human dignity,
And scorn to vie with oxen or with apes.
Pursu'd proluxly, e'en the gentlest toil
Is waste of health: repose by small fatigue
Is earn'd; and (where your habit is not prone
To thaw) by the first moisture of the brows:
The fine and subtle spirits cost too much
To be profus'd, too much the roscid balm;
But when the hard varieties of life
You toil to learn, or try the dusty chace,

Or the warm deeds of some important day:
Hot from the field, indulge not yet your limbs
In wish'd repose; nor court the fanning gale,
Nor taste the spring. Oh! by the sacred tears
Of widows, orphans, mothers, sisters, sires,
Forbear! no other pestilence has driven
Such myriads o'er th' irremeable deep.
Why this so fatal, the sagacious Muse
Thro' nature's cunning labyrinths could trace.
But there are secrets which who knows not now,
Must, ere he reach them, climb the heavy Alps
Of science, and devote seven years to toil.
Besides, I would not stun your patient ears
With what it little boots you to attain.
He knows enough, the mariner, who knows
Where lurk the shelves, and where the whirlpools boil,

What signs portend the storm: to subtler minds
He leaves to scan from what mysterious cause
Charybdis rages in th' Ionian wave;
Whence those imperious currents in the main,
Which neither oar nor sail can stem; and why
The rough'ning deep expects the storm, as sure
As red Orion mounts the shrouded heaven.

In ancient times, when Rome with Athens vied
For polish'd luxury and useful arts;
All hot and reeking from th' Olympic strife,
And warm Palestra, in the tepid bath
Th' athletic youth relax'd their wearied limbs.
Soft oils bedew'd them, with the grateful pow'rs
Of nard and cassia fraught, to soothe and heal
The cherish'd nerves. Our less voluptuous clime
Not much invites us to such arts as these.
'Tis not for those whom gelid skies embrace,
And chilling fogs; whose perspiration feels
Such frequent bars from Eurus and the North;
'Tis not for those to cultivate the skin
Too soft, or teach the recremental fume
Too fast to crowd thro' such precarious ways;
For thro' the small arterial mouths, that pierce
In endless millions, the close-woven skin,
The baser fluids in a constant stream
Escape, and viewless melt into the winds.
While this eternal, this most copious waste
Of blood, degen'rate into vapid brine,
Maintains its wonted measure, all the pow'rs
Of health befriend you, all the wheels of life
With ease and pleasure move; but this restrain'd
Or more or less, so more or less you feel
The functions labor: from this fatal source
What woes descend is never to be sung.
To take their numbers were to count the sands
That ride in whirlwind the parch'd Libyan air:
Or waves that, when the blust'ring North embroils

The Baltic, thunder on the German shore.
Subject not then, by soft emollient arts,
This grand expense, on which your fates depend,
To ev'ry caprice of the sky; nor thwart
The genius of your clime: for from the blood
Least fickle rise the recremental streams,

* This word is much used by some of the old English poets, and signifies reward or prize.

† The inflammation of the lungs.

And least obnoxious to the styptic air, [pores.
Which breathe thro' straiter and more callous
The temper'd Scythian hence half naked treads
His boundless snows, nor raves th' inclement
heaven :

And hence our painted ancestors defied
The East ; nor curs'd, like us, their fickle sky.

The body, moulded by the clime, endures
Th' equator heats, or hyperborean frost :
Except, by habits foreign to its turn,
Unwise you counteract its forming pow'r.
Rude at the first, the winter shocks you less
By long acquaintance : study then your sky,
Form to its manners your obsequious frame,
And learn to suffer what you cannot shun.
Against the rigors of a damp cold heaven
To fortify their bodies, some frequent
The gelid cistern ; and, where nought forbids,
I praise their dauntless heart ; a frame so steel'd
Dreads not the cough, nor those ungenial blasts
That breathe the Tertian or fell Rheumatism ;
The nerves so temper'd never quit their tone ;
No chronic languors haunt such hardy breasts.
But all things have their bounds : and he who
By daily use the kindest regimen [makes
Essential to his health, should never mix
With human kind, nor art nor trade pursue.
He not the safe vicissitudes of life
Without some shock endures ; ill-fitted he
To want the known, or bear unusual things.
Besides, the pow'rful remedies of pain
(Since pain in spite of all our cares will come)
Should never with your prosp'rous days of health
Grow too familiar : for by frequent use
The strongest med'cines lose their healing pow'r,
And e'en the surest poisons theirs to kill.

Let those who from the frozen Arctos reach
Parch'd Mauritania, or the sultry west,
Or the wide flood through rich Indostan roll'd,
Plunge thrice a day, and in the tepid wave
Untwist their stubborn pores ; that full and free
Th' evaporation through the soften'd skin
May bear proportion to the swelling blood :
So shall they 'scape the fever's rapid flames,
So feel untainted the hot breath of hell.
With us, the man of no complaint demands
The warm ablution, just enough to clear
The sluices of the skin, enough to keep
The body sacred from indecent soil.
Still to be pure, e'en did it not conduce
(As much it does) to health, were greatly worth
Your daily pains. 'Tis this adorns the rich ;
The want of this is Poverty's worst woe ;
With this external virtue age maintains
A decent grace ; without it, youth and charms
Are loathsome. This the venal Graces know ;
So doubtless do your wives : for married sires,
As well as lovers, still pretend to taste ;
Nor is it less (all prudent wives can tell)
To lose a husband's than a lover's heart.

But now the hours and seasons when to toil,
From foreign themes recall my wand'ring song.
Some labor fasting, or but slightly fed,
To lull the grinding stomach's hungry rage,

Where nature feeds too corpulent a frame ;
'Tis wisely done : for while the thirsty veins,
Impatient of lean penury, devour
The treasur'd oil, then is the happiest time
To shake the lazy balsam from its cells.
Now while the stomach from the full repast
Subsides, but ere returning hunger gnaws,
Ye leaner habits, give an hour to toil :
And ye whom no luxuriance of growth
Oppresses yet, or threatens to oppress.
But from the recent meal no labors please,
Of limbs or mind. For now the cordial pow'rs
Claim all the wand'ring spirits to a work
Of strong and subtle toil and great event,
A work of time ; and you may rue the day
You hurried, with untimely exercise,
A half-concocted chyle into the blood.
The body overcharg'd with unctuous phlegm
Much toil demands ; the lean elastic less.
While winter chills the blood, and binds the
veins,

No labors are too hard ; by those you 'scape
The slow diseases of the torpid year,
Endless to name ; to one of which alone,
To that which tears the nerves, the toil of slaves
Is pleasure. Oh, from such inhuman pains
May all be free who merit not the wheel !
But from the burning Lion when the sun
Pours down his sultry wrath ; now while the
blood

Too much already maddens in the veins,
And all the finer fluids through the skin
Explore their flight ; me, near the cool cascade
Reclin'd, or saunt'ring in the lofty grove,
No needless slight occasion should engage
To pant and sweat beneath the fiery noon.
Now the fresh morn alone and mellow eve
To shady walks and active rural sports
Invite. But, while the chilling dews descend,
May nothing tempt you to the cold embrace
Of humid skies ; though 'tis no vulgar joy
To trace the horrors of the solemn wood
Whilst the soft ev'ning saddens into night ;
Though the sweet Poet of the vernal groves
Melts all the night in strains of am'rous woe.

The shades descend, and midnight o'er the
world

Expands her sable wings ; great Nature droops
Thro' all her works. Now happy he whose toil
Has o'er his languid pow'rless limbs diffus'd
A pleasing lassitude : he not in vain
Invokes the gentle Deity of dreams.
His pow'rs the most voluptuously dissolve
In soft repose : on him the balmy dews
Of sleep with double nutriment descend.
But would you sweetly waste the blank of night
In deep oblivion ; or on Fancy's wings
Visit the paradise of happy dreams,
And waken cheerful as the lively morn ;
Oppress not nature sinking down to rest
With feasts too late, too solid, or too full ;
But be the first concoction half matur'd,
Ere you to mighty indolence resign
Your passive faculties. He from the toils

And trouble of the day to heavier toil [rocks
Retires, whom trembling from the tow'r that
Amid the clouds, or Calpe's hideous height,
The busy dæmons hurl, or in the main
O'erwhelm, or bury struggling under ground.
Not all a monarch's luxury the woes
Can counterpoise of that most wretched man,
Whose nights are shaken with the frantic fits
Of wild Orestes; whose delirious brain,
Stung by the Furies, works with poison'd thought; [soul,
While pale and monstrous panting shocks the
And mangled consciousness bemoans itself
For ever torn, and chaos floating round.
What dreams presage, what dangers these or Portend to sanity, though prudent seers [those Reveal'd of old, and men of deathless fame,
We would not to the superstitious mind
Suggest new throbs, new vanity of fear:
'Tis ours to teach you from the peaceful night,
To banish omens and all restless woes.

In study some protract the silent hours,
Which others consecrate to mirth and wine:
And sleep till noon, and hardly live till night.
But surely this redeems not from the shades
One hour of life. Nor does it nought avail
What season you to drowsy Morpheus give
Of th' ever-varying circle of the day:
Or whether, through the tedious winter gloom,
You tempt the midnight or the morning damps.
The body, fresh and vigorous from repose,
Defies the early fogs; but, by the toils
Of wakeful day exhausted and unstrung,
Weakly resists the night's unwholesome breath:
The grand discharge, th' effusion of the skin,
Slowly impair'd, the languid maladies [steal.
Creep on, and through the sick'ning functions
So, when the chilling East invades the spring,
The delicate Narcissus pines away
In hectic languor, and a slow disease
Taints all the family of flow'rs, condemn'd
To cruel heavens. But why, already prone
To fade, should beauty cherish its own bane?
Oh shame! oh pity! nipt with pale Quadrille
And midnight cares, the bloom of Albion dies!

By toil subdued, the warrior and the hind
Sleep fast and deep: their active functions soon
With generous streams the subtle tubes supply,
And soon the tonic irritable nerves
Feel the fresh impulse, and awake the soul.
The sons of Indolence with long repose
Grow torpid; and, with slowest Lethe drunk,
Feebly and ling'ringly return to life,
Blunt ev'ry sense, and pow'rless ev'ry limb.
Ye prone to sleep (whom sleeping most annoys)
On the hard mattress or elastic couch [sloth;
Extend your limbs, and wean yourself from
Nor grudge the lean projector, of dry brain
And springy nerves, the blandishments of
Nor envy while the buried Bacchanal [down;
Exhales his surfeit in prolixer dreams.

He without riot, in the balmy feast
Of life, the wants of nature has supplied,
Who rises, cool, serene, and full of soul.

But pliant nature more or less demands
As custom forms her; and all sudden change
She hates of habit, e'en from bad to good.
If faults in life, or new emergencies
From habits urge you by long time confirm'd,
Slow may the change arrive, and stage by stage;
Slow as the shadow o'er the dial moves,
Slow as the stealing progress of the year.

Observe the circling year. How unperceiv'd
Her seasons change! Behold, by slow degrees,
Stern Winter tam'd into a ruder Spring;
The ripen'd Spring a milder Summer glows;
Departing Summer sheds Pomona's store;
And aged Autumn brews the Winter storm.
Slow as they come, these changes come not void
Of mortal shocks: the cold and torrid reigns,
The two great periods of th' important year,
Are in their first approaches seldom safe:
Funereal Autumn all the sickly dread,
And the black fates deform the lovely Spring.
He well advis'd, who taught our wiser sires
Early to borrow Muscovy's warm spoils,
Ere the first frost has touch'd the tender blade;
And late resign them, tho' the wanton Spring
Should deck her charms with all her sister's rays:
For while the effluence of the skin maintains
Its native measure, the pleuritic Spring
Glides harmless by; and Autumn, sick to death
With sallow quartans, no contagion breathes.

I in prophetic numbers could unfold
The omens of the year: what seasons teem
With what diseases; what the humid South
Prepares, and what the demon of the East:
But you perhaps refuse the tedious song.
Besides, whatever plagues, in heat, or cold,
Or drought, or moisture dwell, they hurt not
Skill'd to correct the vices of the sky, [you,
And taught already how to each extreme
To bend your life. But should the public bane
Infect you; or some trespass of your own,
Or flaw of nature, hint mortality:
Soon as a hot unpleasing horror glides
Along the spine, through all your torpid limbs;
When first the head throbs, or the stomach feels
A sickly load, a weary pain the loins,
Be Celsus call'd: the fates come rushing on;
The rapid fates admit of no delay.
While wilful you, and fatally secure,
Expect to-morrow's more auspicious sun,
The growing pest, whose infancy was weak
And easy vanquish'd, with triumphant sway
O'erpow'rs your life. For want of timely care,
Millions have died of medicable wounds.

Ah! in what perils is vain life engag'd!
What slight neglects, what trivial faults, destroy
The hardest frame! Of indolence, of toil,
We die; of want, of superfluity:
The all-surrounding heaven, the vital air,
Is big with death. And, tho' the putrid South
Be shut; though no convulsive agony
Shake, from the deep foundation of the world,
Th' imprison'd plagues, a secret venom oft
Corrupts the air, the water, and the land.
What livid deaths has sad Byzantium seen!

How oft has Cairo, with a mother's woe,
Wept o'er her slaughter'd sons and lonely streets!
Even Albion, girt with less malignant skies,
Albion the poison of the gods has drank,
And felt the sting of monsters all her own.

Ere yet the fell Plantagenets had spent
Their ancient rage at Bosworth's purple field;
While, for which tyrant England should receive,

Her legions in incestuous murders mix'd,
And daily horrors; till the fates were drunk
With kindred blood by kindred hands profus'd:
Another plague of more gigantic arm
Arose; a monster never known before
Rear'd from Cocytus its portentous head.
This rapid fury not, like other pests,
Pursued a gradual course, but in a day
Rush'd as a storm o'er half the astonish'd isle,
And strew'd with sudden carcasses the land.

First through the shoulders, or whatever part
Was seiz'd the first, a fervid vapor sprung.
With rash combustion thence the quiv'ring
spark

Shot to the heart, and kindled all within:
And soon the surface caught the spreading fires.
Thro' all the yielding pores the melted blood
Gush'd out in smoky sweats; but nought assuag'd

The torrid heat within, nor aught reliev'd
The stomach's anguish. With incessant toil,
Desperate of ease, impatient of their pain,
They toss'd from side to side. In vain the stream
Ran full and clear, they burnt and thirsted still;
The restless arteries with rapid blood
Beat strong and frequent. Thick and pantingly
The breath was fetch'd, and with huge lab'rings
heav'd:

At last a heavy pain oppress'd the head:
A wild delirium came; their weeping friends
Were strangers now, and this no home of theirs.
Harass'd with toil on toil, the sinking pow'rs
Lay prostrate and o'erthrown; a pond'rous sleep
Wrapp'd all the senses up: they slept and died.

In some, a gentle horror crept at first
O'er all the limbs; the sluices of the skin
Withheld their moisture, till by art provok'd,
The sweats o'erflow'd, but in a clammy tide:
Now free and copious, now restrain'd and slow;
Of various tinctures, as the temperature
Had mix'd the blood, with rank and fetid
As if the pent-up humors by delay [steams:
Were grown more fell, more putrid, and malign.
Here lay their hopes, (tho' little hope remain'd,)
With full effusion of perpetual sweats
To drive the venom out. And here the fates
Were kind, that long they linger'd not in pain;
For who surviv'd the sun's diurnal race,
Rose from the dreary gates of hell redeem'd:
Some the sixth hour oppress'd, and some the third.

Of many thousands few untainted 'scap'd;
Of those infected fewer 'scap'd alive;
Of those who liv'd some felt a second blow;
And whom the second spar'd a third destroy'd.

Frantic with fear, they sought by flight to shun
The fierce contagion. O'er the mournful land
Th' infected city pour'd her hurrying swarms:
Rous'd by the flames that fir'd her seats around,
Th' infected country rush'd into the town.

Some, sad at home, and in the desert some,
Abjur'd the fatal commerce of mankind
In vain: where'er they fled, the fates pursued.
Others, with hopes more specious, cross'd the
To seek protection in far distant skies; [main,
But none they found. It seem'd the general air,
From pole to pole, from Atlas to the East,
Was then at enmity with English blood.
For, but the race of England, all were safe
In foreign climes; nor did the fury taste
The foreign blood which England then contain'd. [heaven

Where should they fly? The circumambient
Involv'd them still; and ev'ry breeze was bane.
Where find relief? The salutary art
Was mute; and, startled at the new disease,
In fearful whispers hopeless omens gave.

To heaven with suppliant rites they sent their pray'rs; [priv'd,

Heaven heard them not. Of ev'ry hope de-
Fatigued with vain resources, and subdued
With woes resistless and enfeebling fear;
Passive they sunk beneath the weighty blow.
Nothing but lamentable sounds were heard,
Nor aught was seen but ghastly views of death.
Infectious horror ran from face to face,
And pale despair. 'Twas all the business then
To tend the sick, and in their turn to die.

In heaps they fell: and oft one bed, they say,
The sick'ning, dying, and the dead contain'd!

Ye guardian gods, on whom the fates depend
Of tort'ring Albion! ye eternal fires [pow'rs
That lead thro' heaven the wand'ring year! ye
That o'er th' encircling elements preside!

May nothing worse than what this age has seen
Arrive! Enough abroad, enough at home,
Has Albion bled. Here a distemper'd heaven
Has thinn'd her cities; from those lofty cliffs
That awe proud Gaul, to Thule's wintry reign:
While in the west, beyond th' Atlantic foam,
Her bravest sons, keen for the fight, have died
The death of cowards and of common men:
Sunk void of wounds, and fall'n without renown. [turn,

But from these views the weeping Muses
And other themes invite my wand'ring song.

BOOK IV. THE PASSIONS.

THE choice of aliment, the choice of air,
The use of toil, and all external things,
Already sung; it now remains to trace
What good, what evil, from ourselves proceeds,
And how the subtle principle within Inspires with health, or mines with strange de-
The passive body. Ye poetic shades, [cay
That know the secrets of the world unseen,
Assist my song! for, in a doubtful theme
Engag'd, I wander through mysterious ways.

There is, they say (and I believe there is),
A spark within us of th' immortal fire,
That animates and moulds the grosser frame;
And when the body sinks, escapes to heaven,
Its native seat, and mixes with the Gods.
Meanwhile this heavenly particle pervades
The mortal elements; in ev'ry nerve
It thrills with pleasure, or grows mad with pain:
And, in its secret conclave, as it feels
The body's woes and joys, this ruling pow'r
Wields at its will the dull material world,
And is the body's health or malady.

By its own toil the gross corporeal frame
Fatigues, extenuates, or destroys itself,
Nor less the labors of the mind corrode
The solid fabric; for by subtle parts,
And viewless atoms, secret Nature moves
The mighty wheels of this stupendous world.
By subtle fluids pour'd through subtle tubes,
The nat'ral, vital functions are perform'd:
By these the stubborn aliments are tam'd;
The toiling heart distributes life and strength;
These the still-crumbling frame rebuild, and these

Are lost in thinking, and dissolve in air.

But 'tis not Thought (for still the soul's employ'd),

'Tis painful thinking that corrodes our clay.
All day the vacant eye without fatigue
Strays o'er the heaven and earth; but long intent
On microscopic arts its vigor fails.

Just so the mind, with various thought amus'd,
Nor aches itself, nor gives the body pain.

But anxious study, discontent, and care,
Love without hope, and hate without revenge,
And fear, and jealousy, fatigue the soul,
Engross the subtle ministers of life,

And spoil the lab'ring functions of their share.
Hence the lean gloom that Melancholy wears,
The lover's paleness, and the sallow hue
Of Envy, Jealousy, the meagre stare

Of sore Revenge: the canker'd body hence
Betrays each fretful motion of the mind. [day

The strong-built peasant, who both night and Feeds on the coarsest fare the schools bestow,
And crudely fattens at gross Burman's stall;

O'erwhelm'd with phlegm lies in a dropsy
Or sinks in lethargy before his time. [drown'd,

With youthful studies you, and arts that please,
Employ your mind; amuse, but not fatigue.

Peace to each drowsy metaphysic sage!

And ever may all heavy systems rest!

Yet some there are, e'en of elastic parts,

Whom strong and obstinate ambition leads

Through all the rugged roads of barren lore,

And gives to relish what their gen'rous taste

Would else refuse. But may nor thirst of fame,

Nor love of knowledge, urge you to fatigue

With constant drudgery the lib'ral soul.

Toy with your books: and, as the various fits

Of humor seize you, from philosophy

To fable shift, from serious Antonine

To Rabelais' ravings, and from prose to song.

While reading pleases, but no longer, read;

And read aloud resounding Homer's strain,
And wield the thunder of Demosthenes.
The chest so exercis'd improves its strength;
And quick vibrations through the bowels drive
The restless blood, which in unactive days
Would loiter else through unelastic tubes.
Deem it not trifling while I recommend
What posture suits: to stand and sit by turns,
As nature prompts, is best. But o'er your leaves
To lean for ever, cramps the vital parts,
And robs the fine machinery of its play.

'Tis the great art of life to manage well
The restless mind. For ever on pursuit
Of knowledge bent, it starves the grosser pow'rs:
Quite unemploy'd, against its own repose
It turns its fatal edge, and sharper pangs
Than what the body knows im bitter life.
Chiefly where Solitude, sad nurse of Care,
To sickly musing gives the pensive mind,
There Madness enters; and the dim-eyed fiend,
Sour Melancholy, night and day provokes
Her own eternal wound. The sun grows pale;
A mournful visionary light o'erspreads
The cheerful face of nature; earth becomes
A dreary desert, and heav'n frowns above.
Then various shapes of curs'd illusion rise:
Whate'er the wretched fears, creating Fear
Forms out of nothing; and with monsters teems
Unknown in hell. The prostrate soul beneath
A load of huge imagination heaves;
And all the horrors that the murd'rer feels
With anxious flutt'ring wake the guiltless
breast.

Such phantoms Pride in solitary scenes,
Or Fear, on delicate self-love creates.
From other cares absolv'd, the busy mind
Finds in yourself a theme to pore upon;
It finds you miserable, or makes you so.
For while yourself you anxiously explore,
Timorous Self-love, with sick'ning Fancy's aid
Presents the danger that you dread the most,
And ever galls you in your tender part.
Hence some for love, and some for jealousy,
For grim religion some, and some for pride,
Have lost their reason; some for fear of want,
Want all their lives; and others ev'ry day,
For fear of dying, suffer worse than death.
Ah! from your bosoms banish, if you can,
Those fatal guests; and first the demon Fear,
That trembles at impossible events,
Lest aged Atlas should resign his load,
And heaven's eternal battlements rush down.
Is there an evil worse than Fear itself?
And what avails it that indulgent Heaven
From mortal eyes has wrapt the woes to come,
If we, ingenious to torment ourselves,
Grow pale at hideous fictions of our own?
Enjoy the present; nor with needless cares
Of what may spring from blind misfortune's womb,

Appal the surest hour that life bestows.
Serene, and master of yourself, prepare
For what may come, and leave the rest to Heaven.
Oft from the body, by long ails mistun'd,

These evils spring, the most important health,
That of the mind, destroy; and when the mind
They first invade, the conscious body soon
In sympathetic languishment declines.

These chronic passions, while from real woes
They rise, and yet without the body's fault
Infest the soul, admit one only cure;
Diversion, hurry, and a restless life.

Vain are the consolations of the wise; [pain.
In vain your friends would reason down your
O ye, whose souls relentless love has tam'd
To soft distress, or friends untimely slain,
Court not the luxury of tender thought!
Nor deem it impious to forget those pains
That hurt the living, nought avail the dead.
Go, soft enthusiast! quit the cypress groves,
Nor to the rivulet's lonely moanings tune
Your sad complaint. Go, seek the cheerful haunts

Of men, and mingle with the bustling crowd;
Lay schemes for wealth, or pow'r, or fame, the wish

Of noble minds, and push them night and day;
Or join the caravan in quest of scenes
New to your eyes, and shifting ev'ry hour,
Beyond the Alps, beyond the Apennines.
Or, more advent'rous, rush into the field
Where war grows hot; and, raging through the
sky,

The lofty trumpet swells the madd'ning soul;
And in the hardy camp and toilsome march
Forget all softer and less manly cares.

But most too passive, when the blood runs low,
Too weakly indolent to strive with pain,
And bravely by resisting conquer Fate,
Try Circe's arts, and in the tempting bowl
Of poison'd nectar sweet oblivion drink.
Struck by the pow'rful charm, the gloom dissolves

In empty air; Elysium opens round;
A pleasing phrensy buoys the lighten'd soul,
And sanguine hopes dispel your fleeting care;
And what was difficult and what was dire
Yields to your prowess and superior stars:
The happiest you of all that e'er were mad,
Or are, or shall be, could this folly last.

But soon your heaven is gone: a heavier gloom
Shuts o'er your head: and, as the thund'ring
stream,

Swoln o'er its banks with sudden mountain rain,
Sinks from its tumult to a silent brook;
So, when the frantic raptures in your breast
Subside, you languish into mortal man:
You sleep, and, waking, find yourself undone.
For, prodigal of life, in one rash night
You lavish'd more than might support three days.
A heavy morning comes; your cares return
With tenfold rage. An anxious stomach well
May be endur'd; so may the throbbing heart:
But such a dim delirium, such a dream,
Involves you; such a dastardly despair
Unmans your soul, as madd'ning Pentheus felt
When, baited round Cithæron's cruel sides,
He saw two suns, and double Thebes, ascend.

You curse the sluggish Port; you curse the
wretch,

The felon, with unnat'ral mixture first
Who dar'd to violate the virgin wine.
Or on the fugitive Champagne you pour
A thousand curses; for to heaven it rapt
Your soul, to plunge you deeper in despair.
Perhaps you rue e'en that divinest gift,
The gay, serene, good-natur'd Burgundy,
Or the fresh fragrant vintage of the Rhine;
And wish that Heaven from mortals had withheld

The grape, and all intoxicating bowls.

Besides, it wounds you sore to recollect
What follies in your loose unguarded hour
Escap'd. For one irrevocable word,
Perhaps that meant no harm, you lose a friend;
Or in the rage of wine your hasty hand
Performs a deed to haunt you to your grave.
Add, that your means, your health, your parts
decay:

Your friends avoid you; brutishly transform'd,
They hardly know you; or, if one remains
To wish you well, he wishes you in heaven.
Despis'd, unwept, you fall: who might have left
A sacred, cherish'd, sadly-pleasing name;
A name still to be utter'd with a sigh.
Your last ungraceful scene has quite effac'd
All sense and mem'ry of your former worth.

How to live happiest; how avoid the pains,
The disappointments, and disgusts of those
Who would in pleasure all their hours employ;
The precepts here of a divine old man
I could recite. Though old, he still retain'd
His manly sense and energy of mind.
Virtuous and wise he was, but not severe;
He still remember'd that he once was young;
His easy presence check'd no decent joy.
Him e'en the dissolute admir'd: for he
A graceful looseness, when he pleas'd, put on;
And laughing could instruct. Much had he read,

Much more had seen; he studied from the life,
And in th' original perus'd mankind.

Vers'd in the woes and vanities of life,
He pitied Man: and much he pitied those Whom falsely-smiling Fate has curs'd with means

To dissipate their days in quest of joy.
Our aim is happiness: 'tis yours, 'tis mine,
He said; 'tis the pursuit of all that live:
Yet few attain it, if't was e'er attain'd.
But they the widest wander from the mark,
Who through the flow'ry paths of saunt'ring joy
Seek this coy goddess; that from stage to stage
Invites us still, but shifts as we pursue.
For, not to name the pains that pleasure brings
To counterpoise itself, relentless Fate
Forbids that we through gay voluptuous wilds
Should ever roam; and were the fates more kind,
Our narrow luxuries would soon be stale.
Were these exhaustless, Nature would grow sick;

And cloy'd with pleasure, squeamishly com- [plain

That all was vanity, and like a dream.
 Let nature rest : be busy for yourself,
 And for your friend ; be busy e'en in vain,
 Rather than tease her sated appetites.
 Who never fasts, no banquets e'er enjoys ;
 Who never toils or watches, never sleeps.
 Let nature rest : and when the taste of joy
 Grows keen, indulge ; but shun satiety.

'Tis not for mortals always to be blest.
 But him the least the dull or painful hours
 Of life oppress, whom sober Sense conducts,
 And Virtue, through this labyrinth we tread.
 Virtue and Sense I mean not to disjoin ;
 Virtue and Sense are one : and, trust me, still
 A faithless heart betrays the head unsound.
 Virtue (for mere good-nature is a fool)
 Is Sense and Spirit, with Humanity :
 'Tis sometimes angry, and its frown confounds ;
 'Tis e'en vindictive, but in vengeance just.
 Knaves fain would laugh at it ; some great ones
 But at his heart the most undaunted son [dare ;
 Of fortune dreads its name and awful charms.
 To noblest uses this determines wealth ;
 This is the solid pomp of prosp'rous days,
 The peace and shelter of adversity.
 And, if you pant for glory, build for fame
 On this foundation, which the secret shock
 Defies of Envy and all-sapping Time.
 The gaudy gloss of Fortune only strikes
 The vulgar eye ; the suff'rage of the wise,
 The praise that's worth ambition, is attain'd
 By sense alone, and dignity of mind.

Virtue, the strength and beauty of the soul,
 Is the best gift of Heaven ; a happiness
 That e'en above the smiles and frowns of fate
 Exalts great Nature's favorites ; a wealth
 That ne'er encumbers, nor to baser hands
 Can be transferr'd : it is the only good
 Man justly boasts of, or can call his own.
 Riches are oft by guilt and baseness earn'd ;
 Or dealt by chance, to shield a lucky knave,
 Or throw a cruel sunshine on a fool.
 But for one end, one much-neglected use,
 Are riches worth your care ; for Nature's wants
 Are few, and without opulence supplied :
 This noble end is, to produce the soul ;
 To show the virtues in the fairest light ;
 To make humanity the minister
 Of bounteous Providence ; and teach the breast
 That gen'rous luxury the gods enjoy.

Thus, in his graver vein, the friendly sage Sometimes declaim'd. Of right and wrong he taught

Truths as refin'd as ever Athens heard ;
 And (strange to tell !) he practis'd what he preach'd.

Skill'd in the passions, how to check their sway
 He knew, as far as reason can control
 The lawless pow'rs. But other cares are mine.
 Form'd in the school of Pæan, I relate
 What passions hurt the body, what improve :
 Avoid them, or invite them, as you may.

Know then, whatever cheerful and serene
 Supports the mind, supports the body too.

Hence, the most vital movement mortals feel
 Is Hope, the balm and life-blood of the soul :
 It pleases, and it lasts. Indulgent Heaven
 Sent down the kind delusion, through the paths
 Of rugged life to lead us patient on,
 And make our happiest state no tedious thing.
 Our greatest good, and what we least can spare
 Is Hope ; the last of all our evils, Fear.

But there are passions grateful to the breast,
 And yet no friends to life : perhaps they please
 Or to excess, and dissipate the soul ; [clown,
 Or while they please, torment. The stubborn
 The ill-tamed ruffian, and pale usurer,
 (If love's omnipotence such hearts could mould)
 May safely mellow into love ; and grow
 Refin'd, humane, and gen'rous, if they can.

Love in such bosoms never to a fault
 Or pains or pleasures. But, ye finer souls,
 Form'd to soft luxury, and prompt to thrill
 With all the tumults, all the joys and pains
 That beauty gives ; with caution and reserve
 Indulge the sweet destroyer of repose, [cares.
 Nor court too much the Queen of charming
 For, while the cherish'd poison in your breast
 Ferments and maddens ; sick with jealousy,
 Absence, distrust, or e'en with anxious joy,
 The wholesome appetites and pow'rs of life
 Dissolve in languor. The coy stomach loaths
 The genial board ; your cheerful days are gone ;
 The gen'rous bloom that flush'd your cheeks is
 To sighs devoted, and to tender pains, [fled.

Pensive you sit, or solitary stray,
 And waste your youth in musing. Musing first
 Toy'd into care your unsuspecting heart :
 It found a liking there, a sportful fire,
 And that fomented into serious love ;
 Which musing daily strengthens and improves
 Through all the heights of fondness and romance :

And you're undone, the fatal shaft has sped,
 If once you doubt whether you love or no :
 The body wastes away ; th' infected mind,
 Dissolv'd in female tenderness, forgets
 Each manly virtue, and grows dead to fame.
 Sweet Heaven ! from such intoxicating charms Defend all worthy breasts ! Not that I deem Love always dangerous, always to be shunn'd.
 Love well repaid, and not too weakly sunk
 In wanton and unmanly tenderness,
 Adds bloom to health ; o'er ev'ry virtue sheds
 A gay, humane, and amiable grace,
 And brightens all the ornaments of man.
 But fruitless, hopeless, disappointed, rack'd
 With jealousy, fatigu'd with hope and fear,
 Too serious, or too languishingly fond,
 Unnerves the body, and unmans the soul,
 And some have died for love, and some run mad ;
 And some with desp'rate hand themselves have

Some to extinguish, others to prevent, [slain.
 A mad devotion to one dang'rous fair,
 Court all they meet ; in hopes to dissipate
 The cares of love amongst a hundred brides.
 Th' event is doubtful : for there are who find
 A cure in this ; there are who find it not.

'Tis no relief, alas! it rather galls
 The wound, to those who are sincerely sick :
 For while from fev'rish and tumultuous joys
 The nerves grow languid, and the soil subsides,
 The tender fancy smarts with ev'ry sting,
 And what was love before is madness now.
 Is health your care, or luxury your aim?
 Be temp'rate still: when Nature bids, obey;
 Her wild impatient sallies bear no curb:
 But when the prurient habit of delight,
 Or loose imagination, spurs you on
 To deeds above your strength, impute it not
 To Nature; Nature all compulsion hates.
 Ah! let not luxury nor vain renown
 Urge you to feats you well might sleep without;
 To make what should be rapture a fatigue,
 A tedious task; nor in the wanton arms
 Of twining Lais melt your manhood down.
 For from the colliquation of soft joys [was!
 How chang'd you rise! the ghost of what you
 Languid and melancholy, gaunt and wan,
 Your veins exhausted, and your nerves un-
 strung;

Spoil'd of its balm and sprightly zest, the blood
 Grows vapid phlegm: along the tender nerves
 (To each slight impulse tremblingly awake)
 A subtle fiend that mimics all the plagues,
 Rapid and restless, springs from part to part.
 The blooming honors of your youth are fallen;
 Your vigor pines; your vital pow'rs decay;
 Diseases haunt you; and untimely age
 Creeps on, unsocial, impotent, and lewd.
 Infatuate, impious epicure! to waste
 The stores of pleasure, cheerfulness, and health:
 Infatuate all who make delight their trade,
 And coy perdition ev'ry hour pursue.

Who pines with love, or in lascivious flames
 Consumes, is with his own consent undone:
 He chooses to be wretched, to be mad,
 And warn'd proceeds and wilful to his fate.
 But there's a passion, whose tempestuous sway
 Tears up each virtue planted in the breast,
 And shakes to ruin proud philosophy:
 For pale and trembling Anger rushes in,
 With faltering speech, and eyes that wildly stare
 Fierce as the tiger, madder than the seas, Desperate, and arm'd with more than human strength.

How soon the calm, humane, and polish'd man
 Forgets compunction, and starts up a fiend!
 Who pines in love, or wastes with silent cares,
 Envy, or ignominy, or tender grief,
 Slowly descends, and ling'ring, to the shades.
 But he whom anger stings, drops, if he dies,
 At once, and rushes apoplectic down;
 Or a fierce fever hurries him to hell.
 For, as the body through unnumber'd strings
 Reverberates each vibration of the soul;
 As is the passion, such is still the pain
 The body feels; or chronic, or acute.
 And oft a sudden storm at once o'erpow'rs
 The life, or gives your reason to the winds.
 Such fates attend the rash alarm of fear,
 And sudden grief, and rage, and sudden joy.

There are, meantime, to whom the boist'rous fit

Is health, and only fills the sails of life;
 For where the mind a torpid winter leads,
 Wrapt in a body corpulent and cold,
 And each clogg'd function lazily moves on,
 A generous sally spurns th' incumbent load,
 Unlocks the breast, and gives a cordial glow.
 But if your wrathful blood is apt to boil,
 Or are your nerves too irritably strung,
 Wave all dispute; be cautious if you joke,
 Keep Lent for ever, and forswear the bowl;
 For one rash moment sends you to the shades,
 Or shatters ev'ry hopeful scheme of life,
 And gives to horror all your days to come.
 Fate, arm'd with thunder, fire, and ev'ry plague
 That ruins, tortures, or distracts mankind,
 And makes the happy wretched, in an hour
 O'erwhelms you not with woes so horrible
 As your own wrath, nor gives more sudden blows.

While choler works, good friend, you may be wrong;

Distrust yourself, and sleep before you fight.
 'Tis not too late to-morrow to be brave;
 If honor bids, to-morrow kill or die.
 But calm advice against a raging fit
 Avails too little; and it braves the pow'r
 Of all that ever taught in prose or song,
 To tame the fiend that sleeps a gentle lamb,
 And wakes a lion. Unprovok'd and calm,
 You reason well, see as you ought to see,
 And wonder at the madness of mankind;
 Seiz'd with the common rage, you soon forget
 The speculation of your wiser hours.
 Beset with furies of all deadly shapes,
 Fierce and insidious, violent and slow,
 With all that urge or lure us on to fate,
 What refuge shall we seek, what arms prepare?
 Where reason proves too weak, or void of wiles,
 To cope with subtle or impetuous pow'rs,
 I would invoke new passions to your aid;
 With indignation would extinguish fear,
 With fear or generous pity vanquish rage,
 And love with pride; and force to force oppose. [breast;

There is a charm, a pow'r that sways the Bids every passion revel or be still;
 Inspires with rage, or all your cares dissolves;
 Can soothe distraction, and almost despair;
 That pow'r is Music: far beyond the stretch
 Of those unmeaning warblers on the stage;
 Those clumsy heroes, those fat-headed gods,
 Who move no passion justly but contempt;
 Who, like our dancers (light indeed and strong)!
 Do wondrous feats, but never heard of grace.
 The fault is ours; we bear those monstrous arts: [peals

Good Heaven! we praise them; we with loudest
 Applaud the fool that highest lifts his heels,
 And with insipid show of rapture die
 Of idiot notes impertinently long.
 But he the Muse's laurel justly shares,
 A poet he, and touch'd with Heaven's own fire,
 Who with bold rage, or solemn pomp of sounds,

Inflames, exalts, and ravishes the soul;
Now tender, plaintive, sweet almost to pain,
In love dissolves you; now in sprightly strains
Breathes a gay rapture through your thrilling
breast,

Or melts the heart with airs divinely sad,
Or wakes to horror the tremendous strings.
Such was the bard whose heavenly strains of old
Appeas'd the fiend of melancholy Saul.
Such was, if old and heathen fame say true,
The man who bade the Theban domes ascend,
And tam'd the savage nations with his song;
And such the Thracian whose harmonious lyre,
Tun'd to soft woe, made all the mountains weep;
Sooth'd e'en th' inexorable pow'rs of Hell,
And half redeem'd his lost Eurydice.
Music exalts each joy, allays each grief,
Expels diseases, softens every pain,
Subdues the rage of poison, and the plague;
And hence the wise of ancient days ador'd
One pow'r of physic, melody, and song.

§ 67. Ode on the Spring. GRAY.

Lo! where the rosy-bosom'd Hours,
Fair Venus' train, appear;
Disclose the long-expected flow'rs,
And wake the purple year!
The Attic warbler pours her throat,
Responsive to the cuckoo's note,
The untaught harmony of spring;
While, whisp'ring pleasure as they fly,
Cool Zephyrs through the clear blue sky
Their gather'd fragrance fling.

Where'er the oak's thick branches stretch
A broader, browner shade;
Where'er the rude and moss-grown beech
O'er-canopies the glade;
Beside some water's rushy brink
With me the Muse shall sit, and think
(At ease reclin'd in rustic state)
How vain the ardor of the crowd,
How low, how little are the proud,
How indigent the great!

Still is the toiling hand of Care;
The panting herds repose;
Yet, hark, how through the peopled air
The busy murmur glows!
The insect youth are on the wing,
Eager to taste the honey'd spring,
And float amid the liquid noon:
Some lightly o'er the current skim,
Some show their gaily gilded trim
Quick-glancing to the sun.

To Contemplation's sober eye
Such is the race of man;
And they that creep, and they that fly,
Shall end where they began.
Alike the busy and the gay
But flutter through life's little day,

In fortune's varying colors drest:
Brush'd by the hand of rough mischance,
Or chill'd by age, their airy dance
They leave, in dust to rest.

Methinks I hear, in accents low,
The sportive kind reply:
Poor moralist! and what art thou?
A solitary fly!
Thy joys no glitt'ring female meets,
No hive hast thou of hoarded sweets,
No painted plumage to display;
On hasty wings thy youth is flown;
Thy sun is set, thy spring is gone—
We frolic while 'tis May.

§ 68. Ode on the Death of a favorite Cat, drowned in a Tub of Gold Fishes. GRAY.

'Twas on a lofty vase's side,
Where China's gayest art had dy'd
The azure flow'rs that blow;
Demurest of the tabby kind,
The pensive Selima, reclin'd,
Gaz'd on the lake below.

Her conscious tail her joy declar'd;
The fair round face, the snowy beard,
The velvet of her paws,
Her coat that with the tortoise vies,
Her ears of jet, her em'rald eyes,
She saw, and purr'd applause.

Still had she gaz'd; but 'midst the tide
Two angel forms were seen to glide,
The Genii of the stream:
Their scaly armor's Tyrian hue,
Through richest purple, to the view
Betray'd a golden gleam.

The hapless nymph with wonder saw:
A whisker first, and then a claw,
With many an ardent wish,
She stretch'd in vain to reach the prize:
What female heart can gold despise?
What cat's averse to fish?

Presumptuous maid! with looks intent
Again she stretch'd, again she bent,
Nor knew the gulph between:
(Malignant Fate sat by and smil'd;)
The slipp'ry verge her feet beguil'd,
She tumbled headlong in.

Eight times emerging from the flood,
She mew'd to ev'ry wat'ry god,
Some speedy aid to send.
No Dolphin came, no Nereid stirr'd;
Nor cruel Tom nor Susan heard:—
A fav'rite has no friend!

From hence, ye beauties, undeceiv'd,
Know, one false step is ne'er retriev'd,

And be with caution bold.
Not all that tempts your wand'ring eyes,
And heedless hearts, is lawful prize;
Nor all that glitters, gold.

§ 69. Ode on a distant Prospect of Eton College.
GRAY.

YE distant spires, ye antique tow'rs,
That crown the wat'ry glade,
Where grateful Science still adores
Her Henry's holy shade;
And ye, that from the stately brow
Of Windsor's heights th' expanse below
Of grove, of lawn, of mead survey,
Whose turf, whose shade, whose flow'rs among Wanders the hoary Thames along
His silver-winding way!

Ah happy hills! ah pleasing shade!
Ah fields belov'd in vain!
Where once my careless childhood stray'd,
A stranger yet to pain!
I feel the gales that from you blow
A momentary bliss bestow;
As waving fresh their gladsome wing,
My weary soul they seem to soothe,
And, redolent of joy and youth,
To breathe a second spring.

Say, father Thames, for thou hast seen
Full many a sprightly race,
Disporting on thy margent green,
The paths of pleasure trace;
Who foremost now delight to cleave,
With pliant arms, thy glassy wave?
The captive linnet which enthrall?
What idle progeny succeed
To chase the rolling circle's speed,
Or urge the flying ball?

While some on earnest business bent
Their murmuring labors ply
'Gainst graver hours that bring constraint
To sweeten liberty:
Some bold adventurers disdain
The limits of their little reign,
And unknown regions dare descry:
Still as they run they look behind,
They hear a voice in ev'ry wind,
And snatch a fearful joy.

Gay hope is theirs, by fancy fed,
Less pleasing when possess'd;
The tear forgot as soon as shed,
The sunshine of the breast:
Theirs buxom health of rosy hue,
Wild wit, invention ever new,
And lively cheer, of vigor born;
The thoughtless day, the easy night,
The spirits pure, the slumbers light,
That fly th' approach of morn.

Alas! regardless of their doom,
The little victims play!
No sense have they of ills to come,
Nor care beyond to-day:

Yet see, how all around them wait
The ministers of human fate,
And black Misfortune's baleful train!
Ah, show them where in ambush stand,
To seize their prey, the murd'rous band!
Ah, tell them they are men!

These shall the fury passions tear,
The vultures of the mind,
Disdainful anger, pallid fear,
And shame that sculks behind;
Or pining love shall waste their youth,
Or jealousy with rankling tooth,
That inly gnaws the secret heart;
And envy wan, and faded care,
Grim-visag'd comfortless despair,
And sorrow's piercing dart.

Ambition this shall tempt to rise;
Then whirl the wretch from high,
To bitter scorn a sacrifice,
And grinning infamy.
And stings of falsehood those shall try,
And hard unkindness' alter'd eye,
That mocks the tear it forc'd to flow;
And keen remorse with blood defil'd,
And moody madness laughing wild
Amid severest woe.

Lo! in the vale of years, beneath,
A grisly troop are seen,
The painful family of Death,
More hideous than their queen:
This racks the joints, this fires the veins,
That ev'ry laboring sinew strains,
Those in the deeper vitals rage:
Lo! poverty, to fill the band,
That numbs the soul with icy hand:
And slow-consuming age.

To each his suff'rings: all are men,
Condemn'd alike to groan;
The tender for another's pain,
Th' unfeeling for his own.
Yet, ah! why should they know their fate?
Since sorrow never comes too late,
And happiness too swiftly flies,
Thought would destroy their paradise.
No more—where ignorance is bliss,
'Tis folly to be wise.

§ 70. Ode to Adversity. GRAY.

DAUGHTER of Jove, relentless pow'r,
Thou tamer of the human breast,
Whose iron scourge and tort'ring hour
The bad affright, afflict the best!
Bound in thy adamantine chain,
The proud are taught to taste of pain;
And purple tyrants vainly groan
With pangs unfelt before, unpitied and alone.

When first thy Sire to send on earth
Virtue, his darling child, design'd,
To thee he gave the heavenly birth,
And bade to form her infant mind.

Stern rugged nurse! thy rigid lore
With patience many a year she bore;
What sorrow was, thou bad'st her know,
And from her own she learnt to melt at others'
woe.

Scar'd at thy frown terrific, fly
Self-pleasing Folly's idle brood,
Wild laughter, noise, and thoughtless joy,
And leave us leisure to be good.

With Justice, to herself severe,
And Pity, dropping soft the sadly-pleasing tear.

Oh, gently on thy suppliant's head,
Dread Goddess, lay thy chast'ning hand!
Not in thy Gorgon terrors clad,
Nor circled with the vengeful band
(As by the impious thou art seen)
With thund'ring voice, and threat'ning mien,
With screaming Horror's fun'ral cry,
Despair, and fell Disease, and ghastly Poverty.

Drink life and fragrance as they flow.
Now the rich stream of music winds along,

Frisking light in frolic measures;
Now pursuing, now retreating,
Now in circling troops they meet;
To brisk notes in cadence beating,
Glance their many-twinkling feet.
Slow melting strains their Queen's approach

Where'er she turns, the Graces homage pay,

§ 73. The Fatal Sisters. An Ode. GRAY.

Now the storm begins to low’r
 (Haste, the loom of hell prepare);
 Iron sleet of arrowy show’r
 Hurtles in the darken’d air.

Glitt’ring lances are the loom
 Where the dusky warp we strain,
 Weaving many a soldier’s doom,
 Orkney’s woe, and Randver’s bane.

See the grisly texture grow!
 (’Tis of human entrails made)
 And the weights that play below,
 Each a gasping warrior’s head.

Shafts for shuttles, dipt in gore,
 Shoot the trembling chords along:
 Sword, that once a monarch bore,
 Keep the tissue close and strong,

Mista, black terrific maid,
 Sangrida, and Hilda, see!

Join the wayward work to aid :
'Tis the woof of victory.

Ere the ruddy sun be set,
Pikes must shiver, jav'lines sing,
Blade with clatt'ring buckler meet,
Hauberk crash, and helmet ring.

(Weave the crimson web of war)
Let us go, and let us fly,
Where our friends the conflict share,
Where they triumph, where they die.

As the paths of fate we tread,
Wading through th' ensanguin'd field,
Gondula, and Geira, spread
O'er the youthful king your shield.

We the reins to slaughter give,
Ours to kill, and ours to spare :
Spite of danger he shall live.
(Weave the crimson web of war.)

They, whom once the desert beach
Pent within its bleak domain,
Soon their ample sway shall stretch
O'er the plenty of the plain.

Low the dauntless earl is laid,
Gor'd with many a gaping wound :
Fate demands a nobler head ;
Soon a king shall bite the ground.

Long his loss shall Eirin weep,
Ne'er again his likeness see ;
Long her strains in sorrow steep,
Strains of immortality !

Horror covers all the heath,
Clouds of carnage blot the sun.
Sisters, weave the web of death.
Sisters, cease ! the work is done.

Hail the task, and hail the hands !
Songs of joy and triumph sing :
Joy to the victorious bands ;
Triumph to the younger king.

Mortal, thou that hear'st the tale,
Learn the tenor of our song.
Scotland, through each winding vale,
Far and wide the notes prolong.

Sisters, hence with spurs of speed !
Each her thund'ring falchion wield ;
Each bestride her sable steed.
Hurry, hurry, to the field !

§ 74. The Descent of Odin. An Ode.
GRAY.

UPROSE the king of men with speed,
And saddled straight his coal-black steed :
Down the yawning steep he rode,
That leads to Hela's drear abode.
Him the dog of darkness spied :
His shaggy throat he open'd wide ;
While from his jaws, with carnage fill'd,
Foam and human gore distill'd.
Hoarse he bays with hideous din,
Eyes that glow, and fangs that grin ;

And long pursues, with fruitless yell,
The father of the powerful spell.
Onward still his way he takes
(The groaning earth beneath him shakes),
Till full before his fearless eyes
The portals nine of hell arise.

Right against the eastern gate,
By the moss-grown pile he sate,
Where long of yore to sleep was laid
The dust of the prophetic Maid.
Facing to the northern clime,
Thrice he trac'd the Runic rhyme ;
Thrice pronounc'd, in accents dread,
The thrilling verse that wakes the dead ;
Till from out the hollow ground
Slowly breath'd a sullen sound.

PROPHETESS.

What call unknown, what charms, presume
To break the quiet of the tomb ?
Who thus afflicts my troubled sprite,
And drags me from the realms of night ?
Long on these mould'ring bones have beat
The winter's snow, the summer's heat,
The drenching dews, and driving rain !
Let me, let me sleep again.
Who is he, with voice unblest,
That calls me from the bed of rest ?

ODIN.

A traveller, to thee unknown,
Is he that calls, a warrior's son.
Thou the deeds of light shalt know ;
Tell me what is done below,
For whom yon glitt'ring board is spread ?
Drest for whom yon golden bed ?

PROPHETESS.

Mantling in the goblet see
The pure bev'rage of the bee ;
O'er it hangs the shield of gold :
'Tis the drink of Balder bold.
Balder's head to death is given,
Pain can reach the Sons of Heaven !
Unwilling I my lips uncloze :
Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.

Once again my call obey ;
Prophetess, arise, and say
What dangers Odin's child await,
Who the author of his fate ?

PROPHETESS.

In Hoder's hand the hero's doom ;
His brother sends him to the tomb.
Now my weary lips I close :
Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.

Prophetess, my spell obey ;
Once again arise, and say
Who th' avenger of his guilt,
By whom shall Hoder's blood be spilt ?

PROPHETESS.

In the caverns of the West,
By Odin's fierce embrace comprest,

A wondrous boy shall Rinda bear,
Who ne'er shall comb his raven hair,
Nor wash his visage in the stream,
Nor see the sun's departing beam,
Till he on Hober's corse shall smile,
Flaming on the funeral pile.
Now my weary lips I close:
Leave me, leave me to repose.

ODIN.

Yet a while my call obey;
Prophetess, awake, and say
What virgins these, in speechless woe,
That bend to earth their solemn brow,
That their flaxen tresses tear,
And snowy veils, that float in air?
Tell me whence their sorrows rose;
Then I leave thee to repose.

PROPHETESS.

Ha! no traveller art thou,
King of Men, I know thee now!
Mightiest of a mighty line—

ODIN.

No boding maid of skill divine
Art thou, nor prophetess of good,
But mother of the giant brood!

PROPHETESS.

Hie thee hence, and boast at home
That never shall inquirer come
To break my iron sleep again,
Till Lok has burst his tenfold chain:
Never, till substantial Night
Has re-assum'd her ancient right;
Till, wrapt in flames, in ruin hurl'd,
Sinks the fabric of the world.

§ 75. The Triumphs of Owen. A Fragment.
GRAY.

OWEN's praise demands my song,
Owen swift, and Owen strong;
Fairest flow'r of Roderic's stem
Gwyneth's shield, and Britain's gem.
He nor heaps his brooded stores,
Nor on all profusely pours;
Lord of ev'ry regal art,
Lib'ral hand, and open heart.

Big with hosts of mighty name,
Squadrons three against him came;
This the force of Eirin hiding,
Side by side as proudly riding,
On her shadow long and gay
Lochlin ploughs the wat'ry way;
There the Norman sails afar
Catch the winds, and join the war:
Black and huge along they sweep,
Burthens of the angry deep.

Dauntless on his native sands
The dragon-son of Mona stands;
In glitt'ring arms and glory drest,
High he rears his ruby crest.
There the thund'ring strokes begin,
There the press, and there the din;
Talmalfra's rocky shore
Echoing to the battle's roar.

Check'd by the torrent-tide of blood,
Backward Menaï rolls his flood;
While, heap'd his master's feed around,
Prostrate warriors gnaw the ground.
Where his glowing eye-balls turn,
Thousand banners round him burn;
Where he points his purple spear,
Hasty, hasty Rout is there;
Marking with indignant eye
Fear to stop, and shame to fly.
There Confusion, Terror's child;
Conflict fierce, and Ruin wild;
Agony, that pants for breath;
Despair, and honorable Death.

From yonder realms of empyrean day
Bursts on my ear th' indignant lay:
There sit the sainted sage, the bard divine,

Yet hither oft a glance from high
They send of tender sympathy,

First the genuine ardor stole.
'Twas Milton struck the deep-ton'd shell;
And, as the choral warblings round him swell,
Meek Newton's self bends from his state sublime,
And nods his hoary head, and listens to the

With solemn steps and slow,
High Potentates, and Dames of royal birth,
And mitred fathers, in long order go:

From haughty Gallia torn;
And sad Chatillon, on her bridal morn
That wept her bleeding love; and princely Clare;
And Anjou's heroine; and the paler Rose,

§ 78. The Fairy's Answer to Mr. Greville's Prayer for Indifference.

By the Countess of C——.

WITHOUT preamble, to my friend
These hasty lines I'm bid to send,
Or give, if I am able :
I dare not hesitate to say,
Though I have trembled all the day—
It looks so like a fable.

Last night's adventure is my theme ;
And should it strike you as a dream,
Yet soon its high import
Must make you own the matter such,
So delicate, it were too much
To be compos'd in sport.

The moon did shine serenely bright,
And ev'ry star did deck the night,
While Zephyr fann'd the trees ;
No more assail'd my mind's repose,
Save that yon stream, which murmuring flows,
Did echo to the breeze.

Enrapt in solemn thoughts I sate,
Revolving o'er the turns of fate,
Yet void of hope or fear ;
When, lo ! behold an airy throng,
With lightest steps, and jocund song,
Surpris'd my eye and ear.

A form superior to the rest
His little voice to me address'd,
And gently thus began :
“ I've heard strange things from one of you,
“ Pray tell me if you think 'tis true ;
“ Explain it if you can.

“ Such incense has perfum'd my throne !
“ Such eloquence my heart has won !
“ I think I guess the hand :
“ I know her wit and beauty too,
“ But why she sends a pray'r so new,
“ I cannot understand.

“ To light some flames, and some revive,
“ To keep some others just alive,
“ Full oft I am implor'd ;
“ But, with peculiar pow'r to please,
“ To supplicate for nought but ease !
“ 'Tis odd, upon my word !

“ Tell her, with fruitless care I've sought ;
“ And tho' my realms, with wonder fraught,
“ In remedies abound,
“ No grain of cold indifference
“ Was ever yet allied to sense
“ In all my fairy round.

“ The regions of the sky I'd trace,
“ I'd ransack ev'ry earthly place,
“ Each leaf, each herb, each flow'r,
“ To mitigate the pangs of fear,
“ Dispel the clouds of black despair,
“ Or lull the restless hour.

“ I would be generous as I'm just ;
“ But I obey, as others must,
“ Those laws which fate has made.

“ My tiny kingdom how defend,
“ And what might be the horrid end,
“ Should man my state invade ?
“ 'T would put your mind into a rage,
“ And such unequal war to wage
“ Suits not my regal duty !
“ I dare not change a first decree :
“ She's doom'd to please, nor can be free :
“ Such is the lot of Beauty !”

This said, he darted o'er the plain,
And after follow'd all his train ;
No glimpse of him I find :
But sure I am, the little sprite
These words, before he took his flight,
Imprinted on my mind.

§ 79. The Beggar's Petition. ANON.

PITY the sorrows of a poor old man,
Whose trembling limbs have borne him to your
door,

Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span ;
Oh give relief, and Heaven will bless your store !

These tatter'd clothes my poverty bespeak,
These hoary locks proclaim my lengthen'd years ;
And many a furrow in my grief-worn cheek
Has been a channel to a flood of tears.

Yon house erected on the rising ground,
With tempting aspect drew me from my road :
For Plenty there a residence has found,
And Grandeur a magnificent abode.

Hard is the fate of the infirm and poor !
Here as I crav'd a morsel of their bread,
A pamper'd menial drove me from the door
To seek a shelter in an humbler shed.

Oh take me to your hospitable dome !
Keen blows the wind, and piercing is the cold !
Short is my passage to the friendly tomb !
For I am poor, and miserably old.

Should I reveal the sources of my grief,
If soft humanity e'er touch'd your breast,
Your hands would not withhold the kind relief,
And tears of pity would not be repress'd.
Heaven sends misfortunes ; why should we repine ?

'Tis Heaven has brought me to the state you see ;
And your condition may be soon like mine,
The child of Sorrow and of Misery.

A little farm was my paternal lot ;
Then like the lark I sprightly hail'd the morn ;
But, ah ! oppression forc'd me from my cot ;
My cattle died, and blighted was my corn.

My daughter, once the comfort of my age,
Lur'd by a villain from her native home,
Is cast abandon'd on the world's wide stage,
And doom'd in scanty poverty to roam.

My tender wife, sweet soother of my care !
Struck with sad anguish at the stern decree,
Fell, ling'ring fell, a victim to despair,
And left the world to wretchedness and me !

Pity the sorrows of a poor old man, [door,
Whose trembling limbs have borne him to your
Whose days are dwindled to the shortest span;
Oh give relief, and Heaven will bless your store!

§ 80. Pollio. An Elegiac Ode; written to the Wood near R—— Castle, 1762. MICKLE.

Hæc Jovem sentire, deosque cunctos,
Spem bonam certamque domum reporto. HOR.

THE peaceful evening breathes her balmy store,
The playful school-boys wanton o'er the green;
Where spreading poplars shade the cottage-door,
The villagers in rustic joy convene.

Amid the secret windings of the wood,
With solemn Meditation let me stray;
This is the hour when to the wise and good
The heavenly maid repays the toils of day.

The river murmurs, and the breathing gale
Whispers the gently-heaving boughs among:
The star of evening glimmers o'er the dale,
And leads the silent host of heaven along.

How bright, emerging o'er yon broom-clad height,
The silver empress of the night appears!
Yon limpid pool reflects a stream of light,
And faintly in its breast the woodland bears.

The waters tumbling o'er their rocky bed,
Solemn and constant, from yon dell resound;
The lonely hearths blaze o'er the distant glade;
The bat, low-wheeling, skims the dusky
ground.

August and hoary, o'er the sloping dale,
The Gothic abbey rears its sculptur'd tow'rs;
Dull thro' the roofs resounds the whistling gale,
Dark solitude among the pillars low'rs.

Where yon old trees bend o'er a place of graves,
And solemn shade a chapel's sad remains,
Where yon scath'd poplar through the windows waves,
And, twining round, the hoary arch sustains;

There oft, at dawn, as one forgot behind,
Who longs to follow, yet unknowing where,
Some hoary shepherd, o'er his staff reclin'd,
Pores on the graves, and sighs a broken pray'r.

High o'er the pines, that with their dark'ning
shade

Surround yon craggy bank, the castle rears
Its crumbling turrets; still its tow'ry head
A warlike mien, a sullen grandeur wears.

So, 'midst the snow of age, a boastful air
Still on the war-worn vet'ran's brow attends;
Still his big bones his youthful prime declare,
Though trembling o'er the feeble crutch he bends.

Wild round the gates the dusky wall-flow'rs creep, [have led;
Where oft the knights the beauteous dames
Gone is the bow'r, the grot a ruin'd heap,
Where bays and ivy o'er the fragments spread.

'Twas here our sires, exulting from the fight,
Great in their bloody arms, march'd o'er the lea,
Eyeing their rescued fields with proud delight!
Now lost to them! and, ah! how chang'd
to me!

THIS bank, the river, and the fanning breeze,
The dear idea of my Pollio bring; [trees,
So shone the moon through these soft-nodding
When here we wander'd in the eves of spring.

When April's smiles the flow'ry lawn adorn,
And modest cowslips deck the streamlet's side;
When fragrant orchards to the roseate morn
Unfold their bloom, in heaven's own colors dyed:

So fair a blossom gentle Pollio wore, [mind;
These were the emblems of his healthful
To him the letter'd page display'd its lore,
To him bright Fancy all her wealth resign'd;

Him with her purest flames the Muse endow'd,
Flames never to th' illiberal thought allied:
The sacred sisters led where Virtue glow'd
In all her charms; he saw, he felt, and died.

O partner of my infant griefs and joys! [flows;
Big with the scenes now past, my heart o'er-
Bids each endearment, fair as once, to rise,
And dwells luxurious on her melting woes.

Oft with the rising sun, when life was new,
Along the woodland have I roam'd with thee;
Oft by the moon have brush'd the evening dew,
When all was fearless innocence and glee.

The sainted well, where yon bleak hill declines,
Has oft been conscious of those happy hours;
But now the hill, the river crown'd with pines,
And sainted well have lost their cheering
pow'rs;

For thou art gone. My guide, my friend! oh where, [hind?
Where hast thou fled, and left me here be-
My tend'rest wish, my heart to thee was bare;
Oh now cut off each passage to my mind!

How dreary is the gulf! how dark, how void,
The trackless shores that never were repass'd!
Dread separation! on the depth untried,
Hope falters, and the soul recoils aghast!

Wide round the spacious heavens I cast my eyes:
And shall these stars glow with immortal fire?
Still shine the lifeless glories of the skies?
And could thy bright, thy living soul expire?

Far be the thought! The pleasures most sublime,
The glow of friendship, and the virtuous tear,
The tow'ring wish that scorns the bounds of
time,
Chill'd in this vale of death, but languish here.

So plant the vine in Norway's wintry land,
The languid stranger feebly buds, and dies;
Yet there's a clime where Virtue shall expand
With godlike strength beneath her native skies!

The lonely shepherd on the mountain's side
 With patience waits the rosy-op'ning day;
 The mariner at midnight's darksome tide
 With cheerful hope expects the morning ray:

Thus I, on life's storm-beaten ocean toss'd,
 In mental vision view the happy shore,
 Where Pollio beckons to the peaceful coast,
 Where fate and death divide the friends no
 more!

Oh that some kind, some pitying kindred shade,
 Who now perhaps frequents this solemn
 grove,

Would tell the awful secrets of the dead,
 And from my eyes the mortal film remove!

Vain is the wish—yet surely not in vain
 Man's bosom glows with that celestial fire
 Which scorns earth's luxuries, which smiles at pain,

And wings his spirit with sublime desire!
 To fan this spark of heaven, this ray divine,
 Still, O my soul! still be thy dear employ;
 Still thus to wander thro' the shades be thine,
 And swell thy breast with visionary joy!

So to the dark-brow'd wood, or sacred mount,
 In ancient days, the holy seers retir'd;
 And, led in vision, drank at Siloë's fount,
 While rising ecstasies their bosoms fir'd.

Restor'd creation bright before them rose,
 The burning deserts smil'd as Eden's plains;
 One friendly shade the wolf and lambkin chose;
 The flow'ry mountain sung, 'Messiah reigns!'

Tho' fainter raptures my cold breast inspire,
 Yet let me oft frequent this solemn scene;
 Oft to the abbey's shatter'd walls retire,
 What time the moonshine dimly gleams between.

There, where the cross in hoary ruin nods,
 And weeping yews o'ershade the letter'd stones, [abodes,
 While midnight silence wraps these drear
 And soothes me wandering o'er my kindred bones;

Let kindled Fancy view the glorious morn,
 When from the bursting graves the just shall
 rise,

All Nature smiling; and, by angels borne,
 Messiah's cross far blazing o'er the skies!

§ 81. The Tears of Scotland. SMOLLET.

MOURN, hapless Caledonia, mourn
 Thy banish'd peace, thy laurels torn!
 Thy sons, for valor long renown'd,
 Lie slaughter'd on their native ground:
 Thy hospitable roofs no more
 Invite the stranger to the door;
 In smoky ruins sunk they lie,
 The monuments of cruelty.

The wretched owner sees, afar,
 His all become the prey of war:

Bethinks him of his babe and wife;
 Then smites his breast, and curses life.
 Thy swains are famish'd on the rocks,
 Where once they fed their wanton flocks;
 Thy ravish'd virgins shriek in vain;
 Thy infants perish on the plain.

What boots it, then, in ev'ry clime,
 Through the wide-spreading waste of time,
 Thy martial glory, crown'd with praise,
 Still shone with undiminish'd blaze?
 Thy tow'ring spirit now is broke,
 Thy neck is bended to the yoke:
 What foreign arms could never quell,
 By civil rage and rancor fell.

The rural pipe and merry lay,
 No more shall cheer the happy day:
 No social scenes of gay delight
 Beguile the dreary winter-night;
 No strains but those of sorrow flow,
 And nought be heard but sounds of woe;
 While the pale phantoms of the slain
 Glide nightly o'er the silent plain.

Oh baneful cause, oh fatal morn,
 Accurs'd to ages yet unborn!
 The sons against their fathers stood;
 The parent shed his children's blood!
 Yet when the rage of battle ceas'd,
 The victor's soul was not appeas'd:
 The naked and forlorn must feel
 Devouring flames and murd'ring steel!

The pious mother, doom'd to death,
 Forsaken, wanders o'er the heath;
 The bleak wind whistles round her head,
 Her helpless orphans cry for bread;
 Bereft of shelter, food, and friend,
 She views the shades of night descend;
 And, stretch'd beneath th' inclement skies,
 Weeps o'er her tender babes, and dies.

Whilst the warm blood bedews my veins,
 And unimpair'd remembrance reigns;
 Resentment of my country's fate
 Within my filial breast shall beat;
 And, spite of her insulting foe,
 My sympathising verse shall flow:
 "Mourn, hapless Caledonia, mourn
 "Thy banish'd peace, thy laurels torn!"

§ 82. Ode to Mirth. SMOLLET.

PARENT of joy! heart-easing Mirth!
 Whether of Venus or Aurora born,
 Yet Goddess sure of heavenly birth,
 Visit benign a son of Grief forlorn:
 Thy glitt'ring colors gay
 Around him, Mirth, display;
 And o'er his raptur'd sense
 Diffuse thy living influence:
 So shall each hill, in purer green array'd,
 And flower-adorn'd in new-born beauty
 glow; [the shade,
 The grove shall smoothe the horrors of
 And streams in murmurs shall forget to flow.

Shine, Goddess, shine with unremitted ray,
And gild (a second sun) with brighter beam our day.

Labor with thee forgets his pain,
And aged Poverty can smile with thee;
If thou be nigh, Grief's hate is vain,
And weak th' uplifted arm of tyranny.

The morning opes on high
His universal eye;

And on the world doth pour
His glories in a golden show'r. [ray,
Lo! Darkness trembling 'fore the hostile
Shrinks to the cavern deep and wood forlorn:
The brood obscene, that own her gloomy
sway,

Troop in her rear, and fly th' approach of morn.
Pale shiv'ring ghosts, that dread th' all-cheering

Quick as the lightning's flash glide to sepulchral

But whence the gladd'ning beam
That pours his purple stream

O'er the long prospect wide?
'Tis Mirth. I see her sit

In majesty of light,

With Laughter at her side.

Bright-eyed Fancy hovering near

Wide waves her glancing wing in air;

And young Wit flings his pointed dart,
That guiltless strikes the willing heart.

Fear not now Affliction's pow'r,

Fear not now wild Passion's rage;

Nor fear ye aught, in evil hour,

Save the tardy hand of Age.

Now Mirth hath heard the suppliant Poet's pray'r: [troubled air.

No cloud that rides the blast shall vex the § 83. Ode to Leven Water. SMOLLET.

ON Leven's banks, while free to rove,
And tune the rural pipe to love,
I envied not the happiest swain
That ever trod th' Arcadian plain.

Pure stream! in whose transparent wave
My youthful limbs I wont to lave;
No torrents stain thy limpid source,
No rocks impede thy dimpling course,
That sweetly warbles o'er its bed,
With white, round, polish'd pebbles spread;
While, lightly pois'd, the scaly brood,
In myriads cleave thy crystal flood:
The springing trout, in speckled pride;
The salmon, monarch of the tide;
The ruthless pike, intent on war;
The silver eel and mottled par.

Devolving from thy parent lake,
A charming maze thy waters make,
By bow'rs of birch, and groves of pine,
And hedges flower'd with eglantine.

Still on thy banks, so gaily green,
May num'rous herds and flocks be seen;
And lasses, chanting o'er the pail;
And shepherds, piping in the dale;

And ancient faith, that knows no guile;
And industry, embrown'd with toil;
And hearts resolv'd, and hands prepar'd,
The blessings they enjoy to guard.

§ 84. Songe to Ælla, Lorde of the Castel of Bry-stowe ynne daies of yore. From CHATTERTON, under the name of ROWLEY.

OH thou, orr what remaynes of thee,
Ælla, the darlynge of futurity,
Lett thys mie songe bolde as thie courage be,
As everlastynge to posteritye.

Arraung'd ynne dreare arraie,

And bie thie valyante hande

And actedd deeds full quent.

Oh thou, whereer (thie bones att reste)
Thye Spryte to haunte delyghteth beste,
Whetherr upponne the bloude-embrewedd
Or whare thou kennst from farre [pleyne,
The dysmall crye of warre,
Or seest somme mountayne made of corse of

And neighe to be amenged the poynctedd

And glowe arduous onn the Castle steeres;

Or fierye round the mynsterr glare;

§ 85. Bristolwe Tragedie; or, The Delthe of Syr Charles Bawdin.

CHATTERTON, under the name of ROWLEY.

THE feather'd songster chaunticleer
Had wounde hys bugle horne,
And told the earlie villager
The commynge of the morne;

Kynge Edward saw the rudie streakes
Of lyght eclipse the greie;
And herde the raven's crokyng throte
Proclayme the fated daie.

"Thou'rt right," quod hee, "for, by the Godde,
 "That syttes enthron'd on hyghe,
 "Charles Bawdin, and his fellowes twaine,
 "To-daie shall surelie die."

Then wythe a jugge of nappy ale
 His knyghtes dydd onne hymn waite;
 "Goe tell the traytour thatt to-daie
 "Hee leaves thys mortall state."

Syr Canterlone thenne bendedd lowe.
 "Wythe hart brymm-fulle of woe;
 Hee journey'd to the castle-gate;
 And to Syr Charles dydd goe.

But whenne hee came, his children twaine,
 And eke hys lovyng wyfe.

Wythe brinie tears dydd wett the floore,
 For goode Syr Charleses lyfe.

"O goode Syr Charles!" sayd Canterlone,
 "Badde tydyngs I doe brynge"
 "Speke boldlic, manne," sayd brave Syr Charles,
 "Whatte says thie traytour kynge?"

"I greeve to telle: Before yonne sonne
 "Does fromme the welkinne flye,
 "He hath uponne hys honnor sworne
 "Thatt thou shalt surelie die."

"Wee all must die," quod brave Syr Charles;
 "Of thatte I'm not affearde:
 "What bootes to lyve a little space?
 "Thanke Jesu, I'm prepar'd.

"Butte telle thye kynge, for myne hee's not,
 "I'de sooner die to daie
 "Thanne lyve hys slave, as manie are,
 "Tho' I should lyve for aie."

Thenne Canterlone hee dydde goe out,
 To telle the maior straite
 To gett all thynges ynne reddyness
 For goode Syr Charleses fate.

Thenne Maister Canynge saughte the kynge,
 And felle down onne hys knee;
 "I'm come," quoth hee, "unto your grace
 "To move your clemencye."

Thenne quod the kynge, "Your tale speke out,
 "You have been much oure friende;
 "Whatever youre requeste may bee,
 "We wylle to ytte attende."

"My nobile liege! all my request
 "Ys for a nobile knyghte,
 "Who, tho' may hap he has done wronge,
 "He thoghte ytte styll was ryghte:

"Hee has a spouse and children twaine,
 "Alle rewyn'd are for aie;
 "Yff thatt you are resolv'd to lett
 "Charles Bawdin die to daie."

"Speke nott of such a traytour vile,"
 The kynge ynne fury sayde;
 "Before the ev'ning starre doth sheene,
 "Bawdin shall loose hys hedde:

"Justice does loudlie for hym calle
 "And hee shall have hys meede

"Speke, Maister Canynge! whatte thyng else
 "Atte present doe you neede?"

"My nobile liege!" goode Canynge sayde,
 "Leave justice to our Godde,
 "And laye the yronne rule asyde,
 "Be thynne the olyve rodde.

"Was Godde to serche our hertes and reines,
 "The best were synners grete;
 "Christ's vycarr only knowes ne synne,
 "Ynne alle thys mortall state.

"Let mercie rule thyne infante reigne,
 "Twylle faste thye crowne fulle sure;
 "From race to race thy familie
 "Alle sov'reigns shall endure:

"But yff wythe bloode and slaughter thou
 "Beginne thy infante reigne,
 "Thy crowne uponne thy childrennes brows
 "Wyll never lonng remayne."

"Canynge, awaie! thys traytour vile
 "Has scorn'd my pow'r and mee;
 "Howe canst thou thenne for such a manne
 "Intreate my clemencye?"

"My noble liege! the truly brave
 "Wylle val'rous actions prize,
 "Respect a brave and nobile mynde,
 "Although ynne enemies."

"Canynge, awaie! By Godde ynne heav'n
 "That dydd mee beinge gyve,
 "I will nott taste a bitt of breade
 "Whilst thys Syr Charles dothe lyve.

"By Marie, and all Seinctes ynne heav'n,
 "Thys sunne shall be hys laste."

Thenne Canynge dropt a brinie teare,
 And from the presence paste.

With herte brimm-fulle of gnawynge grief,
 Hee to Sir Charles dydd goe,
 And satte hymm down uponne a stoole,
 And teares beganne to flow.

"We all must die," quod brave Syr Charles;
 "Whatt bootes ytt howe or whenne?
 "Dethe y<sup>s</sup> the sure, the certaine fate
 "Of all wee mortall menne.

"Saye why, my friend, thie honest soul
 "Runs overr att thyne eye;
 "Is ytte for my most welcome doome
 "Thatt thou dost child-lyke crye?"

Quod godlie Canynge, "I do weepe,
 "Thatt thou soe soone must dye,
 "And leave thy sonnes and helpless wyfe;
 "Tis thys thatt wettes myne eye."

"Thenne drie the teares thatt out thyne eye
 "From godlie fountaines sprynge;
 "Dethe I despise, and alle the pow'r
 "Of Edward, traytour kynge.

"Whan throghe the tyrant's welcom means
 "I shall resigne my lyfe,
 "The Godde I serve wylle soone provyde
 "For bothe mye sonnes and wife.

" Before I sawe the lyghtsome sunne,
 " Thys was appointed mee;
 " Shall mortal manne repine or grudge
 " What Godde ordeynes to bee?
 " Howe oft ynne battaile have I stooode,
 " Whan thousands dy'd arounde;
 " Whan smokynge streams of crimson bloode
 " Imbrew'd the fatten'd grounde!
 " Howe dydd I know that ev'ry darte,
 " That cutte the airie waie,
 " Myghte notte finde passage toe my harte,
 " And close myne eyes for aie?
 " And shall I now, for feere of dethe,
 " Looke wanne and bee dismay'd?
 " Ne! fromm my herte flie childlyshe feere,
 " Be alle the manne display'd.
 " Ah, goddelyke Henrie! Godde forefende,
 " And garde thee and thyne sonne,
 " Yff 'tis hys wylle; but yff 'tis nott,
 " Why thenne hys wylle be donne.
 " My honeste friende, my faulte has beene
 " To serve Godde and mye prynce;
 " And thatt I no tyme-server am,
 " My dethe wylle soone convynce.
 " Ynne London citye was I borne,
 " Of parents of grete note;
 " My fadre dydd a nobile arms
 " Emblazon onne hys cote:
 " I make no doubte butt he ys gone
 " Where soone I hope to goe;
 " Where wee for ever shall bee blest,
 " From oute the reech of woe:
 " He taught mee justice and the laws,
 " Wyth pitie to unite;
 " And eke hee taughte mee howe to knowe
 " The wronge cause fromm the ryghte:
 " Hee taught mee wythe a prudent hande
 " To feede the hungrie poore,
 " Ne lette mye servants drive awaie
 " The hungrie fromme my doore:
 " And none can saye, butt all mye lyfe
 " I have hys wordyes kept;
 " And summ'd the actyonns of the daie
 " Eche nyghte before I slept.
 " I have a spouse, goe aske of her
 " Yff I defyl'd her bedde?
 " I have a kynge, and none can laie
 " Blacke treason onne my hedde.
 " Ynne Lent, and onne the holie eve,
 " Fromm fleshe I dydd refrayne;
 " Whie should I thenne appeare dismay'd
 " To leave thys worlde of payne?
 " Ne! hapless Henrie! I rejoyce,
 " I shall ne see thye dethe;
 " Moste willynglie in thy just cause
 " Do I resign my brethe.
 " Oh fickle people! rewyn'd londe!
 " Thou wylt kenne peace ne moe;

" While Richard's sonnes exalt themselves,
 " Thye brookes wythe bloude wylle flowe.
 " Saie, were ye tyr'd of godlie peace,
 " And godlie Henrie's reigne,
 " That you dydd choppe your easie daies
 " For those of bloude and peyne?
 " Whatte tho' I onne a sledde bee drawne,
 " And mangled by a hynde,
 " I do defye the traytour's pow'r,
 " He can ne harm my mynde:
 " Wyatte tho', uphoisted onne a pole,
 " Mye lymbes shall rotte ynne ayre,
 " And ne ryche monument of brasse
 " Charles Bawdin's name shall bear;
 " Yet ynne the holie booke above,
 " Whyche tyme can't eat awai,
 " There wythe the servants of the Lorde
 " Mye name shall lyve for aie.
 " Thenne welcome dethe! for lyfe eterne
 " I leve thys mortall lyfe;
 " Farewell, vayne worlde, and alle that's deare,
 " Mye sonnes and loving wyfe!
 " Now dethe as welcome to mee comes,
 " As e'er the month of Maie;
 " Nor woulde I even wyshe to lyve,
 " Wyth my dere wyfe to staie."
 Quod Canynge, " 'Tys a goodlie thyng
 " To bee prepar'd to die;
 " And from thys worlde of peyne and greffe
 " To Godde ynne heaven to flie."
 And nowe the bell beganne to tolle,
 And claryonnes to sounde;
 Syr Charles hee herde the horses feete
 A-prauncyng onne the grounde;
 And juste before the officers,
 Hys lovyng wyfe came ynne,
 Weepyng unfeigned teeres of woe,
 Wythe loude and dysmalle dynne.
 " Sweet Florence! nowe I praie forbere,
 " Ynne quiet lett mee die:
 " Praie Godde, that every Christian soule
 " Maye looke onne dethe as I.
 " Sweet Florence! why these brinie tears;
 " Theye washe my soule awaie,
 " And almost make mee wishe for lyfe,
 " Wyth thee, sweete dame, to staie.
 " 'Tys but a journie I shalle goe
 " Untoe the lande of blysse;
 " Nowe, as a prooffe of husbande's love,
 " Receive thys holie kysse."
 Thenne Florence, fault'ring ynne her saie, Tremblyng these wordyes spoke,
 " Ah, cruele Edward! bloudie kynge!
 " My herte ys welle nyghe broke:
 " Ah, sweete Syr Charles! why wylt thou goe,
 " Wythoute thye lovyng wyfe!
 " The cruelle axe that cuttes thye necke,
 " Ytt eke shall ende mye lyfe."

And nowe the officers came ynn
 To brynge Syr Charles awaie,
 Who turnedd toe hys lovyng wyfe,
 And thus toe her dydd saye:
 "I goe to lyfe, and nott to dethe;
 "Truste thou ynn Godde above,
 "And teache thye sonnes to feare the Lorde,
 "And ynn theyre hertes hym love:
 "Teache them to runne the nobile race
 "Thatt I theyre fader runne:
 "Florence! should dethe thee take—adieu!
 "Yee officers, lead onne."
 Thenne Florence rav'd as anie madde,
 And dydd her treeses tere;
 "Oh! staie, my husbände! lorde! and lyfe!"
 Syr Charles thenne dropt a teare;
 "Till tyredd oute wyth ravyng loude,
 Shee fellen onne the flore;
 Syr Charles exerted alle hys myghte,
 And march'd fromm oute the dore.
 Uponne a sledde hee mounted thenne,
 Wythe lookes fulle brave and swete;
 Lookes, thatt enshoonē ne moe concern
 Thanne anie ynn the strete.
 Before him went the council-menne,
 Ynn scarlette robes and golde,
 And tassils spanglyng ynn the sunne,
 Muche glorious to beholde:
 The Freers of Seincte Augustyne next
 Appeared to the syghte,
 Alle cladd ynn homelie russett weedes,
 Of godlie monkysh plyghte:
 Ynn diffraunt partes a godlie psalme
 Most sweetlie theye dydd chaunt;
 Behynde theyre backes syx mynstrelles came,
 Who tun'd the strunge bataunt.
 Thenne fyve-and-twenty archers came;
 Echone the bowe dydd bende,
 From rescue of kynge Henries friends
 Syr Charles forr to defend.
 Bold as a lyon came Syr Charles,
 Drawn on a clothe-layd sledde,
 By two blacke stedes ynn trappynge white,
 Wyth plumes uponne theyre hedde:
 Behynd hyme fyve-and-twentye moe
 Of archers stronge and stoute,
 Wyth bended bowe echone ynn hande,
 Marched ynn goodlie route:
 Seincte Jameses Freers marched next,
 Echone hys parte dydd chaunt;
 Behynde theyre backs syx mynstrelles came,
 Who tun'd the strunge bataunt:
 Thenne came the maior and eldermenne,
 Ynn clothe of scarlet deckt;
 And theyre attendyng menne echone,
 Lyke Easterne princes trickt:
 And after them a multitude
 Of citizens dydd thronge;

The wyndowes were all full of heddes,
 As hee dydd passe alonge.
 And whenne hee came to the hyghe crosse,
 Syr Charles dydd turne and saie,
 "O Thou, thatt savest manne fromme synne,
 "Washe maye soule clean thys daye."
 Att the grete mynster windowe sat
 The kynge ynn mycle state,
 To see Charles Bawdin goe alonge
 To hys most welcom fate.
 Soon as the sledde drewe nygh enowe,
 Thatt Edwarde hee myghte heare,
 The brave Syr Charles hee dydd stande uppe,
 And thus hys wordes declare:
 "Thou seest mee, Edwarde! traytour vile!
 "Expos'd to infamie!
 "But be assur'd, disloyall manne!
 "I'm greater nowe thanne thee.
 "Bye foule proceedyngs, murdre, bloude,
 "Thou wearest nowe a crowne,
 "And hast appoynted mee to dye,
 "By power nott thyne owne.
 "Thou thynkest I shall dye to-daie;
 "I have beene dede, till nowe,
 "And soon shall lyve to weare a crowne
 "For aie uponne my browe:
 "Whylst thou, perhapps for some few yeares,
 "Shalt rule thys fickle lande
 "To lett them knowe howe wyde the rule
 "'Twixt kynge and tyrant hande:
 "Thye pow'r unjust, thou traytour slave!
 "Shall falle onne thy owne hedde."
 Fromm out of hearyng of the kynge
 Departed thenne the sledde.
 Kynge Edwarde's soule rush'd to hys face;
 Hee turn'd hys head awaie,
 And to hys broder Gloucester
 Hee thus dydd speke and saie:
 "To him that soe-much-dreaded dethe
 "Ne ghastlie terrors brynge,
 "Behold the manne! hee spake the truthe,
 "Hee's greater than a kynge!"
 "So lett hym die!" Duke Richard sayde;
 "And maye echone our foes
 "Bende downe theyre neckes to bloudie exe,
 "And feede the carryon crowes."
 And now the horses gentlie drewe
 Syr Charles uppe the hyghe hylle!
 The exe dydd glisterr ynn the sunne,
 Hys pretious bloude to spylle.
 Syr Charles dydd uppe the scaffold goe,
 As uppe a gilded carre
 Of victorie, bye val'rous chiefs
 Gain'd in the bloudie warre:
 And to the people hee dydd saie,
 "Beholde you see mee dye
 "For servynge loyally mye kynge,
 "Mye kynge most rightfullie.

" As longe as Edward rules thys lande,
 " Ne quiet you wylle knowe;
 " Your sonnes and husbandes shall be slayne,
 " And brookes withe bloude shalle flowe.
 " You leave youre goode and lawfull kynge,
 " Whenne ynne adversitee;
 " Lyke mee, untoe the true cause stycke,
 " And for the true cause dye."
 Thenne hee, wyth preestes, uponne his knees,
 A pray'r to Godde dydd make,
 Beseechynge hym unto hymselfe
 Hys partynge soule to take.
 Then kneelynge downe, he layd hys heede
 Most seemlie onne the blocke;
 Whyche fromme hys bodie fayre at once
 The able heddes-manne stroke!
 And oute the bloude beganne to flowe,
 And rounde the scaffold twyne;
 And tears, enow to washe 't awaie,
 Dydd flowe fromme each mann's eyne.
 The bloudie exe hys bodie fayre
 Ynnto foure parties cutte;
 And ev'rye parte, and eke hys hedde
 Upon a pole was putte.
 One parte dydd rotte onne Kynwulph-hylle,
 One onne the mynster-tower,
 And one from off the castle-gate
 The crowen dydd devoure.
 The other onne Seyncte Powle's goode gate,
 A dreery spectacle;
 His hedde was plac'd onne the hygh crosse,
 Ynne hyghe-streete most nobile.
 Thus was the end of Bawdin's fate;
 Godde prosper long our kynge,
 And grant hee may, wyth Bawdin's soule,
 Ynne heaven Godd's mercie synge!

§ 88. Grongar Hill. DYER.

SILENT Nymph! with curious eye,
 Who, the purple evening, lie
 On the mountain's lonely van,
 Beyond the noise of busy man,
 Painting fair the form of things,
 While the yellow linnet sings;
 Or the tuneful nightingale
 Charms the forest with her tale;
 Come, with all thy various hues,
 Come, and aid thy sister Muse.
 Now, while Phœbus riding high,
 Gives lustre to the land and sky,
 Grongar Hill invites my song,
 Draw the landscape bright and strong;
 Grongar! in whose mossy cells,
 Sweetly musing Quiet dwells;
 Grongar! in whose silent shade,
 For the modest Muses made,
 So oft I have, the evening still,
 At the fountain of a rill,
 Sat upon a flow'ry bed,
 With my hand beneath my head,
 While stray'd my eyes o'er Towy's flood,
 Over mead and over wood,
 From house to house, from hill to hill,
 Till contemplation had her fill.

About his checquer'd sides I wind,
 And leave his brooks and meads behind;
 And groves and grottos, where I lay,
 And vistas shooting beams of day.

(h) Armed, pointed. (m) Stretched.
 (i) Hoisted on high, raised. (n) Like.
 (j) Foes, enemies. (o) Two.
 (k) Fly. (p) Flaming.
 (l) Head.

Wide and wider spreads the vale,
 As circles on a smooth canal;
 The mountains round, unhappy fate!
 Sooner or later, of all height,
 Withdraw their summits from the skies,
 And lessen as the others rise.
 Still the prospect wider spreads,
 Adds a thousand woods and meads;
 Still it widens, widens still,
 And sinks the newly-risen hill.

Now I gain the mountain's brow;
 What a landscape lies below!
 No clouds, no vapors, intervene;
 But the gay, the open scene
 Does the face of Nature show
 In all the hues of heaven's bow;
 And, swelling to embrace the light,
 Spreads around beneath the sight.

Old castles on the cliffs arise,
 Proudly tow'ring in the skies;
 Rushing from the woods, the spires
 Seem from hence ascending fires:
 Half his beams Apollo sheds
 On the yellow mountain heads,
 Gilds the fleeces of the flocks,
 And glitters on the broken rocks.

Below me trees unnumber'd rise,
 Beautiful in various dyes:
 The gloomy pine, the poplar blue,
 The yellow beech, the sable yew;
 The slender fir that taper grows,
 The sturdy oak with broad-spread boughs;
 And, beyond the purple grove,
 Haunt of Phyllis, queen of love!
 Gaudy as the op'ning dawn,
 Lies a long and level lawn,
 On which a dark hill, steep and high,
 Holds and charms the wand'ring eye.
 Deep are his feet in Towy's flood;
 His sides are cloth'd with waving wood;
 And ancient towers crown his brow,
 That cast an awful look below;
 Whose ragged walls the ivy creeps,
 And with her arms from falling keeps:
 So both in safety from the wind
 On mutual dependence find.

'Tis now the raven's bleak abode,
 'Tis now th' apartment of the toad;
 And there the fox securely feeds,
 And there the pois'nous adder breeds,
 Conceal'd in ruins, moss, and weeds;
 While, ever and anon, there falls
 Huge heaps of hoary moulder'd walls.
 Yet time has seen, that lifts the low,
 And level lays the lofty brow,
 Has seen this broken pile complete,
 Big with the vanity of state;
 But transient is the smile of fate!

 (r) Beats, stamps. (x) Armed.
 (s) Closely. (y) Arose.
 (t) Mantled, covered. (z) Helmet.

A little rule, a little sway,
A sun-beam in a winter's day,
Is all the proud and mighty have
Between the cradle and the grave.

And see the rivers, how they run
Through woods and meads, in shade and sun!
Sometimes swift, sometimes slow,
Wave succeeding wave, they go,
A various journey to the deep,
Like human life, to endless sleep!
Thus is Nature's vesture wrought,
To instruct our wand'ring thought,
Thus she dresses green and gay,
To disperse our cares away.

Ever charming, ever new,
When will the landscape tire the view!
The fountain's fall, the river's flow,
The woody valleys, warm and low;
The windy summit, wild and high,
Roughly rushing on the sky!
The pleasant seat, the ruin'd tow'r,
The naked rock, the shady bow'r;
The town and village, dome and farm,
Each give each a double charm,
As pearls upon an Ethiop's arm.

See on the mountain's southern side,
Where the prospect opens wide,
Where the evening gilds the tide,
How close and small the hedges lie!
What streaks of meadows cross the eye!
A step, methinks may pass the stream,
So little distant dangers seem:
So we mistake the future's face,
Ey'd through Hope's deluding glass,
As yon summit's soft and fair,
Clad in colors of the air,
Which, to those who journey near,
Barren, brown, and rough appear;
Still we tread the same coarse way;
The present's still a cloudy day.

O may I with myself agree,
And never covet what I see!
Content me with a humble shade,
My passions tam'd, my wishes laid:
For while our wishes wildly roll,
We banish quiet from the soul:
'Tis thus the busy beat the air,
And misers gather wealth and care.

Now, e'en now, my joys run high,
As on the mountain turf I lie;
While the wanton Zephyr sings,
And in the vale perfumes his wings;
While the waters murmur deep;
While the shepherd charms his sheep;
While the birds unbounded fly,
And with music fill the sky,
Now, e'en now, my joys run high.

Be full, ye courts! be great who will;
Search for peace with all your skill;
Open wide the lofty door,
Seek her on the marble floor:
In vain ye search, she is not there;
In vain ye search the domes of Care!

Grass and flower Quiet treads,
On the meads and mountain heads,
Along with Pleasure close allied,
Ever by each other's side;
And often, by the murmur'ing rill,
Hears the thrush, while all is still,
Within the groves of Grongar Hill.

§ 89. A Monody on the Death of his Lady.
By George Lord Lyttelton.

"Ipse cava solans ægrum testudine amorem,
"Te, dulcis conjux, te solo in littore secum,
"Te veniente die, te decedente canebat."

At length escap'd from ev'ry human eye,
From ev'ry duty, ev'ry care, [share,
That in my mournful thoughts might claim a
Or force my tears their flowing stream to dry;
Beneath the gloom of this embow'ring shade,
This lone retreat for tender sorrow made,
I now may give my burthen'd heart relief,
And pour forth all my stores of grief;
Of grief surpassing every other woe,
Far as the purest bliss, the happiest love
Can on the ennobled mind bestow,
Exceeds the vulgar joys that move
Our gross desires, inelegant and low.

Ye tufted groves, ye gently-falling rills,
Ye high o'ershadowing hills,
Ye lawns gay smiling with eternal green,
Oft have you my Lucy seen!
But never shall you now behold her more:
Nor will she now, with fond delight,
And taste refin'd, your rural charms explore.
Clos'd are those beauteous eyes in endless night,
Those beauteous eyes, where, beaming, us'd to shine
Reason's pure light, and Virtue's spark divine.

Oft would the Dryads of these woods rejoice
To hear her heavenly voice;
For her despising, when she deign'd to sing,
The sweetest songsters of the spring;
The woodlark and the linnet pleas'd no more;
The nightingale was mute,
And ev'ry shepherd's flute
Was cast in silent scorn away,
While all attended to her sweeter lay.
Ye larks and linnets, now resume your song;
And thou, melodious Philomel,
Again thy plaintive story tell;
For death has stopp'd that tuneful tongue,
Whose music could alone your warbling notes excel.

In vain I look around,
O'er all the well-known ground,
My Lucy's wonted footsteps to descry:
Where oft we us'd to walk;
Where oft in tender talk
We saw the summer sun go down the sky;
Nor by yon fountain's side,
Nor where its waters glide

Along the valley, can she now be found :
 In all the wide-stretch'd prospect's ample bound:
     No more my mournful eye
     Can aught of her espy,
 But the sad sacred earth where her dear relics lie.

O shades of Hagley, where is now your boast?
 Your bright inhabitant is lost.
 You she preferr'd to all the gay resorts
 Where female vanity might wish to shine,
 The pomp of cities, and the pride of courts.
 Her modest beauties shunn'd the public eye :
     To your sequester'd dales,
     And flower-embroider'd vales,
 From an admiring world she chose to fly :
 With Nature there retir'd, and Nature's God,
     The silent paths of wisdom trod,
 And banish'd every passion from her breast,
     But those the gentlest and the best,
 Whose holy flames with energy divine
 The virtuous heart enliven and improve,
 The conjugal and the maternal love.

Sweet babes! who like the little playful fawns,
 Were wont to trip along these verdant lawns,
     By your delighted mother's side,
     Who now your infant steps shall guide?
 Ah! where is now the hand, whose tender
     care,

To every virtue would have form'd your youth,
 And strew'd with flow'rs the thorny ways of truth?

O loss beyond repair!

O wretched father! left alone,

To weep their dire misfortune, and thy own!
 How shall thy weaken'd mind, oppress'd with
     woe,

And, drooping o'er thy Lucy's grave,
 Perform the duties that you doubly owe,

Now she, alas! is gone, [save?
 From folly and from vice their helpless age to

Where were ye, Muses, when relentless Fate
 From these fond arms your fair disciple tore;
 From these fond arms, that vainly strove
 With hapless ineffectual love,

To guard her bosom from the mortal blow?

Could not your favoring pow'r, Aonian
     maids, [date;

Could not, alas! your pow'r prolong her
 For whom so oft, in these inspiring shades,

Or under Camden's moss-clad mountains hoar,
 You open'd all your sacred store;

Whate'er your ancient sages taught,

Your ancient bards sublimely thought,

And bade her raptur'd breast with all your spirit glow?

Nor then did Pindus or Castalia's plain,
 Or Aganippe's fount, your steps detain,
 Nor in the Thespian valleys did you play;
     Nor then on Mincio's* bank
     Beset with osiers dank,
 Nor where Clitumnus† rolls his gentle
     stream,

Nor where, through hanging woods,
 Steep Anio‡ pours his floods,
 Nor yet where Meles § or Ilissus || stray.

Ill does it now beseem,

That, of your guardian care bereft, [left.
 To dire disease and death your darling should be

Now what avails it, that in early bloom,
 When light fantastic toys
 Are all her sex's joys,
 With you she search'd the wit of Greece
     and Rome;

And all that in her latter days,
 To emulate her ancient praise,
 Italia's happy genius could produce;

Or what the Gallic fire
 Bright sparkling could inspire,
 By all the Graces temper'd and refin'd;
 Or what, in Britain's isle,
 Most favor'd with your smile,

The pow'rs of Reason and of Fancy join'd
 To full perfection have conspir'd to raise?

Ah! what is now the use

Of all those treasures that enrich'd her mind,
 To black Oblivion's gloom for ever now con-
     sign'd!

At least, ye Nine, her spotless name

'Tis yours from death to save,
 And in the temple of immortal Fame
 With golden characters her worth engrave.

Come then, ye virgin sisters, come,
 And strew with choicest flow'rs her hal-
     low'd tomb;

But foremost thou, in sable vestment clad,
 With accents sweet and sad, [urn

Thou plaintive Muse, whom o'er his Laura's
 Unhappy Petrarch call'd to mourn;

O come, and to this fairer Laura pay

A more impassion'd tear, a more pathetic lay!

Tell how each beauty of her mind and face
 Was brighten'd by some sweet peculiar
 How eloquent in ev'ry look [grace!
 Through her expressive eyes her soul distinctly spoke!

Tell how her manners, by the world refin'd,
 Left all the taint of modish vice behind,
 And made each charin of polish'd courts
 With candid Truth's simplicity, [agree

* The Mincio runs by Mantua, the birth-place of Virgil.

† The Clitumnus is a river of Umbria, the residence of Propertius.

‡ The Anio runs through Tibur or Tivoli, where Horace had a villa.

§ The Meles is a river of Ionia, from whence Homer, supposed to be born on its banks, is called Mellisigenes.

|| The Ilissus is a river at Athens.

And uncorrupted Innocence!
 Tell how to more than manly sense
 She join'd the soft'ning influence
 Of more than female tenderness:
 How, in the thoughtless days of wealth and
 joy,
 Which oft the care of others' good destroy;
 Her kindly-melting heart,
 To every want, and every woe,
 To guilt itself when in distress,
 The balm of pity would impart;
 And all relief that bounty could bestow!
 E'en for the kid or lamb, that pour'd its life
 Beneath the bloody knife,
 Her gentle tears would fall; [to all Tears, from sweet Virtue's source, benevolent to
 Not only good and kind,
 But strong and elevated was her mind!
 A spirit that with noble pride
 Could look superior down
 On Fortune's smile or frown;
 That could, without regret or pain,
 To Virtue's lowest duty sacrifice
 Or Interest or Ambition's highest prize;
 That, injur'd or offended, never tried
 Its dignity by vengeance to maintain,
 But by magnanimous disdain;
 A wit that, temperately bright,
 With inoffensive light
 All pleasing shone; nor ever pass'd
 The decent bounds that wisdom's sober hand,
 And sweet Benevolence's mild command,
 And bashful Modesty, before it cast.
 A prudence undeceiving, undeceiv'd,
 That nor too little nor too much believ'd;
 That scorn'd unjust Suspicion's coward fear,
 And, without weakness, knew to be sincere.
 Such Lucy was, when in her fairest days,
 Amidst th' acclaim of universal praise.
 In life's and glory's freshest bloom, [tomb.
 Death came remorseless on, and sunk her to the
 So, where the silent streams of Liris glide,
 In the soft bosom of Campania's vale,
 When now the wintry tempests all are fled,
 And genial summer breathes her gentle gale,
 The verdant orange lifts its beauteous head;
 From ev'ry branch the balmy flow'rets rise;
 On ev'ry bough the golden fruits are seen;
 With odors sweet it fills the smiling skies,
 The wood-nymphs tend it, and th' Idalian
 queen:
 But, in the midst of all its blooming pride,
 A sudden blast from Apenninus blows,
 Cold with perpetual snows; [and dies.
 The tender blighted plant shrinks up its leaves,
 Arise, O Petrarch! from th' Elysian bow'rs,
 With never-fading myrtles twin'd,
 And fragrant with ambrosial flow'rs,
 Where to thy Laura thou again art join'd;
 Arise, and hither bring the silver lyre,
 Tun'd by thy skilful hand
 To the soft notes of elegant desire,
 With which o'er many a land

Was spread the fame of thy disastrous love;
 To me resign the vocal shell,
 And teach my sorrows to relate
 Their melancholy tale so well,
 As may e'en things inanimate, [move.
 Rough mountain oaks, and desert rocks, to pity

What were, alas! thy woes compar'd to mine?
 To thee thy mistress in the blissful band
 Of Hymen never gave her hand;
 The joys of wedded love were never thine.
 In thy domestic care,
 She never bore a share,
 Nor with endearing art
 Would heal thy wounded heart
 Of every secret grief that fester'd there:
 Nor did her fond affection on the bed
 Of sickness watch thee, and thy languid head
 Whole nights on her unwearied arm sus-tain,
 And charm away the sense of pain;
 Nor did she crown your mutual flame
 With pledges dear, and with a father's tender
 name.

O best of wives! O dearer far to me
 Than when thy virgin charms
 Were yielded to my arms:
 How can my soul endure the loss of thee?
 How in the world, to me a desert grown,
 Abandon'd and alone,
 Without my sweet companion can I live!
 Without thy lovely smile,
 The dear reward of every virtuous toil,
 What pleasure now can pall'd Ambition give?
 E'en the delighted sense of well-earn'd praise,
 Unshar'd by thee, no more my lifeless thoughts could raise.

For my distracted mind
 What succour can I find?
 On whom for consolation shall I call?
 Support me, ev'ry friend;
 Your kind assistance lend,
 To bear the weight of this oppressive woe.
 Alas! each friend of mine,
 My dear departed love, so much was thine,
 That none has any comfort to bestow.
 My books, the best relief
 In every other grief,
 Are now with your idea sadden'd all:
 Each favorite author we together read
 My tortur'd memory wounds, and speaks of Lucy dead.

We were the happiest pair of human kind:
 The rolling year its various course perform'd,
 And back return'd again;
 Another, and another, smiling came,
 And saw our happiness unchang'd remain.
 Still in her golden chain
 Harmonious Concord did our wishes bind:
 Our studies, pleasures, taste the same.

O fatal, fatal, stroke!
 That all this pleasing fabric Love had rais'd
 Of rare felicity,
 On which even wanton Vice with envy gaz'd,
 And every scheme of bliss our hearts had form'd,
 With soothing hope, for many a future day,
 In one sad moment broke!
 Yet, O my soul! thy rising murmurs stay;
 Nor dare th' all-wise Disposer to arraign,
 Or against his supreme decree
 With impious grief complain: [fade,
 That all thy full-blown joys at once should
 Was his most righteous will—and be that will obey'd.

Would thy fond love his grace to her control,
 And, in these low abodes of sin and pain,
 Her pure exalted soul,
 Unjustly, for thy partial good, detain?
 No—rather strive thy grovelling mind to raise
 Up to that unclouded blaze,
 That heavenly radiance of eternal light,
 In which enthron'd she now with pity sees,
 How frail, how insecure, how slight,
 Is every mortal bliss!
 Even Love itself, if rising by degrees,
 Beyond the bounds of this imperfect state,
 Whose fleeting joys so soon must end,
 It does not to its sovereign good ascend.
 Rise then, my soul, with hope elate,
 And seek those regions of serene delight,
 Whose peaceful path, and ever-open gate,
 No feet but those of harden'd Guilt shall miss:
 There Death himself thy Lucy shall restore;
 There yield up all his pow'r ne'er to divide you
 more.

§ 90. A Winter Piece. Anon.

It was a winter's evening, and fast came down
 the snow, [did blow;
 And keenly o'er the wide heath the bitter blast
 When a damsel all forlorn, quite bewilder'd in her way; [did say:
 Press'd her baby to her bosom, and sadly thus
 "Oh! cruel was my father, that shut his door on me, [could see;
 And cruel was my mother, that such a sight
 And cruel is the wintry wind, that chills my heart with cold; [for gold!
 But crueller than all, the lad that left my love
 Hush, hush, my lovely baby, and warm thee in my breast; [distress!
 Ah, little thinks thy father how sadly we're
 For, cruel as he is, did he know but how we fare,
 He'd shield us in his arms from this bitter piercing air.
 Cold, cold, my dearest jewel! thy little life is gone: [down:
 Oh let my tears revive thee, so warm that trickle
 My tears that gush so warm, oh they freeze before they fall: [bereft of all
 Ah wretched, wretched mother! thou'rt now

Then down she sunk despairing upon the drifted snow, [loud her woe:
 And, wrung with killing anguish, lamented
 She kiss'd her babe's pale lips, and laid it by her side;
 Then cast her eyes to heaven, then bow'd her head, and died.

§ 91. The School Mistress. In Imitation of Spenser. Shenstone.

— Auditæ voces, vagitus et ingens,
 Infantumque animæ flentes in limine primo.
 VIRG.

AH me! full sorely is my heart forlorn,
 To think how modest worth neglected lies,
 While partial fame doth with her blasts adorn
 Such deeds alone as pride and pomp disguise:
 Deeds of ill sort, and mischievous emprise:
 Lend me thy clarion, Goddess! let me try
 To sound the praise of merit ere it dies;
 Such as I oft have chanced to espy,
 Lost in the dreary shades of dull obscurity.

In ev'ry village, mark'd with little spire,
 Embower'd in trees, and hardly known to
 fame,
 There dwells, in lowly shade and mean attire,
 A matron old, whom we School-mistress
 name;
 Who boasts unruly brats with birch to tame:
 They grieven sore, in piteous durance pent,
 Aw'd by the pow'r of this relentless dame,
 And oft-times, on vagaries idly bent,
 For unkempt hair, or task unconn'd, are sorely shent.

And all in sight doth rise a birchin tree,
 Which Learning near her little dome did
 Whilome a twig of small regard to see, [stow,
 Though now so wide its waving branches
 flow,
 And work the simple vassals mickle woe:
 For not a wind might curl the leaves that blew, [low;
 But their limbs shudder'd, and their pulse beat
 And, as they look'd, they found their horror
 grew,
 And shap'd it into rods, and tingled at the view.
 So have I seen (who has not, may conceive)
 A lifeless phantom near a garden plac'd:
 So doth it wanton birds of peace bereave,
 Of sport, of song, of pleasure, of repast:
 They start, they stare, they wheel, they look aghast;
 Sad servitude! such comfortless annoy
 May no bold Briton's riper age e'er taste!
 Ne superstition clog his dance of joy,
 Ne vision, empty, vain, his native bliss destroy!
 Near to this dome is found a patch so green,
 On which the tribe their gambols do display;
 And at the door impris'ning board is seen,
 Lest weakly wights of smaller size should stray,

Eager, perdie, to bask in sunny day! [sound,
The noises intermix'd, which thence re-
Do Learning's little tenement betray;
Where sits the dame, disguis'd in look profound, [around.
And eyes her Fairy throng, and turns her wheel

Her cap, far whiter than the driven snow,
Emblem right meet of decency does yield;
Her apron dyed in grain, as blue, I trowe,
As is the hare-bell that adorns the field:
And in her hand, for sceptre, she does wield
Tway birchin sprays, with anxious fear en-
twin'd,
With dark distrust, and sad repentance fill'd,
And stedfast hate, and sharp affliction join'd,
And fury uncontrol'd, and chastisement unkind.

Few but have kenn'd, in semblance meet pourtray'd,
The childish faces of old Æol's train,
Libs, Notus, Auster*: these in frowns array'd,
How then would fare on earth, or sky, or main,
Were the stern God to give his slaves the rein?
And were not she rebellious breasts to quell,
And were not she her statutes to maintain,
The cot no more, I ween, were deem'd
the cell [dwell.
Where comely peace of mind and decent order

A russet stole was o'er her shoulders thrown;
A russet kirtle fenc'd the nipping air:
'Twas simple russet, but it was her own,
'Twas her own country bred the flock so fair;
'Twas her own labor did the fleece prepare,
And, sooth to say, her pupils, rang'd around,
Through pious awe did term it passing rare;
For they in gaping wonderment abound,
And think, no doubt, she been the greatest wight on ground.

Albeit, ne flattery did corrupt her truth;
Ne pompous title did debauch her ear;
Goody, good-woman, gossip, n'aunt, forsooth,
Or dame, the sole additions she did hear;
Yet these she challeng'd, these she held right
dear;
Ne would esteem him act as mought behove,
Who should not honor'd eld with these revere;
For never title yet so mean could prove,
But there was eke a mind which did that title
love.

One ancient hen she took delight to feed,
The plodding pattern of the busy dame,
Which ever and anon, impell'd by need,
Into her school, begirt with chickens, came;
Such favor did her past deportment claim;
And if neglect had lavish'd on the ground Fragment of bread, she would collect the same;

For well she knew, and quaintly could expound,
What sin it were to waste the smallest crumb
she found.

Herbs too she knew, and well of each could speak,
That in her garden sipp'd the silv'ry dew,
Where no vain flow'r disclos'd a gaudy streak,
But herbs for use and physic not a few,
Of grey renown, within those borders grew;
The tufted basil, pun-provoking thyme,
Fresh baum, and marygold of cheerful hue,
The lowly gill, that never dares to climb,
And more I fain would sing, disdaining here to rhyme.

Yet euphrasy may not be left unsung,
That gives dim eyes to wander leagues
around;
And pungent radish, biting infant's tongue;
And plantain ribb'd, that heals the reaper's
wound;
And marj'ram sweet, in shepherds' posie
found;
And lavender, whose spikes of azure bloom
Shall be, erewhile, in arid bundles bound,
To lurk amidst the labors of her loom,
And crown her 'kerchiefs clean with mickle rare perfume.

And here trim rosemarine, that whilom
crown'd
The daintiest garden of the proudest peer,
Ere, driven from its envied site, it found
A sacred shelter for its branches here,
Where edg'd with gold its glitt'ring skirts appear.
O wassel days! O customs meet and well!
Ere this was banish'd from its lofty sphere;
Simplicity then sought this humble cell,
Nor ever would she more with thane and lordlings dwell.

Here oft the dame, on Sabbath's decent eve,
Hymned such psalms as Sternhold forth
did mete.
If winter 'twere, she to her hearth did cleave;
But in her garden found a summer seat:
Sweet melody! to hear her then repeat
How Israel's sons, beneath a foreign king,
While taunting foe-men did a song entreat,
All for the nonce untuning every string,
Uphung their useless lyres—small heart had they to sing.

For she was just, and friend to virtuous lore,
And pass'd much time in truly virtuous
deed;
And in those elfins' ears would oft deplore
The times when Truth by popish rage did bleed,

 To stay harsh justice in its mid career.
 On thee she calls, on thee, her parent dear ;

ECLOGUE I.

Selim; or the Shepherd's Moral.

Scene, a Valley, near Bagdat.—Time, the Morning.

"YE Persian maids, attend your Poet's lays,
" And hear how shepherds pass their golden
" days. [tains
" Not all are blest whom Fortune's hand sus-
" With wealth in courts, nor all that haunt the
" plains:
" Well may your hearts believe the truths I tell;
" 'Tis virtue makes the bliss, where'er we
" dwell."

Thus Selim sung, by sacred Truth inspir'd;
Nor praise but such as Truth bestow'd, desir'd:
Wise in himself, his meaning songs convey'd
Informing morals to the shepherd maid;
Or taught the swains that surest bliss to find,
What groves nor streams bestow, a virtuous mind. [bride,

When sweet and blushing, like a virgin
The radiant morn resum'd her orient pride;
When wanton gales along the vallies play,
Breathe on each flow'r, and bear their sweets
away;

By Tygris' wandering waves he sat, and sung,
This useful lesson for the fair and young:

"Ye Persian dames," he said, "to you be-

"(Well may they please) the morals of my

" Yet think not these, all beauteous as they are,
" The best kind blessings Heaven can grant the
" fair:

"Who trust alone in beauty's feeble ray,
" Boast but the worth Bassora's* pearls display!

"And shepherds sought her on the silent plain;

Thus sung the swain; and ancient legends

The maids of Bagdat verified the lay: [say,

Dear to the plains, the Virtues came along;

The shepherds lov'd, and Selim bless'd his song.

Hassan; or the Camel-Driver.

Scene, the Desert.—Time, Mid-day.

IN silent horror o'er the boundless waste,
The driver Hassan with his camels pass'd:
One cruse of water on his back he bore,
And his light scrip contain'd a scanty store;
A fan of painted feathers in his hand,
To guard his shaded face from scorching sand.
The sultry sun had gain'd the middle sky,
And not a tree, and not an herb, was nigh:
The beasts with pain their dusty way pursue,
Shrill roar'd the winds, and dreary was the view!
With desperate sorrow wild, th' affrighted man Thrice sigh'd, thrice struck his breast, and thus began:

* The Gulf of that name, famous for the pearl fishery.

" Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
 " When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my

 " Ah! little thought I of the blasting wind,
 " The thirst or pinching hunger that I find!
 " Bethink thee, Hassan, where shall thirst
   " assuage,
 " When fails this cruse, his unrelenting rage?
 " Soon shall this scrip its precious load resign;
 " Then what but tears and hunger shall be
   " thine?
 " Ye mute companions of my toils, that bear
 " In all my griefs a more than equal share!

 " Or moss-crown'd fountains mitigate the day,
 " In vain ye hope the green delights to know,

 " Here rocks alone, and tasteless sands are found,

 " Full oft we tempt the land, and oft the sea;
 " And are we only yet repaid by thee?
 " Ah! why was ruin so attractive made?

ECLOGUE III.

Abra; or, the Georgian Sultana.

Scene, a Forest.—Time, the Evening.

IN Georgia's land, where Tefflis' tow'rs are
 In distant view along the level green: [seen
 While evening dews enrich the glitt'ring glade,
 And the tall forests cast a longer shade;
 What time 'tis sweet o'er fields of rice to stray,
 Or scent the breathing maize at setting day;
 Amidst the maids of Zagen's peaceful grove,
 Emyra sung the pleasing cares of love.

Of Abra first began the tender strain,
 Who led her youth with flocks upon the plain;
 At morn she came, those willing flocks to lead,
 Where lilies rear them in the wat'ry mead:
 From early dawn the live-long hours she told,
 Till late at silent eve she penn'd the fold.
 Deep in the grove, beneath the secret shade,
 A various wreath of od'rous flowers she made.
 Gay motley'd pinks and sweet jonquils she chose,*

The violet blue, that on the moss-bank grows;
 All sweet to sense, the flaunting rose was there;
 The finish'd chaplet well adorn'd her hair.

Great Abbas chanc'd that fated morn to stray,
 By love conducted from the chace away:

* That these flowers are found in very great abundance in some of the provinces of Persia, see the Modern History of the ingenious Mr. Salmon.

Among the vocal vales he heard her song,
And sought, the vales and echoing groves among.
At length he found, and woo'd the rural maid;
She knew the monarch, and with fear obey'd.

"Be ev'ry youth like royal Abbas mov'd.

"And ev'ry Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!

The royal lover bore her from the plain;
Yet still her crook and bleating flock remain:
Oft as she went she backward turn'd her view,
And bade that crook and bleating flock adieu.
Fair, happy maid! to other scenes remove;
To richer scenes of golden pow'r and love!
Go, leave the simple pipe, and shepherd's strain;
With love delight thee, and with Abbas reign.

"Be ev'ry youth like royal Abbas mov'd,

"And ev'ry Georgian maid like Abra lov'd".

Yet, midst the blaze of courts, she fix'd her
love

On the cool fountain, or the shady grove;
Still, with the shepherd's innocence, her mind
To the sweet vale and flow'ry mead inclin'd;
And oft as Spring renew'd the plains with flow'rs,

[hours,
Breath'd his soft gales, and led the fragrant
With sure return she sought the sylvan scene,
The breezy mountains, and the forests green.
Her maids around her mov'd, a duteous band!
Each bore a crook all-rural in her hand:
Some simple lay of flocks and herds they sung;
With joy the mountain and the forest rung.

"Be ev'ry youth like royal Abbas mov'd,

"And ev'ry Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!"

And oft the royal lover left the care
And thorns of state, attendant on the Fair;
Oft to the shades and low-roof'd cots retir'd,
Or sought the vale where first his heart was
A russet mantle, like a swain, he wore; [fir'd:
And thought of crowns and busy courts no more.

"Be ev'ry youth like royal Abbas mov'd,

"And ev'ry Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!"

Blest was the life that royal Abbas led:
Sweet was his love, and innocent his bed.
What if in wealth the noble maid excel;
The simple shepherd-girl can love as well.
Let those who rule on Persia's jewell'd throne
Be fam'd for love, and gentlest love alone;
Or wreath, like Abbas, full of fair renown,
The lover's myrtle with the warrior's crown.
"O happy days!" the maids around her say;
"O haste, profuse of blessings, haste away!"

"Be ev'ry youth like royal Abbas mov'd,

"And ev'ry Georgian maid like Abra lov'd!"

ECLOGUE IV.

Agib and Secander; or, the Fugitives.

Scene, a Mountain in Circassia.—Time, Midnight.

IN fair Circassia, where, to love inclin'd,
Each swain was blest, for ev'ry maid was kind;
At that still hour when awful midnight reigns,
And none but wretches haunt the twilight
plains,

What time the moon had hung her lamp on high,

And pass'd in radiance through the cloudless sky;
Sad o'er the dews two brother shepherds fled,
Where 'wild'ring fear and desp'rate sorrow led:
Fast as they press'd their flight, behind them lay
Wide ravag'd plains, and valleys stole away.
Along the mountain's bending sides they ran;
Till, faint and weak, Secander thus began:

SECANDER.

Oh stay thee, Agib; for my feet deny,
No longer friendly to my life, to fly.
Friend of my heart, oh turn thee, and survey,
Trace our sad flight through all its length of way!

And first review that long extended plain,
And yon wide groves, already pass'd with pain!
Yon ragged cliff, whose dang'rous path we tried!
And, last, this lofty mountain's weary side!

AGIB.

Weak as thou art, yet hapless must thou
know

The toils of flight, or some severer woe!
Still as I haste, the Tartar shouts behind,
And shrieks and sorrows load the sadd'ning
wind;

In rage of heart, with ruin in his hand,
He blasts our harvests, and deforms our land.
Yon citron grove, whence first in fear we came,
Droops its fair honors to the conquering flame:
Far fly the swains, like us, in deep despair;
And leave to ruffian bands their fleecy care.

SECANDER.

Unhappy land! whose blessings tempt the
sword;

In vain, unheard, thou call'st thy Persian lord!
In vain thou court'st him, helpless, to thine aid,
To shield the shepherd, and protect the maid!
Far off, in thoughtless indolence resign'd,
Soft dreams of love and pleasure soothe his
'Midst fair Sultanas lost in idle joy, [mind:
No wars alarm him, and no fears annoy.

AGIB.

Yet these green hills, in summer's sultry heat,
Have lent the monarch oft a cool retreat.
Sweet to the sight is Zabra's flow'ry plain,
And once by maids and shepherds lov'd in vain!
No more the virgins shall delight to rove
By Sargis' banks, or, Irwan's shady grove;
On Tarkie's mountain catch the cooling gale,
Or breathe the sweets of Aly's flow'ry vale;
Fair scenes! but ah! no more with peace
possest,

With ease alluring, and with plenty blest.
No more the shepherds' whit'ning tents appear,
Nor the kind products of a bounteous year;
No more the date, with snowy blossoms
crown'd;

But Ruin spreads her baleful fires around.

SECANDER.

In vain Circassia boasts her spicy groves,
For ever fam'd for pure and happy loves:

In vain she boasts her fairest of the fair;
 Their eyes' blue languish, and their golden hair!
 Those eyes in tears their fruitless grief must send;
 Those hairs the Tartar's cruel hand shall rend.

AGIB.

Ye Georgian swains, that piteous learn from Circassia's ruin, and the waste of war; [far
 Some weightier arms than crooks and staffs prepare,

To shield your harvest, and defend your fair:
 The Turk and Tartar like designs pursue,
 Fix'd to destroy, and stedfast to undo.
 Wild as his land, in native deserts bred,
 By lust incited, or by malice led,
 The villain Arab, as he prowls for prey,
 Oft marks with blood and wasting flames the
 Yet none so cruel as the Tartar foe, [way;
 To death inur'd, and nurs'd in scenes of woe.

He said; when loud along the vale was heard
 A shriller shriek, and nearer fires appear'd;
 The affrighted shepherds, through the dews of night, [flight.
 Wide o'er the moon-light hills renew'd their

§ 93. The Splendid Shilling. J. PHILIPS.

“ — Sing heavenly Muse!

“ Things unattempted yet in prose or rhyme;”
 A Shilling, Breeches, and Chimeras dire.

HAPPY the man, who, void of cares and strife,
 In silken or in leathern purse retains
 A splendid shilling. He nor hears with pain
 New oysters cried, nor sighs for cheerful ale:
 But with his friends, when nightly mists arise,
 To Juniper's Magpie, or Town Hall, * repairs;
 Where, mindful of the nymph whose wanton eye
 Transfix'd his soul, and kindled amorous flames,
 Chloe or Phillis, he each circling glass
 Wishes her health, and joy, and equal love.
 Meanwhile he smokes, and laughs at merry tale,
 Or pun ambiguous, or conundrum quaint.
 But I, whom griping penury surrounds,
 And hunger, sure attendant upon want,
 With scanty offals, and small acid tiff,
 (Wretched repast!) my meagre corse sustain:
 Then solitary walk, or doze at home
 In garret vile, and with a warming puff
 Regale chill'd fingers; or from tube as black
 As winter chimney, or well-polish'd jet,
 Exhale mundungus, ill perfuming scent;
 Not blacker tube, nor of a shorter size,
 Smokes Cambro-Briton (vers'd in pedigree,
 Sprung from Cadwallader and Arthur, kings,
 Full famous in romantic tale) when he
 O'er many a craggy hill and barren cliff,
 Upon a cargo of fam'd Cestrian cheese,
 High overshadowing rides, with a design
 To vend his wares, or at th' Arvonian mart,
 Or Maridunum, or the ancient town
 Yclep'd Brechinia, or where Vaga's stream
 Encircles Ariconium, fruitful soil!

Whence flow nectareous wines, that well may
 With Massic, Setin, or renown'd Falern. [vie

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
 With looks demure, and silent pace, a Dun,
 Horrible monster! hated by Gods and men,
 To my ærial citadel ascends:

With vocal heel, thrice thund'ring at my gate,
 With hideous accent thrice he calls; I know
 The voice ill-boding, and the solemn sound.

What should I do? or whither turn? Amaz'd,
 Confounded, to the dark recess I fly

Of wood-hole; straight my bristling hairs erect
 Through sudden fear; a chilly sweat bedews

My shudd'ring limbs, and (wonderful to tell!)
 My tongue forgets her faculty of speech;

So horrible he seems! His faded brow
 Entrench'd with many a frown, and conic beard,

And spreading band, admir'd by modern saints,
 Disastrous acts forebode; in his right hand

Long scrolls of paper solemnly he waves,
 With characters and figures dire inscrib'd,

Grievous to mortal eyes (ye gods, avert
 Such plagues from righteous men!). Behind him

Another monster not unlike himself, [stalks
 Sullen of aspect, by the vulgar call'd

A Catchpole, whose polluted hands the gods
 With force incredible, and magic charms,

Erst have endued: if he his ample palm
 Should haply on ill-fated shoulder lay

Of debtor straight his body, to the touch
 Obsequious (as whilom knights were wont),

To some enchanted castle is convey'd,
 Where gates impregnable, and coercive chains,

In durance strict detain him! till, in form
 Of money, Pallas sets the captive free.

Beware ye debtors! when ye walk beware,
 Be circumspect: oft with insidious ken

This caitiff eyes your steps aloof; and oft
 Lies perdue in a nook or gloomy cave,

Prompt to enchant some inadvertent wretch
 With his unhallow'd touch. So (poets sing),

Grimalkin, to domestic vermin sworn
 An everlasting foe, with watchful eye

Lies nightly brooding o'er a chinky gap,
 Protending her fell claws, to thoughtless mice

Sure ruin. So her disembowell'd web
 Arachne in a hall or kitchen spreads,

Obvious to vagrant flies: she secret stands
 Within her woven cell; the humming prey,

Regardless of their fate, rush on the toils
 Inextricable, nor will aught avail

Their arts, or arms, or shapes of lovely hue;
 The wasp insidious, and the buzzing drone,

And butterfly, proud of expanded wings
 Distinct with gold, entangled in her snares,

Useless resistance make: with eager strides,
 She tow'ring flies to her expected spoils;

Then with envenom'd jaws the vital blood
 Drinks of reluctant foes, and to her cave

Their bulky carcases triumphant drags.
 So pass my days. But when nocturnal shades

This world envelop, and th' inclement air

* Two noted alehouses in Oxford, 1700.

Persuades men to repel benumbing frosts
With pleasant wines, and crackling blaze of wood;

Me, lonely sitting, nor the glimmering light
Of make-weight candle, nor the joyous talk
Of loving friends, delights; distress'd, forlorn,
Amidst the horrors of the tedious night,
Darkling I sigh, and feed with dismal thoughts
My anxious mind; or sometimes mournful verse
Indite, and sing of groves and myrtle shades,
Or desp'rate lady near a purling stream,
Or lover pendant on a willow-tree,
Meanwhile I labor with eternal drought,
And restless wish, and rave; my parched throat
Finds no relief, nor heavy eyes repose:
But if a slumber haply does invade
My weary limbs, my fancy's still awake,
Thoughtful of drink, and eager, in a dream,
Tipples imaginary pots of ale,
In vain: awake, I find the settled thirst
Still gnawing, and the pleasant phantom curse:
Thus do I live, from pleasure quite debar'd;
Nor taste the fruits that the sun's genial rays
Mature —john-apple, nor the downy peach,
Nor walnut in rough furrow'd coat secure,
Nor medlar fruit delicious in decay.

Afflictions great! yet greater still remain:
My galligaskins, that have long withstood
The winter's fury, and encroaching frosts,
By time subdued (what will not time subdue?)
A horrid chasm disclose, with orifice
Wide, discontinuous; at which the winds,
Eurus and Auster, and the dreadful force
Of Boreas, that congeals the Cronian waves,
Tumultuous enter with dire chilling blasts,
Portending agues. Thus a well-fraught ship,
Long sail'd secure, or through th' Ægean deep,
Or the Ionian, till cruising near
The Lilybean shore, with hideous crush
On Scylla or Charybdis (dang'rous rocks)
She strikes rebounding; whence the shatter'd
So fierce a shock unable to withstand, [oak Admits the sea; in at the gaping side
The crowding waves rush with impetuous rage,
Resistless, overwhelming! Horrors seize
The mariners; death in their eyes appears;
They stare, they rave, they pump, they swear,
they pray;

(Vain efforts!) still the batt'ring waves rush in,
Implacable; till, delug'd by the foam,
The ship sinks found'ring in the vast abyss.

§ 94. An Epistle to a Lady. NUGENT.

CLARINDA, dearly lov'd, attend
The counsels of a faithful friend;
Who with the warmest wishes fraught,
Feels all, at least, that friendship ought!
But since, by ruling Heaven's design,
Another's fate shall influence thine;
Oh may these lines for him prepare,
A bliss, which I would die to share!

Man may for wealth or glory roam,
But woman must be blest at home;

To this should all her studies tend,
This her great object and her end.
Distaste unmingled pleasures bring,
And use can blunt Affliction's sting;
Hence perfect bliss no mortals know,
And few are plung'd in utter woe:
While Nature, arm'd against Despair,
Gives pow'r to mend, or strength to bear;
And half the thought content may gain,
Which spleen employs to purchase pain.

Trace not the fair domestic plan
From what you would, but what you can!
Nor, peevish, spurn the scanty store,
Because you think you merit more!
Bliss ever differs in degree,
Thy share alone is meant for thee;
And thou shouldst think, however small,
That share enough, for 'tis thy all:
Vain scorn will aggravate distress,
And only make that little less.

Admit whatever trifles come;
Units compose the largest sum:
Oh tell them o'er, and say how vain
Are those who form Ambition's train;
Which swell the monarch's gorgeous state,
And bribe to ill the guilty great!
But thou, more blest, more wise than these,
Shalt build up happiness on ease.
Hail, sweet Content! where joy serene
Gilds the mild soul's unruffled scene;
And, with blithe Fancy's pencil wrought,
Spreads the white web of flowing thought,
Shines lovely in the cheerful face,
And clothes each charm with native grace;
Effusion pure of bliss sincere,
A vestment for a god to wear.
Far other ornaments compose
The garb that shrouds dissembled woes,
Piec'd out with motley dyes and sorts,
Freaks, whimsies, festivals, and sports:
The troubled mind's fantastic dress,
Which madness titles Happiness;
While the gay wretch to revels bears
The pale remains of sighs and tears;
And seeks in crowds, like her undone,
What only can be found in one.

But chief, my gentle friend! remove
Far from thy couch seducing Love:
Oh shun the false magician's art,
Nor trust thy yet unguarded heart!
Charm'd by his spells fair Honor flies,
And thousand treach'rous phantoms rise;
Where Guilt in Beauty's ray beguiles,
And Ruin lurks in Friendship's smiles.
Lo! where th' enchanting captive dreams
Of warbling groves and purling streams;
Of painted meads, of flow'rs that shed
Their odors round her fragrant bed.
Quick shifts the scene, the charm is lost,
She wakes upon a desert coast;
No friendly hand to lend its aid,
No guardian bow'r to spread its shade;
Expos'd to ev'ry chilling blast,
She treads th' inhospitable waste;

And down the drear decline of life
Sinks, a forlorn, dishonor'd wife.
Neglect not thou the voice of Fame,
But, clear from crime, be free from blame!
Though all were innocence within,
'Tis guilt to wear the garb of sin;
Virtue rejects the foul disguise:
None merit praise who praise despise.
Slight not, in supercilious strain,
Long practis'd modes, as low or vain!
The world will vindicate their cause,
And claim blind faith in Custom's laws.
Safer with multitudes to stray,
Than tread alone a fairer way;
To mingle with the erring throng,
Than boldly speak ten millions wrong.

Beware of the relentless train
Who forms adore, who forms maintain!
Lest prudes demure, or coxcombs loud,
Accuse thee to the partial crowd;
Foes who the laws of honor slight,
A judge who measures guilt by spite.
Behold the sage Aurelia stand,
Disgrace and fame at her command;
As if Heaven's delegate design'd,
Sole arbiter of all her kind.
Whether she try some favor'd piece
By rules devis'd in ancient Greece;
Or whether, modern in her flight,
She tells what Paris thinks polite:
For much her talents to advance,
She studied Greece, and travell'd France;
There learn'd the happy art to please
With all the charms of labor'd ease;
Through looks and nods, with meaning fraught,
To teach what she was never taught.
By her each latent spring is seen;
The workings foul of secret spleen;
The guilt that sculks in fair pretence;
Or folly veil'd in specious sense:
And much her righteous spirit grieves,
When worthlessness the world deceives;
Whether the erring crowd commends
Some patriot sway'd by private ends;
Or husband trust a faithless wife,
Secure, in ignorance, from strife.
Averse she brings their deeds to view,
But justice claims the rig'rous due;
Humanely anxious to produce
At least some possible excuse.
Oh ne'er may virtue's dire disgrace
Prepare a triumph for the base!

Mere forms the fool implicit sway,
Which witlings with contempt survey;
Blind folly no defect can see,
Half wisdom views but one degree.
The wise remoter uses reach,
Which judgement and experience teach.
Whoever would be pleas'd and please,
Must do what others do with ease.
Great precept, undefin'd by rule,
And only learn'd in Custom's school;
To no peculiar form confin'd,
It spreads through all the human kind;

Beauty, and wit, and worth supplies,
Yet graceful in the good and wise.
Rich with this gift, and none beside,
In Fashion's stream how many glide!
Secure from ev'ry mental woe,
From treach'rous friend or open foe;
From social sympathy, that shares
The public loss or private cares;
Whether the barb'rous foe invade,
Or Merit pine in Fortune's shade.

Hence gentle Anna, ever gay,
The same to-morrow as to-day,
Save where, perchance, when others weep,
Her cheek the decent sorrow steep;
Save when, perhaps, a melting tale
O'er ev'ry tender breast prevail:
The good, the bad, the great, the small,
She likes, she loves, she honors all.
And yet, if sland'rous malice blame,
Patient she yields a sister's fame.
Alike if satire or if praise,
She says whate'er the circle says;
Implicit does whate'er they do,
Without one point in wish or view.
Sure test of others, faithful glass,
Through which the various phantoms pass.
Wide blank, unfeeling when alone;
No care, no joy, no thought her own.

Not thus succeeds the peerless dame,
Who looks and talks, and acts for fame;
Intent so wide her cares extend,
To make the universe her friend.
Now with the gay in frolics shines,
Now reasons deep with deep divines:
With courtiers now extols the great,
With patriots sighs o'er Britain's fate:
Now breathes with zealots holy fires,
Now melts in less refin'd desires:
Doom'd to exceed in each degree,
Too wise, too weak, too proud, too free;
Too various for one single word,
The high sublime of deep absurd:
While ev'ry talent nature grants
Just serves to show how much she wants.

Although in ——— combine
The virtues of our sex and thine:
Her hand restrains the widow's tears;
Her sense informs, and soothes, and cheers:
Yet, like an angel in disguise,
She shines but to some favor'd eyes;
Nor is the distant herd allow'd
To view the radiance through the cloud.

But thine is ev'ry winning art;
Thine is the friendly, honest heart;
And should the gen'rous spirit flow
Beyond where prudence fears to go;
Such sallies are of nobler kind
Than virtues of a narrow mind.

§ 95. Alexander's Feast; or the Power of Music. An Ode on St. Cecilia's Day. DRYDEN.

'Twas at the royal feast, for Persia won,
By Philip's warlike son:

Aloft in awful state
 The godlike hero sate
 On his imperial throne :
 His valiant peers were plac'd around ;
 Their brows with roses and with myrtle bound ;
 So should desert in arms be crown'd.
 The lovely Thais by his side
 Sat, like a blooming eastern bride,
 In flow'r of youth and beauty's pride.
 Happy, happy, happy pair ;
 None but the brave,
 None but the brave,
 None but the brave deserves the fair.
 Timotheus, plac'd on high
 Amid the tuneful choir,
 With flying fingers touch'd the lyre :
 The trembling notes ascend the sky,
 And heavenly joys inspire.
 The song began from Jove :
 Who left his blissful seats above,
 Such is the pow'r of mighty love !
 A dragon's fiery form belied the god :
 Sublime on radiant spheres he rode,
 When he to fair Olympia press'd,
 And stamp'd an image of himself, a sovereign of the world.—
 The list'ning crowd admires the lofty sound ;
 A present deity, the vaulted roofs rebound :
 With ravish'd ears
 The monarch hears,
 Assumes the god,
 Affects to nod,
 And seems to shake the spheres.
 The praise of Bacchus then the sweet musician sung ;
 Of Bacchus, ever fair and ever young :
 The jolly god in triumph comes ;
 Sound the trumpets, beat the drums ;
 Flush'd with a purple grace
 He shows his honest face.
 Now give the hautboys breath ; he comes, he Bacchus, ever fair and young, [comes !
 Drinking joys did first ordain :
 Bacchus' blessings are a treasure,
 Drinking is the soldier's pleasure ;
 Rich the treasure,
 Sweet the pleasure ;
 Sweet is pleasure after pain.
 Sooth'd with the sound, the king grew vain ;
 Fought all his battles o'er again ;
 And thrice he routed all his foes ; and thrice
 he slew the slain.
 The master saw the madness rise ;
 His glowing cheeks, his ardent eyes ;
 And, while he heaven and earth defied,
 Chang'd his hand, and check'd his pride.
 He chose a mournful Muse,
 Soft pity to infuse :
 He sung Darius great and good,
 By too severe a fate,
 Fall'n, fall'n, fall'n, fall'n,
 Fall'n from his high estate,
 And weltring in his blood ;

Deserted at his utmost need
 By those his former bounty fed,
 On the bare earth expos'd he lies,
 With not a friend to close his eyes.
 With downcast look the joyless victor sate,
 Revolving in his alter'd soul
 The various turns of fate below :
 And now and then a sigh he stole ;
 And tears began to flow.
 The mighty master smil'd to see
 That love was in the next degree :
 'Twas but a kindred sound to move ;
 For pity melts the mind to love.
 Softly sweet, in Lydian measures,
 Soon he sooth'd his soul to pleasures.
 War he sung is toil and trouble ;
 Honor but an empty bubble ;
 Never ending, still beginning,
 Fighting still, and still destroying :
 If the world be worth thy winning,
 Think, oh think it worth enjoying ;
 Lovely Thais sits beside thee,
 Take the good the gods provide thee.
 The many rend the skies with loud applause ;
 So love was crown'd, but music won the cause,
 The prince, unable to conceal his pain,
 Gaz'd on the fair
 Who caus'd his care,
 And sigh'd and look'd, sigh'd and look'd,
 Sigh'd and look'd, and sigh'd again :
 At length, with love and wine at once oppress'd,
 The vanquish'd victor sunk upon her breast.
 Now strike the golden lyre again ;
 And louder, yet, and yet a louder strain.
 Break his bands of sleep asunder,
 And rouse him, like a rattling peal of thunder.
 Hark, hark, the horrid sound
 Has rais'd up his head,
 As awak'd from the dead,
 And amaz'd, he stares around !
 Revenge, revenge, Timotheus cries,
 See the furies arise,
 See the snakes that they rear,
 How they hiss in the air,
 And the sparkles that flash from their eyes !
 Behold a ghastly band,
 Each a torch in his hand, [slain,
 These are Grecian ghosts, that in battle were
 And unburied remain
 Inglorious on the plain ;
 Give the vengeance due
 To the valiant crew :
 Behold how they toss their torches on high,
 How they point to the Persian abodes,
 And glitt'ring temples of their hostile gods !—
 The princes applaud, with a furious joy ;
 And the King seiz'd a flambeau with zeal to destroy ;
 Thais led the way,
 To light him to his prey,
 And, like another Helen, fir'd another Troy.
 Thus, long ago,
 Ere heavenly bellows learnt to blow,

While organs yet were mute;
 Timotheus to his breathing flute
 And sounding lyre [sire.
 Could swell the soul to rage, or kindle soft de-
 At last divine Cecilia came, •
 Inventress of the vocal frame;
 The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
 Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
 And added length to solemn sounds,
 With nature's mother-wit, and arts unknown
 Let old Timotheus yield the prize, [before.
 Or both divide the crown;
 He rais'd a mortal to the skies,
 She drew an angel down.

§ 96. An Epistle from Mr. Philips to the Earl of Dorset. Copenhagen, March 9, 1709.

FROM frozen climes, and endless tracts of snow,
 From streams that northern winds forbid to flow,
 What present shall the Muse to Dorset bring,
 Or how, so near the Pole, attempt to sing?
 The hoary winter here conceals from sight
 All pleasing objects that to verse invite.
 The hills and dales, and the delightful woods,
 The flow'ry plains, and silver-streaming floods,
 By snow disguis'd, in bright confusion lie,
 And with one dazzling waste fatigue the eye.

No gentle breathing breeze prepares the spring,
 No birds within the desert region sing.

The ships, unmov'd, the boist'rous winds defy,
 While rattling chariots o'er the ocean fly.

The vast Leviathan wants room to play,
 And spout his waters in the face of day.

The starving wolves along the main sea prowl,
 And to the moon in icy valleys howl.

For many a shining league the level main,
 Here spreads itself into a glassy plain:

There solid billows, of enormous size,
 Alps of green ice, in wild disorder rise,

And yet but lately have I seen, e'en here,
 The winter in a lovely dress appear.

Ere yet the clouds let fall the treasur'd snow,
 Or winds begun through hazy skies to blow,

At ev'ning a keen eastern breeze arose;
 And the descending rain unsullied froze.

Soon as the silent shades of night withdrew,
 The ruddy morn disclos'd at once to view

The face of nature, in a rich disguise,
 And brighten'd ev'ry object to my eyes:

For ev'ry shrub and ev'ry blade of grass,
 And ev'ry pointed thorn, seem'd wrought in glass;

In pearls and rubies rich the hawthorns show,
 While through the ice the crimson berries glow.
 The thick-sprung reeds the wat'ry marshes yield
 Seem polish'd lances in a hostile field.

The flag, in limpid currents, with surprise
 Sees crystal branches on his forehead rise.

The spreading oak, the beech and tow'ring pine,
 Glaz'd over, in the freezing æther shine.

The frightened birds the rattling branches shun,
 That wave and glitter in the distant sun.

When, if a sudden gust of wind arise,
 The brittle forest into atoms flies:

The crackling wood beneath the tempest bends,
 And in a spangled show'r the prospect ends;
 Or, if a southern gale the region warm,
 And by degrees unbind the wintry charm,
 The traveller a miry country sees,
 And journeys sad beneath the dropping trees.

Like some deluded peasant Merlin leads Through fragrant bow'rs, and through delicious
 meads;

While here enchanting gardens to him rise,
 And airy fabrics there attract his eyes,
 His wand'ring feet the magic paths pursue;
 And, while he thinks the fair illusion true,
 The trackless scenes disperse in fluid air,
 And woods, and wilds, and thorny ways appear,
 A tedious road the weary wretch returns,
 And, as he goes, the transient vision mourns.

§ 97. The Man of Sorrow. GREVILLE.

AH! what avails the lengthening mead,
 By Nature's kindest bounty spread
 Along the vale of flow'rs!

Ah! what avails the darkening grove,
 Or Philomel's melodious love,
 That glads the midnight hours!

For me, alas! the god of day
 Ne'er glitters on the hawthorn spray,
 Nor night her comfort brings;
 I have no pleasure in the rose;
 For me no vernal beauty blows,
 Nor Philomela sings.

See how the sturdy peasants stride
 Adown yon hillock's verdant side,
 In cheerful ign'rance blest!
 Alike to them the rose or thorn,
 Alike arises every morn,
 By gay contentment drest.

Content, fair daughter of the skies,
 Or gives spontaneous, or denies,
 Her choice divinely free:
 She visits oft the hamlet cot,
 When Want and Sorrow are the lot
 Of Avarice and me.

But see—or is it Fancy's dream?
 Methought a bright celestial gleam
 Shot sudden through the groves;
 Behold, behold, in loose array,
 Euphrosyne, more bright than day,
 More mild than Paphian doves!

Welcome, oh welcome, Pleasure's queen!
 And see, along the velvet green
 The jocund train advance:
 With scatter'd flow'rs they fill the air;
 The wood-nymph's dew-bespangled hair
 Plays in the sportive dance.

Ah! baneful grant of angry Heaven,
 When to the feeling wretch is given
 A soul alive to joy!
 Joys fly with every hour away,
 And leave th' unguarded heart a prey
 To cares that peace destroy.

And see, with visionary haste
(Too soon) the gay delusion past,
Reality remains!
Despair has seiz'd my captive soul;
And horror drives without control,
And slackens still the reins.

Ten thousand beauties round me throng;
What beauties, say, ye nymphs, belong
To the distemper'd soul?
I see the lawn of hideous dye;
The towering elm nods misery;
With groans the waters roll.

Ye gilded roofs, Palladian domes,
Ye vivid tints of Persia's looms,
Ye were for misery made.—
'Twas thus, the Man of Sorrow spoke;
His wayward step then pensive took
Along th' unhallow'd shade.

§ 98. Monody to the Memory of a Young Lady
SHAW.

YET do I live? Oh how shall I sustain
This vast unutterable weight of woe?
This worse than hunger, poverty, or pain.
Or all the complicated ills below?
She, in whose life my hopes were treasur'd all,
Is gone—for ever fled—
My dearest Emma's dead;
These eyes, these tear-swoln eyes beheld her fall.
Ah no—she lives on some far happier shore,
She lives—but (cruel thought!) she lives for me
no more.

I, who the tedious absence of a day [sight;
Remov'd, would languish for my charmer's
Would chide the lingering moments for delay,
And fondly blame the slow return of night;
How, how shall I endure
(O misery past a cure!)
Hours, days, and years, successively to roll,
Nor ever more behold the comfort of my soul?
Was she not all my fondest wish could frame?
Did ever mind so much of heaven partake?
Did she not love me with the purest flame?
And give up friends and fortune for my sake?
Though mild as evening skies,
With downcast, streaming eyes,
Stood the stern frown of supercilious brows,
Deaf to their brutal threats, and faithful to her vows.

Come then, some Muse, the saddest of the train
(No more your bard shall dwell on idle lays),
Teach me each moving melancholy strain,
And oh discard the pageantry of phrase:
Ill suits the flow'rs of speech with woes like mine!
Thus, haply, as I paint
The source of my complaint,
My soul may own th' impassion'd line:
A flood of tears may gush to my relief,
And from my swelling heart discharge this load of grief.

Forbear, my fond officious friends, forbear
To wound my ears with the sad tales you tell;
"How good she was, how gentle, and how fair!"
In pity cease—alas! I know too well
How in her sweet expressive face
Beam'd forth the beauties of her mind,
Yet heighten'd by exterior grace,
Of manners most engaging, most refin'd!

No piteous object could she see,
But her soft bosom shar'd the woe,
While smiles of affability
Endear'd whatever boon she might bestow.
Whate'er th' emotions of her heart,
Still shone conspicuous in her eyes,
Stranger to every female art,
Alike to feign or to disguise:
And, oh the boast how rare!
The secret in her faithful breast repos'd
She ne'er with lawless tongue disclos'd,
In secret silence lodg'd inviolate there.
Oh feeble words—unable to express
Her matchless virtues, or my own distress!

Relentless death! that, steel'd to human woe,
With murd'rous hands deals havoc on mankind,
Why (cruel!) strike this deprecated blow,
And leave such wretched multitudes behind?
Hark! groans come wing'd on ev'ry breeze!
The sons of grief prefer their ardent vow,
Oppress'd with sorrow, want, or dire disease,
And supplicate thy aid, as I do now:
In vain—perverse, still on th' unweeeting head
'Tis thine thy vengeful darts to shed;
Hope's infant blossoms to destroy,
And drench in tears the face of joy.

But oh, fell tyrant! yet expect the hour
When Virtue shall renounce thy pow'r;
When thou no more shalt blot the face of day,
Nor mortals tremble at thy rigid sway.
Alas the day!—where'er I turn my eyes,
Some sad memento of my loss appears;
I fly the fatal house—suppress my sighs,
Resolv'd to dry my unavailing tears:
But, ah! in vain—no change of time or
The memory can efface [place
Of all that sweetness, that enchanting air,
Now lost; and nought remains but anguish and despair.

Where were the delegates of Heav'n, oh where,
Appointed Virtue's children safe to keep?
Had Innocence or Virtue been their care,
She had not died, nor had I liv'd to weep:
Mov'd by my tears, and by her patience mov'd,
To see or force th' endearing smile,
My sorrows to beguile,
When Torture's keenest rage she prov'd;
Sure they had ward'd that untimely dart,
Which broke her thread of life, and rent a husband's heart.
How shall I e'er forget that dreadful hour,
When, feeling Death's resistless pow'r,

My hand she press'd, wet with her falling tears,
 And thus, in falt'ring accents, spoke her fears :
 " Ah, my lov'd lord, the transient scene is o'er,
 " And we must part, alas ! to meet no more !
 " But oh ! if e'er thy Emma's name was dear,
 " If e'er thy vows have charm'd my ravish'd
 " ear ;
 " If, from thy lov'd embrace my heart to gain,
 " Proud friends have frown'd, and Fortune
 " smil'd in vain ;
 " If it has been my sole endeavour still
 " To act in all obsequious to thy will ;
 " To watch thy very smiles, thy wish to know,
 " Then only truly blest when thou wert so ;
 " If I have doted with that fond excess,
 " Nor Love could add, nor Fortune make it less ;
 " If this I've done, and more—oh then be kind
 " To the dear lovely babe I leave behind.
 " When time my once-lov'd memory shall efface,
 " Some happier maid may take thy Emma's
 " place,
 " With envious eyes thy partial fondness see,
 " And hate it, for the love thou bor'st to me :
 " My dearest Shaw, forgive a woman's fears ;
 " But one word more—I cannot bear thy tears—
 " Promise—and I will trust thy faithful vow
 " (Oft have I tried, and ever found thee true,)
 " That to some distant spot thou wilt remove
 " This fatal pledge of hapless Emma's love,
 " Where safe thy blandishments it may partake,
 " And, oh ! be tender, for its mother's sake.
 " Wilt thou ?——
 " I know thou wilt—sad silence speaks assent,
 " And, in that pleasing hope, thy Emma dies
 " content."

I, who with more than manly strength have bore
 The various ills impos'd by cruel Fate,
 Sustain the firmness of my soul no more,
 But sink beneath the weight : [day
 Just Heav'n ! I cried, from memory's earliest
 No comfort has thy wretched suppliant
 known ;
 Misfortune still, with unrelenting sway,
 Has claim'd me for her own.
 But oh ! in pity to my grief, restore
 This only source of bliss ; I ask—I ask no more—
 Vain hope—th' irrevocable doom is past,
 E'en now she looks—she sighs her last——
 Vainly I strive to stay her fleeting breath,
 And, with rebellious heart, protest against her
 death.

When the stern tyrant clos'd her lovely eyes,
 How did I rave, untaught to bear the blow,
 With impious wish to tear her from the skies,
 How curse my fate in bitterness of woe !
 But whither would this dreadful phrensy
 Fond man, forbear, [lead ?
 Thy fruitless sorrow spare, [creed ;
 Dare not to ask what Heaven's high will de-
 In humble rev'rence kiss th' afflictive rod,
 And prostrate bow to an offended God.

Perhaps kind Heaven in mercy dealt the blow,
 Some saving truth thy roving soul to teach ;
 To wean thy heart from grovelling views below,
 And point out bliss beyond misfortune's reach :

To show that all the flatt'ring schemes of joy,
 Which tow'ring Hope so fondly builds in air,
 One fatal moment can destroy,
 And plunge th' exulting maniac in despair.
 Then, oh ! with pious fortitude sustain
 Thy present loss—haply thy future gain ;
 Nor let thy Emma die in vain :
 Time shall administer its wonted balm, [calm.
 And hush this storm of grief to no unpleasing

Thus the poor bird, by some disastrous fate
 Caught, and imprison'd in a lonely cage,
 Torn from its native fields, and dearer mate,
 Flutters a while, and spends its little rage :
 But finding all its efforts weak and vain,
 No more it pants and rages for the plain ;
 Moping a while, in sullen mood
 Droops the sweet mourner—but ere long
 Prunes its light wings, and pecks its food,
 And meditates the song :
 Serenely sorrowing, breathes its piteous case,
 And with its plaintive warblings saddens all the place.

Forgive me, Heaven,—yet, yet the tears will
 flow,
 To think how soon my scene of bliss is past !
 My budding joys, just promising to blow,
 All nipp'd and wither'd by one envious blast !
 My hours, that laughing wont to fleet away,
 Move heavily along ; [cund song ?
 Where's now the sprightly jest, the jo-
 Time creeps, unconscious of delight :
 How shall I cheat the tedious day ;
 And oh——the joyless night !
 Where shall I rest my weary head ?
 How shall I find repose on a sad widow'd bed ?

Come, Theban drug*, the wretch's only aid,
 To my torn heart its former peace restore ;
 Thy votary, wrapp'd in thy Lethean shade,
 A while shall cease his sorrows to deplore :
 Haply, when lock'd in sleep's embrace,
 Again I shall behold my Emma's face,
 Again with transport hear
 Her voice soft whispering in my ear ;
 May steal once more a balmy kiss,
 And taste at least of visionary bliss.

But, ah ! th' unwelcome morn's obtruding light
 Will all my shadowy schemes of bliss depose,
 Will tear the dear illusion from my sight,
 And wake me to the sense of all my woes :
 If to the verdant fields I stray,
 Alas ! what pleasures now can these convey ?
 Her lovely form pursues where'er I go,
 And darkens all the scene with woe.
 By Nature's lavish bounties cheer'd no more, * Laudanum.

Sorrowing I rove
Through valley, grot, and grove ;
Nought can their beauties or my loss restore ;
No herb, no plant, can med'cine my disease,
And my sad sighs are borne on ev'ry passing breeze.

Sickness and sorrow hov'ring round my bed,
Who now with anxious haste shall bring relief,
With lenient hand support my drooping head,
Assuage my pains, and mitigate my grief?
Should worldly business call away,

Who now shall in my absence fondly mourn,
Count ev'ry minute of the loit'ring day,
Impatient for my quick return?

Should aught my bosom discompose,
Who now, with sweet complacent air,
Shall smooth the rugged brow of Care,
And soften all my woes?

Too faithful Memory—cease, oh cease—
How shall I e'er regain my peace?
(Oh, to forget her!)—but how vain each art,
Whilst ev'ry virtue lives imprinted on my heart!

And thou, my little cherub, left behind,
To hear a father's plaints, to share his woes,
When reason's dawn informs thy infant mind,
And thy sweet lisping tongue shall ask the cause,

How oft with sorrow shall mine eyes run o'er,
When, twining round my knees, I trace
Thy mother's smile upon thy face!
How oft to my full heart shalt thou restore
Sad memory of my joys—ah, now no more!
By blessings once enjoy'd now more distress'd,
More beggar by the riches once possess'd,
My little darling!—dearer to me grown
By all the tears thou'st caus'd—oh, strange to hear!

Bought with a life yet dearer than thy own,
Thy cradle purchas'd with thy mother's bier:
Who now shall seek, with fond delight,
Thy infant steps to guide aright?
She, who with doting eyes would gaze
On all thy little artless ways,
By all thy soft endearments blest,
And clasp thee oft with transport to her breast,
Alas! is gone—yet shalt thou prove
A father's dearest, tenderest love;
And, O sweet senseless smiler, (envied state!)
As yet unconscious of thy hapless fate,
When years thy judgement shall mature,
And Reason shows those ills it cannot cure,
Wilt thou, a father's grief t' assuage,
For virtue prove the Phoenix of the earth
(Like her, thy mother died to give thee birth)
And be the comfort of my age?

When sick and languishing I lie,
Wilt thou, my Emma's wonted care supply?
And oft as to thy listening ear
Thy mother's virtues and her fate I tell,
Say, wilt thou drop the tender tear,
Whilst on the mournful theme I dwell?
Then, fondly stealing to thy father's side,
Whene'er thou seest the soft distress,

Which I would vainly seek to hide;
Say, wilt thou strive to make it less?
To soothe my sorrows all thy cares employ,
And in my cup of grief infuse one drop of joy?

§ 99. An Evening Address to a Nightingale.
SHAW.

SWEET bird! that, kindly perching near,
Pourest thy plaints melodious in mine ear;
Not, like base worldings, tutor'd to forego
The melancholy haunts of woe;

Thanks for thy sorrow-soothing strain:
For, surely, thou hast known to prove,
Like me, the pangs of hapless love;

Else why so feelingly complain, [grove?
And with thy piteous notes thus sadden all the
Say, dost thou mourn thy ravish'd mate,
That oft enamour'd on thy strains has hung?
Or has the cruel hand of Fate

Bereft thee of thy darling young?
Alas! for both I weep:

In all the pride of youthful charms,
A beauteous bride torn from my circling arms;
A lovely babe, that should have liv'd to bless,
And fill my doting eyes with frequent tears,
At once the source of rapture and distress,
The flattering prop of my declining years!

In vain from death to rescue I essay'd,
By ev'ry art that science could devise;
Alas! it languish'd for a mother's aid,
And wing'd its flight to seek her in the skies.
Then, oh! our comforts be the same,

At evening's peaceful hour,
To shun the noisy paths of wealth and fame,
And breathe our sorrows in this lonely bow'r.
But why, alas! to thee complain,
To thee—unconscious of my pain?

Soon shalt thou cease to mourn thy lot severe,
And hail the dawning of a happier year:
The genial warmth of joy-renewing spring
Again shall plume thy shatter'd wing;
Again thy little heart shall transport prove,
Again shall flow thy notes responsive to thy love.

But oh! for me in vain may seasons roll,
Nought can dry up the fountain of my tears:
Deploring still the comfort of my soul,
I count my sorrows by increasing years.

Tell me, thou Syren Hope, deceiver, say,
Where is thy promis'd period of my woes?
Full three long ling'ring years have roll'd away,
And yet I weep a stranger to repose:

O what delusion did thy tongue employ!
"That Emma's fatal pledge of love,
"Her last bequest, with all a mother's care,
"The bitterness of sorrow should remove,
"Soften the horrors of despair,
"And cheer a heart long lost to joy!"

How oft, when fondling in my arms,
Gazing enraptur'd on its angel-face,
My soul the maze of Fate would vainly trace,
And burn with all a father's fond alarms!
And oh what flatt'ring scenes had fancy feign'd!
How did I rave of blessings yet in store!

Till ev'ry aching sense was sweetly pain'd,
And my full heart could bear, nor tongue could utter more.

"Just Heaven!" I cried, with recent hopes elate, [dead:

"Yet will I live—will live though Emma's
"So long bow'd down beneath the storms of fate,

"Yet will I raise my woe-dejected head!

"My little Emma, now my all,

"Will want a father's care;

"Her looks, her wants, my rash resolves recal,

"And, for her sake, the ills of life I'll bear:

"And oft together we'll complain,

"Complaint the only bliss my soul can know:

"From me my child shall learn the mournful

"strain,

"And prattle tales of woe.

"And oh! in that auspicious hour,

"When fate resigns her persecuting pow'r,

"With duteous zeal her hand shall close,

"No more to weep, my sorrow-streaming
eyes,

"When death gives misery repose,

"And opes a glorious passage to the skies."

Vain thought! it must not be—she too is dead,

The flattering scene is o'er;

My hopes for ever, ever fled;

And vengeance can no more.

Crush'd by misfortune, blasted by disease,

And none—none left to bear a friendly part!

To meditate my welfare, health, or ease,

Or soothe the anguish of an aching heart!

Now all one gloomy scene, till welcome death,

With lenient hand (oh falsely deem'd severe),

Shall kindly stop my grief-exhausted breath,

And dry up ev'ry tear.

Perhaps, obsequious to my will,

But ah! from my affections far remov'd!

The last sad office strangers may fulfil,

As if I ne'er had been belov'd;

As if unconscious of poetic fire,

I ne'er had touch'd the trembling lyre;

As if my niggard hand ne'er dealt relief,

Nor my heart melted at another's grief.

Yet, while this weary life shall last,

While yet my tongue can form th' impassion'd
strain,

In piteous accents shall the muse complain,

And dwell with fond delay on blessings past:

For oh, how grateful to a wounded heart

The tale of misery to impart!

From others' eyes bid artless sorrows flow,

And raise esteem upon the base of woe!

E'en he,* the noblest of the tuneful throng,

Shall deign my love-lorn tale to hear,

Shall catch the soft contagion of my song,

And pay my pensive Muse the tribute of a tear.

§ 100. An Ode to Narcissa. SMOLLET.

THY fatal shafts unerring move;
I bow before thine altar, Love!
I feel thy soft resistless flame
Glide swift through all my vital frame!

For while I gaze my bosom glows,
My blood in tides impetuous flows;
Hope, fear, and joy, alternate roll,
And floods of transport overwhelm my soul!

My falt'ring tongue attempts in vain
In soothing murmurs to complain;
My tongue some secret magic ties,
My murmurs sink in broken sighs!

Condemn'd to nurse eternal care,
And ever drop the silent tear;
Unheard I mourn, unknown I sigh,
Unfriended live, unpitied die!

§ 101. Elegy in Imitation of Tibullus.

SMOLLET.

WHERE now are all my flatt'ring dreams of
joy?

Monimia, give my soul her wonted rest:
Since first thy beauty fix'd my roving eye,
Heart-gnawing cares corrode my pensive breast.

Let happy lovers fly where pleasures call,
With festive songs beguile the fleeting hour,
Lead beauty through the mazes of the ball,
Or press her wanton in love's roseate bow'r.

For me, no more I'll range th' empurpled mead,
Where shepherds pipe and virgins dance around,
Nor wander through the woodbine's fragrant
shade,

To hear the music of the grove resound.

I'll seek some lonely church, or dreary hall,
Where fancy paints the glimm'ring taper blue,
Where damps hang mould'ring on the ivy'd wall, [dew:

And sheeted ghosts drink up the midnight
There, leagu'd with hopeless anguish and de-
A while in silence o'er my fate repine: [spair,
Then, with a long farewell to love and care,
To kindred dust my weary limbs consign.

Wilt thou, Monimia, shed a gracious tear
On the cold grave where all my sorrows rest;
Strew vernal flow'rs, applaud my love sincere,
And bid the turf lie easy on my breast?

AND still it spreads. See Germany send forth
Her sons, to pour it on the farthest north†:
Fir'd with a zeal peculiar, they defy
The rage and rigor of a polar sky,
And plant successfully sweet Sharon's rose
On icy plains, and in eternal snows.

Oh, blest within th' inclosure of your rocks,
 Nor herds have ye to boast, nor bleating flocks;
 No fertilizing streams your fields divide.
 That show revers'd the villas on their side;
 No groves have ye; no cheerful sound of bird,
 Or voice of turtle, in your land is heard;
 Nor grateful eglantine regales the smell
 Of those that walk at ev'ning where you dwell:
 But winter, arm'd with terrors here unknown,
 Sits absolute on his unshaken throne;
 Piles up his stores amidst the frozen waste,
 And bids the mountains he has built stand fast;
 Beckons the legions of his storms away
 From happier scenes, to make your land a prey;
 Proclaims the soil a conquest he has won,
 And scorns to share it with the distant sun.

Yet truth is yours, remote, unenvied isle;
 And peace, the genuine offspring of her smile:
 The pride of letter'd ignorance, that binds
 In chains of error our accomplish'd minds;
 That decks with all the splendor of the true
 A false religion—is unknown to you.
 Nature indeed vouchsafes for our delight
 The sweet vicissitudes of day and night;
 Soft airs and genial moisture feed and cheer
 Field, fruit, and flow'r, and ev'ry creature here.
 But brighter beams than his who fires the skies
 Have ris'n at length on your admiring eyes,
 That shoot into your darkest caves the day
 From which our nicer optics turn away.

BUT, ah! what wish can prosper, or what
 pray'r,
 For merchants, rich in cargoes of despair,
 Who drive a loathsome traffic, gage and span,
 And buy the muscles and the bones of man?
 The tender ties of father, husband, friend,
 All bonds of nature in that moment end;
 And each endures while yet he draws his breath,
 A stroke as fatal as the sithe of death.
 The sable warrior, frantic with regret
 Of her he loves, and never can forget,
 Loses in tears the far receding shore, [more.
 But not the thought, that they must meet no
 Depriv'd of her and freedom at a blow,
 What has he left that he can yet forego?
 Yes, to deep sadness sullenly resign'd,
 He feels his body's bondage in his mind;
 Puts off his gen'rous nature, and to suit
 His manners with his fate, puts on the brute.
 Oh most degrading of all ills that wait
 On man, a mourner in his best estate!
 All other sorrows virtue may endure,
 And find submission more than half a cure;
 Grief is itself a medicine, and bestow'd
 T' improve the fortitude that bears a load;
 To teach the wand'rer, as his woes increase,
 The path of wisdom, all whose paths are peace.
 But slav'ry!—virtue dreads it as her grave;
 Patience itself is meanness, in a slave;

Or if the will and sovereignty of God
 Bid suffer it a while, and kiss the rod;
 Wait for the dawning of a brighter day,
 And snap the chain the moment when you may.
 Nature imprints upon whate'er we see,
 That has a heart, and life in it, Be free!
 The beasts are charter'd—neither age nor force
 Can quell the love of freedom in a horse:
 He breaks the cord that held him at the rack,
 And, conscious of an unencumber'd back,
 Snuffs up the morning air, forgets the rein,
 Loose fly his forelock and his ample mane;
 Responsive to the distant neigh he neighs,
 Nor stops till, overleaping all delays,
 He finds the pasture where his fellows graze.

§ 104. On Liberty, and in praise of Mr. Howard.
 COWPER.

Oh could I worship ought beneath the skies
 That earth had seen, or fancy could devise,
 Thine altar, sacred Liberty, should stand,
 Built by no mercenary, vulgar hand.
 With fragrant turf, and flow'rs as wild and fair
 As ever dress'd a bank, or scented summer air.
 Duly as ever on the mountain's height
 The peep of morning shed a dawning light;
 Again, when evening in her sober vest
 Drew the grey curtain of the fading West;
 My soul should yield thee willing thanks and
 praise
 For the chief blessings of my fairest days
 But that were sacrilege—praise is not thine,
 But his who gave thee, and preserves thee mine:
 Else I would say, and as I spake bid fly
 A captive bird into the boundless sky,
 This triple realm adores thee—thou art come
 From Sparta hither, and art here at home,
 We feel thy force still active, at this hour
 Enjoy immunity from priestly pow'r;
 While conscience, happier than in ancient years,
 Owns no superior but the God she fears.
 Propitious Spirit! yet expunge a wrong
 Thy rites have suffer'd, and our land, too long;
 Teach mercy to ten thousand hearts that share
 The fears and hopes of a commercial care:
 Prisons expect the wicked, and were built
 To bind the lawless, and to punish guilt;
 But shipwreck, earthquake, battle, fire, and
 flood,
 Are mighty mischiefs, not to be withstood:
 And honest merit stands on slipp'ry ground
 Where covert guile, and artifice abound:
 Let just restraint, for public peace design'd,
 Chain up the wolves and tigers of mankind;
 The foe of virtue has no claim to thee,
 But let insolvent innocence go free.
 Patron of else the most despis'd of men,
 Accept the tribute of a stranger's pen;
 Verse, like the laurel, its immortal meed,
 Should be the guerdon of a noble deed:
 I may alarm thee, but I fear the shame
 (Charity chosen as my theme and aim)
 I must incur, forgetting Howard's name.

Blest with all wealth can give thee—to resign
Joys, doubly sweet to feelings quick as thine;
To quit the bliss thy rural scenes bestow
To seek a nobler, amidst scenes of woe;
To traverse seas, range kingdoms, and bring home,

Not the proud monuments of Greece or Rome,
But knowledge, such as only dungeons teach,
And only sympathy like thine could reach;
That grief, sequester'd from the public stage,
Might smooth her feathers, and enjoy her cage—
Speaks a divine ambition, and a zeal
The boldest patriot might be proud to feel.
Oh that the voice of clamor and debate,
That pleads for peace till it disturbs the state,
Were hush'd, in favor of thy gen'rous plea,
The poor thy clients, and Heaven's smile thy fee!

§ 105. On Domestic Happiness, as the Friend of Virtue; and of the false Good-nature of the Age.

COWPER.

DOMESTIC happiness, thou only bliss
Of Paradise that has surviv'd the fall!
Though few now taste thee unimpair'd and pure,
Or, tasting, long enjoy thee; too infirm
Or too incautious to preserve thy sweets
Unmix'd with drops of bitter, which neglect
Or temper sheds into thy crystal cup.
Thou art the nurse of virtue. In thine arms
She smiles, appearing, as in truth she is,
Heaven-born, and destin'd to the skies again.
Thou art not known where Pleasure is ador'd,
That reeling goddess with the zoneless waist
And wand'ring eyes, still leaning on the arm
Of Novelty, her fickle, frail support;
For thou art meek and constant, hating change,
And finding in the calm of truth-tied love
Joys that her stormy raptures never yield.
Forsaking thee, what shipwreck have we made
Of honor, dignity, and fair renown,
Till prostitution elbows us aside
In all our crowded streets, and senates seem Conven'd for purposes of empire less
Than to release th' adult'ress from her bond!
Th' adult'ress! what a theme for angry verse,
What provocation to the indignant heart
That feels for injur'd love! But I disdain
The nauseous task to paint her as she is,
Cruel, abandon'd, glorying in her shame.
No. Let her pass; and, charioted along,
In guilty splendor shake the public ways:
The frequency of crimes has wash'd them white;
And verse of mine shall never brand the wretch
Whom matrons now, of character unsmirch'd,
And chaste themselves, are not asham'd to own.
Virtue and vice had bound'ries in old time
Not to be pass'd: and she that had renounc'd
Her sex's honor, was renounc'd herself
By all that priz'd it; not for Prudery's sake,
But Dignity's resentful of the wrong.
'Twas hard, perhaps, on here and there a waif
Desirous to return, and not receiv'd;
But was a wholesome rigor in the main,

And taught th' unblemished to preserve with
That purity, whose loss was loss of all. [care
Men too were nice in honor in those days,
And judg'd offenders well: and he that sharp'd
And pocketed a prize by fraud obtain'd, [sold
Was mark'd, and shunn'd as odious. He that
His country, or was slack when she requir'd
His ev'ry nerve in action and at stretch,
Paid with the blood that he had basely spar'd
The price of his default. But now—yes, now,
We are become so candid and so fair,
So liberal in construction and so rich
In Christian charity, a good-natur'd age!
That they are safe: sinners of either sex
Transgress what laws they may. Well dress'd, well bred,

Well equipag'd, is ticket good enough
To pass us readily through ev'ry door.
Hypocrisy, detest her as we may,
(And no man's hatred ever wrong'd her yet)
May claim his merit still, that she admits
The worth of what she mimics with such care,
And thus gives virtue indirect applause:
But she has burnt her masks, not needed here,
Where vice has such allowance, that her shifts
And specious semblances have lost their use.

§ 106. On the Employments of what is called an Idle Life.

COWPER.

How various his employments whom the world
Calls idle, and who justly, in return,
Esteems the busy world an idler too!
Friends, books, a garden, and perhaps his pen,
Delightful industry enjoy'd at home,
And nature in her cultivated trim
Dress'd to his taste, inviting him abroad—
Can he want occupation who has these?
Will he be idle who has much t' enjoy?
Me therefore, studious of laborious ease,
Not slothful; happy to deceive the time,
Nor waste it; and aware that human life
Is but a loan to be repaid with use,
When he shall call his debtors to account
From whom are all our blessings—business finds E'en here. While sedulous I seek t' improve,
At least neglect not, or leave unemploy'd
The mind he gave me; driving it, though slack
Too oft, and much impeded in its work
By causes not to be divulg'd in vain,
To its just point—the service of mankind.
He that attends to his interior self,
That has a heart, and keeps it; has a mind
That hungers, and supplies it; and who seeks
A social, not a dissipated life—
Has business; feels himself engag'd t' achieve
No unimportant, though a silent task.
A life all turbulence and noise may seem,
To him that leads it, wise, and to be prais'd;
But wisdom is a pearl with most success
Sought in still water, and beneath clear skies.
He that is ever occupied in storms
Or dives not for it, or brings up instead,
Vainly, industrious, a disgraceful prize.

§ 107. The Post comes in—the News-paper is read—the World contemplated at a distance.

COWPER.

HARK! 'tis the twanging horn! o'er yonder bridge,
That with its wearisome but needful length
Bestrides the wintry flood, in which the moon
Sees her unwrinkl'd face reflected bright,
He comes, the herald of a noisy world, [locks,
With spatter'd boots, strapp'd waist, and frozen
News from all nations lumb'ring at his back.
True to his charge, the close-pack'd load behind,
Yet careless what he brings, his one concern
Is to conduct it to the destin'd inn;
And, having dropp'd th' expected bag, pass on.
He whistles as he goes, light-hearted wretch,
Cold, and yet cheerful; messenger of grief
Perhaps to thousands, and of joy to some;
To him indiff'rent whether grief or joy.
Houses in ashes, and the fall of stocks,
Births, deaths, marriages, epistles wet
With tears that trickled down the writer's cheeks
Fast as the periods from his fluent quill,
Or charg'd with am'rous sighs of absent swains,
Or nymphs responsive, equally affect
His horse and him, unconscious of them all.
But oh th' important budget! usher'd in
With such heart-shaking music, who can say
What are its tidings: have our troops awak'd?
Or do they still, as if with opium drugg'd,
Snore to the murmurs of th' Atlantic wave?
Is India free? and does she wear her plum'd
And jewell'd turban with a smile of peace,
Or do we grind her still? The grand debate,
The popular harangue, the tart reply,
The logic, and the wisdom, and the wit,
And the loud laugh—I long to know them all;
I burn to set th' imprison'd wranglers free,
And give them voice and utterance once again.
Now stir the fire, and close the shutters fast,
Let fall the curtains, wheel the sofa round,
And while the bubbling and loud-hissing urn
Throws up a steamy column, and the cups
That cheer not to inebriate, wait on each,
So let us welcome peaceful ev'ning in.
Not such his ev'ning, who, with shining face,
Sweats in the crowded theatre, and squeez'd,
And bor'd with elbow-points through both his
sides,
Outscolds the ranting actor on the stage.
Nor his, who patient stands till his feet throb,
And his head thumps, to feed upon the breath
Of patriots bursting with heroic rage,
Or placemen all tranquillity and smiles.
This folio of four pages, happy work!
Which not e'en critics criticise, that holds
Inquisitive attention, while I read,
Fast bound in chains of silence, which the fair,
Though eloquent themselves, yet fear to break—
What is it but a map of busy life,
Its fluctuations, and its vast concerns?
Here runs the mountainous and craggy ridge
That tempts ambition. On the summit, see

The seals of office glitter in his eyes;
He climbs, he pants, he grasps them. At his heels,
Close at his heels, a demagogue ascends,
And with a dext'rous jerk soon twists him down,
And wins them, but to lose them in his turn.
Here rills of oily eloquence in soft
Meanders lubricate the course they take:
The modest speaker is asham'd and griev'd
T' engross a moment's notice: and yet begs,
Begs a propitious ear for his poor thoughts,
However trivial all that he conceives.
Sweet bashfulness! it claims at least this praise:
The dearth of information and good sense
That it foretels us, always comes to pass.
Cataracts of declamation thunder here,
The forests of no meaning spread the page
In which all comprehension wanders lost;
While fields of pleasantry amuse us there
With merry descants on a nation's woes.
The rest appears a wilderness of strange
But gay confusion—roses for the cheeks
And lilies for the brows of faded age,
Teeth for the toothless, ringlets for the bald, Heaven, earth, and ocean plunder'd of their sweets,
Nectareous essences, Olympian dews;
Sermons, and city feasts, and fav'rite airs,
Æthereal journeys, submarine exploits,
And Katterfelto, with his hair on end
At his own wonders, wond'ring for his bread.
'Tis pleasant through the loop-holes of retreat
To peep at such a world: to see the stir
Of the great Babel, and not feel the crowd:
To hear the roar she sends through all her gates
At a safe distance, where the dying sound
Falls a soft murmur on th' uninjur'd ear.
Thus sitting, and surveying thus at ease
The globe and its concerns, I seem advanc'd
To some secure and more than mortal height,
That lib'rates and exempts me from them all.
It turns submitted to my view, turns round
With all its generations; I behold
The tumult, and am still; the sound of war
Has lost its terrors ere it reaches me;
Grieves, but alarms me not. I mourn the pride
And av'rice that makes man a wolf to man,
Hear the faint echo of those brazen throats
By which he speaks the language of his heart,
And sigh, but never tremble at the sound.
He travels and expatiates, as the bee
From flow'r to flow'r, so he from land to land;
The manners, customs, policy of all
Pay contribution to the store he gleans;
He sucks intelligence in ev'ry clime,
And spreads the honey of his deep research
At his return, a rich repast for me!
He travels, and I too. I tread his deck,
Ascend his topmast, through his peering eyes
Discover countries, with a kindred heart
Suffer his woes, and share in his escapes:
While fancy, like the finger of a clock,
Runs the great circuit, and is still at home.

§ 108. A Fragment. MALLET.

FAIR morn ascends: fresh zephyr's breath
 Blows lib'ral o'er yon bloomy heath,
 Where, sown profusely, herb and flow'r,
 Of balmy smell, of healing pow'r,
 Their souls in fragrant dews exhale,
 And breathe fresh life in ev'ry gale.
 Here spreads a green expanse of plains,
 Where, sweetly pensive, Silence reigns;
 And there, at utmost stretch of eye,
 A mountain fades into the sky;
 While winding round, diffus'd and deep,
 A river rolls with sounding sweep.
 Of human heart no traces near,
 I seem alone with nature here!

Here are thy walks, O sacred Health!
 The monarch's bliss, the beggar's wealth,
 The seas'ning of all good below,
 The sovereign's friend in joy or woe.
 O thou, most courted, most despis'd,
 And but in absence duly priz'd!
 Pow'r of the soft and rosy face!
 The vivid pulse, the vermeil grace,
 The spirits, when they gayest shine,
 Youth, beauty, pleasure, all are thine!
 O sun of life, whose heavenly ray
 Lights up and cheers our various day,
 The turbulence of hopes and fears,
 The storm of fate, the cloud of years,
 Till nature with thy parting light,
 Reposes late in Death's calm night:
 Fled from the trophied roofs of state,
 Abodes of splendid pain and hate;
 Fled from the couch, where, in sweet sleep,
 Hot Riot would his anguish steep,
 But tosses through the midnight shade,
 Of death, of life, alike afraid;
 For ever fled to shady cell,
 Where Temp'rance, where the Muses dwell,
 Thou oft art seen at early dawn,
 Slow-pacing o'er the breezy lawn;
 Or, on the brow of mountain high,
 In silence feasting ear and eye
 With song and prospect which abound
 From birds, and woods, and waters round.

But when the sun, with noon-tide ray,
 Flames forth intolerable day;
 While Heat sits fervent on the plain,
 With Thirst and Languor in his train
 (All nature sick'ning in the blaze),
 Thou in the wild and woody maze
 That clouds the vale with umbrage deep,
 Impendent from the neighb'ring steep,
 Wilt find betimes a calm retreat,
 Where breathing Coolness has her seat.

There plung'd amid the shadows brown,
 Imagination lays him down;
 Attentive in his airy mood,
 To ev'ry murmur of the wood:
 The bee in yonder flow'ry nook;
 The chidings of the headlong brook;
 The green leaf quiv'ring in the gale;
 The warbling hill, the lowing vale;

The distant woodman's echoing stroke;
 The thunder of the falling oak.
 From thought to thought in vision led,
 He holds high converse with the dead;
 Sages or poets. See, they rise!
 And shadowy skim before his eyes,
 Hark! Orpheus strikes the lyre again,
 That soften'd savages to men:
 Lo! Socrates, the Sent of Heaven,
 To whom its moral will was given.
 Fathers and friends of human kind!
 They form'd the nations, or refin'd,
 With all that mends the head and heart,
 Enlight'ning truth, adorning art.

Thus musing in the solemn shade,
 At once the sounding breeze was laid:
 And nature, by the unknown law,
 Shook deep with reverential awe;
 Dumb silence grew upon the hour;
 A brighter night involv'd the bow'r:
 When issuing from the inmost wood,
 Appear'd fair Freedom's Genius good.
 O Freedom! sov'reign boon of Heav'n,
 Great charter with our being giv'n;
 For which the patriot and the sage
 Have plann'd, have bled, through ev'ry age!
 High privilege of human race,
 Beyond a mortal monarch's grace:
 Who could not give, who cannot claim,
 What but from God immediate came!

§ 109. Ode to Evening. DR. JOS. WARTON.

HAIL, meek-ey'd maiden, clad in sober grey,
 Whose soft approach the weary woodman
 loves;
 As homeward bent to kiss his prattling babes
 Jocund he whistles through the twilight groves.
 When Phœbus sinks behind the gilded hills,
 You lightly o'er the misty meadows walk;
 The drooping daisies bathe in dulcet dews,
 And nurse the nodding violet's tender stalk.
 The panting Dryads, that in day's fierce heat
 To inmost bow'rs and cooling caverns ran,
 Return, to trip in wanton ev'ning dance;
 Old Sylvan too returns, and laughing Pan.
 To the deep wood the clamorous rooks repair,
 Light swims the swallow o'er the wat'ry scene;
 And from the sheep-cot, and fresh-furrow'd field,
 Stout ploughmen meet, to wrestle on the green.
 The swain, that artless sings on yonder rock,
 His supping sheep and length'ning shadow spies,
 Pleas'd with the cool, the calm, refreshing hour,
 And with hoarse humming of unnumber'd flies.
 Now ev'ry Passion sleeps: desponding Love,
 And pining Envy, ever-restless Pride;
 And holy Calm creeps o'er my peaceful soul,
 Anger and mad Ambition's storm subside.
 O modest Evening! oft let me appear
 A wandering votary in thy pensive train;
 List'ning to every wildly-warbling note
 That fills with farewell sweet thy dark'ning plain.

§ 110. Isis. An Elegy. By Mr. MASON, of Cambridge.

FAR from her hallow'd grot, where, mildly
bright,
The pointed crystals shot their trembling light;
From dripping moss, where sparkling dew-drops
fell,
Where coral glow'd, where twin'd the wreathed shell,
Pale Isis lay; a willow's lowly shade
Spread its thin foliage o'er the sleeping maid;
Clos'd was her eye, and from her heaving breast
In careless folds loose flow'd her zoneless vest;
While down her neck her vagrant tresses flow,
In all the awful negligence of woe;
Her urn sustain'd her arm, that sculptur'd vase
Where Vulcan's art had lavish'd all his grace.
Here, full with life, was heaven-taught Science
seen,
Known by the laurel-wreath and musing mien;
There cloud-crown'd Fame, here Peace, sedate and bland, [wand;
Swell'd the loud trump, and wav'd the olive While solemn domes, arch'd shades, and vistas
green,
At well-mark'd distance close the sacred scene.

On this the goddess cast an anxious look,
Then dropp'd a tender tear, and thus she spoke:
Yes, I could once with pleas'd attention trace
The mimic charms of this prophetic vase;
Then lift my head, and with enraptur'd eyes
View on you plain the real glories rise.
Yes, Isis! oft hast thou rejoic'd to lead
Thy liquid treasures o'er yon fav'rite mead:
Oft hast thou stopp'd thy pearly car to gaze,
While ev'ry Science nurs'd its growing bays;
While ev'ry Youth, with fame's strong impulse
fir'd,

Press'd to the goal, and at the goal untir'd,
Snatch'd each celestial wreath to bind his brow
The Muses, Graces, Virtues, could bestow.

E'en now fond Fancy leads th' ideal train,
And ranks her troops on Memory's ample plain;
See! the firm leaders of my patriot line,
See! Sidney, Raleigh, Hampden, Somers, shine.
See Hough, superior to a tyrant's doom,
Smile at the menace of the slave of Rome:
Each soul whom truth could fire, and virtue
move,

Each breast strong panting with its country's love,
All that to Albion gave their heart or head,
That wisely counsell'd, or that bravely bled,
All, all appear; on me they grateful smile,
The well-earn'd prize of ev'ry virtuous toil
To me with filial reverence they bring,
And hang fresh trophies o'er my honor'd spring.

Ah! I remember well yon beechen spray,
There Addison first tun'd his polish'd lay;
'Twas there great Cato's form first met his eye,
In all the pomp of free-born majesty;
"My son," he cried, "observe this mien with
awe,

"In solemn lines the strong resemblance draw;

"The piercing notes shall strike each British
ear,

"Each British eye shall drop the patriot tear!
"And, rous'd to glory by the nervous strain,
"Each youth shall spurn at slavery's abject
reign,

"Shall guard with Cato's zeal Britannia's laws,
"And speak, and act, and bleed, in freedom's
cause."

The hero spoke; the bard assenting bow'd;
The lay to Liberty and Cato flow'd;
While Echo, as she rov'd the vale along,
Join'd the strong cadence of his Roman song.

But, ah! how Stillness slept upon the ground,
How mute attention check'd each rising sound,
Scarce stole a breeze to wave the leafy spray,
Scarce trill'd sweet Philomel her softest lay,
When Locke walk'd musing forth! e'en now I
view

Majestic Wisdom thron'd upon his brow;
View Candor smile upon his modest cheek,
And from his eye all Judgement's radiance break.
'Twas here the sage his manly zeal express'd,
Here stripp'd vain Falsehood of her gaudy vest:
Here Truth's collected beams first fill'd his mind,
Ere long to burst in blessings on mankind;
Ere long to show to reason's purged eye,
That "Nature's first best gift was Liberty."

Proud of this wondrous son, sublime I stood,
(While louder surges swell'd my rapid flood;)
Then, vain as Niobe, exulting cried,
Ilissus! roll thy fam'd Athenian tide;
Though Plato's steps oft mark'd thy neighb'ring
glade,

Though fair Lycæum lent its awful shade,
Though ev'ry Academic green impress'd
Its image full on thy reflecting breast,
Yet my pure stream shall boast as proud a name,
And Britain's Isis flow with Attic fame.

Alas! how chang'd! where now that Attic boast?

See! Gothic Licence rage o'er all my coast;
See! Hydra Faction spreads its impious reign,
Poison each breast, and madden ev'ry brain:
Hence frontless crowds that, not content to fright

The blushing Cynthia from her throne of night,
Blast the fair face of day; and, madly bold,
To Freedom's foes infernal orgies hold;
To Freedom's foes, ah! see the goblet crown'd,
Hear plausible shouts to Freedom's foes resound;
The horrid notes my reflux waters daunt,
The Echoes groan, the Dryad quits their haunt;
Learning, that once to all diffus'd her beam,
Now sheds, by stealth, a partial private gleam
In some lone cloister's melancholy shade,
Where a firm few support her sickly head,
Despis'd, insulted, by the barb'rous train,
Who scour, like Thracia's moon-struck rout,
the plain,

Sworn foes, like them, to all the Muse approves,
All Phoebus favors, or Minerva loves.

Are these the sons my fost'ring breast must rear,
Grac'd with my name, and nurtur'd by my care?

Must these go forth from my maternal hand
 To deal their insults through a peaceful land;
 And boast, while Freedom bleeds, and Virtue groans,
 That Isis taught Rebellion to her Sons?
 Forbid it, Heaven! and let my rising waves
 Indignant swell, and overwhelm the recreant slaves!
 In England's cause their patriot floods employ,
 As Xanthus delug'd in the cause of Troy.
 Is this denied; then point some secret way
 Where far, far hence these guiltless streams may stray; [spreads
 Some unknown channel lend, where Nature
 Inglorious vales, and unfrequented meads:
 There, where a hind scarce tunes his rustic
     strain,
 Where scarce a pilgrim treads the pathless plain,
 Content I'll flow; forget that e'er my tide
 Saw yon majestic structures crown its side;
 Forget that e'er my wrapt attention hung
 Or on the Sage's or the Poet's tongue;
 Calm and resign'd my humbler lot embrace,
 And, pleas'd, prefer oblivion to disgrace.

§ 111. Epistolary Verses to George Colman,
Esq. written in the Year 1756.
By Mr. ROBERT LLOYD.

You know, dear George, I'm none of those
 That condescend to write in prose:
 Inspir'd with pathos and sublime,
 I always soar—in doggerel rhyme;
 And scarce can ask you how you do,
 Without a jingling line or two.
 Besides, I always took delight in
 What bears the name of easy writing;
 Perhaps the reason makes it please
 Is, that I find 'tis writ with ease.

I vent a notion here in private,
 Which public taste can ne'er connive at,
 Which thinks no wit or judgement greater
 Than Addison, and his Spectator;
 Who says (it is no matter where,
 But that he says it I can swear)
 With easy verse most bards are smitten,
 Because they think it's easy written;
 Whereas, the easier it appears,
 The greater marks of care it wears;
 Of which to give an explanation,
 Take this, by way of illustration:
 The fam'd Mat. Prior, it is said,
 Oft bit his nails, and scratch'd his head,
 And chang'd a thought a hundred times,
 Because he did not like the rhymes:
 To make my meaning clear, and please ye,
 In short, he labor'd to write easy.
 And yet no Critic e'er defines
 His poems into labor'd lines.
 I have a simile will hit him;
 His verse, like clothes, was made to fit him;
 Which (as no tailor e'er denied)
 The better fit the more they're tried.

Though I have mention'd Prior's name,
 Think not I aim at Prior's fame.

'Tis the result of admiration
 To spend itself in imitation;
 If imitation may be said,
 Which is in me by nature bred,
 And you have better proofs than these
 That I'm idolater of Ease.

Who, but a madman would engage
 A poet in the present age?
 Write what we will, our works bespeak us
Imitatores, servum pecus.

Tale, Elegy, or lofty Ode,
 We travel in the beaten road:
 The proverb still sticks closely by us,
Nil dictum, quod non dictum prius.
 The only comfort that I know
 Is, that 'twas said an age ago,
 Ere Milton soar'd in thought sublime,
 Ere Pope refin'd the chink of rhyme,
 Ere Colman wrote in style so pure,
 Or the great Town the Connoisseur;
 Ere I burlesqu'd the rural cit,
 Proud to hedge in my scraps of wit,
 And, happy in the close connexion,
 T' acquire some name from their reflection:
 So (the similitude is trite)
 The moon still shines with borrow'd light;
 And, like the race of modern beaux,
 Ticks with the sun for her lac'd clothes.

Methinks there is no better time
 To show the use I make of rhyme,
 Than now, when I, who from beginning
 Was always fond of couplet-sinning,
 Presuming on good-nature's score,
 Thus lay my bantling at your door.

The first advantage which I see
 Is, that I ramble loose and free:
 The bard indeed full oft complains
 That rhymes are fetters, links, and chains;
 And, when he wants to leap the fence,
 Still keeps him pris'ner to the sense.
 Howe'er in common-place he rage,
 Rhyme's like your fetters on the stage,
 Which, when the player once hath wore,
 It makes him only strut the more,
 While, raving in pathetic strains,
 He shakes his legs to clank his chains.

From rhyme, as from a handsome face,
 Nonsense acquires a kind of grace;
 I therefore give it all its scope,
 That sense may, unperceiv'd, clope.
 So M——rs of basest tricks
 (I love a fling at politics)
 Amuse the nation, court, and king,
 With breaking F—kes, and hanging Byng;
 And make each puny rogue a prey,
 While they, the greater, slink away.
 This simile, perhaps, would strike,
 If match'd with something more alike;
 Then take it dress'd a second time
 In Prior's ease, and my sublime.
 Say, did you never chance to meet
 A mob of people in the street,
 Ready to give the robb'd relief,
 And in all haste to catch a thief;

While the sly rogue who filch'd the prey,
Too close beset to run away,
Stop thief! stop thief! exclaims aloud,
And so escapes among the crowd?
So Ministers, &c.

O England, how I mourn thy fate!
For sure thy losses now are great;
Two such what Briton can endure?
Minorca, and the Connoisseur!

To-day*, or e'er the sun goes down,
Will die the Censor, Mr. Town!
He dies, whoe'er take pains to con him,
With "blushing honors thick upon him:"
O may his name these verses save,
Be these inscrib'd upon his grave:

"Know, Reader, that on Thursday died
"The Connoisseur, a suicide!
"Yet think not that his soul is fled,
"Nor rank him 'mongst the vulgar dead,
"Howe'er defunct you set him down,
"He's only going out of Town."

§ 112. Ode to Arthur Onslow Esq.†

THIS goodly frame what virtue so approves,
And testifies the pure ethereal spirit,
As mild Benevolence!

She, with her sister Mercy, still awaits
Beside th' eternal throne of Jove,
And measures forth with unwithdrawing hand
The blessings of the various year,
Sunshine or show'r, and chides the madding
tempest. [rity,

With her the heaven-bred nymph, meek Cha-
Shall fashion Onslow forth in fairest portrait;
And with recording care

Weave the fresh wreath that flow'ring virtue claims.

But, oh, what Muse shall join the band?
He long has sojourn'd in the sacred haunts,
And knows each whisp'ring grot and glade

Trod by Apollo and the light-foot Graces,
How then shall awkward gratitude,
And the presumption of untutor'd duty,
Attune my numbers, all too rude?

Little he recks the meed of such a song;
Yet will I stretch aloof,

And when I tell of Courtesy,
Of well-attemper'd Zeal,
Of awful Prudence soothing fell Contention,
Where shall the lineaments agree

But in thee, Onslow? You your wonted leave Indulge me, nor misdeem a soldier's bold emprise,

Who, in the dissonance of barb'rous war
Long train'd, revisits oft the sacred treasures
Of antique memory!

Or where sage Pindar reins his fiery car
Through the vast vault of Heaven secure;
Or what the Attic Muse that Homer fill'd,
Her other son, thy Milton, taught;
Or range the flow'ry fields of gentle Spenser.
And, ever as I go, allurements vain
Cherish a feeble fire, and feed my idle
Fancy: oh could I once
Charm to their melody my shrilling reeds!
To Henries and to Edwards old,
Dread names! I'd meditate the faithful song;
Or tell what time Britannia,
Whilom the fairest daughter of old Ocean,
In loathly disarray, dull eyes,
And faded cheek, wept o'er her abject sons:
Till William, great deliverer!
Led on the comely train, gay Liberty,
Religion, matron staid,
With all her kindred goddesses;
Justice, with steady brow,
Trim Plenty, laureat Peace, and green-hair'd Commerce,
In flowing vest of thousand hues.

Fain would I shadow out old Bourbon's pile Tott'ring with doubtful weight, and threat'ning
cumb'rous fall:

Or trace our navy, where in tow'ring pride
O'er the wide swelling waste it rolls avengeful.

As when collected clouds
Forth from the gloomy south, in deep array,
Athwart the dark'ning landscape throng,
Fraught with loud storms, and thunder's dreadful peal,

At which the murd'rer stands aghast,
And wasting Riot ill dissembles terror.

How headlong Rhone and Ebro, erst distain'd
With Moorish carnage, quakes through all her branches!

Soon shall I greet the morn, [name,
When, Europe sav'd, Britain and George's
Shall sound o'er Flandria's level field,
Familiar in domestic merriment;

Or by the jolly mariner
Be carol'd loud adown the echoing Danube.

The just memorial of fair deeds
Still flourishes, and, like th' untainted soul,
Blossoms in freshest age above
The weary flesh, and envy's rankling wound.

Such, after years mature,
In full account shall be thy meed.

Oh may your rising hope
Well principled in ev'ry virtue bloom!
Till a fresh-springing flock implore
With infant hands a grandsire's pow'rful
pray'r,

Or round your honor'd couch their prattling
sports pursue.

§ 113. Ode to Melancholy. OGILVIE.

HAIL, queen of thought sublime! propitious
pow'r, [roam,

Who o'er the unbounded waste art joy'd to
Led by the moon, when, at the midnight hour,
Her pale rays tremble through the dusky
gloom.

O bear me, Goddess, to thy peaceful seat!
Whether to Hecla's cloud-wrapt brow convey'd, [treat,
Or lodg'd where mountains screen thy deep re-
Or wand'ring wild through Chili's boundless
shade.

Say, rove thy steps o'er Libya's naked waste?
Or seek some distant solitary shore?
Or, on the Andes' topmost mountain plac'd,
Dost sit, and hear the solemn thunder roar?

Fix'd on some hanging rock's projected brow,
Hear'st thou low murmurs from the distant dome?

Or stray thy feet where pale, dejected Woe
Pours her long wail from some lamented tomb?

Hark! yon deep echo strikes the trembling ear!
See night's dun curtain wraps the darksome pole! [pear,
O'er heaven's blue arch yon rolling worlds ap-
And rouse to solemn thought, th' aspiring soul.

O lead my steps beneath the moon's dim ray,
Where Tadmor stands all desert and alone!
While from her time-shook tow'rs the bird of prey [ing moan.
Sounds through the night her long-resound-

Or bear me far to yon dark, dismal plain,
Where fell-eyed tigers, all athirst for blood,
Howl to the desert: while the horrid train
Roams o'er the wild where once great Babel stood;

That queen of nations! whose superior call Rous'd the broad East, and bid her arms destroy! [fall,
When warm'd to mirth, let judgement mark her
And deep reflection dash the lip of joy.

Short is Ambition's gay deceitful dream,
Though wreaths of blooming laurel bind her
brow:

Calm thought dispels the visionary scheme,
And Time's cold breath dissolves the with'ring bough.

Slow as some miner saps th' aspiring tow'r,
When working secret with destructive aim,
Unseen, unheard, thus moves the stealing hour,
But works the fall of empire, pomp, and name.

Then let thy pencil mark the traits of man;
Full in the draught be keen-eyed Hope portray'd:

Let flutt'ring Cupids crowd the growing plan:
Then give one touch, and dash it deep with
shade.

Beneath the plume that flames with glancing
rays

Be Care's deep engines on the soul impress'd;
Beneath the helmet's keen refulgent blaze
Let Grief sit pining in the canker'd breast.

Let Love's gay sons, a smiling train, appear,
With beauty pierc'd—yet heedless of the dart;
While, closely-couch'd, pale, sick'ning Envy
near,

Whets her fell sting, and points it at the heart.
Perch'd, like a raven, on some blasted yew,
Let Guilt revolve the thought-distracting sin;
Scar'd—while her eyes survey th' ethereal blue,
Lest heaven's strong lightning burst the dark within.

Then paint, impending o'er the maddening deep
That rock, where heart-struck Sappho, vainly brave,
Stood firm of soul—then from the dizzy steep
Impetuous sprung, and dash'd the boiling wave.

Here, wrapt in studious thought, let Fancy rove,
Still prompt to mark Suspicion's secret snare;
To see where anguish nips the bloom of Love,
Or trace more Grandeur to the domes of Care.
Should e'er Ambition's tow'ring hopes inflame,
Let judging reason draw the veil aside;
Or, fir'd with envy at some mighty name,
Read o'er the monument that tells—He died.

What are the ensigns of imperial sway?
What all that Fortune's lib'ral hand has brought?

Teach they the voice to pour a sweeter lay?
Or rouse the soul to more exalted thought?

When bleeds the heart as Genius blooms unknown? [bier?

When melts the eye o'er Virtue's mournful
Not wealth, but pity, swells the bursting groan;
Not pow'r, but whisp'ring Nature, prompts the tear.

Say, gentle mourner, in yon mouldy vault,
Where the worm fattens on some sceptred
brow,

Beneath that roof with sculptur'd marble fraught,
Why sleeps unmov'd the breathless dust below?

Sleeps it more sweetly than the simple swain
Beneath some mossy turf that rests his head;
Where the lone widow tells the night her pain,
And eve with dewy tears embalms the dead?

The lily, screen'd from ev'ry ruder gale,
Courts not the cultur'd spot where roses
spring;

But blows neglected in the peaceful vale,
And scents the zephyr's balmy-breathing wing.

The busts of grandeur, and the pomp of pow'r,
Can these bid Sorrow's gushing tears subside?
Can these avail in that tremendous hour,
When Death's cold hand congeals the purple
tide?

Ah no! the mighty names are heard no more :
Pride's thought sublime, and Beauty's kindling
bloom,
Serve but to sport one flying moment o'er,
And swell with pompous verse th' escutcheon'd
tomb.

For me—may Passion ne'er my soul invade,
Nor be the whims of tow'ring Phrensy giv'n;
Let Wealth ne'er court me from the peaceful
shade,
Where Contemplation wings the soul to heaven.

Oh guard me safe from Joy's enticing snare !
With each extreme that Pleasure tries to hide,
The poison'd breath of slow-consuming Care,
The noise of Folly, and the dreams of Pride.

But oft, when midnight's sadly solemn knell
Sounds long and distant from the sky-topt tow'r,
Calm let me sit in Prosper's lonely cell *,
Or walk with Milton through the dark obscure

Thus, when the transient dream of life is fled,
May some sad friend recal the former years ;
Then, stretch'd in silence o'er my dusty bed,
Pour the warm gush of sympathetic tears.

§ 114. Ode to the Genius of Shakspeare.

OGILVIE.

I. 1.

RAPT from the glance of mortal eye,
Say, bursts thy Genius to the world of light ?
Seeks it yon star-bespangled sky ?
Or skims its fields with rapid flight ?
Or, mid yon plains where Fancy strays,
Courts it the balmy breathing gale ?
Or where the violet pale
Droops o'er the green-embroider'd stream ;
Or where young Zephyr stirs the rustling sprays,
Lies all dissolv'd in fairy dream ?
O'er yon bleak desert's unfrequented round
Seest thou where Nature treads the deep'ning
gloom,
Sitt'st on yon hoary tow'r with ivy crown'd,
Or wildly wail'st o'er thy lamented tomb ?
Hear'st thou the solemn music wind along,
Or thrills the warbling note in thy mellifluous song ?

I. 2.

Oft, while on earth, 'twas thine to rove
Where'er the wild-ey'd goddess lov'd to roam,
To trace serene the gloomy grove,
Or haunt meek Quiet's simple dome ;
Still hovering round the Nine appear,
That pour the soul-transporting strain ;
Join'd to the Loves' gay train,
The loose-rob'd Graces, crown'd with flow'rs,
The light-wing'd gales that lead the vernal year,
And wake the rosy-featur'd hours.

* See Shakspeare's Tempest.

O'er all bright Fancy's beamy radiance shone ;
How flam'd thy bosom as her charms reveal !
Her fire-clad eye sublime, her starry zone,
Her traces loose, that wanton'd on the gale :
On thee the goddess fix'd her ardent look,
Then, from her glowing lips these melting accents broke :

I. 3.

“ To thee, my favorite son, belong
“ The lays that steal the list'ning hour ;
“ To pour the rapture-darting song,
“ To paint gay Hope's Elysian bower,
“ From Nature's hand to snatch the dart,
“ To cleave with pangs the bleeding heart ;
“ Or lightly sweep the trembling string,
“ And call the Loves, with purple wing,
“ From the blue deep, where they dwell
“ With Naiads in the pearly cell ;
“ Soft on the sea-born goddess gaze †,
“ Or in the loose robes floating maze,
“ Dissolv'd in downy slumbers rest ;
“ Or flutter o'er her panting breast.
“ Or wild to melt the yielding soul,
“ Let Sorrow, clad in sable stole,
“ Slow to thy musing thought appear ;
“ Or pensive Pity, pale ;
“ Or Love's desponding tale [tear.”
“ Call from th' intender'd heart the sympathetic

II. 1.

Say, whence the magic of thy mind ?
Why thrills thy music on the springs of thought ?
Why, at thy pencil's touch refin'd,
Starts into life the glowing draught ?
On yonder fairy carpet laid,
Where beauty pours eternal bloom,
And Zephyr breathes perfume ;
There nightly to the tranced eye
Profuse the radiant goddess stood display'd,
With all her smiling offspring nigh.
Sudden the mantling cliff, the arching wood,
The broider'd mead, the landscape and the grove,
Hills, vales, and sky-dipt seas, and torrents rude, Grots, rills, and shades, and bow'rs, that breath'd of love,
All burst to sight ! while glancing on the view, Titania's sporting train brush'd lightly o'er the dew.

II. 2.

The pale-ey'd Genius of the shade
Led thy bold step to Prosper's magic bow'r ;
Whose voice the howling winds obey'd,
Whose dark spell chain'd the rapid hour ;
Then rose serene the sea-girt isle ;
Gay scenes, by Fancy's touch refin'd,
Glow'd to the musing mind :
Such visions bless the hermit's dream,
When hovering angels prompt his placid smile,
Or paint some high ecstatic theme.
Then flam'd Miranda on th' enraptur'd gaze,
Then sail'd bright Ariel on the bat's fleet wing :
Or starts the list'ning throng in still amaze,
The wild note trembling on the aërial string !

II. 3.

Oh lay me near yon limpid stream,
Whose murmur soothes the ear of woe!
There in some sweet poetic dream
Let Fancy's bright Elysium glow!
'Tis done—o'er all the blushing mead
The dark wood shakes his cloudy head:
Below, the lily-fringed dale
Breathes its mild fragrance on the gale;
While, in pastime all unseen,
Titania, rob'd in mantle green,
Sports on the mossy bank: her train
Skims light along the gleaming plain;
Or to the flutt'ring breeze unfold
The blue wing streak'd with beamy gold;
Its pinions op'ning to the light!—
Say, bursts the vision on my sight?
Ah, no! by Shakspeare's pencil drawn,
The beauteous shapes appear;
While meek-eyed Cynthia near [lawn†.
Illumes with streamy ray the silver mantled

III. 1.

But hark! the tempest howls afar, [waste!
Bursts the loud whirlwind o'er the pathless
What cherub blows the trump of war?
What demon rides the stormy blast?
Red from the lightning's livid blaze,
The bleak heath rushes on the sight;
Then, wrapt in sudden night
Dissolves.—But, ah! what kingly form
Roams the lone desert's desolated maze†
Unaw'd, nor heeds the sweeping storm?
Ye pale-ey'd lightnings, spare the cheek of age!
Vain wish! though anguish heaves the bursting groan,
Deaf as the flint, the marble-ear of rage
Hears not the mourner's unavailing moan;
Heart-pierc'd he bleeds; and, stung with wild despair, [hair.
Bares his time-blasted head, and tears his silver

III. 2.

Lo! on yon long-resounding shore,
Where the rock totters o'er the headlong deep;
What phantoms bath'd in infant gore
Stand mutt'ring on the dizzy steep!
Their murmurs shake the zephyr's wing!
The storm obeys their powerful spell;
See from this gloomy cell
Fierce Winter starts! his scowling eye
Blots the fair mantle of the breathing Spring,
And lowers along the ruffled sky,
To the deep vault the yelling harpies run §;
Its yawning mouth receives th' infernal crew,
Dim through the black gloom winks the glimmering son,
And the pale furnace gleams with brimstone blue.

But, ah! on Sorrow's cypress bough
Can Beauty breathe her genial bloom?
On Death's cold cheek will passion glow?
Or Music warble from the tomb?
There sleeps the bard, whose tuneful tongue
Pour'd the full stream of mazy song.
Young Spring, with lip of ruby, here
Shows from her lap the blushing year;
While, along the turf reclin'd,
The loose wing swimming on the wind,

Sprinkle the sod with spangling gold;
And oft the blue-ey'd Graces trim
Dance lightly round on downy limb;

Chequers the green dale's purling rill,
Sweet Fancy pours the plaintive strain;
Or, wrapt in soothing dream,

§ 115. Ode to Time; occasioned by seeing the Ruins of an old Castle. OGILVIE

I. 1.

O THOU, who mid the world-involving gloom,
Sitt'st on yon solitary spire!
Or slowly shak'st the sounding dome,
Or hear'st the wildly-warbling lyre;
Say, when thy musing soul
Bids distant times unrol,
And marks the flight of each revolving year,
Of years whose slow-consuming pow'r
Has clad with moss yon leaning tow'r
That saw the race of Glory run,
That mark'd Ambition's setting sun,
That shook old Empires' tow'ring pride,
That swept them down the floating tide—
Say, when these long-unfolding scenes appear,
Streams down thy hoary cheek the pity-darting
tear?

I. 2.

Cast o'er yon trackless waste thy wand'ring eye:
Yon hill, whose gold-illumin'd brow,
Just trembling through the bending sky,
O'erlooks the boundless wild below,
Once bore the branching wood
That o'er yon murmuring flood
Hung wildly waving to the rustling gale;
The naked heath with moss o'ergrown,
That hears the lone owl's nightly moan,
Once bloom'd with summer's copious store,
Once rais'd the lawn-bespangled flow'r;
Or heard some lover's plaintive lay,
When, by pale Cynthia's silver ray,

All wild he wander'd o'er the lonely dale,
And taught the list'ning moon the melancholy tale.

I. 3.

Ye wilds, where heaven-rapt Fancy roves !
Ye sky-crown'd hills, and solemn groves !
Ye low-brow'd vaults, ye gloomy cells !
Ye caves where night-bred Silence dwells !
Ghosts that in yon lonely hall
Lightly glance along the wall ;
Or beneath yon ivy'd tow'r,
At the silent midnight hour,
Stand array'd in spotless white,
And stain the dusky robe of Night ;
Or with slow solemn pauses roam
O'er the long-sounding hollow dome !
Say, mid yon desert solitary round,
When darkness wraps the boundless spheres,
Does ne'er some dismal, dying sound
On Night's dull serious ear rebound ;
That mourns the ceaseless lapse of life-consuming years ?

II. 1.

O call th' inspiring glorious hour to view,
When Caledonia's martial train
From yon steep rock's high-arching brow
Pour'd on the heart-struck flying Dane !
When War's blood-tinctur'd spear
Hung o'er the trembling rear ; [flight ;
When light-heel'd Terror wing'd their headlong
Yon tow'rs then rung with wild alarms !
Yon desert gleam'd with shining arms !
While on the bleak hill's bright'ning spire
Bold Victory flam'd, with eyes of fire ;
Her limbs celestial robes enfold,
Her wings were ting'd with spangling gold,
She spoke : her words infus'd resistless might,
And warm'd the bounding heart, and rous'd the soul of fight.

II. 2.

But, ah ! what hand the smiling prospect brings :
What voice recalls th' expiring day ?
See, darting swift on eagle-wings,
The glancing moment bursts away !
So, from some mountain's head,
In mantling gold array'd,
While bright-ey'd Fancy stands in sweet surprise :
The vale where musing Quiet treads,
The flow'r-clad lawns, and blooming meads,
Or streams where Zephyr loves to stray
Beneath the pale eve's twinkling ray ;
Or waving woods detain the sight—
When from the gloomy cave of night
Some cloud sweeps shadowy o'er the dusky skies,
And wraps the flying scene, that fades, and swims, and dies.

II. 3.

Lo ! rising from yon dreary tomb,
What spectres stalk across the gloom !
With haggard eyes, and visage pale,
And voice that moans with feeble wail !

O'er yon long resounding plain
Slowly moves the solemn train ;
Wailing wild with shrieks of woe
O'er the bones that rest below !
While the dull Night's startled ear
Shrinks aghast with thrilling fear !
Or stand with thin robes wasting soon,
And eyes that blast the sick'ning moon !
Yet these, ere Time had roll'd their years away,
Ere Death's fell arm had mark'd its aim,
Rul'd yon proud tow'rs with ample sway,
Beheld the trembling swains obey,
And wrought the glorious deed that swell'd the trump of Fame.

III. 1.

But why o'er these indulge the bursting sigh ?
Feels not each shrub the tempest's pow'r ?
Rocks not the dome when whirlwinds fly ?
Nor shakes the hill when thunders roar ?
Lo ! mould'ring, wild, unknown,
What fanes, what tow'rs o'erthrown,
What tumbling chaos marks the waste of Time !
I see Palmyra's temples fall ;
Old Ruin shakes the hanging wall !
Yon waste where roaming lions howl,
Yon aisle where moans the grey-eyed owl,
Shows the proud Persian's great abode * ;
Where sceptred once, an earthly god ! [clime,
His pow'r-clad arm controll'd each happier
Where sports the warbling Muse, and Fancy soars sublime.

III. 2.

Hark ! what dire sound rolls murn'ring on the Ah ! what soul-thirsting scene appears ? [gale ?
I see the column'd arches fail !
And structures hoar, the boast of years !
What mould'ring piles, decay'd,
Gleam through the moon-streak'd shade,
Where Rome's proud genius rear'd her awful
Sad monument !—Ambition near [brow !
Rolls on the dust, and pours a tear ;
Pale Honor drops the flutt'ring plume,
And Conquest weeps o'er Cæsar's tomb ;
Slow Patience sits, with eye deprest,
And Courage beats his sobbing breast ; [flow,
E'en War's red cheek the gushing streams o'er-
And Fancy's list'ning ear attends the plaint of woe.

III. 3.

Lo, on yon pyramid sublime,
Whence lies old Egypt's desert clime,
Bleak, naked, wild ! where Ruin low'rs,
'Mid fanes, and wrecks, and tumbling tow'rs,
On the steep height, waste and bare,
Stands the Pow'r with hoary hair !
O'er his sithe he bends ; his hand
Slowly shakes the flowing sand,
While the hours, in airy ring,
Lightly flit, with downy wing,
And sap the works of man, and shade
With silver locks his furrow'd head ;

* Persepolis.

Thence rolls the mighty Pow'r his broad survey,
And seals the nations' awful doom :
He sees proud grandeur's meteor ray ;
He yields to joy the festive day ;
Then sweeps the length'ning shade, and marks
them for the tomb.

§ 116. Ode to Evening. OGILVIE.

MEEK Pow'r, whose balmy-pinion'd gale,
Steals o'er the flow'r-enamell'd dale !
Whose voice in gentle whispers near
Oft sighs to Quiet's list'ning ear ;
As, on her downy couch, at rest,
By 'Thought's inspiring visions blest,
She sits, with white-rob'd Silence nigh,
And musing heaves her serious eye,
To mark the slow sun's glimm'ring ray,
To catch the last pale gleam of day ;
Or, sunk in sweet repose, unknown
Lies on the wild hill's van alone ;
And sees thy gradual pencil flow
Along the heaven-illumin'd bow.

Come, Nymph demure, with mantle blue,
Thy traces bath'd in balmy dew,
With step smooth sliding o'er the green,
The Graces breathing in thy mien ;
And thy vesture's gather'd fold
Girt with a zone of circling gold ;
And bring the harp, whose solemn string
Dies to the wild wind's morn'ring wing ;
And the Nymph, whose eye serene
Marks the calm-breathing woodland scene ;
Thought, mountain sage ! who loves to climb,
And haunts the dark rock's summit dim ;
Let Fancy, falcon-wing'd, be near ;
And through the cloud-envelop'd sphere,
Where musing roams Retirement hoar,
Lull'd by the torrent's distant roar,
Oh bid with trembling light to glow
The raven-plume that crowns his brow.

Lo, where thy meek-ey'd train attend !
Queen of the solemn thought, descend !
Oh hide me in romantic bow'rs,
Or lead my step to ruin'd tow'rs !
Where gleaming through the chinky door
The pale ray gilds the moulder'd floor ;
While beneath the hallow'd pile,
Deep in the desert shrieking aisle,
Rapt Contemplation stalks along,
And hears the slow clock's pealing tongue ;
Or, 'mid the dun discol'rd gloom,
Sits on the hero's peaceful tomb,
Throws life's gay glitt'ring robe aside,
And tramples on the neck of Pride.

Oft, shelter'd by the rambling sprays,
Lead o'er the forest's winding maze ;
Where, through the mantling boughs, afar
Glimmers the silver-streaming star ;
And, shower'd from ev'ry rustling blade,
The loose light floats along the shade ;
So hov'ring o'er the human scene,
Gay Pleasure sports with brow serene ;
By Fancy beam'd, the glancing ray,
Shoots, flutters, gleams, and fleets away ;

Unsettled, dubious, restless, blind,
Floats all the busy bustling mind ;
While Mem'ry's unstain'd leaves retain
No trace from all th' ideal train.

But see, the landscape op'ning fair
Invites to breathe the purer air !
Oh when the cowslip-scented gale,
Shakes the light dew-drop o'er the dale,
When on her amber-dropping bed
Loose Ease reclines her downy head ;
How blest, by fairy-haunted stream
To melt in mild ecstatic dream !
Die to the pictur'd wish, or hear
(Breath'd soft on Fancy's trembling ear)
Such lays by angel-harps refin'd,
As half unchain'd the flutt'ring mind,
When on life's edge it eyes the shore,
And all its pinions stretch to soar.

Lo, where the sun's broad orb withdrawn
Skirts with pale gold the dusky lawn ;
While, led by ev'ry gentler pow'r,
Steals the slow, solemn, musing hour.
Now from the green hill's purple brow
Let me mark the scene below ;
Where, feebly glancing through the gloom,
Yon myrtle shades the silent tomb ;
Not far, beneath the evening beam,
The dark lake rolls his azure stream,
Whose breast the swan's white plumes divide,
Slow sailing o'er the floating tide.
Groves, meads, and spires, and forests bare,
Shoot glimm'ring through the misty air ;
Dim as the vision-pictur'd bow'r
That gilds the saint's expiring hour,
When, rapt to ecstasy, his eye
Looks through the blue ethereal sky :
All heaven unfolding to his sight !
Gay forms that swim in floods of light !
The sun-pav'd floor, the balmy clime,
The ruby-beaming dome sublime ;
The tow'rs in glitt'ring pomp display'd—
The bright scene hovers o'er his bed :
He starts—but from his eager gaze
Black clouds obscure the lessening rays ;
On Mem'ry still the scene is wrought,
And lives in Fancy's featur'd thought.

On the airy mount reclin'd
What wishes soothe the musing mind ?
How soft the velvet lap of Spring
How sweet the Zephyr's violet wing !
Goddess of the plaintive song,
That leads the melting heart along !
Oh bid the voice of genial pow'r
Reach Contemplation's lonely bow'r ;
And call the sage with tranced sight
To climb the mountain's steepy height ;
To wing the kindling wish, or spread
O'er 'Thought's pale cheek enliv'ning red ;
Come, hoary Pow'r, with serious eye,
Whose thought explores yon distant sky ;
Now, when the busy world is still,
Nor passion tempts the wav'ring will,
When sweeter hopes each pow'r control,
And quiet whispers to the soul,

Now sweep from life th' illusive train
That dance in Folly's dizzy brain;
Be Reason's simple draught portray'd,
Where blends alternate light and shade;
Bid dimpled Mirth, with thought belied,
Sport on the bubble's glitt'ring side;
Bid Hope pursue the distant boon,
And Phrensy watch the fading moon;
Paint Superstition's starting eye,
And Wit that leers with gesture sly;
Let Censure whet her venom'd dart,
And green-eyed Envy gnaw the heart;
Let Pleasure lie on flow'rs reclin'd,
While Anguish aims her shaft behind.

Hail, Sire sublime! whose hallow'd cave
Howls to the hoarse deep's dashing wave;
Thee Solitude to Phœbus bore,
Far on the lone deserted shore,
Where Orellano's rushing tide
Roars on the rock's projected side.
Hence bursting o'er thy ripen'd mind,
Beams all the father's thought refin'd;
Hence oft, in silent vales unseen,
Thy footsteps print the fairy green;
Or thy soul melts to strains of woe,
That from the willow's quiv'ring bough
Sweet warbling breathe—the zephyrs round
O'er Dee's smooth current waft the sound,
When soft on bending osiers laid
The broad sun trembling through the bed;
All wild thy heav'n-rapt fancy strays,
Led through the soul-dissolving maze;
Till Slumber downy-pinion'd, near,
Plants her strong fetlocks on thy ear;
The soul unfetter'd bursts away,
And basks enlarg'd in beamy day.

§ 117. Ode to Innocence. OGILVIE.

'Twas when the slow-declining ray
Had ting'd the cloud with evening gold;
No warbler pour'd the melting lay,
No sound disturb'd the sleeping fold:

When by a murmur'ing rill reclin'd,
Sat, wrapt in thought, a wand'ring swain;
Calm peace compos'd his musing mind;
And thus he rais'd the flowing strain:

"Hail, Innocence! celestial Maid!
"What joys thy blushing charms reveal!
"Sweet as the arbor's cooling shade,
"And milder than the vernal gale.

"On Thee attends a radiant choir,
"Soft smiling Peace, and downy Rest;
"With Love, that prompts the warbling lyre;
"And Hope, that soothes the throbbing breast.

"Oh sent from heaven to haunt the grove,
"Where squinting Envy ne'er can come!
"Nor pines the cheek with luckless love,
"Nor anguish chills the living bloom.

"But spotless Beauty rob'd in white,
"Sits on yon moss-grown hill reclin'd:

"Serene as heaven's unsullied light,
"And pure as Delia's gentle mind.

"Grant, heavenly Pow'r! thy peaceful sway
"May still my ruder thoughts control;
"Thy hand to point my dubious way,
"Thy voice to soothe the melting soul.

"Far in the shady, sweet retreat,
"Let Thought beguile the ling'ring hour;
"Let Quiet court the mossy seat,
"And twining olives form the bow'r:

"Let dove-eyed Peace her wreath bestow,
"And oft sit list'ning in the dale,
"While Night's sweet warbler from the bough
"Tells to the grove her plaintive tale.

"Soft, as in Delia's snowy breast,
"Let each consenting passion move;
"Let Angels watch its silent rest,
"And all its blissful dreams be Love!"

§ 118. Morning; or, The Complaint. An American Eclogue. GREGORY.

FAR from the savage bandit's fierce alarms,
Or distant din of horrid despot's arms,
Though Pennsylvania boasts her peaceful plain,
Yet there in blood her petty tyrants reign.

With waving pines though vocal woods be
crown'd,
And stream-fed vales with living wealth abound;
To golden fields though ripening rays descend,
With blushing fruit though loaded branches
bend; [taste,
To those who ne'er must freedom's blessings
'Tis barren all, 'tis all a worthless waste.

While hoarse the cataract murmur'd on the gale, [dale;
And chilling dews swept through the murky
Along the hills the dismal tempest howl'd,
And lightnings flash'd, and deep the thunder
roll'd;

Beneath a leafless tree, ere morn arose,
The slave Adala thus laments his woes:
Ye grisly spectres, gather round my seat,
From caves unblest that wretches'—groans repeat!

Terrific forms, from misty lakes arise!
And bloody meteors threaten through the skies!
Oh curs'd destroyers of our hapless race,
Of human kind the terror and disgrace!
Lo! hosts of dusky captives, to my view,
Demand a deep revenge! demand their due!
And frowning chiefs now dart athwart the
gloom,

And o'er the salt sea wave pronounce your doom,
But Gods are just, and oft the stroke forbear,
To plunge the guilty in tenfold despair.

Lift high the scourge, my soul the rack dis-
dains;

I pant for freedom and my native plains!

With limbs benumb'd my poor companions lie;
Oppress'd by pain and want the aged sigh;
Through reedy huts the driving tempest pours,
Their festering wounds receive the sickly show'rs; [steep,
In madd'ning draughts our lords their senses
And doom their slaves to stripes and death in
sleep;
Now, while the bitter blasts surround my head,
To times long past my restless soul is led,
Far, far beyond the azure hills, to groves
Of ruddy fruit, where beauty fearless roves—
O blissful seats! O self-approving joys!
Nature's plain dictates! ignorance of vice!
O guiltless hours! Our cares and wants were
No arts of luxury or deceit we knew. [few,
Our labor, sport—to tend our cottage care,
Or from the palm the luscious juice prepare;
To sit indulging love's delusive dream,
And snare the silver tenants of the stream;
Or (nobler toil) to aim the deadly blow
With dext'rous art against the spotted foe;
O days with youthful daring mark'd! 'twas then
I dragg'd the shaggy monster from his den;
And boldly down the rocky mountain's side
Hurl'd the grim panther in the foaming tide.
Our healthful sports a daily feast afford,
And ev'n still found us at the social board.

Can I forget, ah me! the fatal day,
When half the vale of peace was swept away!
Th' affrighted maids in vain the gods implore,
And weeping view from far the happy shore;
The frantic dames impatient ruffians seize,
And infants shriek, and clasp their mothers'
knees;
With galling fetters soon their limbs are bound,
And groans throughout the noisome bark re-
sound.
Why was I bound? why did not Whydah see
Adala gain or death or victory?
No storms arise, no waves revengeful roar,
To dash the monsters on our injur'd shore.
Long o'er the foaming deep to worlds unknown,
By envious winds the bulky vessel's blown,
While by disease and chains the weak expire,
Or parch'd endure the slow consuming fire.
Who'd in this land of many sorrows live,
Where death's the only comfort tyrants give?
Tyrants unblest! Each proud of strict command,
Nor age nor sickness holds the iron hand;
Whose hearts, in adamant involv'd, despise
The drooping female's tears, the infant's cries,
From whose stern brows no grateful look e'er beams, [shames.
Whose blushless front nor rape nor murder
Nor all I blame; for Nastal, friend to peace,
Through his wide pastures bids oppression cease*;

No drivers goad, no galling fetters bind,
No stern compulsion damps th' exalted mind.
There strong Arcona's fated to enjoy
Domestic sweets, and rear his progeny;
To till his glebe employs Arcona's care,
To Nastal's God he nightly makes his pray'r;
His mind at ease, of Christian truths he'll boast—

He has no wife, no lovely offspring, lost.
Gay his savannah blooms, while mine appears Scorch'd up with heat, or moist with blood and
tears.

Cheerful his hearth in chilling winter burns,
While to the storm the sad Adala mourns.

Lift high the scourge, my soul the rack dis-
dains;

I pant for freedom and my native plains!

Shall I his holy Prophet's aid implore,
And wait for justice on another shore?
Or, rushing down yon mountain's craggy steep,
End all my sorrows in the sullen deep?
A cliff there hangs in yon grey morning cloud,
The dashing wave beneath roars harsh and loud—

But doubts and fears involve my anxious mind,
The gulph of death once pass'd, what shore we
find:

Dubious, if sent beyond th' expanded main,
This soul shall seek its native realms again;
Or if in gloomy mists condemn'd to lie,
Beyond the limits of yon arching sky.
A better prospect oft my spirit cheers,
And in my dreams the vale of peace appears,
And fleeting visions of my former life:
My hoary sire I clasp, my long-lost wife,
And oft I kiss my gentle babes in sleep,
Till, with the sounding whip, I'm wak'd to
weep.

Lift high the scourge, my soul the rack dis-
dains;

I pant for freedom and my native plains!

Chiefs of the earth, and monarchs of the sea,
Who vaunt your hardy ancestors were free;
Whose teachers plead th' oppress'd and injur'd
cause,

And prove the wisdom of your Prophet's laws;
To force and fraud if justice must give place,
You're dragg'd to slavery by some rougher race,
Some rougher race your flocks shall force away,
Like Afric's sons your children must obey;
The very Gods that view their constant toil,
Shall see your offspring till a ruder soil,
The pain of thirst and pinching hunger know,
And all the torments that from bondage flow,
When far remov'd from Christian worlds we prove

The sweets of peace, the lasting joys of love.

But, hark! the whip's harsh echo through the trees!

On every trembling limb fresh horrors seize—

* The Quakers in America have set free all their Negroes, and allow them wages as other servants.

Alas! 'tis morn, and here I sit alone—
Be strong, my soul, and part without a groan!
Ruffians, proceed! Adala ne'er shall swerve,
Prepare the rack, and strain each aching nerve!

Lift high the scourge, my soul the rack dis-
dains;

I pant for freedom and my native plains.

Thou God, who gild'st with light their rising
Who life dispensest by the genial ray! [day!
Will thy slow vengeance never, never fall,
But undistinguish'd favor shine on all?
O hear a suppliant wretch's last sad pray'r!
Dart fiercest rage! infect the ambient air!
This pallid race, whose hearts are bound in steel,
By dint of suffering teach them how to feel.

Or to some despot's lawless will betray'd,
Give them to know what wretches they have made!

Beneath the lash let them resign their breath,
Or court, in chains, the clay-cold hand of death;
Or, worst of ills! within each callous breast
Cherish uncurb'd the dark internal pest;
Bid av'riceswell with undiminish'd rage, [suage;
While no new worlds th' accursed thirst as-
Then bid the monsters on each other turn,
The fury passions in disorder burn;
Bid Discord flourish, civil crimes increase,
Nor one fond wish arise that pleads for peace—
Till, with their crimes in wild confusion hurl'd,
They wake t' eternal anguish in a future world*.

§ 119. A Description of a Parish Poor House.
CRABBE.

THERE is yon house that holds the parish poor,
Whose walls of mud scarce bear the broken
door;

There, where the putrid vapors flagging play,
And the dull wheel hums doleful through the day: [care;

There children dwell, who know no parents'
Parents, who know no children's love, dwell
there:

Heart-broken matrons on their joyless bed,
Forsaken wives, and mothers never wed;
Dejected widows, with unheeded tears,
And crippled age, with more than childhood
fears!

The lame, the blind, and, far the happiest they!
The moping idiot, and the madman gay.

Here too the sick their final doom receive,
Here brought, amid the scenes of grief, to grieve:
Where the loud groans from some sad chamber
flow,

Mix'd with the clamors of the crowd below:
Here, sorrowing, they each kindred sorrow scan,
And the cold charities of man to man:
Whose laws indeed for ruin'd age provide,
And strong compulsion plucks the scrap from
pride;

But still that scrap is bought with many a sigh,
And pride imbitters what it can't deny.

Say, ye oppress'd by some fantastic woes,
Some jarring nerve that baffles your repose;
Who press the downy couch, while slaves advance

With timid eye, to read the distant glance;
Who with sad prayers the weary doctor tease
To name the nameless ever-new disease;
Who with mock-patience dire complaints endure,

Which real pain, and that alone, can cure;
How would ye bear in real pain to lie,
Despis'd, neglected, left alone to die?
How would ye bear to draw your latest breath,
Where all that's wretched paves the way for death. [vides,

Such is that room which one rude beam di-
And naked rafters form the sloping sides;
Where the vile bands that bind the thatch are
seen,

And lath and mud are all that lie between;
Save one dull pane, that, coarsely patch'd, gives
way

To the rude tempest, yet excludes the day:
Here, on a matted flock, with dust o'erspread,
The drooping wretch reclines his languid head;
For him no hand the cordial cup applies,
Nor wipes the tear that stagnates in his eyes;
No friends with soft discourse his pain beguile,
Nor promise hope till sickness wears a smile.

§ 120. Description of a Country Apothecary.
CRABBE.

BUT soon a loud and hasty summons calls,
Shakes the thin roof, and echoes round the
Anon a figure enters, quaintly neat, [walls:
All pride and business, bustle and conceit;
With looks unalter'd by these scenes of woe,
With speed that, entering, speaks his haste to go;

He bids the gazing throng around him fly,
And carries fate and physic in his eye;
A potent quack, long vers'd in human ills,
Who first insults the victim whom he kills;
Whose murd'rous hand a drowsy bench protect,
And whose most tender mercy, is neglect.

Paid by the parish for attendance here,
He wears contempt upon his sapient sneer;
In haste he seeks the bed where misery lies,
Impatience mark'd in his averted eyes;
And, some habitual queries hurried o'er,
Without reply, he rushes on the door;
His drooping patient, long inur'd to pain,
And long unheeded, knows remonstrance vain;
He ceases now the feeble help to crave
Of man, and mutely hastens to the grave.

§ 121. Description of a Country Clergyman visiting the Sick. CRABBE.

BUT, ere his death, some pious doubts arise,
Some simple fears which "bold bad" men
despise:

* This Eclogue was written during the American war.

Fain would he ask the parish priest to prove
 His title certain to the joys above; [calls
 For this he sends the murmuring nurse, who
 The holy stranger to these dismal walls:
 And doth not he, the pious man, appear,
 He, "passing rich with forty pounds a-year?"
 Ah no! a shepherd of a different stock,
 And far unlike him, feeds this little flock:
 A jovial youth, who thinks his Sunday's task
 As much as God or man can fairly ask;
 The rest he gives to loves, and labors light,
 To fields the morning, and to feasts the night;
 None better skill'd the noisy pack to guide,
 To urge their chace, to cheer them, or to chide;
 Sure in his shot, his game he seldom miss'd,
 And seldom fail'd to win his game at whist;
 Then, while such honors bloom around his
 head,
 Shall he sit sadly by the sick man's bed,
 To raise the hope he feels not, or with zeal
 To combat fears that e'en the pious feel?

§ 122. The Reason for describing the Vices of the Village. CRABBE

YET why, you ask, these humble crimes relate?
 Why make the poor as guilty as the great?
 To show the great, those mightier sons of pride,
 How near in vice the lowest are allied:
 Such are their natures, and their passions such,
 But these disguise too little, those too much:
 So shall the man of pow'r and pleasure see
 In his own slave as vile a wretch as he;
 In his luxuriant lord the servant find
 His own low pleasures and degenerate mind:
 And each in all the kindred vices trace
 Of a poor, blind, bewilder'd, erring race;
 Who, a short time in varied fortune past,
 Die, and are equal in the dust at last.
 And you, ye poor, who still lament your fate,
 Forbear to envy those you reckon great;
 And know, amid those blessings they possess,
 They are, like you, the victims of distress;
 While Sloth with many a pang torments her slave, [brave.
 Fear waits on guilt, and Danger shakes the § 123. Apology for Vagrants. ANON.

FOR him, who, lost to ev'ry hope of life,
 Has long with fortune held unequal strife,
 Known to no human love, no human care,
 The friendless, homeless object of despair;
 For the poor vagrant feel, while he complains,
 Nor from sad freedom send to sadder chains.
 Alike, if folly or misfortune brought
 Those last of woes his evil days have wrought;
 Relieve with social mercy, and, with me,
 Folly's misfortune in the first degree.

Perhaps on some inhospitable shore
 The houseless wretch a widow'd parent bore;
 Who, then no more by golden prospects led,
 Of the poor Indian begg'd a leafy bed.
 Cold, on Canadian hills, or Minden's plain,
 Perhaps that parent mourn'd her soldier slain;

Bent o'er her babe, her eye dissolv'd in dew,
 The big drops mingling with the milk he drew,
 Gave the sad presage of his future years,
 The child of misery, baptiz'd in tears!

§ 124. Epistle to a young Gentleman, on his leaving Eton School. By Dr. ROBERTS.

SINCE now a nobler scene awakes thy care,
 Since manhood dawning, to fair Granta's tow'rs,
 Where once in life's gay spring I lov'd to roam,
 Invites thy willing steps; accept, dear youth,
 This parting strain; accept the fervent pray'r
 Of him who loves thee with a passion pure
 As ever friendship dropp'd in human heart;
 The pray'r, That he who guides the hand of
 youth
 Through all the puzzled and perplexed round
 Of life's meand'ring path, upon thy head
 May shower down every blessing, every joy
 Which health, which virtue, and which fame can give!

Yet think not I will deign to flatter thee:
 Shall he, the guardian of thy faith and truth,
 The guide, the pilot of thy tender years,
 Teach thy young heart to feel a spurious glow
 At undeserved praise? Perish the slave
 Whose venal breath in youth's unpractis'd ear
 Pours poison'd flattery, and corrupts the soul
 With vain conceit; whose base ungenerous art
 Fawns on the vice, which some with honest
 hand
 Have torn for ever from the bleeding breast!
 Say, gentle youth, remember'st thou the day
 When o'er thy tender shoulders first I hung
 The golden lyre, and taught thy trembling hand
 To touch th' accordant strings? From that blest hour

I've seen thee panting up the hill of fame;
 Thy little heart beat high with honest praise,
 Thy cheek was flush'd, and oft thy sparkling eye
 Shot flames of young ambition. Never quench
 That generous ardor in thy virtuous breast.
 Sweet is the concord of harmonious sounds,
 When the soft lute or pealing organ strikes
 The well-temper'd ear; sweet is the breath
 Of honest love, when nymph and gentle swain
 Waft sighs alternate to each other's heart:
 But not the concord of harmonious sounds,
 When the soft lute or pealing organ strikes
 The well-temper'd ear; nor the sweet breath
 Of honest love, when nymph and gentle swain
 Waft sighs alternate to each other's heart,
 So charm with ravishment the raptur'd sense,
 As does the voice of well-deserv'd report
 Strike with sweet melody the conscious soul.

On ev'ry object through the giddy world
 Which fashion to the dazzled eye presents,
 Fresh is the gloss of newness; look, dear youth,
 O look, but not admire: O let not these
 Rase from thy noble heart the fair records
 Which youth and education planted there:
 Let not affection's full, impetuous tide,

Which riots in thy generous breast, be check'd
By selfish cares; nor let the idle jeers
Of laughing fools make thee forget thyself.
When didst thou hear a tender tale of woe,
And feel thy heart at rest? Have I not seen
In thy swoln eye the tear of sympathy,
The milk of human kindness? When didst
thou,

With envy rankling, hear a rival prais'd?
When didst thou slight the wretched? when
The modest humble suit of poverty? [despise
These virtues still be thine; nor ever learn
To look with cold eye on the charities
Of brother, or of parents; think on those Whose anxious care through childhood's slippery path

Sustain'd thy feeble steps; whose every wish
Is wafted still to thee; remember those,
Even in thy heart, while memory holds her seat.
And oft as to thy mind thou shalt recal
The sweet companions of thy earliest years,
Mates of thy sport, and rivals in the strife
Of every generous art, remember me.

“ Tam patiens urbis, tam ferreus ut teneat “ se?”

JUV.

THOUGH grief and fondness in my breast rebel
When injur'd Thales bids the town farewell,
Yet still my calmer thoughts his choice com-
mend,

I praise the hermit, but regret the friend;
Who now resolves, from vice and London far,
To breathe in distant fields a purer air;
And fix'd on Cambria's solitary shore,
Give to St. David one true Briton more.
For who would leave, unbrib'd, Hibernia's
land,

Or change the rocks of Scotland for the Strand?
There none are swept by sudden fate away,
But all whom hunger spares, with age decay;
Here malice, rapine, accident, conspire,
And now a rabble rages, now a fire;
Their ambush here relentless ruffians lay,
And here the fell attorney prowls for prey;
Here falling houses thunder on your head,
And here a female atheist talks you dead.
While Thales waits the wherry that contains
Of dissipated wealth the small remains,
On Thames's banks in silent thought we stood,
Where Greenwich smiles upon the silver flood;
Struck with the seat that gave Eliza * birth,
We kneel and kiss the consecrated earth;
In pleasing dreams the blissful age renew,
And call Britannia's glories back to view;

Behold her cross triumphant on the main,
The guard of commerce, and the dread of Spain;
Ere masquerades debauch'd, excise oppress'd,
Or English honor grew a standing jest.

A transient calm the happy scenes bestow,
And for a moment lull the sense of woe.
At length awaking, with contemptuous frown,
Indignant Thales eyes the neighbouring town.
Since worth, he cries, in these degenerate days,
Wants e'en the cheap reward of empty praise;
In those curs'd walls, devote to vice and gain,
Since unrewarded science toils in vain;
Since hope but soothes to double my distress,
And ev'ry moment leaves my little less,
While yet my steady steps no staff sustains,
And life, still vig'rous, revels in my veins;
Grant me, kind Heaven, to find some happier
place,

Where honesty and sense are no disgrace;
Some pleasing bank where verdant osiers play,
Some peaceful vale with nature's painting gay,
Where once the harass'd Briton found repose,
And safe in poverty defy'd his foes;
Some secret cell, ye pow'rs indulgent, give;
Let — live here, for — has learn'd to live.
Here let those reign whom pensions can incite
To vote a patriot black, a courtier white;
Explain their country's dear-bought rights
away,

And plead for pirates in the face of day;
With slavish tenets taint our poison'd youth,
And lend a lie the confidence of truth.
Let such raise palaces, and manors buy,
Collect a tax, or farm a lottery;
With warbling eunuchs fill a licens'd stage,
And lull to servitude a thoughtless age.
Heroes, proceed! what bounds your pride shall hold? [gold?

What check restrain your thirst of power and
Behold rebellious virtue quite o'erthrown, Behold our fame, our wealth, our lives your
own.

To such a groaning nation's spoils are given,
When public crimes inflame the wrath of Heaven. [me,

But what, my friend, what hope remains for
Who start at theft, and blush at perjury?
Who scarce forbear, though Britain's court he
sing,

To pluck a titled poet's borrow'd wing;
A statesman's logic unconvinc'd can hear,
And dare to slumber o'er the Gazetteer;
Despise a fool in half his pension dress'd,
And strive in vain to laugh at H—y's jest.

Others, with softer smiles, and subtler art,
Can sap the principles, or taint the heart;
With more address a lover's note convey,
Or bribe a virgin's innocence away. [tongue
Well may they rise, while I, whose rustic
Ne'er knew to puzzle right, or varnish wrong
Spurn'd as a beggar, dreaded as a spy,
Live unregarded, unlamented die.

* Queen Elizabeth.

For what but social guilt the friend endears?
 Who shares Orgelio's crimes, his fortune shares.
 But thou, should tempting villany present
 All Marlborough hoarded, or all Villiers spent,
 Turn from the glitt'ring bribe thy scornful eye,
 Nor sell for gold what gold could never buy,
 The peaceful slumber, self-approving day,
 Unsullied fame, and conscience ever gay.

The cheated nation's happy fav'rites see!
 Mark whom the great caress, who frown on
 London, the needy villain's gen'ral home, [me!
 The common-sewer of Paris and of Rome;
 With eager thirst, by folly or by fate,
 Sucks in the dregs of each corrupted state.
 Forgive my transports on a theme like this,
 I cannot bear a French metropolis.
 Illustrious Edward, from the realms of day,
 The land of heroes and of saints survey;
 Nor hope the British lineaments to trace,
 The rustic grandeur or the surly grace,
 But lost in thoughtless ease and empty show,
 Behold the warrior dwindled to a beau;
 Sense, freedom, piety, refin'd away,
 Of France the mimic, and of Spain the prey.

All that at home no more can beg or steal,
 Or like a gibbet better than a wheel;
 Hiss'd from the stage, or hooted from the court,
 Their air, their dress, their politics import;
 Obsequious, artful, voluble, and gay,
 On Britain's fond credulity they prey.
 No gainful trade their industry can 'scape.
 They sing, they dance, clean shoes, or cure a clap.

All sciences a fasting Monsieur knows,
 And bid him go to hell, to hell he goes.
 Ah! what avails it, that from slav'ry far,
 I drew the breath of life in English air;
 Was early taught a Briton's right to prize,
 And lisp the tale of Henry's victories;
 If the gull'd conqueror receives the chain,
 And flattery subdues when arms are vain?

Studious to please, and ready to submit,
 The subtle Gaul was born a parasite:
 Still to his int'rest true where'er he goes,
 Wit, brav'ry, worth, his lavish tongue bestows;
 In ev'ry face a thousand graces shine,
 From ev'ry tongue flows harmony divine.
 These arts in vain our rugged natives try,
 Strain out, with falt'ring diffidence, a lie,
 And gain a kick for awkward flattery.

Besides, with justice, this discerning age
 Admires their wondrous talents for the stage:
 Well may they venture on the mimic's art,
 Who play from morn to night a borrow'd part;
 Practis'd their master's notions to embrace;
 Repeat his maxims, and reflect his face;
 With ev'ry wild absurdity comply,
 And view each object with another's eye;
 To shake with laughter e'er the jest they hear,
 To pour at will the counterfeited tear;
 And as their patron hints the cold or heat,
 To shake in dog-days, in December sweat.

How, when competitors like these contend,
 Can surly virtue hope to fix a friend?

Slaves that with serious impudence beguile,
 And lie without a blush, without a smile;
 Exalt each trifle, ev'ry vice adore,
 Your taste in snuff, your judgement in a whore;
 Can Balbo's eloquence applaud, and swear
 He gropes his breeches with a monarch's air.

For arts like these preferr'd, admir'd, caress'd,
 They first invade your table, then your breast;
 Explore your secrets with insidious art,
 Watch the weak hour, and ransack all the heart;
 Then soon your ill-plac'd confidence repay,
 Commence your lords, and govern or betray.

By numbers here from shame and censure
 All crimes are safe but hated poverty. [free,
 This, only this, the rigid law pursues,
 This, only this, provokes the snarling Muse.
 The sober trader at a tatter'd cloak,
 Wakes from his dream, and labors for a joke;
 With brisker air the silken courtiers gaze,
 And turn the varied taunt a thousand ways.
 Of all the griefs that harass the distress'd,
 Sure the most bitter is a scornful jest;
 Fate never wounds more deep the gen'rous
 heart,

Than when a blockhead's insult points the dart.

Has Heaven reserv'd, in pity to the poor,
 No pathless waste or undiscover'd shore?
 No secret island in the boundless main?
 No peaceful desert yet unclaim'd by Spain?
 Quick let us rise, the happy seats explore,
 And bear oppression's insolence no more.
 This mournful truth is every where confess'd,
Slow rises worth, by poverty depress'd:
 But here more slow, where all are slaves to gold,
 Where looks are merchandise, and smiles are sold;

Where won by bribes, by flatteries implor'd,
 The groom retails the favors of his lord.
 But hark! the affrighted crowd's tumultuous
 cries [skies:

Roll through the streets, and thunder to the Rais'd from some pleasing dream of wealth and
 pow'r,

Some pompous palace, or some blissful bow'r,
 Aghast you start, and scarce with aching sight
 Sustain the approaching fire's tremendous light;
 Swift from pursuing horrors take your way,
 And leave your little all to flames a prey;
 Then through the world a wretched vagrant roam,

For where can starving merit find a home?
 In vain your mournful narrative disclose,
 While all neglect, and most insult your woes.
 Should Heaven's just bolts, Orgilio's wealth
 confound,

And spread his flaming palace on the ground,
 Swift o'er the land the dismal rumor flies,
 And public mournings pacify the skies:
 The laureat tribe in servile verse relate,
 How virtue wars with persecuting fate;
 With well-feign'd gratitude the pension'd band
 Refund the plunder of the beggar'd land.
 See! while he builds, the gaudy vassals come,
 And crowd with sudden wealth the rising dome;

The price of boroughs and of souls restore;
And raise his treasure higher than before.
Now bless'd with all the baubles of the great,
The polish'd marble, and the shining plate,
Orgilio sees the golden pile aspire,
And hopes from angry Heaven another fire.

Couldst thou resign the park and play content,

For the fair banks of Severn or of Trent;
There mightst thou find some elegant retreat,
Some hireling senator's deserted seat;
And stretch thy prospects o'er the smiling land,
For less than rent the dungeons of the Strand;
There prune thy walks, support thy drooping
flow'rs,

Direct thy rivulets, and twine thy bow'rs;
And, while thy grounds a cheap repast afford,
Despise the dainties of a venal lord.
There ev'ry bush with nature's music rings,
There ev'ry breeze bears health upon its wings;
On all thy hours security shall smile,
And bless thine evening walk and morning toil.

Prepare for death if here at night you roam,
And sign your will before you sup from home.
Some fiery fop, with new commission vain,
Who sleeps on brambles till he kills his man;
Some frolic drunkard, reeling from a feast,
Provokes a broil, and stabs you for a jest.
Yet e'en these heroes, mischievously gay,
Lords of the street, and terrors of the way;
Flush'd as they are with folly, youth, and wine,
Their prudent insults to the poor confine;
Aloof they mark the flambeaux's bright approach,

And shun the shining train, and golden coach.

In vain, these dangers past, your doors you
And hope the balmy blessings of repose: [close,
Cruel with guilt, and daring with despair,
The midnight murd'rer bursts the faithless bar;
Invades the sacred hour of silent rest,
And plants, unseen, a dagger in your breast.

Scarce can our fields, such crowds at Tyburn
die,

With hemp the gallows and the fleet supply.
Propose your schemes, ye senatorian band,
Whose ways and means support the sinking
land;

Lest ropes be wanting in the tempting spring,
To rig another convoy for the king.*

A single gaol in Alfred's golden reign,
Could half the nation's criminals contain;
Fair justice then, without constraint ador'd,
Held high the steady scale, but sheath'd the
sword;

No spies were paid, no special juries known,
Blest age! but ah! how different from our
own!

Much could I add—but see the boat at hand,
The tide retiring, calls me from the land:
Farewell!—When youth, and health, and fortune spent,
Thou fly'st for refuge to the wilds of Kent;

And tir'd like me with follies and with crimes,
In angry numbers warn'st succeeding times;
Then shall thy friend, nor thou refuse his aid,
Still foe to vice, forsake his Cambrian shade;
In virtue's cause once more exert his rage,
Thy satire point, and animate thy page.

§ 126. Great Cities, and London in particular, allowed their due Praise. COWPER.

BUT though true worth and virtue in the mild
And genial soil of cultivated life
Thrive most, and may perhaps thrive only there,
Yet not in cities oft; in proud and gay,
And gain-devoted cities. Thither flow,

As to a common and most noisome sewer,
The dregs and feculence of ev'ry land.

In cities, foul example on most minds
Begets its likeness. Rank abundance breeds
In gross and pamper'd cities sloth and lust,
And wantonness, and gluttonous excess.

In cities, vice is hidden with most ease,
Or seen with least reproach; and virtue, taught
By frequent lapse, can hope no triumph there
Beyond th' achievement of successful flight.

I do confess them nurs'ries of the arts,
In which they flourish most; where, in the beams

Of warm encouragement, and in the eye
Of public note, they reach their perfect size.
Such London is, by taste and wealth proclaim'd

The fairest capital of all the world,
By riot and incontinence the worst.
There, touch'd by Reynolds, a dull blank becomes

A lucid mirror, in which Nature sees
All her reflected features. Bacon there
Gives more than female beauty to a stone,
And Chatham's eloquence to marble lips.

Nor does the chisel occupy alone
The pow'rs of sculpture, but the style as much;
Each province of her art her equal care.

With nice incision of her guided steel
She ploughs a brazen field, and clothes a soil
So sterile with what charms soe'er she will,
The richest scenery, and the loveliest forms.

Where finds Philosophy her eagle eye,
With which she gazes at yon burning disk
Undazzled, and detects and counts his spots?

In London. Where her implements exact,
With which she calculates, computes, and scans
All distance, motion, magnitude; and now
Measures an atom, and now girds a world?

In London. Where has commerce such a mart,
So rich, so throng'd, so drain'd, and so supplied
As London, opulent, enlarg'd, and still

Increasing London? Babylon of old
Not more the glory of the earth, than she
A more accomplish'd world's chief glory now.

She has her praise. Now mark a spot or two
That so much beauty would do well to purge;

* The nation was discontented at the visits made by George II. to Hanover.

And show this queen of cities, that so fair,
 May yet be foul, so witty, yet not wise.
 It is not seemly, nor of good report,
 That she is slack in discipline; more prompt
 To avenge than to prevent the breach of law;
 That she is rigid in denouncing death
 On petty robbers, and indulges life
 And liberty, and oft-times honor too,
 To peculators of the public gold.

That thieves at home must hang; but he that puts

Into his overgorg'd and bloated purse
 The wealth of Indian provinces, escapes.
 Nor is it well, nor can it come to good,
 That, through profane and infidel contempt
 Of holy writ, she has presum'd to annul
 And abrogate, as roundly as she may,
 The total ordinance and will of God;
 Advancing fashion to the post of truth,
 And cent'ring all authority in modes
 And customs of our own, till Sabbath rites
 Have dwindled into unrespected forms,
 And knees and hassocks are well-nigh divorc'd.

God made the country, and man made the town.

What wonder then that health and virtue, gifts
 That can alone make sweet the bitter draught
 That life holds out to all, should most abound,
 And least be threaten'd, in the fields and groves?
 Possess ye therefore, ye who, borne about
 In chariots and sedans, know no fatigue
 But that of idleness, and taste no scenes
 But such as art contrives, possess ye still
 Your element; there only ye can shine,
 There only minds like yours can do no harm.
 Our groves were planted to console at noon
 The pensive wand'rer in their shades. At eve
 The moon-beam, sliding softly in between
 The sleeping leaves, is all the sight they wish;
 Birds warbling, all the music. We can spare
 The splendor of your lamps; they but eclipse
 Our softer satellite. Your songs confound
 Our more harmonious notes. The thrush departs

Scar'd, and th' offended nightingale is mute.
 There is a public mischief in your mirth;
 It plagues your country. Folly such as yours,
 Grac'd with a sword, and worthier of a fan,
 Has made, which enemies could ne'er have
 done,

Our arch of empire, steadfast but for you,
 A mutilated structure, soon to fall.

§ 127. The Want of Discipline in the English Universities.

COWPER.

In colleges and halls, in ancient days,
 When learning, virtue, piety, and truth
 Were precious, and inculcated with care,
 There dwelt a sage, call'd Discipline. His head,
 Not yet by time completely silver'd o'er,
 Bespoke him past the bounds of freakish youth,
 But strong for service still, and unimpair'd.
 His eye was meek and gentle, and a smile

Play'd on his lips, and in his speech was heard
 Paternal sweetness, dignity, and love.
 The occupation dearest to his heart
 Was to encourage goodness. He would stroke
 The head of modest and ingenuous worth
 That blush'd at its own praise, and press the youth

[grew,
 Close to his side that pleas'd him. Learning
 Beneath his care, a thriving vigorous plant;
 The mind was well inform'd, the passions held Subordinate, and diligence was choice.
 If e'er it chanc'd, as sometimes chance it must,
 That one, among so many, overleap'd
 The limits of control, his gentle eye
 Grew stern, and darted a severe rebuke;
 His frown was full of terror, and his voice
 Shook the delinquent with such fits of awe
 As left him not, till penitence had won
 Lost favor back again, and clos'd the breach.
 But Discipline, a faithful servant long,
 Declin'd at length into the vale of years:
 A palsy struck his arm; his sparkling eye
 Was quench'd in rheums of age; his voice un-
 strung,

Grew tremulous, and mov'd derision more
 Than rev'rence in perverse rebellious youth.
 So colleges and halls neglected much
 Their good old friend; and Discipline at length,
 O'erlook'd and unemploy'd, fell sick, and died.
 Then Study languish'd, Emulation slept,
 And Virtue fled. The schools became a scene
 Of solemn farce, where Ignorance in stilts,
 His cap well lin'd with logic not his own,
 With parrot tongue perform'd the scholar's part,
 Proceeding soon a graduated dunce.
 Then Compromise had place, and Scrutiny
 Became stone blind, Precedence went in truck,
 And he was competent whose purse was so.
 A dissolution of all bonds ensued:
 The curbs invented for the mulish mouth
 Of headstrong youth were broken; bars and bolts
 Grew rusty by disuse; and massy gates
 Forgot their office; opening with a touch;
 Till gowns at length are found mere masquerade;
 The tassel'd cap and the spruce band a jest,
 A mock'ry of the world. What need of these
 For gamesters, jockeys, brothellers impure,
 Spendthrifts, and booted sportsmen, oft'ner seen
 With belted waist, and pointers at their heels,
 Than in the bounds of duty? What was learn'd,
 If aught was learn'd in childhood, is forgot;
 And such expense as pinches parents blue,
 And mortifies the lib'ral hand of love,
 Is squander'd in pursuit of idle sports
 And vicious pleasures; buys the boy a name
 That sits a stigma to his father's house,
 And cleaves through life inseparably close
 To him that wears it. What can after-games
 Of riper joys, and commerce with the world,
 The lewd vain world that must receive him soon,
 Add to such erudition thus acquir'd,
 Where science and where virtue are profess'd?
 They may confirm his habits, rivet fast
 His folly; but to spoil him is a task

That bids defiance to th' united pow'rs
Of fashion, dissipation, taverns, stews.
Now, blame we most the nurslings or the nurse?
The children, crook'd, and twisted, and deform'd
Through want of care, or her, whose winking
And slumb'ring oscitancy mars the brood? [eye
The nurse, no doubt. Regardless of her charge,
She needs herself correction; needs to learn,
That it is dang'rous sporting with the world,
With things so sacred as a nation's trust,
The nurture of her youth, her dearest pledge.

§ 128. Happy the Freedom of the Man whom Grace makes free—His Relish of the Works of God—Address to the Creator. COWPER.

HE is the freeman whom the truth makes free,
And all are slaves beside. There's not a chain
That hellish foes confed'rate for his harm
Can wind around him, but he casts it off
With as much ease as Samson his green withes.
He looks abroad into the varied field
Of Nature; and though poor, perhaps, compar'd
With those whose mansions glitter in his sight,
Calls the delightful scen'ry all his own.
His are the mountains, and the valleys his,
And the resplendent rivers; his t' enjoy
With a propriety that none can feel
But who, with filial confidence inspir'd,
Can lift to Heaven an unpresumptuous eye,
And smiling say—My Father made them all:
Are they not his by a peculiar right?
And by an emphasis of int'rest his,
Whose eye they fill with tears of holy joy,
Whose heart with praise, and whose exalted
mind

With worthy thoughts of that unwearied love
That plann'd, and built, and still upholds a
world

So cloth'd with beauty, for rebellious man?
Yes—ye may fill your garners; ye that reap
The loaded soil, and ye may waste much good
In senseless riot; but ye will not find
In feast or in the chace, in song or dance,
A liberty like his, who, unimpeach'd
Of usurpation, and to no man's wrong,
Appropriates nature as his Father's work,
And has a richer use of yours than you.
He is indeed a freeman; free by birth
Of no mean city, plann'd or ere the hills
Were built, the fountains open'd, or the sea,
With all his roaring multitude of waves.
His freedom is the same in ev'ry state;
And no condition of this changeful life,
So manifold in cares, whose ev'ry day
Brings its own evil with it, makes it less:
For he has wings that neither sickness, pain,
Nor penury can cripple or confine;
No nook so narrow but he spreads them there
With ease, and is at large. Th' oppressor holds
His body bound, but knows not what a range
His spirit takes, unconscious of a chain,
And that to bind him is a vain attempt,
Whom God delights in, and in whom he dwells.
Acquaint thyself with God, if thou wouldst taste

His works. Admitted once to his embrace,
Thou shalt perceive that thou wast blind before:
Thine eye shall be instructed; and thine heart,
Made pure, shall relish with divine delight,
Till then unfelt, what hands divine have wrought.

Brutes graze the mountain-top with faces prone,
And eyes intent upon the scanty herb
It yields them, or, recumbent on its brow,
Ruminate, heedless of the scene outspread
Beneath, beyond, and stretching far away
From inland regions to the distant main.
Man views it and admires, but rests content With what he views. The landscape has his
praise,

But not its Author. Unconcern'd who form'd
The paradise he sees, he finds it such;
And, such well-pleas'd to find it, asks no more.
Not so the mind that has been touch'd from
heav'n,

And in the school of sacred wisdom taught
To read his wonders, in whose thought the world,
Fair as it is, existed ere it was:
Not for its own sake merely, but for his
Much more who fashion'd it, he gives it praise;
Praise that, from earth resulting, as it ought,
To earth's acknowledg'd Sovereign, finds at once

Its only just proprietor in Him.
The soul that sees him, or receives sublim'd
New faculties, or learns at least t' employ
More worthily the pow'rs she own'd before,
Discerns in all things, what, with stupid gaze
Of ignorance, till then she overlook'd,
A ray of heavenly light gilding all forms
Terrestrial, in the vast and the minute,
The unambiguous footsteps of the God
Who gives its lustre to an insect's wing,
And wheels his throne upon the rolling worlds.
Much conversant with Heaven, she often holds
With those fair ministers of light to man,
That fill the skies nightly with silent pomp,
Sweet conference! inquires what strains were they [haste

With which heaven rang, when ev'ry star, in
To gratulate the new-created earth,
Sent forth a voice, and all the sons of God
Shouted for joy—"Tell me ye shining hosts,
"That navigate a sea that knows no storms,
"Beneath a vault unsullied with a cloud,
"If from your elevation, whence ye view
"Distinctly scenes invisible to man,
"And systems, of whose birth no tidings yet
"Have reach'd this nether world, ye spy a race
"Favor'd as ours, transgressors from the womb,
"And hasting to a grave, yet doom'd to rise,
"And to possess a brighter heaven than yours?
"As one who, long detain'd on foreign shores,
"Pants to return, and when he sees afar
"His country's weather-bleach'd and batter'd
"rocks
"From the green wave emerging, darts an eye
"Radiant with joy towards the happy land;
"So I with animated hopes behold,

" And many an aching wish, your beamy fires,
 " That show like beacons in the blue abyss,
 " Ordain'd to guide th' embodied spirit home
 " From toilsome life to never-ending rest.
 " Love kindles as I gaze. I feel desires " That give assurance of their own success,
 " And that infus'd from heav'n must thither
 " tend."

So reads he nature, whom the lamp of truth
 Illuminates; thy lamp, mysterious Word!
 Which whoso sees no longer wanders lost,
 With intellects bemaz'd, in endless doubt,
 But runs the road of wisdom. Thou hast built,
 With means that were not, till by thee employ'd, Worlds that had never been, hadst thou in strength

Been less, or less benevolent than strong.
 They are thy witnesses, who speak thy pow'r
 And goodness infinite, but speak in ears
 That hear not, or receive not their report.
 In vain thy creatures testify of thee
 Till thou proclaim thyself. Theirs is indeed
 A teaching voice; but 'tis the praise of thine,
 That whom it teaches it makes prompt to learn,
 And with the boon gives talents for its use.
 Till thou art heard, imaginations vain
 Possess the heart, and fables false as hell,
 Yet deem'd oracular, lure down to death
 The uninform'd and heedless sons of men.
 We give to chance, blind chance, ourselves as blind,

The glory of thy work, which yet appears
 Perfect and unimpeachable of blame,
 Challenging human scrutiny, and prov'd
 Then skilful most when most severely judg'd.
 But chance is not, or is not where thou reign'st:
 Thy providence forbids that fickle pow'r
 (If pow'r she be that works but to confound)
 To mix her wild vagaries with thy laws.
 Yet thus we dote, refusing, while we can,
 Instruction, and inventing to ourselves
 Gods such as guilt makes welcome, Gods that
 sleep,

Or disregard our follies, or that sit
 Amus'd spectators of this bustling stage.
 Thee we reject, unable to abide
 Thy purity, till pure as thou art pure,
 Made such by thee, we love thee for that cause
 For which we shunn'd and hated thee before.
 Then we are free: then liberty, like day,
 Breaks on the soul, and by a flash from heaven

Fires all the faculties with glorious joy.
 A voice is heard, that mortal ears hear not Till thou hast touch'd them; 'tis the voice of
 song,

A loud Hosanna sent from all thy works,
 Which he that hears it with a shout repeats,
 And adds his rapture to the gen'ral praise.
 In that blest moment, Nature, throwing wide
 Her veil opaque, discloses with a smile
 The Author of her beauties, who, retir'd
 Behind his own creation, works unseen
 By the impure, and hears his pow'r denied.

Thou art the source and centre of all minds,
 Their only point of rest, Eternal Word!
 From thee departing, they are lost, to rove
 At random, without honor, hope, or peace.
 From thee is all that soothes the life of man,
 His high endeavour, and his glad success,
 His strength to suffer, and his will to serve.
 But, Oh! thou bounteous Giver of all good,
 Thou art of all thy gifts thyself the crown!
 Give what thou canst, without thee we are poor;
 And with thee rich, take what thou wilt away.

§ 129. That Philosophy which stops at Secondary Causes reprov'd. COWPER.

HAPPY the man who sees a God employ'd
 In all the good and ill that chequer life!
 Resolving all events, with their effects
 And manifold results, into the will
 And arbitration wise of the Supreme.
 Did not his eye rule all things and intend
 The least of our concerns (since from the least
 The greatest oft originate); could chance
 Find place in his dominion, or dispose
 One lawless particle to thwart his plan;
 Then God might be surpris'd, and unforeseen
 Contingence might alarm him, and disturb
 The smooth and equal course of his affairs.
 This truth, philosophy, though eagle eyed
 In nature's tendencies, oft overlooks;
 And having found his instrument, forgets
 Or disregards, or, more presumptuous still,
 Denies the pow'r that wields it. God proclaims
 His hot displeasure against foolish men
 That live an atheist life; involves the heaven
 In tempests; quits his grasp upon the winds,
 And gives them all their fury; bids a plague
 Kindle a fiery bile upon the skin,
 And putrefy the breath of blooming health.
 He calls for famine; and the meagre fiend
 Blows mildew from between his shrivell'd lips,
 And taints the golden ear: he springs his mines,
 And desolates a nation at a blast.
 Forth steps the spruce philosopher, and tells
 Of homogeneous and discordant springs
 And principles; of causes, how they work
 By necessary laws their sure effects,
 Of action, and re-action. He has found
 The source of the disease that Nature feels,
 And bids the world take heart and banish fear.
 Thou fool! wilt thy discovery of the cause
 Suspend th' effect, or heal it? Has not God Still wrought by means since first he made the world?

And did he not of old employ his means
 To drown it? What is his creation less
 Than a capacious reservoir of means
 Form'd for his use, and ready at his will?
 Go, dress thine eyes with eye-salve; ask of
 him;
 Or ask of whomsoever he has taught,
 And learn, though late, the genuine cause of all.

§ 130. Rural Sounds as well as Sights delightful. COWPER.

NOR rural sights alone, but rural sounds
Exhilarate the spirit, and restore
The tone of languid Nature. Mighty winds,
That sweep the skirt of some far-spreading
wood
Of ancient growth, make music not unlike
The dash of ocean on his winding shore,
And lull the spirit while they fill the mind;
Unnumber'd branches waving in the blast,
And all their leaves fast flutt'ring all at once.
Nor less composure waits upon the roar
Of distant floods, or on the softer voice
Of neighb'ring fountain, or of rills that slip Through the cleft rock, and chiming as they fall
Upon loose pebbles, lose themselves at length
In matted grass, that with a livelier green
Betrays the secret of their silent course.
Nature inanimate employs sweet sounds,
But animated nature sweeter still,
To soothe and satisfy the human ear.
Ten thousand warblers cheer the day, and one
The live-long night: nor these alone, whose notes
Nice-finger'd art must emulate in vain,
But cawing rooks, and kites, that swim sublime
In still repeated circles, screaming loud,
The jay, the pie, and e'en the boding owl
That hails the rising moon, have charms for me.
Sounds inharmonious in themselves and harsh,
Yet, heard in scenes where peace for ever
reigns,
And only there, please highly for their sake.

§ 131. The Wearisomeness of what is commonly called a Life of Pleasure. COWPER.

THE spleen is seldom felt where Flora reigns;
The low'ring eye, the petulance, the frown,
And sullen sadness, that o'ershade, distort,
And mar the face of beauty, where no cause
For such immeasurable woe appears;
These Flora banishes, and gives the fair
Sweet smiles and bloom, less transient than her
It is the constant revolution, stale [own.
And tasteless, of the same repeated joys,
That palls and satiates, and makes languid life
A pedlar's pack, that bows the bearer down.
Health suffers, and the spirits ebb; the heart
Recoils from its own choice—at the full feast
Is famish'd—finds no music in the song,
No smartness in the jest, and wonders why.
Yet thousands still desire to journey on,
Though halt, and weary of the path they tread.
The paralytic, who can hold her cards,
But cannot play them, borrows a friend's hand
To deal and shuffle, to divide and sort
Her mingled suits and sequences, and sits
Spectatress both and spectacle, a sad
And silent cipher, while her proxy plays.
Others are dragg'd into the crowded room
Between supporters; and, once seated, sit,

Through downright inability to rise,
Till the stout bearers lift the corpse again.
These speak a loud memento. Yet even these Themselves love life, and cling to it; as he
That overhangs a torrent, to a twig.
They love it, and yet loath it; fear to die,
Yet scorn the purposes for which they live.
Then wherefore not renounce them! No—the dread,
The slavish dread of solitude, that breeds
Reflection and remorse, the fear of shame,
And their invet'rate habits—all forbid.
Whom call we gay? That honor has been long

The boast of mere pretenders to the name.
The innocent are gay—the lark is gay,
That dries his feathers, saturate with dew,
Beneath the rosy cloud, while yet the beams
Of day-spring overshoot his humble nest.
The peasant too, a witness of his song,
Himself a songster, is as gay as he.
But save me from the gaiety of those Whose head-achs nail them to a noon-day bed;
And save me too from theirs whose haggard
eyes
Flash desperation, and betray their pangs
For property stript off by cruel chance;
From gaiety that fills the bones with pain,
The mouth with blasphemy, the heart with
woe.

§ 132. Satirical Review of our Trips to France. COWPER.

Now hoist the sail, and let the streamers float
Upon the wanton breezes. Strew the deck
With lavender, and sprinkle liquid sweets,
That no rude savor maritime invade
The nose of nice nobility. Breathe soft,
Ye clarionets, and softer still ye flutes,
That winds and waters, lull'd by magic sounds,
May bear us smoothly to the Gallic shore.
True, we have lost an empire—let it pass.
True, we may thank the perfidy of France,
That pick'd the jewel out of England's crown,
With all the cunning of an envious shrew:
And let that pass—'twas but a trick of state.
A brave man knows no malice, but at once
Forgets in peace the injuries of war,
And gives his distress foe a friend's embrace.
And, sham'd as we have been, to the very beard
Brav'd and defied, and in our own sea prov'd
Too weak for those decisive blows that once
Insur'd us mast'ry there, we yet retain
Some small pre-eminence: we justly boast
At least superior jockeyship, and claim
The honors of the turf as all our own.
Go then, well worthy of the praise ye seek,
And show the shame ye might conceal at
home,
In foreign eyes!—be grooms, and win the plate,
Where once your nobler fathers won a crown!

§ 133. The Pulpit the Engine of Reformation.
COWPER.

THE Pulpit therefore (and I name it, fill'd
With solemn awe, that bids me well beware
With what intent I touch the holy thing)—
The Pulpit (when the sat'rist has at last,
Strutting and vap'ring in an empty school,
Spent all his force and made no proselyte)—
I say the Pulpit (in the sober use
Of its legitimate peculiar pow'rs) [stand
Must stand acknowledg'd while the world shall
The most important and effectual guard,
Support and ornament of virtue's cause.
There stands the messenger of truth; there stands

The legate of the skies: his theme divine,
His office sacred, his credentials clear.
By him the violated law speaks out
Its thunders, and by him in strains as sweet
As angels use, the Gospel whispers peace.
He establishes the strong, restores the weak,
Reclaims the wand'rer, binds the broken heart,
And, arm'd himself in panoply complete
Of heavenly temper, furnishes with arms
Bright as his own; and trains, by ev'ry rule
Of holy discipline, to glorious war,
The sacramental host of God's elect.

§ 134. The Petit-Maitre Clergyman.
COWPER.

I VENERATE the man whose heart is warm,
Whose hands are pure, whose doctrine and whose life
Coincident, exhibit lucid proof
That he is honest in the sacred cause.
To such I render more than mere respect,
Whose actions say that they respect themselves:
But, loose in morals, and in manners vain,
In conversation frivolous, in dress
Extreme, at once rapacious and profuse;
Frequent in park, with lady at his side,
Ambling and prattling scandal as he goes;
But rare at home, and never at his books,
Or with his pen, save when he scrawls a card;
Constant at routs, familiar with a round
Of ladyships, a stranger to the poor;
Ambitious of preferment, for its gold,
And well prepar'd by ignorance and sloth,
By infidelity and love o' th' world,
To make God's work a sinecure: a slave
To his own pleasures, and his patron's pride—
From such apostles, O ye mitred heads,
Preserve the church! and lay not careless hands
On sculls that cannot teach, and will not learn

§ 135. Armine and Elvira, a Legendary Tale.
CARTWRIGHT.

PART I.

A HERMIT on the banks of Trent,
Far from the world's bewildering maze,
To humbler scenes of calm content
Had fled, from brighter, busier days.

If haply from his guarded breast
Should steal the unsuspected sigh;
And Memory, an unbidden guest,
With former passions fill'd his eye:
Then pious hope and duty prais'd
The wisdom of th' unerring sway;
And while his eye to heaven he rais'd,
Its silent waters sunk away.
Life's gayer ensigns once he bore—
Ah! what avails the mournful tale?
Suffice it, when the scene was o'er,
He fled to the sequester'd vale.
“What though the joys I lov'd so well,
“The charms,” he cry'd, “that youth has “known,
“Fly from the hermit's lonely cell!
“Yet is not Armine still my own?
“Yes, Armine, yes, thou valued youth!
“'Midst every grief thou still art mine!
“Dear pledge of Winifreda's truth,
“And solace of my life's decline.
“Though from the world and worldly care
“My wearied mind I mean to free,
“Yet ev'ry hour that heaven can spare,
“My Armine, I devote to thee.
“And sure that heaven my hopes shall bless,
“And make thee fam'd for virtues fair,
“And happy too, if happiness
“Depend upon a parent's prayer:
“Last hope of life's departing day,
“In whom its future scenes I see!
“No truant thought shall ever stray
“From this lone hermitage and thee.”
Thus, to his humble fate resign'd,
His breast each anxious care foregoes;
All but the care of Armine's mind,
The dearest task a parent knows!
And well were all his cares repaid;
In Armine's breast each virtue grew,
In full maturity display'd
To fond Affection's anxious view.
Nor yet neglected were the charms
To polish'd life that grace impart:
Virtue, he knew, but feebly warms
Till science humanize the heart.
And, when he saw the lawless train
Of passions in the youthful breast,
He curb'd them not with rigid rein,
But strove to soothe them into rest.
“Think not, my son, in this,” he cry'd,
“A father's precept shall displease;
“No—be each passion gratify'd
“That tends to happiness or ease.
“Nor shall th' ungrateful task be mine
“Their native gen'rous warmth to blame;
“That warmth, if reason's suffrage join,
“To point the object and the aim.

" This suffrage wanting, know, fond boy,
 " That every passion proves a foe:
 " Though much it deal in promis'd joy,
 " It pays, alas! in certain woe.
 " Complete Ambition's wildest scheme;
 " In Power's most brilliant robes appear;
 " Indulge in Fortune's golden dream;
 " Then ask thy breast if Peace be there.
 " No: it shall tell thee, Peace retires
 " If once of her lov'd friends depriv'd;
 " Contentment calm, subdu'd desires,
 " And happiness that's self-deriv'd."
 To temper thus the stronger fires
 Of youth he strove; for well he knew,
 Boundless as thought though man's desires,
 The real wants of life were few.
 And oft revolving in his breast
 Th' insatiate lust of wealth or fame,
 He, with no common care oppress,
 To fortune thus would oft exclaim:
 " O Fortune! at thy crowded shrine
 " What wretched worlds of suppliants bow!
 " For ever hail'd thy power divine,
 " For ever breath'd the serious vow.
 " With tottering pace and feeble knee,
 " See age advance in shameless haste,
 " The palsy'd hand is stretch'd to thee
 " For wealth he wants the power to taste.
 " See, led by Hope, the youthful train,
 " Her fairy dreams their hearts have won;
 " She points to what they ne'er shall gain,
 " Or dearly gain—to be undone.
 " Must I too form the votive prayer,
 " And wilt thou hear one suppliant more?
 " His prayer, O Fortune! deign to hear,
 " To thee who never pray'd before.
 " O may one dear, one favor'd youth,
 " May Armine still thy power disclaim;
 " Kneel only at the shrine of Truth,
 " Count freedom wealth, and virtue fame!"
 Lo! to his utmost wishes blest,
 The prayer was heard; and freedom's flame,
 And truth the sunshine of the breast,
 Were Armine's wealth, were Armine's fame.
 His heart no selfish cares confin'd,
 He felt for all that feel distress;
 And, still benevolent and kind,
 He bless'd them, or he wish'd to bless.
 For what though Fortune's frown deny
 With wealth to bid the sufferer live,
 Yet Pity's hand can oft supply
 A balm she never knew to give:
 Can oft with lenient drops assuage
 The wounds no ruder hand can heal,
 When grief, despair, distraction, rage,
 While Death the lips of love shall seal.
 Ah then, his anguish to remove,
 Depriv'd of all his heart holds dear,

How sweet the still surviving love
 Of Friendship's smile, of Pity's tear!
 This knew the sire: he oft would cry,
 " From these, my son, O ne'er depart!
 " These tender charities that tie
 " In mutual league the human heart.
 " Be thine those feelings of the mind,
 " That wake at Honor's, Friendship's call.
 " Benevolence, that unconfin'd
 " Extends her liberal hand to all.
 " By Sympathy's untutor'd voice
 " Be taught her social laws to keep;
 " Rejoice if human heart rejoice,
 " And weep if human eye shall weep.
 " The heart that bleeds for others' woes
 " Shall feel each selfish sorrow less;
 " His breast, who happiness bestows,
 " Reflected happiness shall bless.
 " Each ruder passion still withstood
 " That breaks o'er virtue's sober line,
 " The tender, noble, and the good,
 " To cherish and indulge be thine.
 " And yet, my Armine, might I name
 " One passion as a dangerous guest,
 " Well mayst thou wonder when I blame
 " The tenderest, noblest, and the best.
 " Nature, 'tis true, with love design'd
 " To smooth the race our fathers ran;
 " The savage of the human kind
 " By love was soften'd into man.
 " As feels the ore the searching fire,
 " Expanding and refining too,
 " So fairer glow'd each fair desire,
 " Each gentle thought so gentler grew.
 " How chang'd, alas! those happy days!
 " A train how different now succeeds!
 " While sordid Avarice betrays,
 " Or empty Vanity misleads.
 " Fled from the heart each nobler guest,
 " Each genuine feeling we forego;
 " What nature planted in the breast
 " The flowers of love, are weeds of woe.
 " Hence all the pangs the heart must feel
 " Between contending passions tost,
 " Wild Jealousy's avenging steel,
 " And life, and fame, and virtue lost!
 " Yet falling life, yet fading fame,
 " Compar'd to what his heart annoy
 " Who cherishes a hopeless flame,
 " Are terms of happiness and joy.
 " Ah, then, the soft contagion fly!
 " And timely shun th' alluring bait!"
 The rising blush, the downcast eye,
 Proclaim'd—the precept was too late.

PART II.

DEEP in the bosom of a wood,
 Where art had form'd the moated isle,

An antique castle tow'ring stood,
 In Gothic grandeur rose the pile.
 Here Raymond, long in arms renown'd,
 From scenes of war would oft repair:
 His bed an only daughter crown'd,
 And smil'd away a father's care.
 By Nature's happiest pencil drawn,
 She wore the vernal morning's ray;
 The vernal morning's blushing dawn
 Breaks not so bounteous into day.
 Her breast, impatient of control,
 Scorn'd in its silken chains to lie,
 And the soft language of the soul
 Flow'd from her never-silent eye.
 The bloom that open'd on her face
 Well seem'd the emblem of her mind,
 Where snowy innocence we trace
 With blushing modesty combin'd.
 To these resistless grace impart
 That look of sweetness form'd to please,
 That elegance devoid of art,
 That dignity that's lost in ease.
 What youth so cold could view unmov'd
 The maid that ev'ry beauty shar'd?
 Her Armine saw; he saw; he lov'd;
 He lov'd—alas! and he despair'd!
 Unhappy youth! he sunk opprest;
 For much he labor'd to conceal
 That gentle passion of the breast,
 Which all can feign, but few can feel.
 Ingenuous fears suppress'd the flame,
 Yet still he own'd its hidden power;
 With transport dwelling on her name,
 He sooth'd the solitary hour.
 "How long," he cry'd, "must I conceal
 "What yet my heart could wish were known?
 "How long the truest passion feel,
 "And yet that passion fear to own?
 "Ah, might I breathe my humble vow!
 "Might she too deign to lend an ear!
 "Elvira's self should then allow
 "That Armine was at least sincere.
 "Wild wish! to deem the matchless maid
 "Would listen to a youth like me,
 "Or that my vows could e'er persuade,
 "Sincere and constant though they be!
 "Ah! what avail my love or truth?
 "She listens to no lowly swain;
 "Her charms must bless some happier youth,
 "Some youth of Fortune's titled train.
 "Then go, fallacious Hope! adieu!
 "The flattering prospect I resign;
 "And bear from my deluded view
 "The bliss that never must be mine!
 "Yet will the youth, whoe'er he be,
 "In truth or tenderness excel?
 "Or will he on thy charms like me
 "With fondness never-dying dwell?

"Will he with thine his hopes unite?
 "With ready zeal thy joys improve?
 "With fond attention and delight
 "Each wish prevent, each fear remove?
 "Will he, still faithful to thy charms,
 "For constant love be long rever'd?
 "Nor quit that heaven within thy arms
 "By every tender tie endear'd?
 "What though his boastful heart be vain
 "Of all that birth or fortune gave,
 "Yet is not mine, though rude and plain,
 "At least as noble and as brave?
 "Then be its gentle suit prefer'd!
 "Its tender sighs Elvira hear!
 "In vain—I sigh—but sigh unheard;
 "Unpitied falls this lonely tear!"
 Twice twelve revolving moons had pass'd,
 Since first he caught the fatal view;
 Unchang'd by time his sorrows last,
 Uncheer'd by hope his passion grew.
 That passion to indulge, he sought
 In Raymond's groves the deepest shade;
 There fancy's haunting spirit brought
 The image of his long-lov'd maid.
 But hark! what more than mortal sound
 Steals on Attention's raptur'd ear?
 The voice of harmony around
 Swells in wild whispers soft and clear.
 Can human hand a tone so fine
 Sweep from the string with touch profane?
 Can human lip with breath divine
 Pour on the gale so sweet a strain?
 'Tis she—the source of Armine's woe—
 'Tis she—whence all his joy must spring—
 From her lov'd lips the numbers flow,
 Her magic hand awakes the string.
 Now, Armine, now thy love proclaim,
 Thy instant suit the time demands;
 Delay not—Tumult shakes his frame,
 And lost in ecstasy he stands.
 What magic chains thee to the ground?
 What star malignant rules the hour,
 That thus in fix'd delirium drown'd
 Each sense entranc'd hath lost its pow'r?
 The trance dispel! awake! arise!
 Speak what untutor'd love inspires!
 The moment's past—thy wild surprise
 She sees, nor unalarm'd retires.
 "Stay, sweet illusion! stay thy flight!
 "'Tis gone!—Elvira's form it wore—
 "Yet one more glimpse of short delight!
 "'Tis gone, to be beheld no more!
 "Fly, loitering feet! the charm pursue
 "That plays upon my hopes and fears!
 "Hah!—no illusion mocks my view!
 "'Tis she—Elvira's self appears!
 "And shall I on her steps intrude?
 "Alarm her in these lonely shades?"

"O stay, fair nymph! no ruffian rude
 "With base intent your walk invades.
 "Far gentler thoughts"—his faltering tongue,
 By humble diffidence restrain'd,
 Paus'd in suspense—but thus ere long,
 As love impell'd, its power regain'd:
 "Far gentler thoughts that form inspires;
 "With me far gentler passions dwell;
 "This heart hides only blameless fires,
 "Yet burns with what it fears to tell.
 "The faltering voice that fears control,
 "Blushes that inward fires declare,
 "Each tender tumult of the soul
 "In silence owns Elvira there."
 He said; and as the trembling dove
 Sent forth t' explore the wat'ry plain,
 Soon fear'd her flight might fatal prove,
 And sudden sought her ark again,
 His heart recoil'd; as one that rued
 What he too hastily confess'd,
 And all the rising soul subdued
 Sought refuge in his inmost breast.
 The tender strife Elvira saw
 Distrest: and as some parent mild,
 When arm'd with words and looks of awe,
 Melts o'er the terrors of her child,
 Reproof prepar'd and angry fear
 In soft sensations died away;
 They felt the force of Armine's tear,
 And fled from pity's rising sway.
 "That mournful voice, that modest air,
 "Young stranger, speak the courteous breast;
 "Then why to these rude scenes repair,
 "Of shades the solitary guest?
 "And who is she whose fortunes bear
 "Elvira's melancholy name?
 "O may those fortunes prove more fair
 "Than hers who sadly owns the same!"
 "Ah gentle maid, in mine survey
 "A heart," he cries, "that's yours alone;
 "Long has it own'd Elvira's sway,
 "Though long unnotic'd and unknown.
 "On Sherwood's old heroic plain
 "Elvira grac'd the festal day;
 "There, foremost of the youthful train,
 "Her Armine bore the prize away.
 "There first that form my eyes survey'd,
 "With future hopes that fill'd my heart;
 "But ah! beneath that frown they fade—
 "Depart, vain, vanquish'd hope! depart!"
 He said; and on the ground his eyes
 Were fix'd abash'd: th' attentive maid,
 Lost in the tumult of surprise,
 The well-remember'd youth survey'd.
 The transient color went and came;
 The struggling bosom sunk and rose;
 The trembling tumults of her frame
 The strong conflicting soul disclose.

The time, the scene she saw with dread,
 Like Cynthia setting glanc'd away:
 But scatter'd blushes as she fled,
 Blushes that spoke a brighter day.
 A friendly shepherd's neighbouring shed
 To pass the live-long night he sought:
 And Hope, the lover's downy bed,
 A sweeter charm than slumber brought.
 On every thought Elvira dwelt,
 The tender air, the aspect kind,
 The pity that he found she felt,
 And all the angel in her mind.
 No self-plum'd vanity was there,
 With fancy'd consequence elate;
 Unknown to her the haughty air
 That means to speak superior state.
 Her brow no stern resentments arm,
 No swell of empty pride she knew,
 In trivial minds that takes th' alarm,
 Should humble Love aspire to sue.
 Such Love, by flattering charms betray'd,
 Shall yet, indignant, soon rebel,
 And, blushing for the choice he made,
 Shall fly where gentler virtues dwell.
 'Tis then the mind, from bondage free,
 And all its former weakness o'er,
 Asserts its native dignity,
 And scorns what folly priz'd before.
 The scanty pane the rising ray
 On the plain wall in diamonds threw,
 The lover hail'd the welcome day,
 And to his favorite scene he flew.
 There soon Elvira bent her way,
 Where long her lonely walks had been;
 Nor less had the preceding day,
 Nor Armine less endear'd the scene.
 Oft, as she pass'd, her rising heart
 Its stronger tenderness confess'd,
 And oft she linger'd to impart
 To some soft shade her secret breast.
 "How slow the heavy hours advance,"
 She cry'd, "since that eventful day,
 "When first I caught the fatal glance
 "That stole me from myself away!
 "Ah, youth belov'd! though low thy birth,
 "The noble air, the manly grace,
 "That look that speaks superior worth,
 "Can fashion, folly, fear erase?
 "Yet sure from no ignoble stem
 "Thy lineage springs, though now unknown:
 "The world censorious may condemn,
 "But, Armine, I am thine alone.
 "To splendor only do we live?
 "Must pomp alone our thoughts employ?
 "All, all that pomp and splendor give
 "Is dearly bought with love and joy!
 "But oh!—the favor'd youth appears—
 "In pensive grief he seems to move:

" My heart forebodes unnumber'd fears ;
 " Support it, Pity, Virtue, Love !
 " Hither his footsteps seem to bend—
 " Come, Resolution, to my aid !
 " My breast what varying passions rend !
 " Averse to go—to stay—afraid !"
 " Dear object of each fond desire
 " That throbs tumultuous in my breast !
 " Why with averted glance retire ?
 " At Armine's presence why distress ?
 " What though he boast no titled name,
 " No wide extent of rich domain,
 " Yet must he feed a hopeless flame ?
 " Must truth and nature plead in vain ?
 " Think not," she said, " by forms betray'd,
 " To humbler worth my heart is blind ;
 " For soon shall every splendor fade,
 " That beams not from thy gifted mind.
 " But first thy heart explore with care,
 " With faith its fond emotions prove ;
 " Lurks no unworthy passion there ?
 " Prompts not ambition bold to love ?"
 " Yes, lovely maid," the youth replies,
 " A bold ambition prompts my breast,
 " The towering hope that love supplies,
 " The wish in blessing to be blest.
 " The meaner prospects I despise
 " That wealth, or rank, or power bestow ;
 " Be yours the grovelling bliss ye prize,
 " Ye sordid minds that stoop so low !
 " Be mine the more refin'd delights
 " Of love that banishes control,
 " When the fond heart with heart unites,
 " And soul's in unison with soul."
 Elvira blush'd the warm reply,
 (To love a language not unknown,)
 The milder glories fill'd her eye,
 And there a softer lustre shone.
 The yielding smile that's half suppress'd,
 The short quick breath, the trembling tear,
 The swell tumultuous of the breast,
 In Armine's favor all appear.
 At each kind glance their souls unite,
 While love's soft sympathy imparts
 That tender transport of delight
 That beats in undivided hearts.
 Respectful to his lips he press'd
 Her yielded hand ; in haste away
 Her yielded hand she drew distress'd,
 With looks that witness'd wild dismay.
 " Ah whence, fair excellence, those fears ?
 " What terror unforeseen alarms ?"
 " See ! where a father's frown appears"—
 She said, and sunk into his arms.
 " My daughter ! heavens ! it cannot be—
 " And yet it must—O dire disgrace !
 " Elvira have I liv'd to see
 " Clasp'd in a peasant's vile embrace !

" This daring guilt let death repay"—
 His vengeful arm the javelin threw,
 With erring aim it wing'd its way,
 And far, by Fate averted, flew.
 Elvira breathes—her pulses beat,
 Returning life illumines her eye :
 Trembling a father's view to meet,
 She spies a reverend hermit nigh.
 " Your wrath," she cries, " let tears assuage—
 " Unheeded must Elvira pray ?
 " O let an injur'd father's rage
 " This hermit's sacred presence stay !
 " Yet deem not, lost in guilty love,
 " I plead to save my virgin fame ;
 " My weakness Virtue might approve,
 " And smile on nature's holy flame."
 " O welcome to my hopes again,
 " My son !" the raptur'd hermit cries ;
 " I sought thee sorrowing on the plain :"
 And all the father fill'd his eyes.
 " Art thou," the raging Raymond said,
 " Of this audacious boy the sire ?
 " Curse on the dart that idly sped,
 " Nor bade his peasant soul expire !"
 " His peasant soul !"—indignant fire
 Flash'd from the conscious father's eye :
 " A gallant earl is Armine's sire,
 " And know, proud chief, that earl am I.
 " Though here, within the hermit's cell,
 " I long have liv'd unknown to fame,
 " Yet crowded camps and courts can tell—
 " Thou too hast heard of Egbert's name."
 " Hah ! Egbert ! he, whom tyrant rage
 " Forc'd from his country's bleeding breast ?
 " The patron of my orphan age,
 " My friend, my warrior stands confest !
 " But why ?"—" The painful story spare :
 " That prostrate youth," said Egbert, " see ;
 " His anguish asks a parent's care,
 " A parent, once who pitied thee !"
 Raymond, as one who, glancing round,
 Seems from some sudden trance to start,
 Snatch'd the pale lovers from the ground,
 And held them trembling to his heart.
 Joy, Gratitude, and Wonder shed
 United tears o'er Hymen's reign,
 And nature her best triumph led,
 For Love and Virtue join'd her train.

§ 136. An Italian Song. ROGERS.

DEAR is my little native vale,
 The ring-dove builds and warbles there ;
 Close by my cot she tells her tale
 To every passing villager.
 The squirrel leaps from tree to tree,
 And shells his nuts at liberty.
 In orange groves and myrtle bowers,
 That breathe a gale of fragrance round,

I charm the fairy-footed hours
With my lov'd lute's romantic sound;
Or crowns of living laurel weave,
For those that win the race at eve.

The shepherd's horn at break of day,
The ballet danc'd in twilight glade,
The canzonet and roundelay
Sung in the silent greenwood shade;
These simple joys, that never fail,
Shall bind me to my native vale.

§ 137. Henry and Emma, a Poem upon the Model of the Nut-Brown Maid. PRIOR.

TO CHLOE.

THOU, to whose eyes I bend; at whose command [hand)
(Though low my voice, though artless be my
I take the sprightly reed, and sing, and play;
Careless of what the censuring world may say:
Bright Chloë, object of my constant vow,
Wilt thou a while unbend thy serious brow?
Wilt thou with pleasure hear thy lover's strains,
And with one heav'nly smile o'erpay his pains?
No longer shall the Nut-Brown Maid be old;
Though since her youth three hundred years have roll'd.

At thy desire, she shall again be rais'd;
And her reviving charms in lasting verse be prais'd.

No longer man of woman shall complain,
That he may love and not be lov'd again:
That we in vain the fickle sex pursue,
Who change the constant lover for the new.
Whatever has been writ, whatever said,
Of female passion feign'd, or faith decay'd:
Henceforth shall in my verse refuted stand,
Be said to winds, or writ upon the sand.
And, while my notes to future times proclaim
Unconquer'd love and ever-during flame;
O fairest of the sex! be thou my Muse:
Deign on my work thy influence to diffuse:
Let me partake the blessings I rehearse,
And grant me love, the just reward of verse.

As beauty's potent queen, with ev'ry grace,
That once was Emma's, has ador'd thy face;
And as her son has to my bosom dealt
That constant flame, which faithful Henry felt;
O let the story with thy life agree:

Let men once more the bright example see;
What Emma was to him, be thou to me.
Nor send me by thy frown from her I love,
Distant and sad, a banish'd man to rove.
But oh! with pity long-entreated crown
My pains and hopes; and, when thou say'st that one [alone.

Of all mankind thou lov'st, oh! think on me

WHERE beauteous Isis and her husband Tame
With mingled waves for ever flow the same,
In times of yore an ancient baron liv'd;
Great gifts bestow'd, and great respect receiv'd.

When dreadful Edward with successful care
Led his free Britons to the Gallic war;
This lord had headed his appointed bands,
In firm allegiance to the king's commands;
And (all due honours faithfully discharg'd)
Had brought back his paternal coat, enlarg'd
With a new mark, the witness of his toil,
And no inglorious part of foreign spoil.

From the loud camp retir'd and noisy court
In honorable ease and rural sport,
The remnant of his days he safely pass'd;
Nor found they lagg'd too slow, nor flew too fast.

He made his wish with his estate comply,
Joyful to live, yet not afraid to die.

One child he had, a daughter chaste and fair,
His age's comfort, and his fortune's heir.
They call'd her Emma; for the beauteous dame,
Who gave the virgin birth, had borne the name;
The name th' indulgent father doubly lov'd:
For in the child the mother's charms improv'd.
Yet as when little round his knees she play'd,
He call'd her oft, in sport, his Nut-Brown Maid;
The friends and tenants took the fondling word
(As still they please, who imitate their lord);
Usage confirm'd what fancy had begun;
The mutual terms around the lands were known; [one.

And Emma and the Nut-Brown Maid were
As with her stature, still her charms increas'd;
Through all the isle her beauty was confess'd.
Oh! what perfections must that virgin share,
Who fairest is esteem'd, where all the fair!
From distant shires repair the noble youth,
And find report, for once, had lessen'd truth.
By wonder first, and then by passion mov'd,
They came; they saw; they marvell'd; and they lov'd.

By public praises, and by secret sighs,
Each own'd the gen'ral power of Emma's eyes.
In tilts and tournaments the valiant strove,
By glorious deeds to purchase Emma's love.
In gentle verse, the witty told their flame,
And grac'd their choicest songs with Emma's
name.

In vain they combated, in vain they writ:
Useless their strength, and impotent their wit.
Great Venus only must direct the dart,
Which else will never reach the fair one's heart,
Spite of th' attempts of force, and soft effects of art.

Great Venus must prefer the happy one:
In Henry's cause her favor must be shown:
And Emma, of mankind, must love but him
alone.

While these in public to the castle came,
And by their grandeur justify'd their flame;
More secret ways the careful Henry takes;
His squires, his arms, and equipage forsakes:
In borrow'd name and false attire array'd,
Oft he finds means to see the beauteous maid.

When Emma hunts, in huntsman's habit
drest,
Henry on foot pursues the bounding beast.

In his right hand his beechen pole he bears:
And graceful at his side his horn he wears.
Still to the glade, where she has bent her way,
With knowing skill he drives the future prey;
Bids her decline the hill, and shun the brake;
And shows the path her steed may safely take;
Directs her spear to fix the glorious wound;
Pleas'd, in his toils, to have her triumph
crown'd;

And blows her praises with no common sound.

A falconer Henry is, when Emma hawks:
With her of tarsels and of lures he talks.

Upon his wrist the tow'ring merlin stands,
Practis'd to rise, and stoop, at her commands.
And when superior now the bird has flown,
And headlong brought the tumbling quarry
down;

With humble reverence he accosts the fair,
And with the honor'd feather decks her hair.
Yet still, as from the sportive field he goes,
His downcast eye reveals his inward woes;
And by his look and sorrow is exprest,
A nobler game pursued than bird or beast.

A shepherd now along the plain he roves;
And, with his jolly pipe, delights the groves.
The neighb'ring swains around the stranger
throng,

Or to admire or emulate his song:
While, with soft sorrow, he renews his lays,
Nor heedful of their envy, nor their praise.
But, soon as Emma's eyes adorn the plain,
His notes he raises to a nobler strain;
With dutiful respect, and studious fear,
Lest any careless sound offend her ear.

A frantic gipsy, now the house he haunts,
And in wild phrases speaks dissembled wants.
With the fond maids in palmistry he deals:
They tell the secret first, which he reveals:
Says who shall wed, and who shall be beguil'd;
What groom shall get, and squire maintain the child.

But when bright Emma would her fortune
know,

A softer look unbends his opening brow;
With trembling awe he gazes on her eye,
And in soft accents forms the kind reply;
That she shall prove as fortunate as fair,
And Hymen's choicest gifts are all reserv'd for her.

Now oft had Henry chang'd his sly disguise,
Unmark'd by all but beauteous Emma's eyes;
Oft had found means alone to see the dame,
And at her feet to breathe his am'rous flame;
And oft, the pangs of absence to remove,
By letters, soft interpreters of love:
Till time and industry, the mighty two
That bring our wishes nearer to our view,
Made him perceive that the inclining fair
Receiv'd his vows with no reluctant ear;
That Venus had confirm'd her equal reign,
And dealt to Emma's heart a share of Henry's
pain.

While Cupid smil'd, by kind occasion blest,
And, with the secret kept, the love increas'd:

The amorous youth frequents the silent groves,
And much he meditates, for much he loves.
He loves, 'tis true; and is belov'd again;
Great are his joys; but will they long remain?
Emma with smiles receives his present flame;
But, smiling, will she ever be the same?
Beautiful looks are rul'd by fickle minds;
And summer seas are turn'd by sudden winds.
Another love may gain her easy youth:
Time changes thought; and flattery conquers
truth.

O impotent estate of human life!

Where hope and fear maintain eternal strife;
Where fleeting joy does lasting doubt inspire;
And most we question what we most desire.
Amongst thy various gifts, great Heaven, bestow
Our cup of love unmix'd; forbear to throw
Bitter ingredients in; nor pall the draught
With nauseous grief; for our ill-judging thought
Hardly enjoys the pleasurable taste;
Or deems it not sincere; or fears it cannot last.

With wishes rais'd, with jealousies oppress,
(Alternate tyrants of the human breast)
By one great trial he resolves to prove
The faith of women, and the force of love.
If, scanning Emma's virtues, he may find
That beauteous frame inclose a steady mind,
He'll fix his hope, of future joy secure;
And live a slave to Hymen's happy pow'r.
But if the fair one, as he fears, is frail;
If, pois'd aright in reason's equal scale,
Light fly her merits, and her faults prevail;
His mind he vows to free from am'rous care,
The latent mischief from his heart to tear,
Resume his azure arms, and shine again in war.

South of the castle, in a verdant glade,
A spreading beech extends her friendly shade:
Here oft the nymph his breathing vows had heard;

Here oft her silence had her heart declar'd.
As active spring awak'd her infant buds,
And genial life inform'd the verdant woods,
Henry, in knots involving Emma's name,
Had half express'd and half conceal'd his flame
Upon the tree; and, as the tender mark
Grew with the year, and widen'd with the bark,

Venus had heard the virgin's soft address,
That as the wound, the passion might increase.
As potent nature shed her kindly show'rs,
And deck'd the various mead with opening
flow'rs;

Upon the tree the nymph's obliging care
Had left a frequent wreath for Henry's hair;
Which as with gay delight the lover found,
Pleas'd with his conquest, with her present
crown'd,

Glorious through all the plains he oft had gone,
And to each swain the mystic honor shown;
The gift still prais'd, the giver still unknown.

His secret note the troubled Henry writes;
To the known tree the lovely maid invites:
Imperfect words and dubious terms express,
That unforeseen mischance disturb'd his peace;

That he must something to her ear commend,
On which her conduct and his life depend.

Soon as the fair one had the note receiv'd,
The remnant of the day alone she griev'd :
For diff'rent this from ev'ry former note,
Which Venus dictated, and Henry wrote ;
Which told her all his future hopes were laid
On the dear bosom of his Nut-Brown Maid ;
Which always bless'd her eyes, and own'd her
pow'r ;

And bid her oft adieu, yet added more. [laid ;
Now night advanc'd. The house in sleep were
The nurse experienc'd, and the prying maid :
At last that sprite, which does incessant haunt
The lover's steps, the ancient maiden aunt.
To her dear Henry Emma wings her way,
With quicken'd pace repairing forc'd delay ;
For Love, fantastic power, that is afraid
To stir abroad till watchfulness be laid,
Undaunted then, o'er cliffs and valleys strays,
And leads his vot'ries safe thro' pathless ways :
Not Argus with his hundred eyes shall find
Where Cupid goes ; tho' he, poor guide, is blind.

The maiden, first arriving, sent her eye
To ask, if yet its chief delight were nigh :
With fear, and with desire, with joy and pain,
She sees, and runs to meet him on the plain.
But oh ! his steps proclaim no lover's haste ;
On the low ground his fix'd regards are cast ;
His artful bosom heaves dissembled sighs ;
And tears suborn'd fall copious from his eyes.

With ease, alas ! we credit what we love :
His painted grief does real sorrow move
In the afflicted fair ; adown her cheek
Trickling, the genuine tears their current break ;
Attentive stood the mournful nymph : the man
Broke silence first : the tale alternate ran :

HENRY.

Sincere, O tell me, hast thou felt a pain,
Emma, beyond what woman knows to feign ?
Has thy uncertain bosom ever strove
With the first tumults of a real love ?
Hast thou now dreaded, and now blest his sway,
By turns averse and joyful to obey ?
Thy virgin softness hast thou e'er bewail'd,
As reason yielded, and as love prevail'd ?
And wept the potent god's resistless dart,
His killing pleasure, his ecstatic smart,
And heav'nly poison thrilling thro' thy heart :
If so, with pity view my wretched state ;
At least deplore, and then forget my fate :
To some more happy knight reserve thy charms,
By fortune favor'd, and successful arms :
And only, as the sun's revolving ray,
Brings back each year this melancholy day,
Permit one sigh, and set apart one tear,
To an abandon'd exile's endless care.
For me, alas ! out-cast of human race,
Love's anger only waits, and dire disgrace ;
For lo ! these hands in murder are imbru'd,
These trembling feet by justice are pursu'd :
Fate calls aloud, and hastens me away ;
A shameful death attends my longer stay ;

And I this night must fly from thee and love,
Condemn'd in lonely woods a banish'd man to rove.

EMMA.

What is our bliss that changeth with the moon ;
And day of life that darkens ere 'tis noon ?
What is true passion, if unblest it dies ?
And where is Emma's joy, if Henry flies ?
If love, alas ! be pain ; the pain I bear
No thought can figure, and no tongue declare,
Ne'er faithful woman felt, nor false one feign'd,
The flames which long have in my bosom
reign'd :

The god of love himself inhabits there,
With all his rage, and dread, and grief, and care,
His complement of stores, and total war.

O ! cease then coldly to suspect my love ;
And let my deed, at least, my faith approve.
Alas ! no youth shall my endearments share ;
Nor day nor night shall interrupt my care ;
No future story shall with truth upbraid
The cold indifference of the Nut-brown Maid.
Nor to hard banishment shall Henry run ;
While careless Emma sleeps on beds of down.
View me resolv'd, where-e'er thou lead'st, to go,
Friend to thy pain, and partner of thy woe ;
For I attest fair Venus and her son,
That I, of all mankind, will love but thee alone.

HENRY.

Let prudence yet obstruct thy vent'rous way :
And take good heed, what men will think and
say :

That beauteous Emma vagrant courses took ;
Her father's house, and civil life forsook ;
That, full of youthful blood, and fond of man,
She to the woodland with an exile ran.
Reflect, that lessen'd fame is ne'er regain'd ;
And virgin honor once, is always stain'd :
Timely advis'd, the coming evil shun :
Better not do the deed, than weep it done.
No penance can absolve our guilty fame ;
Nor tears, that wash out sin, can wash out shame.

Then fly the sad effects of desp'rate love ; [rove.
And leave a banish'd man through lonely woods to

EMMA.

Let Emma's hapless case be falsely told
By the rash young, or the ill-natur'd old :
Let ev'ry tongue its various censures choose ;
Absolve with coldness, or with spite accuse :
Fair Truth at last her radiant beams will raise ;
And malice vanquish'd heightens virtue's praise,
Let then thy favor but indulge my flight ;
O ! let my presence make thy travels light ;
And potent Venus shall exalt my name
Above the rumors of censorious Fame ;
Nor from that busy demon's restless power
Will ever Emma other grace implore, [known,
Than that this truth should to the world be
That I, of all mankind, have lov'd but thee alone.

HENRY.

But canst thou wield the sword, and bend the
With active force repel the sturdy foe? [bow?
When the loud tumult speaks the battle nigh,
And winged death in whistling arrows fly;
Wilt thou, tho' wounded, yet undaunted stay,
Perform thy part, and share the dangerous day?
Then, as thy strength decays, thy heart will fail,
Thy limbs all trembling, and thy cheeks all pale;
With fruitless sorrow, thou, inglorious maid,
Wilt weep thy safety by thy love betray'd:
Then to thy friend, by foes o'ercharg'd, deny
Thy little useless aid, and coward fly: [love
Then wilt thou curse the chance that made thee
A banish'd man condemn'd in lonely woods to rove.

EMMA.

With fatal certainty Thalestris knew
To send the arrow from the twanging yew:
And, great in arms, and foremost in the war,
Bonduca brandish'd high the British spear.
Could thirst of vengeance and desire of fame
Excite the female breast with martial flame,
And shall not love's diviner pow'r inspire
More hardy virtue, and more generous fire?
Near thee, mistrust not, constant I'll abide,
And fall, or vanquish, fighting by thy side.
Though my inferior strength may not allow,
That I should bear or draw the warrior bow;
With ready hand I will the shaft supply,
And joy to see thy victor arrows fly.
Touch'd in the battle by the hostile reed,
Shouldst thou (but Heav'n avert it!) shouldst
thou bleed;
To stop the wounds my finest lawn I'd tear, Wash them with tears, and wipe them with my hair:
Blest, when my dangers and my toils have shown, [alone.
That I, of all mankind, could love but thee

HENRY.

But canst thou, tender maid, canst thou sustain
Afflictive want, or hunger's pressing pain?
Those limbs, in lawn and softest silk array'd,
From sun-beams guarded, and of winds afraid;
Can they bear angry Jove? Can they resist
The parching dog-star, and the bleak north-east,
When, chill'd by adverse snows, and beating
rain,
We tread with weary steps the longsome plain;
When with hard toil we seek our ev'ning food,
Berries and acorns from the neighb'ring wood;
And find among the cliffs no other house
But the thin covert of some gather'd boughs;
Wilt thou not then reluctant send thine eye
Around the dreary waste; and weeping try (Though then, alas! that trial be too late)
To find thy father's hospitable gate,
And seats, where Ease and Plenty brooding sate?
Those seats, whence long excluded thou must
That gate, for ever barr'd to thy return: [mourn;

Wilt thou not then bewail ill-fated love,
And hate a banish'd man condemn'd in woods
to rove?

EMMA.

Thy rise of fortune did I only wed,
From its decline determin'd to recede?
Did I but purpose to embark with thee
On the smooth surface of a summer's sea,
While gentle Zephyrs play in prosp'rous gales,
And Fortune's favor fills the swelling sails;
But would forsake the ship, and make the shore,
When the winds whistle, and the tempests roar?
No, Henry, no: one sacred oath has ty'd
Our loves; one destiny our life shall guide;
Nor wild nor deep our common way divide.

When from the cave thou risest with the day,
To beat the woods, and rouse the bounding prey;
The cave with moss and branches I'll adorn,
And cheerful sit, to wait my lord's return:
And, when thou frequent bring'st the smitten deer

(For seldom, archers say, thy arrows err),
I'll fetch quick fuel from the neighb'ring wood,
And strike the sparkling flint, and dress the food:

With humble duty, and officious haste,
I'll cull the farthest mead for thy repast:
The choicest herbs I to thy board will bring;
And draw thy water from the freshest spring:
And when, at night, with weary toil oppress,
Soft slumbers thou enjoy'st, and wholesome rest:
Watchful I'll guard thee, and with midnight
pray'r

Weary the gods to keep thee in their care;
And joyous ask, at morn's returning ray,
If thou hast health, and I may bless the day.
My thoughts shall fix, my latest wish depend,
On thee, guide, guardian, kinsman, father, friend.

By all these sacred names be Henry known
To Emma's heart: and grateful let him own,
That she, of all mankind, could love but him
alone.

HENRY.

Vainly thou tell'st me, what the woman's care
Shall in the wildness of the wood prepare.
Thou, ere thou goest, unhappiest of thy kind,
Must leave the habit and the sex behind.
No longer shall thy comely tresses break
In flowing ringlets on thy snowy neck;
Or sit behind thy head, an ample round,
In graceful braids with various ribbon bound:
No longer shall the boddice, aptly lac'd
From thy full bosom to thy slender waist,
That air and harmony of shape express,
Fine by degrees, and beautifully less:
Nor shall thy lower garments' artful plait,
From thy fair side dependent to thy feet,
Arm their chaste beauties with a modest pride,
And double ev'ry charm they seek to hide.
Th' ambrosial plenty of thy shining hair,
Cropt off and lost, scarce lower than thy ear,

Shall stand uncouth; a horseman's coat shall hide
Thy taper shape and comeliness of side:
The short trunk-hose shall show thy foot and knee

Licentious, and to common eye-sight free;
And, with a bolder stride, and looser air,
Mingled with men, a man thou must appear.

Nor solitude, nor gentle peace of mind,
Mistaken maid, shalt thou in forests find:
'Tis long since Cynthia and her train were
there;

Or guardian gods made innocence their care.
Vagrants and outlaws shall offend thy view;
For such must be thy friends; a hideous crew,
By adverse fortune mix'd in social ill,
Train'd to assault, and disciplin'd to kill;
Their common loves, a lewd abandon'd pack,
The beadle's lash still flagrant on their back:
By sloth corrupted, by disorder fed,
Made bold by want, and prostitute for bread;
With such must Emma hunt the tedious day,
Assist their violence, and divide their prey;
With such she must return at setting light,
Though not partaker, witness of their night.
Thy ear, inur'd to charitable sounds,
And pitying love, must feel the hateful wounds
Of jest obscene and vulgar ribaldry,
The ill-bred question, and the lewd reply;
Brought by long habitude from bad to worse,
Must hear the frequent oath, the direful curse,
The latest weapon of the wretch's war;
And blasphemy, sad comrade of despair.

Now Emma, now, the last reflection make,
What thou wouldst follow, what thou must forsake:

By our ill-omen'd stars, and adverse Heav'n,
No middle object to thy choice is given.
Or yield thy virtue, to attain thy love; [rove.
Or leave a banish'd man condemn'd in woods to

EMMA.

O grief of heart! that our unhappy fates
Force thee to suffer what thy honor hates;
Mix thee amongst the bad; or make thee run
Too near the paths which virtue bids thee shun.
Yet with her Henry still let Emma go;
With him abhor the vice, but share the woe;
And sure my little heart can never err,
Amidst the worst, if Henry still be there.

Our outward act is prompted from within;
And from the sinner's mind proceeds the sin;
By her own choice free Virtue is approv'd;
Nor by the force of outward objects mov'd.
Who has assay'd no danger gains no praise;
In a small isle, amidst the widest seas,
Triumphant Constancy has fix'd her seat:
In vain the Sirens sing, the tempests beat,
Their flattery she rejects, nor fears their threat.

For thee alone these little charms I dress'd;
Condemn'd them, or absolv'd them by thy test.
In comely figure rang'd, my jewels shone,
Or negligently plac'd, for thee alone;
For thee again they shall be laid aside;
The woman, Henry, shall put off her pride;

For thee, my clothes, my sex, exchang'd for thee,
I'll mingle with the people's wretched lee;
O line extreme of human infamy!

Wanting the scissars, with these hands I'll tear,
(If that obstructs my flight) this load of hair.
Black soot or yellow walnut shall disgrace
This little red and white of Emma's face.

These nails with scratches shall deform my
breast,

Lest by my look or color be express'd [dress'd.
The mark of aught high-born, or ever better
Yet in this commerce, under this disguise,
Let me be grateful still in Henry's eyes;
Lost to the world, let me to him be known;
My fate I can absolve, if he shall own,
That, leaving all mankind, I love but him
alone.

HENRY.

O wildest thought of an abandon'd mind!
Name, habit, parents, woman, left behind!
E'en honor dubious, thou prefer'st to go
Wild to the woods with me: said Emma so?
Or did I dream what Emma never said?
O guilty error! and O wretched maid!
Whose roving fancy would resolve the same
With him, who next should tempt her easy fame; [flame.
And blow with empty words the susceptible
Now why should doubtful terms thy mind per-
Confess thy frailty, and avow thy sex; [plex?
No longer loose desire for constant love
Mistake: but say, 'tis man with whom thou long'st to rove.

EMMA.

Are there not poisons, racks, and flames, and swords;
That Emma thus must die by Henry's words!
Yet what could swords or poison, racks or flame,
But mangle and disjoint this brittle frame?
More fatal Henry's words; they murder Emma's
fame.

And fall these sayings from that gentle tongue,
Where civil speech and soft persuasion hung;
Whose artful sweetness and harmonious strain,
Courting my grace, yet courting it in vain,
Call'd sighs, and tears, and wishes, to its aid;
And, whilst it Henry's glowing flame convey'd,
Still blam'd the coldness of the *Nut-brown
Maid*?

Let envious jealousy and canker'd spite
Produce my actions to severest light,
And tax my open day, or secret night.
Did e'er my tongue speak my unguarded heart
The least inclin'd to play the wanton's part?
Did e'er my eye one inward thought reveal,
Which angels might not hear, and virgins tell?
And hast thou, Henry, in my conduct known
One fault, but that which I must ever own,
That I, of all mankind, have lov'd but thee
alone?

HENRY.

Vainly thou talk'st of loving me alone:
Each man is man; and all our sex is one.

False are our words, and fickle is our mind ;
Nor in love's ritual can we ever find
Vows made to last, or promises to bind.

By nature prompted, and for empire made,
Alike by strength or cunning we invade :
When, arm'd with rage, we march against the foe,

We lift the battle-axe, and draw the bow ;
When, fir'd with passion, we attack the fair,
Delusive sighs and brittle vows we bear :
Our falsehood and our arms have equal use ;
As they our conquest or delight produce.

The foolish heart thou gav'st, again receive,
The only boon departing love can give.
To be less wretched, be no longer true ;
What strives to fly thee why shouldst thou pursue ?
Forget thy present flame, indulge a new.
Single the loveliest of the am'rous youth ;
Ask for his vow ; but hope not for his truth.
The next man (and the next thou shalt believe)
Will pawn his gods, intending to deceive ;
Will kneel, implore, persist, o'ercome, and leave.
Hence let thy Cupid aim his arrows right ;
Be wise and false, shun trouble, seek delight ;
Change thou the first, nor wait thy lover's flight.

Why shouldst thou weep ? Let Nature judge
our case ;

I saw thee young and fair ; pursu'd the chace
Of youth and beauty : I another saw
Fairer and younger ; yielding to the law
Of our all-ruling mother, I pursued
More youth, more beauty : blest vicissitude !
My active heart still keeps its pristine flame ;
The object alter'd, the desire the same.

This younger, fairer, pleads her rightful
charms ;

With present power compels me to her arms.
And much I fear from my subjected mind,
(If beauty's force to constant love can bind,)
That years may roll, ere in her turn the maid
Shall weep the fury of my love decay'd ;
And weeping follow me, as thou dost now,
With idle clamors of a broken vow.

Nor can the wildness of thy wishes err
So wide, to hope that thou mayst live with her.
Love, well thou know'st, no partnership allows :
Cupid averse rejects divided vows :
Then from thy foolish heart, vain maid, remove
An useless sorrow, and an ill-starr'd love ;
And leave me with the fair at large in woods to rove.

EMMA.

Are we in life through one great error led ?
Is each man perjur'd, and each nymph betray'd ?
Of the superior sex art thou the worst ?
Am I of mine the most completely curst ?
Yet let me go with thee ; and going prove,
From what I will endure, how much I love.

This potent beauty, this triumphant fair,
This happy object of our diff'rent care,
Her let me follow ; her let me attend,
A servant (she may scorn the name of friend :)
What she demands, incessant I'll prepare ;
I'll weave her garlands, and I'll plait her hair :

My busy diligence shall deck her board
(For there at least I may approach my lord) ;
And, when her Henry's softer hours advise
His servant's absence, with dejected eyes
Far I'll recede, and sighs forbid to rise.

Yet, when increasing grief brings slow disease ;
And ebbing life, on terms severe as these,
Will have its little lamp no longer fed ;
When Henry's mistress shows him Emma dead ;
Rescue my poor remains from vile neglect ;
With virgin honors let my hearse be deck'd,
And decent emblem ; and at least persuade
This happy nymph, that Emma may be laid
Where thou, dear author of my death, where she
With frequent eye my sepulchre may see.
The nymph amidst her joys may haply breathe
One pious sigh, reflecting on my death,
And the sad fate which she may one day prove,
Who hopes from Henry's vows eternal love.
And thou, forsworn, thou cruel, as thou art,
If Emma's image ever touch'd thy heart,
Thou sure must give one thought, and drop one tear

To her, whom love abandon'd to despair ;
To her who, dying, on the wounded stone
Bid it in lasting characters be known,
That, of mankind, she lov'd but thee alone.

HENRY.

Hear, solemn Jove ! and, conscious Venus,
hear !

And thou, bright maid, believe me, whilst I
No time, no change, no future flame, shall move
The well-plac'd basis of my lasting love.
O powerful virtue ! O victorious fair !
At least excuse a trial too severe :
Receive the triumph, and forget the war.

No banish'd man, condemn'd in woods to
rove,

Entreats thy pardon, and implores thy love :
No perjur'd knight desires to quit thy arms,
Fairest collection of thy sex's charms,
Crown of my love, and honor of my youth !
Henry, thy Henry, with eternal truth,
As thou mayst wish, shall all his life employ,
And found his glory in his Emma's joy.

In me behold the potent Edgar's heir,
Illustrious earl : him terrible in war
Let Loyre confess ; for she has felt his sword,
And trembling fled before the British lord.
Him great in peace and wealth fair Deva knows :
For she amidst his spacious meadows flows ;
Inclines her urn upon his fatten'd lands ;
And sees his numerous herd imprint her sands.

And thou, my fair, my dove, shalt raise thy thought

To greatness next to empire ; shalt be brought
With solemn pomp to my paternal seat ;
Where peace and plenty on thy word shall wait.
Music and song shall wake the marriage-day ;
And, whilst the priests accuse the bride's delay,
Myrtles and roses shall obstruct her way.

Friendship shall still thy evening feasts adorn ;
And blooming peace shall ever bless thy morn.

Succeeding years their happy race shall run ;
 And Age unheeded by delight come on,
 While yet superior Love shall mock his pow'r ;
 And when old Time shall turn the fated hour,
 Which only can our well-tied knot unfold,
 What rests of both one supulchre shall hold.

Hence then for ever from my Emma's breast
 (That heaven of softness, and that seat of rest),
 Ye doubts and fears, and all that know to move
 Tormenting grief, and all that trouble love,
 Scatter'd by winds recede, and wild in forests
 rove.

EMMA.

O day the fairest sure that ever rose !
 Period and end of anxious Emma's woes !
 Sire of her joy, and source of her delight ;
 O wing'd with pleasure take thy happy flight,
 And give each future morn a tincture of thy white.

Yet tell thy votary, potent queen of love !
 Henry, my Henry, will he never rove ?
 Will he be ever kind, and just, and good ?
 And is there then no mistress in the wood ?
 None, none there is, the thought was rash and
 A false idea, and a fancied pain. [vain ;
 Doubt shall for ever quit my strengthen'd heart,
 And anxious jealousy's corroding smart ;
 No other inmate shall inhabit there,
 But soft Belief, young Joy, and pleasing Care.

Hence let the tides of plenty ebb and flow,
 And Fortune's various gale unheeded blow.
 If at my feet the suppliant goddess stands,
 And sheds her treasure with unwearied hands ;
 Her present favor cautious I'll embrace ;
 And not unthankful use the proffer'd grace :
 If she reclaims the temporary boon,
 And tries her pinions, flutt'ring to be gone ;
 Secure of mind I'll obviate her intent,
 And unconcern'd return the goods she lent.
 Nor happiness can I, nor misery feel,
 From any turn of her fantastic wheel : [pow'rs,
 Friendship's great laws, and love's superior
 Must mark the color of my future hours.
 From the events which thy commands create,
 I must my blessings or my sorrows date ;
 And Henry's will must dictate Emma's fate.

Yet while with close delight and inward pride (Which from the world my careful soul shall
 I see thee, lord and end of my desire, [hide)
 Exalted high as virtue can require ;
 With power invested, and with pleasure cheer'd ;
 Sought by the good, by the oppressor fear'd ;
 Loaded and blest with all the affluent store
 Which human vows at smoking shrines implore.
 Grateful and humble grant me to employ
 My life subservient only to thy joy ;
 And at my death to bless thy kindness shown
 To her, who of mankind could love but thee
 alone.

WHILE thus the constant pair alternate said,
 Joyful above them and around them play'd
 Angels and sportive Loves, a numerous crowd ;
 Smiling they clapp'd their wings and low they
 bow'd :

They tumbled all their little quivers o'er,
 To choose propitious shafts ; a precious store,
 That, when their god should take his future
 darts,

To strike (however rarely) constant hearts,
 His happy skill might proper arms employ,
 All tipp'd with pleasure, and all wing'd with
 joy ;

And those, they vow'd, whose lives should imitate

These lovers' constancy, should share their fate.

The queen of beauty stopp'd her bridled doves ;
 Approv'd the little labor of the Loves ;
 Was proud and pleas'd the mutual vow to hear ;
 And to the triumph call'd the god of war :
 Soon as she calls, the god is always near.

Now Mars, she said, let Fame exalt her
 voice ;

Nor let thy conquests only be her choice :
 But when she sings great Edward from the field
 Return'd, the hostile spear and captive shield
 In Concord's temple hung, and Gallia taught to yield ;

And when, as prudent Saturn shall complete
 The years design'd to perfect Britain's state,
 The swift-wing'd pow'r shall take her trump
 again,

To sing her favorite Anna's wondrous reign ;
 To recollect unwearied Marlbro's toils,
 Old Rufus' hall unequal to his spoils ;
 The British soldier from his high command
 Glorious, and Gaul thrice vanquish'd by his hand :
 Let her at least perform what I desire ;
 With second breath the vocal brass inspire,
 And tell the nations, in no vulgar strain,
 What wars I manage. and what wreaths I gain.
 And, when thy tumults and thy fights are
 past ;

And when thy laurels at my feet are cast ;
 Faithful mayst thou, like British Henry, prove ;
 And, Emma-like, let me return thy love.

Renown'd for truth, let all thy sons appear ;

And constant beauty shall reward their care.

Mars smil'd, and bow'd : the Cyprian deity
 Turn'd to the glorious ruler of the sky ;
 And thou, she smiling said, great god of days
 And verse, behold my deed, and sing my praise ;
 As on the British earth, my fav'rite isle,
 Thy gentle rays and kindest influence smile,
 Through all her laughing fields and verdant
 groves,

Proclaim with joy those memorable loves :
 From every annual course let one great day
 To celebrated sports and floral play
 Be set aside ; and, in the softest lays
 Of thy poetic sons, be solemn praise
 And everlasting marks of honor paid
 To the true Lover, and the Nut-brown Maid.

ANON.

Non omnes arbusta juvant humilesque myricæ.
VIRGIL.

KNIGHT of the Polar Star! by Fortune plac'd,
To shine the Cynosure* of British taste;
Whose orb collects in one refulgent view
The scatter'd glories of Chinese Virtù;
And spreads their lustre in so broad a blaze,
That kings themselves are dazzled, while they gaze!

O let the Muse attend thy march sublime,
And, with thy prose, caparison her rhyme;
Teach her, like thee, to gild her splendid song
With scenes of Yven-Ming†, and sayings of Li-Tsong‡;

Like thee to scorn Dame Nature's simple fence;
Leap each ha ha of truth and common sense;
And, proudly rising in her bold career,
Demand attention from the gracious ear
Of him, whom we and all the world admit
Patron supreme of science, taste, and wit.
Does Envy doubt? Witness, ye chosen train!
Who breathe the sweets of his Saturnian reign;
Witness, ye H*lls, ye J*ns*ns, Sc*ts, S*bb*s,
Hark to my call, for some of you have ears.
Let D**d H*e, from the remotest North,
In see-saw sceptic scruples hint his worth;
D**d, who there supinely deigns to lye
The fattest hog of Epicurus' sty;

Though drunk with Gallic wine, and Gallic
praise,

D**d shall bless old England's halcyon days;
The mighty Home, bemir'd in prose so long,
Again shall stalk upon the stilts of song;
While bold Mac-Ossian, wont in ghosts to deal,
Bids candid Smollet from his coffin steal;
Bids Mallock quit his sweet Elysian rest,
Sunk in his St. John's philosophic breast,
And, like old Orpheus, make some strong effort
To come from hell and warble truth at court§.

There was a time, "in Esher's peaceful grove,
"When Kent and Nature vied for Pelham's
love,"

That Pope beheld them with auspicious smile,
And own'd that Beauty bless'd their mutual toil.
Mistaken bard! could such a pair design
Scenes fit to live in thy immortal line?
Hadst thou been born in this enlighten'd day,
Felt, as we feel, Taste's Oriental ray,
Thy satire sure had given them both a stab, Call'd Kent a driveller, and the Nymph a drab.

For what is Nature? ring her changes round,
Her three flat notes are water, plants, and
ground;

Prolong the peal, yet spite of all your clatter,
The tedious chime is still ground, plants, and water||.

So, when some John his dull invention racks,
To rival Boodle's dinners, or Almack's;
Three uncouth legs of mutton shock our eyes,
Three roasted geese, three butter'd apple pies.

Come then, prolific art, and with thee bring
The charms that rise from thy exhaustless
spring;

* Cynosure, an affected phrase. Cynosure is a constellation of Ursa Minor, or the Lesser Bear, the next star to the Pole. Dr. Newton on the word in Milton.

‡ "Many trees, shrubs, and flowers," sayeth Li-Tsong, a Chinese author of great antiquity, "thrive best in low, moist situations; many on hills and mountains; some require a rich soil; but others will grow on clay, in sand, or even upon rocks, and in the water; to some a sunny exposition is necessary; but for others the shade is preferable. There are plants which thrive best in exposed situations, but in general shelter is requisite. The skilful gardener, to whom study and experience have taught these qualities, carefully attends to them in his operations, knowing that thereon depend the health and growth of his plants, and consequently the beauty of his plantations." Vide Diss. p. 77. The reader, I presume, will readily allow, that he never met with so much recondite truth, as this ancient Chinese here exhibits.

§ Vide (if it be extant) a poem under this title, for which (or for the publication of Lord Bolingbroke's philosophical writings) the person here mentioned received a considerable pension in the time of Lord B—t's administration.

|| This is the great and fundamental axiom, on which Oriental taste is founded. It is therefore expressed here with the greatest precision, and in the identical phrase of the great original. The figurative terms, and even the explanatory simile, are entirely borrowed from Sir William's Dissertation. "Nature (says the Chinese, or Sir William for him) affords us but few materials to work with. Plants, ground, and water, are her only productions; and, though both the forms and arrangements of these may be varied to an incredible degree, yet they have but few striking varieties, the rest being of the nature of changes rung upon bells, which, though in reality different, still produce the same uniform kind of jingling; the variation being too minute to be easily perceived."—"Art must therefore supply the scantiness of Nature," &c. &c. p. 14. And again, "Our larger works are only a repetition of the small ones, like the honest Bachelor's feast, which consisted in nothing but a multiplication of his own dinner: three legs of mutton and turnips, three roasted geese, and three buttered apple pies." Preface, page 7.

To Richmond come, for see untutor'd Brown
Destroys those wonders which were once thy

Lo, from his melon-ground the peasant slave
Has rudely rush'd, and levell'd Merlin's Cave;
Knock'd down the waxen wizard, seiz'd his wand,

Transform'd to lawn what late was Fairy land;
And marr'd, with impious hand, each sweet

Of Stephen Duck and good Queen Caroline.

Re-place each vista, straighten every bend;
Shut out the Thames, shall that ignoble thing
Approach the presence of great Ocean's King?

No! let Barbaric glories * feast his eyes,

August Pagodas round his palace rise,

And finish'd Richmond open to his view,

Nor rest we here, but, at our magic call,

Monkeys shall climb our trees, and lizards

Huge dogs of Tibet bark in yonder grove,

Here parrots prate, there cats make cruel love;

In some fair island will we turn to grass

Giants from Africa shall guard the glades,

Where hiss our snakes, where sport our Tartar
maids;

Or, wanting these, from Charlotte Hayes we

Now, to our lawns of dalliance and delight

Join we the groves of horror and affright:

This to achieve no foreign aids we try;

Thy gibbets, Bagshot ‡! shall our wants supply;

Hounslow, whose heath sublimer terrors fills,

Shall with her gibbets lend her powder-mills.

Here, too, O King of Vengeance §, in thy fane,

Tremendous Wilkes shall rattle his gold chain ||;

And round that fane, on many a Tyburn tree,

Hang fragments dire of Newgate-history;

On this shall H*ll*d's dying speech be read,

Here B—te's confession, and his wooden head;

While all the minor plunderers of the age,

Where shall our mimic London rear her

The Eastern feature, Art must next produce,

Though not for present yet for future use:

Our sons some slave of greatness may behold,

Cast in the genuine Asiatic mould,

Who of three realms shall condescend to know

No more than he can spy from Windsor's brow;

For him, that blessing of a better time,

The Muse shall deal a while in brick and lime;

* So Milton,

"Where the gorgeous east with richest hand Showers on her kings Barbaric pearl and gold."

§ "In the most dismal recesses of the woods, are temples dedicated to the King of Vengeance, near which are placed pillars of stone, with pathetic descriptions of tragical events; and many acts of cruelty perpetrated there by outlaws and robbers." Page 37.

|| This was written when Mr. Wilkes was Sheriff of London, and when it was to be feared he would rattle his chain a year longer as Lord Mayor.

¶ Martins. The asterims will be easily supplied.

** "There is likewise in the same garden, viz. Yven-Ming Yven, near Pekin, a fortified town, with its ports, streets, public squares, temples, markets, shops, and tribunals of justice; in short, with every thing that is at Pekin, only on a smaller scale. In this town the Emperors of China, who are too much the slaves of their greatness to appear in public, and their women, who are secluded

 These shall prolong his Asiatic dream,

 plann'd;
 While, as thy art commands, obsequious rise

 O let that Bard his Knight's protection claim,
 And share, like faithful Sancho, Quixote's fame.

§ 139. Pleasures of Memory: a Poem.
 By SAMUEL ROGERS, Esq.

Down by yon hazel copse, at evening blaz'd
 The Gipsy's faggot—there we stood and gaz'd;
 Gaz'd on her sun-burnt face with silent awe,
 Her tatter'd mantle, and her hood of straw;
 Her moving lips, her caldron brimming o'er;
 The drowsy brood that on her back she bore,
 Imps, in the barn with mousing owlet bred,
 From rifled roost at nightly revel fed;
 Whose dark eyes flash'd through locks of blackest shade, [bay'd:
 When in the breeze the distant watch-dog
 And heroes fled the Sibyl's mutter'd call,
 Whose elfin prowess scal'd the orchard-wall.
 As o'er my palm the silver piece she drew,
 And trac'd the line of life with searching
 view,
 How throb'd my fluttering pulse with hopes and fears,
 To learn the color of my future years!
 Ah, then, what honest triumph flush'd my
 breast!
 This truth once known—To bless is to be blest!
 We led the bending beggar on his way
 (Bare were his feet, his tresses silver gray);
 Sooth'd the keen pangs his aged spirit felt,
 And on his tale with mute attention dwelt.
 As in his scrip we dropt our little store,
 And wept to think that little was no more,
 He breath'd his pray'r; “Long may such “goodness live!”
 'Twas all he gave, 'twas all he had to give.
 But hark! through those old firs, with sullen swell [well!
 The church-clock strikes! ye tender scenes fare-
 It calls me hence, beneath their shade to trace
 The few fond lines that Time may soon efface.
 On yon gray stone that fronts the chancel-
 door,
 Worn smooth by busy feet now seen no more,
 Each eve we shot the marble through the ring,
 When the heart danc'd, and life was in its
 spring;
 Alas! unconscious of the kindred earth,
 That faintly echoed to the voice of mirth.

from it by custom, are frequently diverted with the hurry and bustle of the capital, which is here represented, several times of the year, by the eunuchs of the palace.” Page 32.

§ 140. From the Same.

OFT has the aged tenant of the vale
 Lean'd on his staff to lengthen out the tale;
 Oft have his lips the grateful tribute breath'd,
 From sire to son with pious zeal bequeath'd.
 When o'er the blasted heath the day declin'd,
 And on the scath'd oak warr'd the winter wind:
 When not a distant taper's twinkling ray
 Gleam'd o'er the furze to light him on his way;
 When not a sheep-bell sooth'd his listening ear,
 And the big rain-drops told the tempest near;
 Then did his horse the homeward track descry,
 The track that shunn'd his sad inquiring eye;
 And win each wavering purpose to relent,
 With warmth so mild, so gently violent,
 That his charm'd hand the careless rein re-
 sign'd,

And doubts and terrors vanish'd from his mind.

Recall the traveller, whose alter'd form
 Has borne the buffet of the mountain storm;
 And who will first his fond impatience meet?
 His faithful dog's already at his feet!
 Yes, though the porter spurn him from his door,
 Though all, that knew him, know his face no
 more,

His faithful dog shall tell his joy to each,
 With that mute eloquence which passes speech.
 And see, the master but returns to die!

Yet who shall bid the watchful servant fly?
 The blasts of heaven, the drenching dews of
 earth,

The wanton insults of unfeeling mirth;
 These, when to guard misfortune's sacred grave,
 Will firm Fidelity exalt to brave.

Led by what chart, transports the timid dove
 The wreaths of conquest, or the vows of love?
 Say through the clouds what compass points her flight? [sight.

Monarchs have gaz'd, and nations blest the Pile rocks on rocks, bid woods and mountains
 rise,

Eclipse her native shades, her native skies;—
 'Tis vain! through ether's pathless wilds she goes,

And lights at last where all her cares repose.

Sweet bird! thy truth shall Harlem's walls
 And unborn ages consecrate thy nest. [attest,
 When with the silent energy of grief,
 With looks that ask'd, yet dar'd not hope relief,
 Want, with her babes, round generous valor clung,

To wring the slow surrender from his tongue,

'Twas thine to animate her closing eye:

Alas! 'twas thine perchance the first to die,
 Crush'd by her meagre hand, when welcom'd from the sky.

§ 141. From the Same.

WHEN the blithe son of Savoy, roving round
 With humble wares and pipe of merry sound,
 From his green vale and shelter'd cabin hies,
 And soales the Alps to visit foreign skies;

Though far below the forked lightnings play,
 And at his feet the thunder dies away,
 Oft, in the saddle rudely rock'd to sleep,
 While his mule browses on the dizzy steep,
 With memory's aid, he sits at home, and sees
 His children sport beneath their native trees,
 And bends, to hear their cherub voices call,
 O'er the loud fury of the torrent's fall.

But can her smile with gloomy Madness
 dwell?

Say, can she chase the horrors of his cell?
 Each fiery flight on phrensy's wing restrain,
 And mould the coinage of the fever'd brain?
 Pass but that grate, which scarce a gleam supplies,

There in the dust the wreck of Genius lies!
 He, whose arresting hand sublimely wrought
 Each bold conception in the sphere of thought;
 Who from the quarried mass, like Phidias, drew Forms ever fair, creations ever new!

But as he fondly snatch'd the wreath of Fame,
 The spectre Poverty unnerv'd his frame.
 Cold was her grasp, a withering scowl she wore;
 And Hope's soft energies were felt no more.

Yet still how sweet the soothings of his art!
 From the rude stone what bright ideas start!
 E'en now he claims the amaranthine wreath,
 With scenes that glow, with images that breathe!

And whence these scenes, these images, declare;
 Whence but from her who triumphs o'er despair?

Awake, arise! with grateful fervor fraught,
 Go spring the mine of elevated thought.
 He who, through Nature's various walk, surveys
 The good and fair her faultless line portrays;
 Whose mind, prophan'd by no unhallow'd guest,

Culls from the crowd the purest and the best;
 May range, at will, bright Fancy's golden clime,
 Or musing, mount where Science sits sublime,
 Or wake the spirit of departed Time.

Who acts thus wisely, mark the moral Muse,
 A blooming Eden in his life reviews!
 So richly cultur'd ev'ry native grace,
 Its scanty limits he forgets to trace:

But the fond fool, when evening shades the sky,
 Turns but to start, and gazes but to sigh!
 The weary waste, that lengthen'd as he ran,
 Fades to a blank, and dwindles to a span!

Ah! who can tell the triumphs of the mind,
 By truth illumin'd, and by taste refin'd?
 When age has quench'd the eye and clos'd the
 ear,

Still nerv'd for action in her native sphere,
 Oft will she rise—with searching glance pursue
 Some long-lov'd image vanish'd from her view;
 Dart through the deep recesses of the past,
 O'er dusky forms in chains of slumber cast;
 With giant-grasp fling back the folds of night,
 And snatch the faithless fugitive to light.

So through the grove th' impatient mother
 flies,
 Each sunless glade, each secret pathway tries;

Till the light leaves the truant-boy disclose,
Long on the wood-moss stretch'd in sweet re-
pose.

§ 142. From the Same.

OfT may the spirits of the dead descend,
To watch the silent slumbers of a friend ;
To hover round his evening walk unseen,
And hold sweet converse on the dusky green ;
To hail the spot where first their friendship
grew,

And heaven and nature open'd to their view !
OfT, when he trims his cheerful hearth, and sees
A smiling circle emulous to please ;
There may these gentle guests delight to dwell,
And bless the scene they lov'd in life so well !

O thou ! with whom my heart was wont to share

From Reason's dawn each pleasure and each
With whom, alas ! I fondly hop'd to know

The humble walk of happiness below ;

If thy blest nature now unites above

An angel's pity with a brother's love,

Still o'er my life preserve thy mild control,

Correct my views, and elevate my soul :

Grant me thy peace and purity of mind,

Devout yet cheerful, active yet resign'd ;

Grant me, like thee, whose heart knew no disguise,

Whose blameless wishes never aim'd to rise,

To meet the changes Time and Chance present,
With modest dignity and calm content.

When thy last breath, ere Nature sunk to rest,

Thy meek submission to thy God express'd ;

When thy last look, ere thought and feeling fled,

A mingled gleam of hope and triumph shed ;

What to thy soul its glad assurance gave,

Its hope in death, its triumph o'er the grave ?

The sweet remembrance of unblemish'd youth,

The inspiring voice of Innocence and Truth !

Hail, Memory, hail ! in the exhaustless
mine

From age to age unnumber'd treasures shine !

Thought and her shadowy brood thy call obey,

And Place and Time are subject to thy sway !

Thy pleasures most we feel when most alone ;

The only pleasures we can call our own.

Lighter than air, Hope's summer-visions die,

If but a fleeting cloud obscure the sky ;

If but a beam of sober Reason play,

Lo, Fancy's fairy frost-work melts away !

But can the wiles of Art, the grasp of Power,

Snatch the rich relics of a well-spent hour ?

These, when the trembling spirit wings her flight,

Pour round her path a stream of living light ;

And gild those pure and perfect realms of rest,

Where Virtue triumphs, and her sons are blest.

§ 143. Verses on a Tear. From the Same.

Oh ! that the Chemist's magic art
Could crystallise this sacred treasure !
Long should it glitter near my heart,
A secret source of pensive pleasure.

The little brilliant, ere it fell,
Its lustre caught from Chloe's eye ;
Then trembling, left its coral cell—
The spring of sensibility !

Sweet drop of pure and pearly light,
In thee the rays of Virtue shine ;
More calmly clear, more mildly bright,
Than any gem that gilds the mine.

Benign restorer of the soul !
Who ever fly'st to bring relief,
When first she feels the rude control
Of Love or Pity, Joy or Grief :

The sage's and the poet's theme,
In every clime, in every age ;
Thou charm'st in Fancy's idle dream,
In Reason's philosophic page.

That very law * which moulds a tear,
And bids it trickle from its source,
That law preserves the earth a sphere,
And guides the planets in their course.

§ 144. A Sketch of the Alps at Day-break. From the Same.

THE sun beams streak the azure skies,
And line with light the mountain's brow :
With hounds and horns the hunters rise,
And chase the roe-buck through the snow.

From rock to rock, with giant bound,
High on their iron poles they pass ;
Mute, lest the air, convuls'd by sound,
Rend from above a frozen mass†.

The goats wind slow their wonted way,
Up craggy steeps and ridges rude ;
Mark'd by the wild wolf for his prey,
From desert cave or hanging wood.

And while the torrent thunders loud,
And as the echoing cliffs reply,
The huts peep o'er the morning cloud,
Perch'd like an eagle's nest, on high.

§ 145. A Wish. From the Same.

MINE be a cot beside the hill ;
A bee-hive's hum shall soothe my ear ;
A willowy brook, that turns a mill,
With many a fall shall linger near.

The swallow, oft, beneath my thatch,
Shall twitter from her clay-built nest ;
OfT shall the pilgrim lift the latch,
And share my meal, a welcome guest.

† There are passes in the Alps, where the guides tell you to move on with speed, and say nothing, lest the agitation of the air should loosen the snows above. GRAY, sect. v. let. 4.

Around my ivied porch shall spring
Each fragrant flower that drinks the dew;
And Lucy at her wheel shall sing,
In russet gown and apron blue.

The village-church, among the trees,
Where first our marriage vows were giv'n,
With merry peals shall swell the breeze,
And point with taper spire to heav'n.

§ 146. An Ode on Classic Education *. ANON.

Down the steep abrupt of hills
Furious foams the headlong tide,
Through the meads the streamlet trills,
Swelling slow in gentle pride.
Ruin vast and dread dismay
Mark the clam'rous cataract's way;
Glad increase and sweets benign
Round the riv'let's margin shine.

Youth! with stedfast eye peruse
Scenes to lesson thee display'd;
Yes—in these the moral Muse
Bids thee see thyself portray'd.
Thou with headstrong wasteful force
Mayst reflect the torrent's course;
Or resemble streams, that flow
Blest and blessing as they go.

Infant sense to all our kind
Pure the young idea brings,
From within the fountain mind
Issuing at a thousand springs.
Who shall make the current stray
Smooth along the channell'd way?
Who shall, as it runs, refine?
Who? but CLASSIC DISCIPLINE.

She, whatever fond desire,
Stubborn deed or guileful speech,
Inexperience might inspire,
Or absurd indulgence teach,
Timely cautious shall restrain,
Bidding childhood hear† the rein;
She with sport shall labor mix,
She excursive fancy fix.

Prime support of learned lore,
PERSEVERANCE joins her train,
Pages oft turn'd o'er and o'er
Turning o'er and o'er again;
Giving, in due form of school,
Speech its measure, pow'r, and rule:
Meanwhile memory's treasures grow
Great, though gradual; sure, though slow.

Patient CARE by just degrees
Word and image learns to class;
Those compounds, and sep'rates these,
As in strict review they pass;
Joins, as various features strike,
Fit to fit and like to like,
Till in meek array advance
Concord, Method, Elegance.

TIME meanwhile, from day to day,
Fixes deeper Virtue's root;
Whence, in long succession gay,
Blossoms many a lively shoot:
Meek OBEDIENCE, following still,
Frank and glad, a Master's will;
Modest CANDOR, hearing prone
Any judgement save its own:

EMULATION, whose keen eye
Forward still and forward strains,
Nothing ever deeming high
While a higher hope remains:
SHAME ingenuous, native, free,
Source of conscious dignity:
ZEAL impartial to pursue
Right, and just, and good, and true.

These and ev'ry kindred grace
More and more perfection gain;
While ATTENTION toils to trace
Grave record or lofty strain;
Learning how, in Virtue's pride,
Sages liv'd or heroes died;
Marking how in virtue's cause
Genius gave and won applause.

Thus with EARLY CULTURE blest,
Thus to early rule inur'd,
Infancy's expanding breast
Glow with sense and pow'rs matur'd,
Whence, if future merit raise
Private love or public praise,
Thine is all the work—be thine
The glory—CLASSIC DISCIPLINE.

§ 147. Autumn. THOMSON.

THE ARGUMENT.

The subject proposed.—Addressed to Mr. Onslow.—A prospect of the fields ready for harvest.—Reflections in praise of industry raised by that view.—Reaping.—A tale relative to it.—An harvest storm.—Shooting and hunting, their barbarity.—A ludicrous account of fox-hunting.—A view of an orchard.—Wall-fruit.—A vineyard.—A description of fogs, frequent in the latter part of Autumn: whence a digression, inquiring into the reason of fountains and rivers.—Birds of season considered, that now shift their habitation.—The prodigious number of them that cover the northern and western isles of Scotland.—Hence a view of the country.—A prospect of the discolored, fading woods.—After a gentle dusty day, moon-light.—Autumnal meteors.—Morning: to which succeeds a calm, pure, sun-shiny day, such as usually shuts up the season.—The harvest being gathered in, the country dissolved in joy.—The whole concludes with a panegyric on a philosophical country life.

† Audit currus habenas. VIRGIL.

CROWN'D with the sickle and the wheaten sheaf,

While Autumn, nodding o'er the yellow plain,
Comes jovial on; the Doric reed once more,
Well pleas'd I tune. Whate'er the Wintry frost
Nitrous prepar'd: the various blossom'd Spring
Put in white promise forth; and Summer suns
Concocted strong, rush boundless now to view,
Full, perfect all, and swell my glorious theme.

Onslow! the Muse, ambitious of thy name,
To grace, inspire, and dignify her song,
Would from the public voice thy gentle ear
A while engage. Thy noble cares she knows,
The patriot virtues that distend thy thought,
Spread on thy front, and in thy bosom glow;
While list'ning senates hang upon thy tongue,
Devolving through the maze of eloquence,
A roll of periods, sweeter than her song,
But she too pants for public virtue, she,
Though weak of power, yet strong in ardent will,

Whene'er her country rushes on her heart,
Assumes a bolder note, and fondly tries
To mix the patriot's with the poet's flame.

When the bright Virgin gives the beauteous days,
And Libra weighs in equal scales the year;
From heaven's high cope the fierce effulgence shook

Of parting Summer, a serener blue,
With golden light enliven'd, wide invests
The happy world. Attemper'd suns arise,
Sweet-beam'd, and shedding oft through lucid clouds

A pleasing calm: while broad and brown, below,
Extensive harvests hang the heavy head:
Rich, silent, deep, they stand: for not a gale
Rolls its light billows o'er the bending plain:
A calm of plenty! till the ruffled air
Falls from its poise, and gives the breeze to blow.
Rent is the fleecy mantle of the sky;
The clouds fly different; and the sudden sun
By fits effulgent gilds the illumin'd field,
And black by fits the shadows sweep along.
A gaily-chequer'd heart-expanding view,
Far as the circling eye can shoot around,
Unbounded tossing in a flood of corn.

These are thy blessings, Industry! rough power!

Whom labor still attends, and sweat and pain;
Yet the kind source of every gentle art,
And all the soft civility of life;
Raiser of human kind! by Nature cast,
Naked, and helpless, out amid the woods
And wilds, to rude inclement elements!
With various seeds of art deep in the mind
Implanted, and profusely pour'd around
Materials infinite; but idle all.

Still unexerted in the unconscious breast,
Slept the lethargic powers; corruption still,
Voracious, swallow'd what the liberal hand
Of bounty scatter'd o'er the savage year;
And still the sad barbarian, roving, mix'd
With beasts of prey; or for his acorn-meal

Fought the fierce tusky boar; a shivering wretch!

Aghast and comfortless, when the bleak north,
With Winter charg'd, let the mix'd tempest fly,
Hail, rain, and snow, and bitter-breathing frost:
Then to the shelter of the hut he fled;
And the wild season, sordid, pin'd away:
For home he had not; home is the resort
Of love, of joy, of peace and plenty, where,
Supporting and supported, polish'd friends,
And dear relations mingle into bliss;
But this the rugged savage never felt,
E'en desolate in crowds; and thus his days
Roll'd heavy, dark, and unenjoy'd along:
A waste of time! till Industry approach'd,
And rous'd him from his miserable sloth;
His faculties unfolded; pointed out,
Where lavish Nature the directing hand
Of Art demanded; show'd him how to raise
His feeble force by the mechanic powers,
To dig the mineral from the vaulted earth;
On what to turn the piercing rage of fire,
On what the torrent, and the gather'd blast;
Gave the tall ancient forest to his axe;
Taught him to chip the wood, and hew the stone,

Till by degrees the finish'd fabric rose;
Tore from his limbs the blood-polluted fur,
And wrapt them in the woolly-vestment warm,
Or bright in glossy silk, and flowing lawn;
With wholesome viands fill'd his table, pour'd
The generous glass around, inspir'd to wake
The life-refining soul of decent wit:
Nor stopp'd at barren bare necessity;
But still advancing bolder, led him on
To pomp, to pleasure, elegance, and grace;
And, breathing high ambition through his soul,
Set science, wisdom, glory in his view,
And bade him be the lord of all below.

Then, gathering men their natural power combin'd,
And form'd a Public; to the general good
Submitting, aiming, and conducting all.
For this the Patriot Council met, the full,
The free, and fairly-represented whole;
For this they plann'd the holy guardian laws,
Distinguish'd orders, animated arts,
And with joint force, Oppression chaining, set Imperial justice at the helm; yet still
To them accountable: nor slavish dream'd
That toiling millions must resign their weal,
And all the honey of their search, to such
As for themselves alone themselves have rais'd.

Hence every form of cultivated life
In order set, protected, and inspir'd,
Into perfection wrought. Uniting all,
Society grew numerous, high, polite,
And happy. Nurse of art! the city rear'd
In beauteous pride her tower-encircled head:
And, stretching street on street, by thousands drew,

From twining woody haunts, or the tough yew,
To bows strong-straining, her aspiring sons.

Then Commerce brought into the public walk

The busy merchant; the big warehouse built;
Rais'd the strong crane; choak'd up the loaded street

With foreign plenty; and thy stream, O Thames!
Large, gentle, deep, majestic, king of floods!
Chose for his grand resort. On either hand,
Like a long wintry forest, groves of masts
Shot up their spires; the bellying sheet between Possess'd the breezy void: the sooty hulk
Steer'd sluggish on: the splendid barge along
Row'd, regular, to harmony; around,
The boat light-skimming, stretch'd its oary
wings;

While deep the various voice of fervent toil
From bank to bank increas'd; whence ribb'd with oak,

To bear the British Thunder, black, and bold,
The roaring vessel rush'd into the main.

Then too the pillar'd dome, magnific heav'd
Its ample roof, and luxury within [smooth,
Pour'd out the glittering stores: the canvass
With glowing life protuberant, to the view
Embodied rose; the statue seem'd to breathe,
And soften into flesh, beneath the touch
Of forming art, imagination-flush'd.

All is the gift of Industry: whate'er
Exalts, embellishes, and renders life
Delightful. Pensive Winter cheer'd by him
Sits at the social fire, and happy hears
Th' excluded tempest idly rave along.
His harden'd fingers deck the gaudy Spring,
Without him Summer were an arid waste,
Nor to th' Autumnal months could thus transmit

Those full, mature, immeasurable stores,
That waving round, recal my wandering song.

Soon as the morning trembles o'er the sky,
And, unperceiv'd unfolds the spreading day;
Before the ripen'd field the reapers stand,
In fair array; each by the lass he loves,
To bear the rougher part, and mitigate
By nameless gentle offices her toil.

At once they stoop and swell the lusty sheaves;
While through their cheerful band the rural
The rural scandal, and the rural jest, [talk,
Fly harmless, to deceive the tedious time,
And steal unfelt the sultry hours away.

Behind the master walks, builds up the shocks;
And, conscious, glancing oft' on every side
His sated eye, feels his heart heave with joy.
The gleaners spread around, and here and there,
Spike after spike, their scanty harvest, pick.
Be not too narrow, husbandmen! but fling
From the full sheaf, with charitable stealth,
The liberal handful. Think, oh grateful think!
How good the God of Harvest is to you:

Who pours abundance o'er your flowing fields;
While these unhappy partners of your kind
Wide-hover round you, like the fowls of heaven,
And ask their humble dole. The various turns
Of fortune ponder: that your sons may want
What now, with hard reluctance, faint, ye give.

The lovely young Lavinia once had friends;
And fortune smil'd, deceitful, on her birth.

For, in her helpless years depriv'd of all;
Of every stay, save Innocence and Heav'n,
She, with her widow'd mother, feeble, old,
And poor, liv'd in a cottage far retir'd
Among the windings of a woody vale:
By solitude and deep surrounding shades,
But more by bashful modesty conceal'd.
Together thus they shunn'd the cruel scorn
Which virtue, sunk to poverty, would meet
From giddy passion and low-minded pride:
Almost on Nature's common bounty fed:
Like the gay birds that sung them to repose,
Content, and careless of to-morrow's fare.
Her form was fresher than the morning-rose,
When the dew wets its leaves; unstain'd and pure

As is the lily, or the mountain-snow.
The modest virtues mingled in her eyes,
Still on the ground dejected, darting all
Their humid beams into the blooming flowers:
Or when the mournful tale her mother told,
Of what her faithless fortune promis'd once,
Thrill'd in her thought, they, like the dewy star
Of evening, shone in tears. A native grace
Sat fair proportion'd on her polish'd limbs,
Veil'd in a simple robe, their best attire,
Beyond the pomp of dress; for loveliness
Needs not the foreign aid of ornament,
But is, when unadorn'd, adorned the most.
Thoughtless of beauty, she was beauty's self,
Recluse amid the close-embowering woods.
As in the hollow breast of Apennine,
Beneath the shelter of encircling hills,
A myrtle rises far from human eye,
And breathes its balmy fragrance o'er the wild;
So flourish'd blooming, and unseen by all,
The sweet Lavinia, till, at length, compell'd
By strong necessity's supreme command,
With smiling patience in her looks, she went
To glean Palemon's field. The pride of swains
Palemon was, the generous, and the rich;
Who led the rural life in all its joy

And elegance, such as Arcadian song
Transmits from ancient uncorrupted times;
When tyrant custom had not shackled man,
But free to follow nature was the mode.
He then, his fancy with autumnal scenes
Amusing, chanc'd beside his reaper train
To walk, when poor Lavinia drew his eye:
Unconscious of her power, and turning quick
With unaffected blushes from his gaze;
He saw her charming, but he saw not half
The charms her downcast modesty conceal'd.
That very moment love and chaste desire
Sprung in his bosom, to himself unknown;
For still the world prevail'd, and its dread laugh,
(Which scarce the firm philosopher can scorn,)
Should his heart own a gleaner in the field,
And thus in secret to his soul he sigh'd:

"What pity! that so delicate a form,
"By beauty kindled, where enlivening sense
"And more than vulgar goodness seem to
"dwell,

"Should be devoted to the rude embrace

" Of some indecent clown! She looks, me-
     " thinks,
 " Of old Acasto's line : and to my mind
 " Recals that patron of my happy life,
 " From whom my liberal fortune took its rise ;
 " Now to the dust gone down ; his houses, lands,
 " And once fair-spreading family, dissolv'd.
 " 'Tis said, that in some lone obscure retreat,
 " Urg'd by remembrance sad, and decent pride,
 " Far from those scenes which knew their bet" ter days,
 " His aged widow and his daughter live,
 " Whom yet my fruitless search could never " find. [were !"
 " Romantic wish! would this the daughter
     When, strict inquiring, from herself he found
 She was the same, the daughter of his friend,
 Of bountiful Acasto ; who can speak
 The mingled passions that surpris'd his heart,
 And through his nerves in shivering transport ran ! [bold ;
 Then blaz'd his smother'd flame, avow'd, and
 And as he view'd her ardent, o'er and o'er,
 Love, gratitude, and pity wept at once.
 Confus'd, and frighten'd at his sudden tears,
 Her rising beauties flush'd a higher bloom,
 As thus Palemon, passionate and just,
 Pour'd out the pious rapture of his soul :
 " And art thou then Acasto's dear remains ?
 " She, whom my restless gratitude has sought
 " So long in vain ? O heavens ! the very same,
 " The soften'd image of my noble friend :
 " Alive his every look, his every feature,
 " More elegantly touch'd. Sweeter than
     " Spring !
 " Thou sole surviving blossom from the root
 " That nourish'd up my fortune ! Say, ah
     " where,
 " In what sequester'd desert, hast thou drawn
 " The kindest aspect of delighted Heaven ?
 " Into such beauty spread, and blown so fair ;
 " Though poverty's cold wind, and crushing
     rain,
 " Beat keen, and heavy on thy tender years ?
 " O let me now, into a richer soil, [showers
 " Transplant thee safe ; where vernal suns and
 " Diffuse their warmest, largest influence :
 " And of my garden be the pride, and joy !
 " Ill it befits thee, oh it ill befits
 " Acasto's daughter, his whose open stores,
 " Though vast, were little to his ampler heart,
 " The father of a country, thus to pick
 " The very refuse of those harvest-fields,
 " Which from his bounteous friendship I enjoy.
 " Then throw that shameful pittance from thy
     " hand,
 " But ill applied to such a rugged task !
 " The fields, the master, all, my Fair ! are
     " thine !
 " If to the various blessings which thy house
 " Has on me lavish'd, thou wilt add that bliss,
 " That dearest bliss, the power of blessing
     " thee !" [eye
 Here ceas'd the youth : yet still his speaking

Express'd the sacred triumph of his soul,
 With conscious virtue, gratitude, and love,
 Above the vulgar joy divinely rais'd.
 Nor waited he reply. Won by the charm
 Of goodness irresistible, and all
 In sweet disorder lost, she blush'd consent.
 The news immediate to her mother brought,
 While, pierc'd with anxious thought, she pin'd
     away,
 The lonely moments for Lavinia's fate :
 Amaz'd, and scarce believing what she heard,
 Joy seiz'd her wither'd veins, and one bright gleam
 Of setting life shone on her evening hours :
 Not less enraptur'd than the happy pair !
 Who flourish'd long in tender bliss, and rear'd
 A numerous offspring, lovely like themselves,
 And good, the grace of all the country round.
 Defeating oft the labors of the year,
 The sultry south collects a potent blast.
 At first the groves are scarcely seen to stir
 Their trembling tops, and a still murmur runs
 Along the soft inclining fields of corn.
 But as the ærial tempest fuller swells,
 And in one mighty stream, invisible,
 Immense, the whole excited atmosphere
 Impetuous rushes o'er the sounding world ;
 Strain'd to the root, the stooping forest pours
 A rustling shower of yet untimely leaves.
 High-beat, the circling mountains eddy in,
 From the bare wild, the dissipated storm,
 And send it in a torrent down the vale.
 Expos'd, and naked, to its utmost rage,
 Through all the sea of harvest rolling round,
 The billowy plain floats wide ; nor can evade,
 Though pliant to the blast, its seizing force :
 Or whirl'd in air, or into vacant chaff Shook waste. And sometimes too a burst of rain,
 Swept from the black horizon, broad, descends
 In one continuous flood. Still over head
 The mingling tempest weaves its gloom, and still
 The deluge deepens ; till the fields around
 Lie sunk, and flatted, in the sordid wave.
 Sudden the ditches swell, the meadows swim,
 Red, from the hills, innumerable streams
 Tumultuous roar ; and high above its banks
 The river lift ; before whose rushing tide,
 Herds, flocks, and harvests, cottages, and swains,
 Roll mingled down ; all that the winds had spar'd
 In one wild moment ruin'd ; the big hopes,
 And well-earn'd treasures of the painful year.
 Fled to some eminence, the husbandman
 Helpless beholds the miserable wreck
 Driving along ; his drowning ox at once
 Descending, with his labors scatter'd round,
 He sees ; and instant o'er his shiv'ring thought
 Comes winter unprovided, and a train
 Of claimant children dear. Ye masters, then,
 Be mindful of the rough laborious hand,
 That sinks you soft in elegance and ease ;
 Be mindful of those limbs in russet clad,

Whose toil to yours is warmth, and graceful
pride.

And, oh! be mindful of that sparing board,
Which covers yours with luxury profuse,
Makes your glass sparkle, and your sense rejoice;
Nor cruelly demand what the deep rains,
And all-involving winds have swept away.

Here the rude clamor of the sportsman's joy,
The gun fast-thundering, and the winded horn,
Would tempt the Muse to sing the rural game:
How, in his mid-career, the spaniel struck,
Stiff, by the tainted gale, with open nose,
Outstretch'd, and finely sensible, draws full,
Fearful, and cautious, on the latent prey;
As in the sun the circling covey bask
Their varied plumes, and watchful every way,
Through the rough stubble turn the secret eye.
Caught in the meshy snare, in vain they beat
Their idle wings, intangled more and more:
Nor on the surges of the boundless air, [gun,
Though borne triumphant, are they safe: the Glanc'd just, and sudden, from the fowler's eye
Overtakes their sounding pinions; and again,
Immediate, brings them from the towering wing, [pers'd,
Dead to the ground: or drives them wide-dis-Wounded; and wheeling various, down the wind.

These are not subjects for the peaceful Muse,
Nor will she stain with such her spotless song:
Then most delighted, when she social sees
The whole mix'd animal creation round
Alive, and happy. 'Tis not joy to her,
This falsely-cheerful barbarous game of death;
This rage of pleasure, which the restless youth
Awakes, impatient, with the gleaming morn;
When beasts of prey retire, that all night long,
Urg'd by necessity, had rang'd the dark,
As if their conscious ravage shunn'd the light,
Asham'd. Not so the steady tyrant man,
Who with the thoughtless insolence of power
Inflam'd, beyond the most infuriate wrath
Of the worst monster that e'er roam'd the waste,
For sport alone pursues the cruel chace,
Amid the beamings of the gentle day.
Upbraid, ye ravening tribes, our wanton rage,
For hunger kindles you, and lawless want;
But lavish fed, in Nature's bounty roll'd,
To joy at anguish, and delight in blood,
Is what your horrid bosoms never knew.

Poor is the triumph o'er the timid hare!
Scar'd from the corn, and now to some lone seat
Retir'd, the rushy fen; the ragged furze,
Stretch'd o'er the stony heath; the stubble
chapt;

The thistly lawn; the thick-entangled broom;
Of the same friendly hue, the wither'd fern;
The fallow ground laid open to the sun,
Concoctive; and the nodding sandy bank,
Hung o'er the mazes of the mountain brook.
Vain is her best precaution; though she sits
Conceal'd with folded ears, unsleeping eyes,
By Nature rais'd to take the horizon in;
And head couch'd close betwixt her hairy feet,

In act to spring away. The scented dew
Betrays her early labyrinth; and deep,
In scatter'd sullen op'nings, far behind,
With every breeze she hears the coming storm.
But nearer and more frequent, as it loads
The sighing gale, she springs amaz'd, and all
The savage soul of game is up at once:
The pack full-opening, various; the shrill horn
Resounding from the hills; the neighing steed,
Wild for the chace; and the loud hunter's shout:

O'er a weak, harmless, flying creature, all
Mix'd in mad tumult, and discordant joy.

The stag, too, singled from the herd, where long

He rang'd the branching monarch of the shades,
Before the tempest drives. At first, in speed
He, sprightly, puts his faith; and, rous'd by fear,
Gives all his swift ærial soul to flight;
Against the breeze he darts, that way the more
To leave the lessening murderous cry behind:
Deception short! though fleetier than the winds Blown o'er the keen-air'd mountain by the north, [glades,

He bursts the thickets, glances through the
And plunges deep into the wildest wood;
If slow, yet sure, adhesive to the track
Hot-steaming up behind him come again
Th' inhuman rout, and from the shady depth
Expel him, circling through his every shift.
He sweeps the forest oft, and sobbing sees
The glades mild-opening to the golden day;
Where, in kind contest, with his butting friends
He wont to struggle, or his loves enjoy.
Oft in the full-descending flood he tries
To lose the scent, and lave his burning sides:
Oft seeks the herd; the watchful herd alarm'd,
With selfish care avoid a brother's woe.
What shall he do? His once so vivid nerves,
So full of buoyant spirit, now no more
Inspire the course; but fainting breathless toil,
Sick, seizes on his heart: he stands at bay;
And puts his last weak refuge in despair.
The big round tears run down his dappled face;
He groans in anguish; while the growling pack,
Blood-happy, hang at his fair jutting chest,
And mark his beauteous chequer'd sides with gore.

Of this enough. But if the sylvan youth,
Whose fervent blood boils into violence,
Must have the chace; behold, despising flight,
The rous'd-up lion, resolute, and slow,
Advancing full on the protended spear,
And coward-band, that circling wheel aloof.
Slunk from the cavern, and the troubled wood,
See the grim wolf, on him his shaggy foe
Vindictive fix, and let the ruffian die:
Or, growling horrid, as the brindled boar
Grins fell destruction, to the monster's heart
Let the dart lighten from the nervous arm.

These Britain knows not; give, ye Britons,
Your sportive fury, pitiless to pour [then,
Loose on the nightly robber of the fold:
Him, from his craggy winding haunts unearth'd,

Let all the thunders of the chace pursue.
Throw the broad ditch behind you; o'er the hedge

High bound, resistless; nor the deep morass
Refuse, but through the shaking wilderness
Pick your nice way; into the perilous flood
Bear fearless, of the raging instinct full:
And as you ride the torrent, to the banks,
Your triumph sounds sonorous, running round,
From rock to rock, in circling echoes toss'd;
Then scale the mountains to their woody tops;
Rush down the dangerous steep; and o'er the lawn,

In fancy swallowing up the space between,
Pour all your speed into the rapid game,
For happy he! who tops the wheeling chace;
Has every maze evolv'd, and every guile
Disclos'd; who knows the merits of the pack;
Who saw the villain seiz'd, and dying hard,
Without complaint, though by an hundred
mouths

Relentless torn: O glorious he, beyond
His daring peers! when the retreating horn
Calls them to ghostly halls of grey renown,
With woodland honors grac'd, the fox's fur,
Depending decent from the roof; and spread
Round the drear walls, with antic figures fierce,
The stag's large front: he then is loudest heard,
When the night staggers with severer toils,
With feats Thessalian Centaurs never knew,
And their repeated wonders shake the dome.

But first the fuel'd chimney blazes wide;
The tankards foam; and the strong table groans
Beneath the smoaking sirloin, stretch'd immense
From side to side; in which, with desperate knife,

They deep incision make, and talk the while
Of England's glory, ne'er to be defac'd,
While hence they borrow vigor, or amain
Into the pasty plung'd, at intervals,
If stomach keen can intervals allow,
Relating all the glories of the chace,
Then sated Hunger bids his brother Thirst
Produce the mighty bowl; the mighty bowl,
Swell'd high with fiery juice, steams liberal
A potent gale, delicious as the breath [round
Of Maia to the love-sick shepherdess,
On violets diffus'd, while soft she hears
Her panting shepherd stealing to her arms.
Nor wanting is the brown October, drawn,
Mature and perfect, from his dark retreat
Of thirty years; and now his honest front
Flames in the light refulgent, not afraid
Even with the vineyard's best produce to vie.
To cheat the thirsty moments, whist a while
Walks his dull round beneath a cloud of smoke,
Wreath'd, fragrant, from the pipe; or the quick dice

In thunder leaping from the box, awake
The sounding gammon: while romp-loving miss
Is hauled about, in gallantry robust.
At last these puling idlenesses laid
Aside, frequent and full, the dry divan
Close in firm circle; and set, ardent, in

For serious drinking. Nor evasion sly,
Nor sober shift is to the puking wretch
Indulg'd apart; but earnest, brimming bowls
Lave every soul, the table floating round,
And pavement, faithless to the fuddled foot.
Thus as they swim in mutual swill, the talk,
Vociferous at once from twenty tongues,
Reels fast from theme to theme; from horses,
hounds,

To church or mistress, politics or ghost,
In endless mazes, intricate, perplex'd.
Meantime, with sudden interruption, loud,
Th' impatient catch bursts from the joyous heart;
That moment touch'd is every kindred soul;
And, opening in a full-mouth'd cry of joy,
The laugh, the slap, the jocund curse go round;
While, from their slumbers shook, the kennel'd
Mix in the music of the day again. th [hounds
As when the tempest, that has vex'd the deep
The dark night long, with fainter murmurs falls:
So gradual sinks their mirth. Their feeble
Unable to take up the cumbrous word, [tongues,
Lie quite dissolv'd. Before their maudlin eyes
Seen dim, and blue, the double tapers dance,
Like the sun wading through the misty sky.
Then, sliding soft, they drop. Confus'd above,
Glasses and bottles, pipes and gazetteers,
As if the table even itself was drunk,
Lie a wet broken scene; and wide, below,
Is heap'd the social slaughter: where astride
The lubber Power in filthy triumph sits.
Slumbrous, inclining still from side to side,
And steeps them drench'd in potent sleep till morn.

Perhaps some doctor, of tremendous paunch,
Awful and deep, a black abyss of drink,
Outlives them all; and from his bury'd flock
Retiring, full of rumination sad,
Laments the weakness of these latter times.

But if the rougher sex by this fierce sport
Is hurried wild, let not such horrid joy
E'er stain the bosom of the British Fair.
Far be the spirit of the chace from them!
Uncomely courage, unbecoming skill;
To spring the fence, to rein the prancing steed;
The cap, the whip, the masculine attire;
In which they roughen to the sense, and all
The winning softness of their sex is lost.
In them 'tis graceful to dissolve at woe;
With every motion, every word to wave
Quick o'er the kindling cheek the ready blush;
And from the smallest violence to shrink
Unequal, then the loveliest in their fears;
And by this silent adulation, soft,
To their protection more engaging Man.
O may their eyes no miserable sight,
Save weeping lovers, see! a nobler game, [fiel,
Through Love's enchanting wiles pursu'd, yet
In chace ambiguous. May their tender limbs
Float in the loose simplicity of dress!
And, fashion'd all to harmony, alone
Know they to seize the captivated soul,
In rapture warbled from love-breathing lips;
To teach the lute to languish; with smooth step,

Disclosing motion in its every charm;
 To swim along, and swell the mazy dance;
 To train the foliage o'er the snowy lawn;
 To guide the pencil, turn the tuneful page;
 To lend new flavor to the fruitful year,
 And heighten Nature's dainties: in their race
 To rear their graces into second life;
 To give Society its highest taste;
 Well-order'd home Man's best delight to make;
 And by submissive wisdom, modest skill,
 With every gentle care-eluding art,
 To raise the virtues, animate the bliss,
 And sweeten all the toils of human life:
 This be the female dignity and praise.

Ye swains now hasten to the hazel-bank:
 Where down yon dale, the wildly-winding brook
 Falls hoarse from steep to steep. In close array,
 Fit for the thickets and the tangling shrub,
 Ye virgins come. For you their latest song
 The woodlands raise; the clustering nuts for you
 The lover finds amid the secret shade;
 And, where they burnish on the top-most bough,
 With active vigor crushes down the tree;
 Or shakes them ripe from the resigning husk,
 A glossy shower, and of an ardent brown,
 As are the ringlets of Melinda's hair:
Melinda! form'd with every grace complete:
 Yet these neglecting, above beauty wise,
 And far transcending such a vulgar praise.

Hence from the busy joy-resounding fields,
 In cheerful error, let us tread the maze
 Of Autumn, unconfin'd; and taste, reviv'd,
 The breath of orchard big with bending fruit.
 Obedient to the breeze and beating ray,
 From the deep-loaded bough a mellow shower
 Incessant melts away. The juicy pear
 Lies, in a soft profusion, scatter'd round.
 A various sweetness swells the gentle race,
 By Nature's all-refining hand prepar'd,
 Of temper'd sun, and water, earth, and air,
 In ever-changing composition mix'd.
 Such, falling frequent from the chiller night,
 The fragrant stores, the wide-projected heaps
 Of apples, which the lusty-handed year,
 Innumerable, o'er the blushing orchard shakes.
 A various spirit, fresh, delicious, keen,
 Dwells in their gelid pores; and, active, points
 The piercing cyder for the thirsty tongue:
 Thy native theme, and boon inspirer too,
Philips, Pomona's bard, the second thou
 Who nobly durst, in rhyme-unfetter'd verse,
 With British freedom sing the British song:
 How, from Silurian vats, high-sparkling wines
 Foam in transparent floods: some strong, to
 The wintry revels of the laboring hind; [cheer
 And tasteful some, to cool the summer hours.

In this glad season, while his sweetest beams
 The sun sheds equal o'er the meeken'd day;
 Oh lose me in the green delightful walks
 Of Dodington, thy seat, serene and plain;
 Where simple Nature reigns; and every view,
 Diffusive spreads the pure Dorsetian downs,
 In boundless prospect; yonder shagg'd with
 wood,

Here rich with harvest, and there white with flocks!

Meantime the grandeur of thy lofty dome,
 Far splendid, seizes on the ravish'd eye.
 New beauties rise with each revolving day;
 New columns swell; and still the fresh Spring finds

New plants to quicken, and new groves to green.
 Full of thy genius all! the Muses' seat:
 Where in the secret bower, and winding walk,
 For virtuous Young and thee they twine the bay.
 Here wand'ring oft, fir'd with the restless thirst
 Of thy applause, I solitary court
 Th' inspiring breeze; and meditate the book
 Of Nature ever open; aiming thence,
 Warm from the heart, to learn the moral song.
 Here, as I steal along the sunny wall,
 Where Autumn basks with fruit-empurpled deep,

[thought:
 My pleasing theme continual prompts my
 Presents the downy peach; the shining plum;
 The ruddy, fragrant nectarine; and dark,
 Beneath his ample leaf, the luscious fig.
 The vine too here her curling tendrils shoots,
 Hangs out her clusters, glowing to the south,
 And scarcely wishes for a warmer sky.

Turn we a moment Fancy's rapid flight
 To vigorous soils, and climes of fair extent;
 Where, by the potent sun elated high,
 The vineyard swells refulgent on the day;
 Spreads o'er the vale, or up the mountain climbs
 Profuse, and drinks amid the sunny rocks;
 From cliff to cliff, increas'd, the heighten'd blaze.

Low bend the weighty boughs, the clusters clear,
 Half through the foliage seen, or ardent flame,
 Or shine transparent; while perfection breathes
 White o'er the turgent film the living dew.
 As thus they brighten with exalted juice,
 Touch'd into flavor by the mingling ray;
 The rural youth and virgins o'er the field,
 Each fond for each to cull th' autumnal prime,
 Exulting rove, and speak the vintage nigh.
 Then comes the crushing swain; the country
 floats,

And foams unbounded with the mashy flood;
 That by degrees fermented, and refin'd,
 Round the rais'd nations pours the cup of joy;
 The claret smooth, red as the lip we press
 In sparkling fancy, while we drain the bowl;
 The mellow-tasted Burgundy, and quick,
 As is the wit it gives, the gay Champagne.

Now by the cool declining year condens'd,
 Descend the copious exhalations, check'd
 As up the middle sky unseen they stole,
 And roll the doubling fogs around the hill.
 No more the mountain, horrid, vast, sublime,
 Who pours a sweep of rivers from his sides,
 And high between contending kingdoms rears
 The rocky long division, fills the view
 With great variety; but in a night
 Of gathering vapor, from the baffled sense
 Sinks dark and dreary. Thence expanding far,
 The huge dusk, gradual, swallows up the plain:

Vanish the woods; the dim-seen river seems
Sullen, and slow, to roll the misty wave.
Even in the height of noon opprest, the sun
Sheds weak, and blunt his wide-refracted ray;
Whence glaring oft with many a broaden'd orb,
He frights the nations. Indistinct on earth,
Seen through the turbid air, beyond the life
Objects appear; and wilder'd, o'er the waste
The shepherd stalks gigantic. Till at last Wreath'd dun around, in deeper circles still Successive closing, sits the general fog
Unbounded o'er the world; and, mingling thick,
A formless grey confusion covers all.
As when of old (so sung the Hebrew Bard)
Light, uncollected, through the chaos urg'd
Its infant way; nor order yet had drawn
His lovely train from out the dubious gloom.

These roving mists, that constant now begin
To smoke along the hilly country, these,
With weighty rains, and melted Alpine snows
The mountain cisterns fill, those ample stores
Of water scoop'd among the hollow rocks;
Whence gush the streams, the ceaseless fountains play,
And their unfailing wealth the rivers draw.
Some sages say, that where the numerous wave
For ever lashes the resounding shore,
Drill'd through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise;
Amid whose angles infinitely strain'd,
They joyful leave their jaggy salts behind,
And clear and sweeten, as they soak along.
Nor stops the restless fluid, mounting still,
Though oft amidst th' irriguous vale it springs;
But to the mountain courted by the sand,
That leads it darkling on in faithful maze,
Far from the parent-main, it boils again
Fresh into day; and all the glittering hill
Is bright with sporting rills. But hence this vain
Amusive dream! why should the waters love
To take so far a journey to the hills,
When the sweet valleys offer to their toil
Inviting quiet, and a nearer bed?
Or if, by blind ambition led astray,
They must aspire; why should they sudden stop
Among the broken mountain's rushy dells,
And, ere they gain its highest peak, desert
Th' attractive sand that charm'd their course so long?

Besides, the hard agglomerating salts,
The spoil of ages would impervious choke
Their secret channels; or, by slow degrees,
High as the hills protrude the swelling vales:
Old ocean too suck'd through the porous globe,
Had long ere now forsook his horrid bed,
And brought Deucalion's wat'ry times again.

Say then, where lurk the vast eternal springs,
That like Creating Nature, lie conceal'd
From mortal eye, yet with their lavish stores
Refresh the globe and all its joyous tribes?

O thou pervading Genius, given to man,
To trace the secrets of the dark abyss,
O lay the mountains bare! and wide display
Their hidden structure to th' astonish'd view!
Strip from the branching Alps their piny load;
The huge incumbrance of horrific woods
From Asian Taurus, from Imaus stretch'd
Athwart the roving Tartar's sullen bounds!
Give opening Hemus to my searching eye,
And high Olympus pouring many a stream!
O from the sounding summits of the north,
The Dofrine hills, through Scandinavia roll'd
To farthest Lapland and the frozen main!
From lofty Caucasus, far seen by those
Who in the Caspian and black Euxine toil;
From cold Riphean rocks, which the wild Russ
Believes the stony girdle of the world*,
And all the dreadful mountains wrapt in storm,
Whence wide Siberia draws her lonely floods;
O sweep th' eternal snows! Hung o'er the deep,
That ever works beneath his sounding base,
Bid Atlas, propping heaven, as Poets feign,
His subterranean wonders spend! unveil
The miny caverns, blazing on the day
Of Abyssinia's cloud-compelling cliffs,
And of the bending Mountains of the Moon†!
O'ertopping all these giant sons of earth.
Let the dire Andes, from the radiant line
Stretch'd to the stormy seas that thunder round
The southern pole, their hideous deeps unfold!
Amazing scene! Behold! the glooms disclose!
I see the rivers in their infant beds!
Deep, deep, I hear them laboring to get free!
I see the leaning strata, artful rang'd;
The gaping fissures to receive the rains,
The melting snows, and ever-dripping fogs.
Strow'd bibulous above, I see the sands,
The pebbly gravel next, the layers then
Of mingled moulds, of more retentive earths,
The gutter'd rocks, and mazy-running clefts;
That, while the stealing moisture they transmit,
Retard its motion, and forbid its waste.
Beneath the incessant weeping of these drains,
I see the rocky siphons stretch'd immense,
The mighty reservoirs of harden'd chalk,
Or stiff-compacted clay; capacious form'd.
O'erflowing thence the congregated stores,
The crystal treasures of the liquid world,
Through the stirr'd sands a bubbling passage
burst;
And welling out, around the middle steep,
Or from the bottom of the bosom'd hills,
In pure effusion flow. United thus,
Th' exhaling sun, the vapor-burden'd air,
The gelid mountains, that to rain condens'd,
These vapors in continual current draw,
And send them o'er the fair-divided earth,
In bounteous rivers to the deep again,
A social commerce hold, and firm support
The full-adjusted harmony of things.

* The Muscovites call the Riphean mountains Weliki Camenypops, that is, the great stony girdle: because they suppose them to encompass the whole earth.

† A range of mountains in Africa, that surround almost all Monomopata.

When Autumn scatters his departing gleams,
Warn'd of approaching Winter, gather'd, play
The swallow-people; and toss'd wide around,
O'er the calm sky, in convulsion swift,
The feather'd eddy floats; rejoicing once,
Ere to their wintry slumbers they retire;
In clusters clung, beneath the mould'ring bank,
And where, unpierc'd by frost, the cavern sweats,
Or rather into warmer climes convey'd,
With other kindred birds of season, there
They twitter cheerful, till the vernal months
Invite them welcome back; for thronging, now
Innumerable wings are in commotion all.

Where the Rhine loses its majestic force
In Belgian plains, won from the raging deep,
By diligence amazing, and the strong
Unconquerable hand of Liberty,
The stork assembly meets; for many a day,
Consulting deep, and various, ere they take
Their arduous voyage through the liquid sky.
And now their route design'd, their leaders chose,
Their tribes adjusted, clean'd their vigorous
wings;

And many a circle, many a short essay,
Wheel'd round, and round in congregation full,
The figur'd flight ascends; and, riding high
The aerial billows, mixes with the clouds.

Or where the Northern ocean, in vast whirls,
Boils round the naked melancholy isles
Of farthest Thule, and the Atlantic surge
Pours in among the stormy Hebrides;
Who can recount what transmigrations there
Are annual made? what nations come and go?
And how the living clouds on clouds arise?
Infinite wings! till all the plume-dark air,
And rude resounding shore are one wild cry.

Here the plain harmless native his small flock,
And herd diminutive of many hues,
Tends on the little island's verdant swell,
The shepherd's sea-girt reign; or, to the rocks
Dire-clinging, gathers his ovarious food;
Or sweeps the fishy shore; or treasures up
The plumage, rising full, to form the bed
Of luxury. And here a while the Muse,
High-hovering o'er the broad cerulean scene,
Sees Caledonia in romantic view:
Her airy mountains, from the waving main,
Invested with a keen diffusive sky,
Breathing the soul acute; her forests huge,
Incult, robust, and tall, by Nature's hand
Planted of old; her azure lakes between,
Pour'd out extensive, and of wat'ry wealth
Full; winding deep, and green, her fertile vales;

With many a cool translucent brimming flood Wash'd lovely, from the Tweed (pure parent
stream,

Whose pastoral banks first heard my Doric reed,
With sylvan Jed, thy tributary brook)
To where the north-inflated tempest foams
O'er Orca's or Betubium's highest peak:
Nurse of a people in misfortune's school
Train'd up to hardy deeds; soon visited
By Learning, when before the Gothic rage

She took her western flight. A manly race,
Of unsubmitting spirit, wise and brave;
Who still through bleeding ages struggled hard,
(As well unhappy Wallace can attest,
Great patriot hero! ill-requited chief!)
To hold a generous undiminish'd state;
Too much in vain! Hence of unequal bounds
Impatient, and by tempting glory borne
O'er every land, for every land their life
Has flow'd profuse, their piercing genius
plann'd, [toil:
And swell'd the pomp of peace their faithful
As from their own clear north, in radiant
streams,

Bright over Europe bursts the Boreal morn.

Oh is there not some patriot, in whose power
That best, that godlike luxury is plac'd,
Of blessing thousands, thousands yet unborn
Through late posterity? some, large of soul,
To cheer dejected industry; to give
A double harvest to the pining swain,
And teach the lab'ring hand the sweets of toil?
How, by the finest art, the native robe
To weave; how, white as hyperborean snow,
To form the lucid lawn; with venturous oar
How to dash wide the billow; nor look on,
Shamefully passive, while Batavian fleets
Defraud us of the glittering finny swarms,
That heave our friths, and crowd upon our shores;

How all-enlivening trade to rouse, and wing
The prosperous sail, from every growing port,
Uninjur'd, round the sea-incircled globe;
And thus, in soul united as in name,
Bid Britain reign the mistress of the deep?

Yes, there are such. And full on thee,
Argyle,

Her hope, her stay, her darling, and her boast,
From her first patriots and her heroes sprung,
Thy fond imploring country turns her eye;
In thee, with all a mother's triumph, sees
Her every virtue, every grace combin'd,
Her genius, wisdom, her engaging turn,
Her pride of honor, and her courage try'd,
Calm, and intrepid, in the very throat
Of sulphurous war, on Tenier's dreadful field.
Nor less the palm of peace inwreaths thy
brow;

For, powerful as thy sword, from thy rich tongue
Persuasion flows, and wins the high debate;
While mix'd in thee combine the charms of
youth,

The force of manhood, and the depth of age.
Thee, Forbes, too, whom every worth attends,
As truth sincere, as weeping friendship kind,
Thee, truly generous, and in silence great,
Thy country feels through her reviving arts,
Plann'd by thy wisdom, by thy soul inform'd;
And seldom has she known a friend like thee.

But see the fading many-color'd woods,
Shade deepening over shade, the country round
Imbrown: a crowded umbrage, dusk and dun,
Of every hue, from wan-declining green
To sooty dark. These now the lonesome Muse,

Low whispering, lead into their leaf-strown walks,

And give the season in its latest view.

Meantime, light shadowing all, a sober calm
Fleeces unbounded ether; whose least wave
Stands tremulous, uncertain where to turn
The gentle current: while illumin'd wide,
The dewy-skirted clouds imbibe the sun,
And through their lucid veil his soften'd force
Shed o'er the peaceful world. Then is the time
For those whom wisdom and whom Nature charm

To steal themselves from the degenerate crowd,
And soar above this little scene of things;
To tread low-thoughted vice beneath their feet;
To soothe the throbbing passions into peace;
And woo lone Quiet in her silent walks.

Thus solitary, and in pensive guise,
Oft let me wander o'er the russet mead,
And through the sadden'd grove, where scarce
is heard

One dying strain, to cheer the woodman's toil.
Haply some widow'd songster pours his plaint,
Far, in faint warblings, thro' the tawny copse.
While congregated thrushes, linnets, larks,
And each wild throat, whose artless strains so late

Swell'd all the music of the swarming shades,
Robb'd of their tuneful souls, now shivering sit
On the dead tree, a dull despondent flock;
With not a brightness waving o'er their plumes,
And nought save chattering discord in their note.

O let not, aim'd from some inhuman eye,
The gun, the music of the coming year,
Destroy, and harmless, unsuspecting harm,
Lay the weak tribes, a miserable prey,
In mingled murder, fluttering on the ground!

The pale descending year, yet pleasing still,
A gentler mood inspires; for now the leaf
Incessant rustles from the mournful grove;
Oft startling such as studious walk below,
And slowly circles through the waving air.
But should a quicker breeze amid the boughs
Sob, o'er the sky the leafy deluge streams;
Till choak'd, and matted with the dreary shower,
The forest-walks, at every rising gale,
Roll wide the wither'd waste, and whistle bleak.
Fled is the blasted verdure of the fields;
And, shrunk into their beds, the flowery race
Their sunny robes resign. Even what remain'd
Of stronger fruits falls from the naked tree;
And woods, fields, gardens, orchards, all around
The desolated prospect thrills the soul.

He comes! he comes! in every breeze the Power

Of Philosophic Melancholy comes!
His near approach the sudden-starting tear,
The glowing cheek, the mild dejected air,
The soften'd feature, and the beating heart,
Pierc'd deep with many a virtuous pang, declare.
O'er all the soul his sacred influence breathes!

* The seat of the Lord Viscount Cobham.

Inflames imagination; through the breast
Infuses every tenderness; and far
Beyond dim earth exalts the swelling thought.
Ten thousand thousand fleet ideas, such
As never mingled with the vulgar dream,
Crowd fast into the mind's creative eye.
As fast the correspondent passions rise,
As varied, and as high: Devotion rais'd
To rapture, and divine astonishment;
The love of Nature unconfin'd, and, chief,
Of human race; the large ambitious wish,
To make them blest; the sigh for suffering
worth

Lost in obscurity; the noble scorn
Of tyrant-pride; the fearless great resolve;
The wonder which the dying patriot draws,
Inspiring glory through remotest time;
Th' awaken'd throb for virtue, and for fame;
The sympathies of love, and friendship dear;
With all the social offspring of the heart.

Oh bear me then to vast embowering shades,
To twilight groves and visionary vales;
To weeping grottos and prophetic glooms;
Where angel-forms athwart the solemn dusk
Tremendous sweep, or seem to sweep along;
And voices more than human, through the void
Deep-sounding, seize th' enthusiastic ear!

Or is this gloom too much? Then lead, ye powers,

That o'er the garden and the rural seat
Preside, which shining thro' the cheerful land
In countless numbers blest Britannia sees;
O lead me to the wide-extended walks,
The fair majestic paradise of Stowe*!
Not Persian Cyrus on Ionia's shore
E'er saw such sylvan scenes; such various art
By genius fir'd, such ardent genius tam'd
By cool judicious art; that, in the strife,
All-beauteous Nature fears to be out-done:
And there, O Pitt, thy country's early boast,
There let me sit beneath the shelter'd slopes,
Or in that Temple† where, in future times,
Thou well shalt merit a distinguish'd name;
And, with thy converse blest, catch the last
smiles

Of Autumn beaming o'er the yellow woods.
While there with thee th' enchanted round I
The regulated wild, gay Fancy then [walk,
Will tread in thought the groves of Attic land;
Will from thy standard taste refine her own,
Correct her pencil to the purest truth
Of nature, or, the unimpassion'd shades
Forsaking, raise it to the human mind.
Or if hereafter she, with juster hand,
Shall draw the tragic scene, instruct her thou,
To mark the varied movements of the heart;
What every decent character requires,
And ev'ry passion speaks: O through her strain
Breathe thy pathetic eloquence! that moulds
Th' attentive senate, charms, persuades, exalts;
Of honest zeal th' indignant lightning throws,
And shakes corruption on her venal throne.

† The Temple of Virtue in Stowe Gardens.

While thus we talk, and through Elysian vales
 Delighted rove, perhaps a sigh escapes:
 What pity, Cobham, thou thy verdant files
 Of order'd trees shouldst here inglorious range,
 Instead of squadrons flaming o'er the field,
 And long-embattled hosts! when the proud foe,
 The faithless vain disturber of mankind,
 Insulting Gaul, has rous'd the world to war?
 When keen, once more, within their bounds to
 press

Those polish'd robbers, those ambitious slaves;
 The British Youth would hail thy wise command,

Thy temper'd ardor, and thy veteran skill.

The western sun withdraws the shorten'd
 And humid evening, gliding o'er the sky, [day:
 In her chill progress, to the ground condens'd
 The vapors throw. Where creeping waters ooze,
 Where marshes stagnate, and where rivers wind,
 Cluster the rolling fogs, and swim along
 The dusky mantled lawn. Meanwhile the moon
 Full-orb'd, and breaking through the scatter'd clouds,

Shows her broad visage in the crimson'd east,
 Turn'd to the sun direct, her spotted disk,
 Where mountains rise, umbrageous dales descend,

And caverns deep, as optic tube describes,
 A smaller earth, gives us his blaze again,
 Void of its flame, and sheds a softer day.
 Now through the passing cloud she seems to stoop,

Now up the pure cerulean rides sublime.
 Wide the pale deluge floats, and streaming mild
 O'er the sky'd mountain to the shadowy vale,
 While rocks and floods reflect the quivering
 gleam,

The whole air whitens with a boundless tide
 Of silver radiance, trembling round the world.

But when half-blotted from the sky her light,
 Fainting, permits the starry fires to burn
 With keener lustre thro' the depth of heaven:
 Or near extinct her deaden'd orb appears,
 And scarce appears, of sickly beamless white;
 Oft in this season, silent from the north
 A blaze of meteors shoots: ensweeping first
 The lower skies, they all at once converge
 High to the crown of heaven, and all at once
 Relapsing quick, as quickly re-ascend,
 And mix, and thwart, extinguish, and renew,
 All ether coursing in a maze of light.

From look to look, contagious through the crowd,

The panic runs, and into wondrous shapes
 Th' appearance throws: Armies in meet array,
 Throng'd with aerial spears, and steeds of fire:
 Till the long lines of full-extended war
 In bleeding fight commix'd, the sanguine flood
 Rolls a broad slaughter o'er the plains of heaven.
 As thus they scan the visionary scene,
 On all sides swells the superstitious din,
 Incontinent; and busy phrensy talks
 Of blood and battle; cities overturn'd, [sunk,
 And late at night in swallowing earthquake

Or hideous wrapt in fierce ascending flame;
 Of sallow famine, inundation, storm;
 Of pestilence, and every great distress;
 Empires subvers'd, when ruling fate has struck
 Th' unalterable hour: even Nature's self
 Is deem'd to totter on the brink of time.
 Not so the man of philosophic eye,
 And inspect sage; the waving brightness he Curious surveys, inquisitive to know
 The causes, and materials, yet unfix'd,
 Of this appearance beautiful and new.

Now black, and deep, the night begins to fall,
 A shade immense. Sunk in the quenching
 gloom,

Magnificent and vast, are heaven and earth.
 Order confounded lies: all beauty void;
 Distinction lost; and gay variety
 One universal blot: such the fair power
 Of light, to kindle and create the whole.
 Drear is the state of the benighted wretch,
 Who then, bewilder'd, wanders thro' the dark,
 Full of pale fancies, and chimeras huge;
 Nor visited by one directive ray,
 From cottage streaming, or from airy hall.
 Perhaps impatient as he stumbles on,
 Struck from the root of slimy rushes, blue,
 The wild-fire scatters round, or, gather'd trails
 A length of flame deceitful o'er the moss:
 Whither decoy'd by the fantastic blaze,
 Now lost and now renew'd, he sinks absorpt,
 Rider and horse, amid the miry gulf:
 While still, from day to day, his pining wife
 And plaintive children his return await,
 In wild conjecture lost. At other times,
 Sent by the better Genius of the night,
 Innocuous, gleaming on the horse's mane,
 The meteor sits; and shows the narrow path,
 That winding leads thro' pits of death, or else
 Instructs him how to take the dangerous ford.

The lengthen'd night elaps'd, the morning shines

Serene, in all her dewy beauty bright,
 Unfolding fair the last autumnal day.
 And now the mounting sun dispels the fog;
 The rigid hoar-frost melts before his beam;
 And hung on ev'ry spray, on ev'ry blade
 Of grass, the myriad dew-drops twinkle round.

Ah! see where robb'd, and murder'd, in that pit

Lies the still heaving hive? at evening snatch'd,
 Beneath the cloud of guilt-concealing night,
 And fix'd o'er sulphur: while, not dreaming ill,
 The happy people, in their waxen cells,
 Sat tending public cares, and planning schemes
 Of temperance, for Winter poor; rejoiced
 To mark, full-flowing round, their copious stores.

Sudden the dark oppressive steam ascends;
 And, us'd to milder scents, the tender race,
 By thousands, tumble from their honeyed domes
 Convolv'd, and agonising in the dust.
 And was it then for this you roam'd the Spring,
 Intent from flower to flower? for this you toil'd
 Ceaseless the burning Summer-heats away?

For this in Autumn search'd the blooming
waste,
Nor lost one sunny gleam? for this sad fate?
O man! tyrannic lord! how long, how long,
Shall prostrate Nature groan beneath your rage,
Awaiting renovation? When oblig'd,
Must you destroy? Of their ambrosial food
Can you not borrow; and, in just return,
Afford them shelter from the wintry winds;
Or, as the sharp year pinches, with their own
Again regale them on some smiling day?
See where the stony bottom of their town
Looks desolate and wild; with here and there
A helpless number, who the ruin'd state
Survive, lamenting weak, cast out to death.
Thus a proud city, populous and rich,
Full of the works of peace, and high in joy,
At theatre or feast, or sunk in sleep,
(As late, Palermo, was thy fate) is seiz'd
By some dread earthquake, and convulsive hurl'd
Sheer from the black foundation, stench-in-
Into a gulf of blue sulphureous flame. [volv'd,
Hence every harsher sight! for now the day,
O'er heaven and earth diffus'd, grows warm and Infinite splendor! wide investing all. [high;
How still the breeze! save what the filmy threads
Of dew evaporate brushes from the plain.
How clear the cloudless sky! how deeply ting'd
With a peculiar blue! the ethereal arch
How swell'd immense! amid whose azure
thron'd,
The radiant sun how gay! how calm below
The gilded earth! the harvest-treasures all
Now gather'd in, beyond the rage of storms,
Sure to the swain; the circling fence shut up:
And instant Winter's utmost rage defy'd:
While loose to festive joy, the country round
Laughs with the loud sincerity of mirth,
Shook to the wind their cares. The toil-strung
youth
By the quick sense of music taught alone,
Leaps wildly graceful in the lively dance.
Her every charm abroad, the village-toast,
Young, buxom, warm, in native beauty rich,
Darts not unmeaning looks; and, where her
eye
Points an approving smile, with double force,
The cudgel rattles, and the wrestler twines.
Age too shines out: and garrulous, recounts
The feats of youth. Thus they rejoice; nor think
That, with to-morrow's sun, their annual toil
Begins again the never-ceasing round.
Oh knew he but his happiness, of men
The happiest he! who, far from public rage,
Deep in the vale, with a choice few retir'd,
Drinks the pure pleasures of the Rural Life.
What though the dome be wanting, whose proud
gate,
Each morning vomits out the sneaking crowd
Of flatterers false, and in their turn abus'd?
Vile intercourse! What though the glittering
Of every hue reflected light can give, [robe,

Or floating loose, or stiff with mazy gold,
The pride and gaze of fools! oppress him not?
What tho' from utmost land and sea purvey'd,
For him each rarer tributary life
Bleeds not, and his insatiate table heaps
With luxury, and death? What tho' his bowl
Flames not with costly juice; nor sunk in beds,
Oft of gay care, he tosses out the night,
Or melts the thoughtless hours in idle state?
What tho' he knows not those fantastic joys,
That still amuse the wanton, still deceive;
A face of pleasure, but a heart of pain;
Their hollow moments undelighted all?
Sure peace is his: a solid life, estrang'd
To disappointment, and fallacious hope:
Rich in content, in Nature's bounty rich,
In herbs and fruits; whatever greens the Spring,
When heaven descends in showers; or bends
the bough [beams;
When Summer reddens, and when Autumn
Or in the wintry glebe whatever lies
Conceal'd, and fattens with the richest sap:
These are not wanting; nor the milky drove,
Luxuriant, spread o'er all the lowing vale:
Nor bleating mountains, nor the chide of
streams,
And hum of bees, inviting sleep sincere
Into the guiltless breast, beneath the shade,
Or thrown at last amid the fragrant hay;
Nor aught beside of prospect, grove, or song,
Dim grottos, gleaming lakes, and fountains clear.
Here too dwells simple truth; plain innocence;
Unsullied beauty; sound unbroken youth
Patient of labor, with a little pleas'd;
Health ever-blooming; unambitious toil;
Calm contemplation and poetic ease.
Let others brave the flood in quest of gain,
And beat for joyless months the gloomy wave.
Let such as deem it glory to destroy,
Rush into blood, the sack of cities seek;
Unpierc'd, exulting in the widow's wail, [cry.
The virgin's shriek, and th' infant's trembling
Let some, far distant from their native soil,
Urg'd on by want, or harden'd avarice,
Find other lands beneath another sun.
Let this through cities work his eager way,
By legal outrage, and establish'd guile,
The social sense extinct; and that ferment
Mad into tumult the seditious herd,
Or melt them down to slavery. Let these Insnare the wretched in the toils of law,
Fomenting discord, and perplexing right,
An iron race! and those of fairer front,
But equal inhumanity, in courts,
Delusive pomp, and dark cabals, delight;
Wreathe the deep bow, diffuse the lying smile,
And tread the weary labyrinth of state.
While he, from all the stormy passions free
That restless men involve, hears, and but hears,
At distance safe, the human tempest roar, Wrapt close in conscious peace. The fall of
kings,
The rage of nations, and the crush of states,

Move not the Man, who from the world escap'd,
In still retreats, and flowery solitudes,
To Nature's voice attends from month to month,
And day to day, through the revolving year;
Admiring, sees her in her every shape;
Feels all her sweet emotions at his heart;
Takes what she liberal gives, nor thinks of
more.

He, when young Spring protrudes the bursting
Marks the first bud, and sucks the healthful
Into his freshen'd soul; her genial hours [gale
He full enjoys; and not a beauty blows,
And not an opening blossom breathes in vain.
In Summer he, beneath the living shade,
Such as o'er frigid Tempe wont to wave,
Or Hemus cool, reads with the Muse, of these
Perhaps, has in immortal numbers sung;
Or what she dictates writes: and, oft an eye
Shot round, rejoices in the vigorous year.
When Autumn's yellow lustre gilds the world,
And tempts the sickled swain into the field,
Seiz'd by the gen'ral joy, his heart distends
With gentle throes; and thro' the tepid gleams
Deep musing, then he best exerts his song.
Even Winter wild to him is full of bliss;
The mighty tempest, and the hoary waste,
Abrupt, and deep, stretch'd o'er the buried
earth,

Awake to solemn thought. At night the skies,
Disclos'd, and kindled, by refining frost,
Pour ev'ry lustre on th' exalted eye.
A friend, a book, the stealing hours secure,
And mark them down for wisdom. With swift
wing,

O'er land and sea imagination roams;
Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his powers;
Or in his breast heroic virtue burns.
The touch of kindred too and love he feels;
The modest eye, whose beams on his alone
Ecstatic shine; the little strong embrace
Of prattling children, twin'd around his neck,
And emulous to please him, calling forth
The fond paternal soul. Nor purpose gay,
Amusement, dance, or song, he sternly scorns;
For happiness and true philosophy
Are of the social still, and smiling kind.
This is the life which those who fret in guilt,
And guilty cities, never knew; the life,
Led by primeval ages, uncorrupt, [man.
When angels dwelt, and God himself, with
Oh, Nature! all sufficient! over all!

Enrich me with the knowledge of thy works!
Snatch me to heaven; thy rolling wonders there,
World beyond world, in infinite extent,
Profusely scatter'd o'er the blue immense,
Show me; their motions, periods, and their laws,

Give me to scan; through the disclosing deep
Light my blind way; the mineral strata there;
Thrust, blooming, thence the vegetable world;
O'er that the rising system, more complex,
Of animals! and higher still, the mind,
The varied scene of quick-compounded thought,

And where the mixing passions endless shift;
These ever open to my ravish'd eye;
A search, the flight of time can ne'er exhaust!
But if to that unequal; if the blood,
In sluggish streams about my heart, forbid
That best ambition; under closing shades,
Inglorious, lay me by the lowly brook,
And whisper to my dreams. From Thee begin, Dwell all on Thee, with Thee conclude my
song;
And let me never, never stray from Thee!

§ 148. Winter. THOMSON.

THE ARGUMENT.

*The subject proposed.—Address to the Earl of Wilmington.—First Approach of Winter.—
According to the natural Course of the Season, various Storms described.—Rain.—Wind.—
Snow.—The driving of the Snows: a Man perishing among them; whence Reflections on the Wants and Miseries of human Life.—The Wolves descending from the Alps and Apen-nines. A Winter-evening described: as spent by Philosophers; by the country People; in the City.—Frost.—A View of Winter within the polar Circle.—A Thaw.—The whole concluding with moral Reflections on a future
State.*

SEE, Winter comes, to rule the varied year,
Sullen and sad, with all his rising train;
Vapors, and Clouds, and Storms. Be these my theme,
These! that exalt the soul to solemn thought,
And heavenly musing. Welcome, kindred glooms!

Congenial horrors, hail! with frequent foot,
Pleas'd have I, in my cheerful morn of life,
When nurs'd by careless solitude I liv'd,
And sung of Nature with unceasing joy,
Pleas'd have I wander'd through your rough do-
main;

Trod the pure virgin snows, myself as pure;
Heard the winds roar, and the big torrent burst;
Or seen the deep fermenting tempest brew'd
In the grim evening sky. Thus pass'd the time,
Till through the lucid chambers of the south Look'd out the joyous Spring, look'd out, and smil'd.

To thee, the patron of her first essay,
The Muse, O Wilmington! renews her song.
Since has she rounded the revolving year;
Skimm'd the gay Spring; on eagle-pinions borne,
Attempted through the Summer-blaze to rise;
Then swept o'er Autumn with the shadowy gale;
And now among the wintry clouds again,
Roll'd in the doubling storm, she tries to soar;
To swell her note with all the rushing winds;
To suit her sounding cadence to the floods;
As is her theme, her numbers wildly great;
Thrice happy! could she fill thy judging ear
With bold description, and with manly thought.
Nor art thou skill'd in awful schemes alone,
And how to make a mighty people thrive;

But equal goodness, sound integrity,
A firm, unshaken, uncorrupted soul
Amid a sliding age, and burning strong,
Not vainly blazing for thy country's weal,
A steady spirit, regularly free;
These, each exalting each, the statesman light
Into the patriot; these the public hope
And eye to thee converting, bid the Muse
Record what envy dares not flattery call.

Now when the cheerless empire of the sky
To Capricorn the Centaur Archer yields,
And fierce Aquarius stains th' inverted year;
Hung o'er the farthest verge of heaven, the sun
Scarce spreads through ether the dejected day:
Faint are his gleams, and ineffectual shoot
His struggling rays in horizontal lines, [storm,
Through the thick air; as cloth'd in cloudy
Weak, wan, and broad, he skirts the southern
sky;

And soon descending, to the long dark night,
Wide-shading all, the prostrate world resigns.
Nor is the night unwish'd; while vital heat,
Light, life, and joy, the dubious day forsake.
Meantime, in sable cincture, shadows vast,
Deep-ting'd and damp, and congregated clouds,
And all the vapory turbulence of heaven,
Involve the face of things. Thus Winter falls
A heavy gloom oppressive o'er the world,
Through Nature shedding influence malign,
And rouses up the seeds of dark disease.
The soul of man dies in him, loathing life,
And black with more than melancholy views.
The cattle droop; and o'er the furrow'd land,
Fresh from the plough, the dun-discolor'd flocks,
Untended spreading, crop the wholesome root.
Along the woods, along the moorish fens,
Sighs the sad Genius of the coming storm;
And up among the loose disjointed cliffs,
And fractur'd mountains wild, the brawling
brook

And cave, presageful, send a hollow moan,
Resounding long in listening Fancy's ear.

Then comes the father of the tempest forth,
Wrapt in black glooms. First joyless rains obscure

Drive through the mingling skies the vapor foul;
Dash on the mountain's brow, and shake the woods,

That grumbling wave below. The unsightly
plain

Lies a brown deluge; as the low-bent clouds
Pour flood on flood, yet unexhausted still Combine, and deep'ning into night, shut up
The day's fair face. The wanderers of heaven,
Each to his home retire, save those that love
To take their pastime in the troubled air,
Or skimming flutter round the dimply pool.
The cattle from th' untasted fields return,
And ask, with meaning low, their wonted
stalls,

Or ruminant in the contiguous shade.
Thither the household feathery people crowd,
The crested cock, with all his female train,
Pensive, and dripping; while the cottage hind

Hangs o'er th' enlivening blaze, and taleful
there

Recounts his simple frolic: much he talks,
And much he laughs, nor recks the storm that blows

Without, and rattles on his humble roof.

Wide o'er the brim, with many a torrent
swell'd,

And the mix'd ruin of its banks o'erspread,
At last the rous'd up river pours along;
Resistless, roaring, dreadful, down it comes,
From the rude mountain, and the mossy wild,
Tumbling through rocks abrupt, and sounding far;

Then o'er the sanded valley floating spreads
Calm, sluggish, silent; till again, constrain'd
Between two meeting hills, it bursts away,
Where rocks and woods o'erhang the turbid
stream;

There gathering triple force, rapid and deep,
It boils, and wheels, and foams, and thunders through.

Nature! great parent! whose unceasing hand
Rolls round the seasons of the changeful year,
How mighty, how majestic are thy works!
With what a pleasing dread they swell the soul!
That sees astonish'd! and astonish'd sings!
Ye too, ye winds! that now begin to blow,
With boisterous sweep, I raise my voice to you:
Where are your stores, ye powerful beings! say,
Where are your aërial magazines reserv'd,
To swell the brooding terrors of the storm?
In what far distant region of the sky,
Hush'd in deep silence, sleep ye when 'tis calm?

When from the pallid sky the sun descends,
With many a spot that o'er his glaring orb
Uncertain wanders, stain'd; red fiery streaks
Begin to flush around. The reeling clouds
Stagger with dizzy poise, as doubting yet
Which master to obey; while rising slow,
Blank in the leaden-color'd east, the moon
Wears a wan circle round her blunted horns.
Seen through the turbid fluctuating air,
The stars obtuse emit a shiver'd ray;
Or frequent seem to emit a shiver'd gloom,
And long behind them trail the whitening
blaze.

Snatch'd in short eddies, plays the wither'd leaf,
And on the flood the dancing feather floats.
With broaden'd nostrils to the sky up-turn'd,
The conscious heifer snuffs the stormy gale.
Even as the matron at her nightly task,
With pensive labor draws the flaxen thread,
The wasted taper and the cracking flame
Foretell the blast. But chief the plummy race,
The tenants of the sky, its changes speak.
Retiring from the downs, where all day long
They pick'd their scanty fare, a black'ning train
Of clam'rous rooks thick urge their weary flight,
And seek the closing shelter of the grove;
Assiduous in his bower the wailing owl
Plies his sad song. The cormorant on high Wheels from the deep, and screams along the
land.

Loud shrieks the soaring hern; and with wild wing
 The circling sea-fowl cleave the flaky clouds.
 Ocean, unequal press'd, with broken tide
 And blind commotion heaves; while from the Eat into caverns by the restless wave, [shore,
 And forest rustling mountain, comes a voice,
 That solemn sounding bids the world prepare;
 Then issues forth the storm with sudden burst,
 And hurls the whole precipitated air
 Down in a torrent. On the passive main
 Descends th' ethereal force, and with strong gust
 Turns from its bottom the discolored deep,
 Through the black night that sits immense
 around.

Lash'd into foam, the fierce conflicting brine
 Seems o'er a thousand raging waves to burn:
 Meantime the mountain-billows to the clouds
 In dreadful tumult swell'd, surge above surge,
 Burst into chaos with tremendous roar,
 And anchor'd navies from their station drives,
 Wide as the winds across the howling waste
 Of mighty waters; now the inflated wave
 Straining they scale, and now impetuous shoot
 Into the secret chambers of the deep,
 The wintry Baltic thundering o'er their head;
 Emerging thence again, before the breath
 Of full-exerting heaven they wing their course,
 And dart on distant coasts; if some sharp rock,
 Or shoal insidious break not their career,
 And in loose fragments fling them floating
 round.

Nor less at land the loosen'd tempest reigns:
 The mountain thunders; and its sturdy sons
 Stoop to the bottom of the rocks they shade.
 Lone on the midnight steep, and all aghast,
 The dark way-faring stranger breathless toils,
 And often falling, climbs against the blast.
 Low waves the rooted forest, vex'd, and sheds
 What of its tarnish'd honors yet remain;
 Dash'd down, and scatter'd by the tearing wind's
 Assiduous fury, its gigantic limbs.
 Thus struggling through the dissipated grove,
 The whirling tempest raves along the plain;
 And on the cottage thatch'd, or lordly roof,
 Keen fastening, shakes them to the solid base.
 Sleep frighted flies, and round the rocking
 dome,

For entrance eager, howls the savage blast.
 Then too, they say, through all the burden'd air,
 Long groans are heard, shrill sounds, and distant sighs,

That, utter'd by the demon of the night,
 Warn the devoted wretch of woe and death.

Huge uproar lords it wide. The clouds commix'd
 With stars swift gliding sweep along the sky.
 All Nature reels. Till Nature's King, who oft
 Amid tempestuous darkness dwells alone,
 And on the wings of the careering wind
 Walks dreadfully serene, commands a calm;
 Then straight air, sea, and earth, are hush'd at once.

As yet 'tis midnight deep. The weary clouds,

Slow meeting, mingle into solid gloom.
 Now while the drowsy world lies lost in sleep,
 Let me associate with the serious Night,
 And Contemplation her sedate compeer!
 Let me shake off th' intrusive cares of day,
 And lay the meddling senses all aside.

Where, now, ye lying vanities of life!
 Ye ever-tempting ever-cheating train!
 Where are you now, and what is your amount!
 Vexation, disappointment, and remorse.
 Sad, sickening thought! and yet deluded man,
 A scene of crude disjointed visions past,
 And broken slumbers, rises still resolv'd,
 With new-flush'd hopes, to run the giddy round.

Father of light and life! thou Good Supreme!
 O teach me what is good! teach me Thyself!
 Save me from folly, vanity, and vice,
 From every low pursuit! and feed my soul
 With knowledge, conscious peace, and virtue
 pure;

Sacred, substantial, never-fading bliss!

The keener tempests rise: and fuming dun
 From all the livid east, or piercing north,
 Thick clouds ascend; in whose capacious womb
 A vapory deluge lies, to snow congeal'd
 Heavy they roll their fleecy world along;
 And the sky saddens with the gather'd storm.
 Through the hush'd air the whitening shower
 descends,

At first thin-wav'ring; till at last the flakes
 Fall broad, and wide, and fast, dimming
 the day

With a continual flow. The cherish'd fields
 Put on their winter robe of purest white.
 'Tis brightness all; save where the new snow melts

Along the mazy current. Low the woods
 Bow their hoar head; and, ere the languid sun
 Faint from the west emits his evening ray,
 Earth's universal face, deep hid, and chill,
 Is one wild dazzling waste, that buries wide
 The works of man. Drooping, the laborer-ox Stands cover'd o'er with snow, and then demands

The fruit of all his toil. The fowls of heaven,
 Tam'd by the cruel season, crowd around
 The winnowing store, and claim the little boon
 Which Providence assigns them. One alone,
 The red-breast, sacred to the household gods,
 Wisely regardful of th' embroiling sky,
 In joyless fields, and thorny thickets, leaves
 His shivering mates, and pays to trusted man
 His annual visit. Half afraid, he first Against the window beats; then, brisk, alights
 On the warm hearth; then hopping o'er the Eyes all the smiling family askance, [floor,
 And pecks, and starts, and wonders where he is:

Till more familiar grown, the table crumbs
 Attract his slender feet. The foodless wilds
 Pour forth their brown inhabitants. The hare,
 Though timorous of heart, and hard beset
 By death in various forms, dark snares, and dogs,

And more un pitying men, the garden seeks,
Urg'd on by fearless want. The bleating kind Eye the bleak heav'n, and next the glist'ning
earth,

With looks of dumb despair; then, sad dispers'd, Dig for the wither'd herb through heaps of snow. [kind,

Now, shepherds, to your helpless charge be
Baffle the raging year, and fill their pens
With food at will; lodge them below the storm,
And watch them strictly: for from the bel-
lowing east,

In this dire season, oft the whirlwind's wing
Sweeps up the burthen of whole wintry plains
At one wide waft, and o'er the hapless flocks,
Hid in the hollow of two neighbouring hills,
The billowy tempest whelms; till upward urg'd
The valley to a shining mountain swells,
Tipt with a wreath high-curling in the sky.

As thus the snows arise; and foul, and fierce,
All Winter drives along the darken'd air;
In his own loose revolving fields, the swain
Disaster'd stands; sees other hills ascend,
Of unknown joyless brow, and other scenes,
Of horrid prospect, shag the trackless plain;
Nor finds the river, nor the forest, hid
Beneath the formless wild, but wanders on
From hill to dale, still more and more astray;
Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps,
Stung with the thoughts of home; the thoughts of home

Rush on his nerves, and call their vigor forth
In many a vain attempt. How sinks his soul
With black despair! what horror fills his heart
When for the dusky spot, which fancy feign'd,
His tufted cottage rising through the snow,
He meets the roughness of the middle waste,
Far from the track and blest abode of man;
While round him night resistless closes fast,
And every tempest, howling o'er his head,
Renders the savage wilderness more wild.
Then throng the busy shapes into his mind,
Of cover'd pits, unfathomably deep,
A dire descent! beyond the power of frost;
Of faithless bogs; of precipices huge,
Smooth'd up with snow; and, what is land,
unknown,

What water, of the still unfrozen spring,
In the loose marsh or solitary lake,
Where the fresh mountain from the bottom boils.
These check his fearful steps; and down he sinks
Beneath the shelter of the shapeless drift,
Thinking o'er all the bitterness of death,
Mix'd with the tender anguish Nature shoots
Through the wrung bosom of the dying man,
His wife, his children, and his friends unseen.
In vain for him th' officious wife prepares
The fire fair-blazing, and the vestment warm;
In vain his little children, peeping out
Into the mingling storm, demand their sire,
With tears of artless innocence. Alas!
Nor wife, nor children, more shall he behold,

Nor friends, nor sacred home. On every nerve
The deadly winter seizes; shuts up sense;
And, o'er his inmost vitals creeping cold,
Lays him along the snow, a stiffen'd corse
Stretch'd out and bleaching in the northern blast.

Ah! little think the gay licentious proud,
Whom pleasure, power, and affluence surround;
They, who their thoughtless hours in giddy
And wanton, often cruel, riot waste; [mirth,
Ah! little think they, while they dance along,
How many feel, this very moment, death,
And all the sad variety of pain.

How many shrink in the devouring flood,
Or more devouring flame. How many bleed,
By shameful variance betwixt man and man!
How many pine in want, and dungeon glooms;
Shut from the common air, and common use
Of their own limbs. How many drink the cup
Of baleful grief, or eat the bitter bread
Of misery. Sore pierc'd by wintry winds,
How many shrink into the sordid hut
Of cheerless poverty. How many shake
With all the fiercer tortures of the mind,
Unbounded passion, madness, guilt, remorse;
Whence tumbled headlong from the height of
They furnish matter for the tragic Muse. [life,
Even in the vale, where wisdom loves to dwell,
With friendship, peace, and contemplation
join'd,

How many, rack'd with honest passions, droop
In deep retir'd distress. How many stand
Around the death-bed of their dearest friends,
And point the parting anguish. Thought fond man

Of these, and all the thousand nameless ills,
That one incessant struggle render life,
One scene of toil, of suffering, and of fate,
Vice in his high career would stand appall'd,
And heedless rambling Impulse learn to think;
The conscious heart of Charity would warm,
And her wide wish Benevolence dilate;
The social tear would rise, the social sigh;
And into clear perfection, gradual bliss,
Refining still, the social passions work.

And here can I forget the generous band*,
Who, touch'd with human woe, redressive
search'd

Into the horrors of the gloomy jail?
Unpitied and unheard, where misery moans;
Where sickness pines; where thirst and hunger
burn,

And poor misfortune feels the lash of vice.
While in the land of liberty, the land
Whose every street and public meeting glow
With open freedom, little tyrants rag'd;
Snatch'd the lean morsel from the starving mouth;

Tore from cold wintry limbs the tatter'd weed;
Even robb'd them of the last of comforts,
sleep;

The freeborn Briton to the dungeon chain'd
Or, as the lust of cruelty prevail'd,

* The Jail Committee, in the year 1729.

At pleasure mark'd him with inglorious stripes ;
 And crush'd out lives, by secret barbarous ways,
 That for their country would have toil'd, or bled.
 O great design ! if executed well,
 With patient care, and wisdom-temper'd zeal.
 Ye sons of mercy ! yet resume the search ;
 Drag forth the legal monsters into light,
 Wrench from their hands oppression's iron rod,
 And bid the cruel feel the pains they give.
 Much still untouch'd remains ; in this rank age,
 Much is the patriot's weeding hand requir'd.
 The toils of law (what dark insidious men
 Have cumbrous added to perplex the truth,
 And lengthen simple justice into trade)
 How glorious were the day that saw these broke,

And every man within the reach of right !

By wintry famine rous'd, from all the tract
 Of horrid mountains which the shining Alps,
 And wavy Apennine, and Pyrennees,
 Branch out stupendous into distant lands ;
 Cruel as death, and hungry as the grave !
 Burning for blood ! bony, and gaunt, and grim !

Assembling wolves in raging troops descend ;
 And, pouring o'er the country, bear along,
 Keen as the north wind sweeps the glossy snow.
 All is their prize. They fasten on the steed,
 Press him to earth, and pierce his mighty heart.
 Nor can the bull his awful front defend,
 Or shake the murdering savages away.
 Rapacious, at the mother's throat they fly,
 And tear the screaming infant from her breast.
 The godlike face of man avails him nought,
 Even beauty, force divine ! at whose bright glance

The generous lion stands in soften'd gaze,
 Here bleeds, a hapless undistinguish'd prey.
 But if appris'd of the severe attack,
 The country be shut up, lur'd by the scent,
 On church-yards drear (inhuman to relate !)
 The disappointed prowlers fall, and dig
 The shrouded body from the grave ; o'er which,
 Mix'd with foul shades, and frighted ghosts,
 they howl.

Among those hilly regions, where embrac'd
 In peaceful vales the happy Grisons dwell,
 Oft, rushing sudden from the loaded cliffs,
 Mountains of snow their gathering terrors roll.
 From steep to steep, loud thundering down they
 come,

A wintry waste in dire commotion all ;
 And herds, and flocks, and travellers, and swains, [troops,
 And sometimes whole brigades of marching
 Or hamlets sleeping in the dead of night,
 Are deep beneath the smothering ruin whelm'd.

Now, all amid the rigors of the year,
 In the wild depth of Winter, while without
 The ceaseless winds blow ice, be my retreat
 Between the groaning forest and the shore,
 Beat by the boundless multitude of waves,

A rural, shelter'd, solitary, scene :
 Where ruddy fire and beaming tapers join,
 To cheer the gloom. There studious let me sit,
 And hold high converse with the mighty dead ;
 Sages of ancient time, as gods rever'd,
 As gods beneficent, who blest mankind
 With arts, with arms, and humaniz'd a world.
 Rous'd at th' inspiring thought, I throw aside
 The long-liv'd volume ; and, deep musing, hail
 The sacred shades, that slowly rising pass
 Before my wondering eyes. First Socrates,
 Who, firmly good in a corrupted state,
 Against the rage of tyrants single stood,
 Invincible ! calm reason's holy law,
 That voice of God within th' attentive mind,
 Obeying, fearless, or in life, or death ;
 Great moral teacher ! wisest of mankind !
Solon the next, who built his commonweal
 On equity's wide base ; by tender laws
 A lively people curbing, yet undamp'd,
 Preserving still that quick peculiar fire,
 Whence in the laurel'd field of finer arts,
 And of bold freedom, they unequall'd shone,
 The pride of smiling Greece and human-kind.
Lycurgus then, who bow'd beneath the force
 Of strictest discipline severely wise,
 All human passions. Following him I see,
 As at Thermopylae he glorious fell,
 The firm devoted chief*, who prov'd by deeds
 The hardest lesson which the other taught.
 Then Aristides lifts his honest front ;
 Spotless of heart, to whom th' unflattering voice
 Of freedom gave the noblest name of Just ;
 In pure majestic poverty rever'd ;
 Who even his glory to his country's weal
 Submitting, swell'd a haughty rival's† fame.
 Rear'd by his care, of softer ray appears
Cimon, sweet soul'd ; whose genius, rising strong,
 Shook off the load of young debauch ; abroad
 The scourge of Persian pride, at home the friend
 Of every worth and every splendid art ;
 Modest and simple in the pomp of wealth.
 Then the last worthies of declining Greece,
 Late call'd to glory, in unequal times,
 Pensive appear. The fair Corinthian boast,
Timoleon, happy temper ! mild, and firm,
 Who wept the brother, while the tyrant bled.
 And equal to the best, the Theban pair‡,
 Whose virtues, in heroic concord join'd,
 Their country rais'd to freedom, empire, fame.
 He too, with whom Athenian honor sunk,
 And left a mass of sordid lees behind,
Phocion the Good ; in public life severe,
 To virtue still inexorably firm ;
 But when, beneath his low illustrious roof,
 Sweet peace and happy wisdom smooth'd his
 brow,
 Not friendship softer was, nor love more kind.
 And he, the last of old Lycurgus' sons,
 The generous victim to that vain attempt
 To save a rotten state, Agis, who saw * Leonidas,

† Themistocles,

‡ Pelopidas and Epaminondas,

Even Sparta's self to servile avarice sunk.
 The two Achaian heroes close the train :
Aratus, who a while relum'd the soul
 Of fondly lingering liberty in Greece :
 And he her darling, as her latest hope,
 The gallant Philopæmen ; who to arms
 Turn'd the luxurious pomp he could not cure ;
 Or toiling in his farm, a simple swain ;
 Or, bold, and skilful, thundering in the field.

Of rougher front, a mighty people come !
 A race of heroes ! in whose virtuous times,
 Which knew no stain, save that with partial
 flame

Their dearest country they too fondly lov'd ;
 Her better founder first, the light of Rome,
Numa, who soften'd her rapacious sons :
Servius the king, who laid the solid base
 On which o'er earth the vast republic spread.
 Then the great consuls venerable rise.

The *public father, who the private quell'd,
 And on the dread tribunal sternly sad.

He, whom his thankless country could not lose,
Camillus, only vengeful to her foes.

Fabricius, scorner of all-conquering gold ;
 And Cincinnatus, awful from the plough.
 Thy willing victim†, Carthage, bursting loose
 From all that pleading nature could oppose,
 From a whole city's tears, by rigid faith
 Imperious call'd, and honor's dire command.

Scipio, the gentle chief, humanely brave,
 Who soon the race of spotless glory ran,
 And, warm in youth to the poetic shade
 With friendship and philosophy retir'd.

Tully, whose powerful eloquence a while Restrain'd the rapid fate of rushing Rome.

Unconquer'd Cato, virtuous in extreme.
 And thou, unhappy Brutus, kind of heart,
 Whose steady arm, by awful virtue urg'd,
 Lifted the Roman steel against thy friend.

Thousands besides the tribute of a verse Demand ; but who can count the stars of heaven ?

Who sing their influence on this lower world ?

Behold, who yonder comes ! in sober state,
 Fair, mild, and strong, as is a vernal sun :

'Tis Phœbus self, or else the Mantuan swain !
 Great Homer too appears, of daring wing,
 Parent of song ! and equal by his side,

The British Muse ; join'd hand in hand they walk,

Darkling, full up the middle steep to fame.
 Nor absent are those shades, whose skilful touch Pathetic drew th' impassion'd heart, and charm'd

Transported Athens with the moral scene :
 Nor those who tuneful wak'd th' enchanting
 lyre.

First of your kind ! society divine !
 Still visit thus my nights, for you reserv'd,
 And mount my soaring soul to thoughts like
 yours.

Silence, thou lonely power, the door be thine ;

See on the hallow'd hour that none intrude,
 Save a few chosen friends, who sometimes deign
 To bless my humble roof, with sense refin'd ;
 Learning digested well, exalted faith,
 Unstudy'd wit, and humor ever gay.
 Or from the Muses' hill will Pope descend,
 To raise the sacred hour, to bid it smile,
 And with the social spirit warm the heart :
 For though not sweeter his own Homer sings,
 Yet is his life the more endearing song.

Where art thou, Hammond ? thou the darling pride,

The friend and lover of the tuneful throng !
 Ah ! why, dear youth, in all the blooming prime
 Of vernal genius, where disclosing fast
 Each active worth, each manly virtue lay,
 Why wert thou ravish'd from our hope so soon ?
 What now avails that noble thirst of fame,
 Which stung thy fervent breast ! that treasur'd
 store

Of knowledge, early gain'd ! that eager zeal
 To serve thy country, glowing in the band
 Of youthful patriots, who sustain her name ?
 What now, alas ! that life diffusing charm
 Of sprightly wit ? that rapture for the Muse,
 That heart of friendship, and that soul of joy,
 Which bade with softest light thy virtues smile ?
 Ah ! only show'd to check our fond pursuits,
 And teach our humble hopes that life is vain !

Thus in some deep retirement would I pass
 The wintry glooms, with friends of pliant soul,
 Or blithe, or solemn, as the theme inspir'd :
 With them would search, if Nature's boundless
 frame

Was call'd, late rising from the void of night,
 Or sprung eternal from th' eternal mind ;
 Its life, its laws, its progress, and its end.
 Hence larger prospects of the beauteous whole ;
 Would, gradual, open on our opening minds ;
 And each diffusive harmony unite
 In full perfection to th' astonish'd eye.

Then would we try to scan the moral world,
 Which though to us it seems embroil'd, moves
 In higher order ; fitted and impell'd, [on
 By wisdom's finest hand, and issuing all
 In general good. The sage historic Muse Should next conduct us through the depth of
 time :

Show us how empire grew, declin'd, and fell,
 In scatter'd states ; what makes the nation
 smile,

Improves their soil, and gives them double suns ;
 And why they pine beneath the brightest skies,
 In Nature's richest lap. As thus we talk'd,
 Our hearts would burn within us, would inhale
 That portion of divinity ; that ray
 Of purest heaven, which lights the public soul
 Of patriots and of heroes. But if doom'd,
 In powerless humble fortune, to repress
 These ardent risings of the kindling soul ;
 Then, even superior to ambition, we
 Would learn the private virtues ; how to glide

* Marcus Junius Brutus.

† Regulus.

Through shade, and plains, along the smoothest
stream
Of rural life; or snatch'd away by hope,
Through the dim spaces of futurity,
With earnest eye anticipate those scenes
Of happiness, and wonder; where the mind
In endless growth, and infinite ascent,
Rises from state to state, and world to world.
But when with these the serious thought is foil'd,
We, shifting for relief, would play the shapes
Of frolic fancy; and incessant form
Those rapid pictures, that assembled train
Of fleet ideas, never join'd before,
Whence lively Wit excites to gay surprise;
Or folly-painting Humor, grave himself,
Calls Laughter forth, deep-shaking every nerve.
Meantime the village rouses up the fire;
While well-attested, and as well believ'd,
Heard solemn, goes the goblin-story round:
Till superstitious horror creeps o'er all.
Or, frequent in the sounding hall they wake
The rural gambol. Rustic mirth goes round;
The simple joke that takes the shepherd's heart,
Easily pleas'd; the long loud laugh sincere;
The kiss, snatch'd hasty from the side-long
maid,
On purpose guardless, or pretending sleep:
The leap, the slap, the haul; and, shook to notes
Of native music, the respondent dance.
Thus jocund fleets with them the Winter night.
The city swarms intense. The public haunt,
Full of each theme, and warm with mix'd discourse,
Hums indistinct. The sons of riot flow
Down the loose stream of false enchanted joy.
To swift destruction. On the rankled soul
The gaming fury falls: and in one gulph
Of total ruin, honor, virtue, peace,
Friends, families, and fortune, headlong sink.
Up springs the dance along the lighted dome,
Mix'd and evolv'd, a thousand sprightly ways.
The glittering court effuses every pomp;
The circle deepens; beam'd from gaudy robes;
Tapers and sparkling gems, and radiant eyes,
A soft effulgence o'er the palace waves;
While, a gay insect in his summer-shine,
The fop, light-fluttering, spreads his mealy
wings. [stalks,
Dread o'er the scene, the ghost of Hamlet
Othello rages; poor Monimia mourns;
And Belvidera pours her soul in love.
Terror alarms the breast, the comely tear
Steals o'er the cheek: or else the comic Muse
Holds to the world a picture of itself,
And raises sly the fair impartial laugh.
Sometimes she lifts her strain, and paints the scenes
Of beauteous life; whate'er can deck mankind,
Or charm the heart, in generous Bevil* show'd.
O thou, whose wisdom, solid yet refin'd,

Whose patriot virtues, and consummate skill
To touch the finer springs that move the world,
Join'd to whate'er the Graces can bestow,
And all Apollo's animating fire,
Give thee, with pleasing dignity to shine
At once the guardian, ornament, and joy,
Of polish'd life; permit the rural Muse,
O Chesterfield, to grace thee with her song!
Ere to the shades again she humbly flies;
Indulge her fond ambition in thy train,
(For every Muse has in thy train a place)
To mark thy various full-accomplish'd mind:
To mark that spirit, which, with British scorn,
Rejects th' allurements of corrupted power;
That elegant politeness, which excels,
Even in the judgement of presumptuous France,
The boasted manners of her shining court;
That wit, the vivid energy of sense,
The truth of nature, which, with Attic point,
And kind well-temper'd satire, smoothly keen,
Steals through the soul, and without pain corrects.

Or, rising thence with yet a brighter flame,
O let me hail thee on some glorious day,
When to the listening senate, ardent, crowd
Britannia's sons, to hear her pleaded cause.
Then dress'd by thee, more amiably fair,
Truth the soft robe of mild persuasion wears;
Thou to assenting reason giv'st again [heart,
Her own enlighten'd thought; call'd from the
Th' obedient passions on thy voice attend;
And even reluctant party feels a while [maze
Thy gracious pow'r; as through the various
Of eloquence, now smooth, now quick, now
strong,

Profound and clear, you roll the copious flood.

To thy lov'd haunt return, my happy Muse:
For now, behold the joyous Winter days,
Frosty, succeed: and through the blue serene
For sight too fine, the ethereal nitre flies,
Killing infectious damps, and the spent air
Storing afresh, with elemental life,
Close crowds the shining atmosphere; and binds
Our strengthen'd bodies in its cold embrace,
Constringent; feeds, and animates our blood;
Refines our spirits through the new-strung nerves,

In swifter sallies darting to the brain;
Where sits the soul intense, collected, cool,
Bright as the skies, and as the season keen;
All Nature feels the renovating force
Of Winter, only to the thoughtless eye
In ruin seen. The frost-concocted glebe
Draws in abundant vegetable soul,
And gathers vigor for the coming year.
A stronger glow sits on the lovely cheek
Of ruddy fire; and luculent along
The purer rivers flow; their sullen deeps,
Transparent, open to the shepherd's gaze,
And murmur hoarser at the fixing frost.

What art thou, frost? and whence are thy keen stores

* A character in the Conscious Lovers, written by Sir Richard Steele.

Deriv'd, thou secret all-invading power,
Whom even the illusive fluid cannot fly?
Is not thy potent energy, unseen,
Myriads of little salts, or hook'd or shap'd
Like double wedges, and diffus'd immense
Through water, earth, and ether? Hence at eve,
Steam'd eager from the red horizon round,
With the fierce rage of Winter deep suffus'd,
An icy gale, oft shifting, o'er the pool
Breathes a blue film, and in its mid career
Arrests the bickering stream. The loosen'd ice,
Let down the flood, and half-dissolv'd by day,
Restless no more; but to the sedgy bank
Fast grows, or gathers round the pointed stone,
A crystal pavement, by the breath of heaven
Cemented firm; till, seiz'd from shore to shore,
The whole imprison'd river growls below.
Loud rings the frozen earth, and hard reflects
A double noise; while at his evening watch,
The village-dog deters the nightly thief;
The heifer lows; the distant water-fall
Swells in the breeze; and, with the hasty tread
Of traveller, the hollow-sounding plain
Shakes from afar. The full ethereal round,
Infinite worlds disclosing to the view,
Shines out intensely keen; and all one cope
Of starry glitter glows from pole to pole.
From pole to pole the rigid influence falls,
Through the still night, incessant, heavy, strong,
And seizes Nature fast. It freezes on;
Till morn, late rising o'er the drooping world,
Lifts her pale eye unjoyous. Then appears
The various labor of the silent night:
Prone from the dripping cave, and dumb cascade,
Whose idle torrents only seem to roar,
The pendent icicle; the frost-work fair,
Where transient hues, and fancy'd figures rise;
Wide spouted o'er the hill, the frozen brook,
A livid tract, cold-gleaming on the morn;
The forest bent beneath the plummy wave;
And by the frost refin'd the whiter snow,
Incrusted hard, and sounding to the tread
Of early shepherd, as he pensive seeks
His pining flock, or from the mountain top,
Pleas'd with the slippery surface, swift descends.

On blithsome frolics bent, the youthful swains,
While every work of man is laid at rest,
Fond o'er the river crowd, in various sport
And revelry dissolv'd; where mixing glad,
Happiest of all the train! the raptur'd boy
Lashes the whirling top. Or, where the Rhine Branch'd out in many a long canal extends,
From every province swarming, void of care,
Batavia rushes forth; and as they sweep
On sounding skates, a thousand different ways,
In circling poise, swift as the winds along,
The then gay land is madden'd all to joy.
Nor less the northern courts, wide o'er the
snow,

Pour a new pomp. Eager, on rapid sleds,
Their vigorous youth in bold contention wheel

The long-resounding course. Meantime, to raise

The manly strife, with highly blooming charms,
Flush'd by the season, Scandinavia's dames,
Or Russia's buxom daughters, glow around.

Pure, quick, and sportful, is the wholesome
day:

But soon elaps'd. The horizontal sun,
Broad o'er the south, hangs at its utmost noon;
And, ineffectual, strikes the gelid cliff:
His azure gloss the mountain still maintains,
Nor feels the feeble touch. Perhaps the vale
Relents a while to the reflected ray;
Or from the forest falls the cluster'd snow,
Myriads of gems, that in the waving gleam
Gay twinkle as they scatter. Thick around
Thunder the sport of those, who with the gun,
And dog impatient bounding at the shot,
Worse than the season, desolate the fields;
And adding to the ruins of the year,
Distress the footed or the feather'd game.

But what is this? Our infant Winter sinks,
Divested of its grandeur, should our eye
Astonish'd shoot into the Frigid Zone;
Where, for relentless months, continual night
Holds o'er the glittering waste her starry reign.

There, through the prison of unbounded
wilds,

Barr'd by the hand of Nature from escape,
Wide-rooms the Russian exile. Nought around
Strikes his sad eye, but deserts lost in snow;
And heavy-loaded groves; and solid floods,
That stretch athwart the solitary vast,
Their icy horrors to the frozen main;
And cheerless towns far distant, never bless'd,
Save when its annual course the caravan
Bends to the golden coast of rich Cathay*,
With news of human kind. Yet there life
glows;

Yet cherish'd there, beneath the shining waste,
The furry nations harbor; tipt with jet,
Fair ermines, spotless as the snows they press;
Sables of glossy black; and dark embrown'd,
Or beauteous streak'd with many a mingled hue,
Thousands besides, the costly pride of courts.
There, warm together press'd, the trooping deer Sleeps on the new-fallen snows; and, scarce his
head

Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumbering sullen in the white abyss.
The ruthless hunter wants not dogs nor toils,
Nor with the dread of sounding bows he drives
The fearful flying race; with ponderous clubs,
As weak against the mountain-heaps they push
Their beating breast in vain, and piteous bray,
He lays them quivering on th' ensanguin'd snows. [home.

And with loud shouts rejoicing bears them
There through the piny forest half absorpt,
Rough tenant of these shades, the shapeless
bear,

With dangling ice all horrid, stalks forlorn;

* The old name for China.

Slow-pac'd, and sourer as the storms increase,
He makes his bed beneath th' inclement drift,
And, with stern patience, scorning weak complaint,
Hardens his heart against assailing want.

Wide o'er the spacious regions of the north,
That see Bootes urge his tardy wain,
A boisterous race, by frosty Caurus* pierc'd,
Who little pleasure know and fear no pain,
Prolific swarm. They once relum'd the flame
Of lost mankind in polish'd slavery sunk,
Drove martial horde on horde†, with dreadful sweep

Resistless rushing o'er th' enfeebled south,
And gave the vanquish'd world another form.
Not such the sons of Lapland: wisely they Despise th' insensate barbarous trade of war;
They ask no more than simple Nature gives,
They love their mountains and enjoy their storms.

No false desires, no pride-created wants,
Disturb the peaceful current of their time;
And through the restless ever-tortur'd maze
Of pleasure, or ambition, bid it rage.

Their rein-deer form their riches. These their tents, [wealth

Their robes, their beds, and all their homely
Supply, their wholesome fare, and cheerful cups.
Obsequious at their call, the docile tribe
Yield to the sled their necks, and whirl them swift

O'er hill and dale, heap'd into one expanse
Of marbled snow, as far as eye can sweep,
With a blue crust of ice unbounded glaz'd.
By dancing meteors then, that ceaseless shake
A waving blaze refracted o'er the heav'ns,
And vivid moons, and stars that keener play
With double lustre from the glossy waste,
E'en in the depth of polar night, they find
A wondrous day: enough to light the chace,
Or guide their daring steps to Finland fairs.

Wish'd Spring returns; and from the hazy south,

While dim Aurora slowly moves before,
The welcome sun, just verging up at first,
By small degrees extends the swelling curve;
Till seen at last for gay rejoicing months,
Still round and round his spiral course he winds,

And as he yearly dips his flaming orb,
Wheels up again, and re-ascends the sky.
In that glad season, from the lakes and floods,
Where pure Niemi's fairy mountains rise‡,

And fring'd with roses Tenglio§ rolls his stream, [eve,
They draw the copious fry. With these, at
They cheerful loaded to their tents repair;
Where all day long, in useful cares employ'd,
Their kind unblemish'd wives the fire prepare.
Thrice happy race! by poverty secur'd
From legal plunder and rapacious power:
In whom fell interest never yet has sown
The seeds of vice: whose spotless swains ne'er knew

Injurious deed, nor, blasted by the breath
Of faithless love, their blooming daughters woo.

Still pressing on, beyond Tornea's lake,
And Hecla flaming through a waste of snow,
And farthest Greenland, to the pole itself,
Where, failing gradual, life at length goes out,
The Muse expands her solitary flight;
And, hovering o'er the wild stupendous scene,
Beholds new seas beneath another sky ||.

Thron'd in his palace of cerulean ice,
Here Winter holds his unrejoicing court;
And through his airy hall the loud misrule
Of driving tempest is for ever heard:
Here the grim tyrant meditates his wrath;
Here arms his winds with all-subduing frost;
Moulds his fierce hail, and treasures up his
snows;

With which he now oppresses half the globe.
Thence winding eastward to the Tartar's coast,

She sweeps the howling margin of the main;
Where, undissolving, from the first of time,
Snows swell on snows amazing to the sky;
And icy mountains high on mountains pil'd,
Seem to the shivering sailor from afar,
Shapeless and white, an atmosphere of clouds.
Projected huge, and horrid, o'er the surge,
Alps frown on Alps; or rushing hideous down,
As if old chaos was again return'd,
Wide rend the deep, and shake the solid pole.
Ocean itself no longer can resist
The binding fury; but, in all its rage
Of tempest, taken by the boundless frost,
Is many a fathom to the bottom chain'd,
And bid to roar no more: a bleak expanse, Shagg'd o'er with wavy rocks, cheerless, and void

Of every life, that from the dreary months
Flies conscious southward. Miserable they!
Who, here entangled in the gathering ice,
Take their last look of the descending sun;
While, full of death, and fierce with tenfold frost,

† M. de Maupertuis, in his book on the figure of the Earth, after having described the beautiful Lake and Mountain of Niemi in Lapland, says, "From this height we had opportunity several times to see those vapors rise from the lake, which the people of the country call Hal-tios, and which they deem to be guardian spirits of the mountains. We had been frightened with stories of bears that haunted this place, but saw none. It seemed rather a place of resort for Fairies and Genii, than bears."

§ The same author observes, "I was surprised to see upon the banks of this river (the Tenglio) roses of as lively a red as any that are in our gardens."

|| The other hemisphere.

† The wandering Scythian clans.

The long, long night, incumbent o'er their heads,
Falls horrible. Such was the Briton's* fate,
As with first prow (what have not Britons dar'd!)

He for the passage sought, attempted since
So much in vain, and seeming to be shut
By jealous Nature with eternal bars.
In these fell regions, in Arzina caught,
And to the stony deep his idle ship
Immediate seal'd, he with his hapless crew,
Each full exerted at his several task,
Froze into statues: to the cordage glu'd
The sailor, and the pilot to the helm.

Hard by these shores, where scarce his freezing stream

Rolls the wild Oby, live the last of men;
And half-enliven'd by the distant sun,
That rears and ripens man, as well as plants,
Here human nature wears its rudest form.
Deep from the piercing season sunk in caves,
Here by dull fires, and with unjoyous cheer,
They waste the tedious gloom. Immers'd in furs,

Doze the gross race. Nor sprightly jest, nor
Nor tenderness they know; nor aught of life,
Beyond the kindred bear that stalks without.
Till morn at length, her roses drooping all,
Sheds a long twilight brightening o'er their fields,

And calls the quiver'd savage to the chace.

What cannot active government perform,
New-moulding man! Wide-stretching from these shores,

A people savage from remotest time,
A huge neglected empire, one vast mind,
By Heaven inspir'd, from Gothic darkness
call'd.

Immortal Peter! first of monarchs! He
His stubborn country tam'd, her rocks, her fens,
Her floods, her seas, her ill-submitting sons!
And while the fierce barbarian he subdu'd,
To more exalted soul he rais'd the man.
Ye shades of ancient heroes, ye who toil'd
Through long successive ages to build up
A laboring plan of state, behold at once
The wonder done! behold the matchless prince!
Who left his native throne, where reign'd till
then

A mighty shadow of unreal power;
Who greatly spurn'd the slothful pomp of courts,

And roaming every land, in every port,
His sceptre laid aside, with glorious hand
Unwearied plying the mechanic tool,
Gathered the seeds of trade, of useful arts,
Of civil wisdom, and of martial skill.
Charg'd with the stores of Europe home he goes!

Then cities rise amid th' illumin'd waste;
O'er joyless deserts smiles the rural reign:
Far-distant flood to flood is social join'd;

Th' astonished Euxine hears the Baltic roar:
Proud navies ride on seas that never foam'd
With daring keel before; and armies stretch
Each way their dazzling files, repressing here
The frantic Alexander of the north,
And awing there stern Othman's shrinking sons.

Sloth flies the land, and Ignorance, and Vice,
Of old dishonor proud: it glows around,
Taught by the royal hand that rous'd the whole,

One scene of arts, of arms, of rising trade:
For what his wisdom plann'd, and power en-
forc'd,

More potent still, his great example show'd.
Muttering, the winds at eve, with blunted point,

Blow hollow-blustering from the south. Sub-
The frost resolves into a trickling thaw.
Spotted the mountains shine; loose sleet descends,

And floods the country round. The rivers
Of bonds impatient. Sudden from the hills,
O'er rocks and woods, in broad brown cataracts,

A thousand snow-fed torrents shoot at once;
And, where they rush, the wide-resounding
plain

Is left one slimy waste. Those sullen seas,
That wash'd th' ungenial pole, will rest no more
Beneath the shackles of the mighty north;
But, rousing all their waves, resistless heave;
And, hark! the lengthening roar continuous runs
Athwart the rifted deep: at once it bursts,
And piles a thousand mountains to the clouds.
Ill fares the bark with trembling wretches
charg'd,

That, toss'd amid the floating fragments, moors
Beneath the shelter of an icy isle,
While night o'erwhelms the sea, and horror looks

More horrible. Can human force endure
Th' assembled mischiefs that besiege'd them
round?

Heart-gnawing hunger, fainting weariness,
The roar of winds and waves, the crush of ice,
Now ceasing, now renew'd with louder rage,
And in dire echoes bellowing round the main.
More to embroil the deep, Leviathan,
And his unwieldy train, in dreadful sport,
Tempest the loosen'd brine, while through the
gloom,

Far from the bleak inhospitable shore,
Loading the winds, is heard the hungry howl
Of famish'd monsters there awaiting wrecks.—
Yet Providence, that ever-waking eye,
Looks down with pity on the feeble toil
Of mortals lost to hope, and lights them safe
Through all this dreary labyrinth of fate.

'Tis done! dread Winter spreads his latest
glooms,
And reigns tremendous o'er the conquer'd year.

* Sir Hugh Willoughby, sent by Queen Elizabeth to discover the North-East Passage.

How dead the vegetable kingdom lies !
How dumb the tuneful ! Horror wide extends
His desolate domain. Behold, fond man !
See here thy pictur'd life !—Pass some few years,                                 [strength—
Thy flowering Spring—thy Summer's ardent
Thy sober Autumn fading into age—
And pale concluding Winter comes at last,
And shuts the scene. Ah ! whither now are fled                                 [hopes
Those dreams of greatness ? those unsolid
Of happiness ? those longings after fame ?
Those restless cares ? those busy bustling days ?
Those gay-spent festive nights ? those veering
                thoughts,
Lost between good and ill, that shar'd thy life ?
All now are vanish'd ! Virtue sole survives,
Immortal never-failing friend of man,
His guide to happiness on high.—And see !
'Tis come, the glorious morn ! the second birth
Of heaven and earth ! Awakening nature hears
The new-creating world, and starts to life !
In every heighten'd form, from pain and
                death
For ever free.—The great eternal scheme,
Involving all, and in a perfect whole
Uniting, as the prospect wider spreads,
To reason's eye refin'd clears up apace.
Ye vainly wise ! ye blind presumptuous ! now,
Confounded in the dust, adore that Power,
And Wisdom oft arraign'd : see now the cause,
Why unassuming worth in secret liv'd
And dy'd neglected : why the good man's share
In life was gall and bitterness of soul :
Why the lone widow and her orphans pin'd
In starving solitude : while luxury
In palaces lay straining her low thought
To form unreal wants : why heaven-born truth,
And moderation fair, wore the red marks
Of superstition's scourge : why licens'd pain,
That cruel spoiler, that embosom'd foe,
Imbitter'd all our bliss.—Ye good distress'd !
Ye noble few ! who here unbending stand
Beneath life's pressure, yet bear up a while,
And what your bounded view, which only saw
A little part deem'd evil, is no more :
The storms of Wintry time will quickly pass,
And one unbounded Spring encircle all.

§ 149. Kensington Garden. TICKELL.

Campos ubi Troja fuit. VIRG.

WHERE Kensington high o'er the neighb'ring lands,
'Midst greens and sweets, a regal fabric stands,
And sees each spring luxuriant in her bowers,
A snow of blossoms, and a wild of flowers,
The dames of Britain oft in crowds repair
To groves and lawns, and unpolluted air.
Here, while the town in damps and darkness
lies,
They breathe in sunshine, and see azure skies ;

Each walk, with robes of various dyes be-
Seems from afar a moving tulip-bed, [spread,
Where rich brocades and glossy damasks grow,
And chints, the rival of the show'ry bow.

Here England's Daughter, darling of the land.

Sometimes, surrounded with her virgin band,
Gleams through the shades. She, tow'ring o'er the rest,

Stands fairest of the fairer kind confess'd,
Form'd to gain hearts that Brunswick's cause
deny'd, /

And charm a people to her Father's side.

Long have these groves to royal guests been
known,

Nor Nassau first preferr'd them to a throne.

Ere Norman banners wav'd in British air ;

Ere lordly Hubba with the golden hair

Pour'd in his Danes ; ere elder Julius came ;

Or Dardan Brutus gave our isle a name ;
A prince of Albion's lineage grac'd the wood,
The scene of wars, and stain'd with lover's
blood. [tive throng,

You, who through gazing crowds, your cap-
Throw pangs and passions, as you move along,
Turn on the left, ye fair, your radiant eyes,
Where all unlevelled the gay garden lies :

If generous anguish for another's pains
E'er heav'd your hearts, or shiver'd through your veins,

Look down attentive on the pleasing dale,
And listen to my melancholy tale.

That hollow space, where now in living
rows,

Line above line the yew's sad verdure grows,
Was, ere the planter's hand its beauty gave,
A common pit, a rude unfashion'd cave;
The landskip now so sweet you well may
praise,

But far, far sweeter in its ancient days,
Far sweeter was it, when its peopled ground
With fairy domes and dazzling tow'rs was crown'd.

Where in the midst those verdant pillars spring,
Rose the proud palace of the Elfin king;
For every hedge of vegetable green,

For every hedge or vegetable green,
In happier years a crowded street was seen,
Nor all those leaves, that now the prospect
grace,

Could match the numbers of its pigmy race.

What urg'd this mighty empire to its fate,
A tale of woe and wonder, I relate.

When Albion rul'd the land, whose lineage
came

From Neptune mingling with a mortal dame,
Their midnight pranks the sprightly fairies
play'd

On ev'ry hill, and danc'd in every shade.

But, foes to sun-shine, most they took delight

In dells and dales conceal'd from human sight:

There hew'd their houses in the arching rock ;

s Or scoop'd the bosom of the blasted oak ;

Or heard, o'ershow'd by some shelving hill,

! The distant murmurs of the falling rill.

They, rich in pilfer'd spoils, indulg'd their mirth,
And pity'd the huge wretched sons of earth.
Even now, 'tis said, the hinds o'erhear their strain,

And strive to view their airy forms in vain :
They to their cells at man's approach repair,
Like the shy leveret, or the mother hare,
The whilst poor mortals startle at the sound
Of unseen footsteps on the haunted ground.

Amid this garden, then with woods o'er-grown,

Stood the lov'd seat of royal Oberon.
From every region to his palace gate
Came peers and princes of the fairy state,
Who, rank'd in council round the sacred shade,
Their monarch's will and great behests obey'd.
From Thames' fair banks, by lofty tow'rs adorn'd,

With loads of plunder oft his chiefs return'd :
Hence in proud robes, and colors bright and gay,

Shone every knight and every lovely fay.
Whoe'er on Powell's dazzling stage display'd,
Hath fam'd king Pepin and his court survey'd,
May guess, if old by modern things we trace,
The pomp and splendor of the fairy race.

By magic fenc'd, by spells encompass'd round,

No mortal touch'd this interdicted ground ;
No mortal enter'd, those alone who came
Stolen from the couch of some terrestrial dame :
For oft of babes they robb'd the matron's bed,
And left some sickly changeling in their stead.

It chanc'd a youth of Albion's royal blood
Was foster'd here, the wonder of the wood ;
Milkah, for wiles above her peers renown'd,
Deep-skill'd in charms and many a mystic sound,

As through the regal dome she sought for prey,
Observ'd the infant Albion where he lay
In mantles broider'd o'er with gorgeous pride,
And stole him from the sleeping mother's side.

Who now but Milkah triumphs in her mind?
Ah wretched nymph, to future evils blind !
The time shall come when thou shalt dearly pay

The theft, hard-hearted ! of that guilty day :
Thou in thy turn shalt like the queen repine,
And all her sorrows doubled shall be thine :
He who adorns thy house, the lovely boy
Who now adorns it, shall at length destroy.

Two hundred moons in their pale course had seen

The gay-rob'd fairies glimmer on the green,
And Albion now had reach'd in youthful prime

To nineteen years, as mortals measure time.
Flush'd with resistless charms he fir'd to love
Each nymph and little Dryad of the grove ;
For skilful Milkah spar'd not to employ
Her utmost art to rear the princely boy :
Each supple limb she swath'd, and tender bone,
And to the Elfin standard kept him down :

She robb'd dwarf-elders of their fragrant fruit,
And fed him early with the daisy's root,
Whence through his veins the powerful juices ran,

And form'd in beauteous miniature the man.
Yet still, two inches taller than the rest,
His lofty port his human birth confess'd ;
A foot in height, how stately did he show !
How look superior on the crowd below !
What knight like him could toss the rushy lance !

Who move so graceful in the mazy dance !
A shape so nice, or features half so fair,
What elf could boast ! or such a flow of hair !
Bright Kenna saw, a princess born to reign,
And felt the charmer burn in every vein.
She, heiress to this empire's potent lord,
Prais'd like the stars, and next the moon ador'd,
She whom at distance thrones and princedom view'd,

To whom proud Oriel and Azuriel su'd,
In her high palace languish'd, void of joy,
And pin'd in secret for a mortal boy.

He too was smitten, and discreetly strove,
By courtly deeds to gain the virgin's love ;
For her he cull'd the fairest flowers that grew,
Ere morning suns had drain'd their fragrant dew ;

He chas'd the hornet in his mid-day flight,
And brought her glow-worms in the noon of night ;

When on ripe fruit she cast a wishing eye,
Did ever Albion think the tree too high ?
He show'd her where the pregnant goldfinch hung,

And the wren-mother brooding o'er her young ;
To her th' inscription on their eggs he read,
(Admire, ye clerks, the youth whom Milkah bred !)

To her he show'd each herb of virtuous juice,
Their powers distinguish'd, and describ'd their use :

All vain their powers, alas ! to Kenna prove,
And well sung Ovid, There's no herb for love.

As when a ghost, enlarg'd from realms below,

Seeks its old friend to tell some secret woe,
The poor shade shivering stands, and must not break

His painful silence, 'till the mortal speak ;
So far'd it with the little love-sick maid,
Forbid to utter what her eyes betray'd.

He saw her anguish, and reveal'd his flame,
And spar'd the blushes of the tongue-ty'd dame.
The day would fail me, should I reckon o'er
The sighs they lavish'd, and the oaths they swore ;

In words so melting, that, compar'd with those,
The nicest courtship of terrestrial beaux
Would sound like compliments from country-clowns

To red-cheek sweethearts in their home-span [gowns.
All in a lawn of many a various hue,
A bed of flowers (a fairy forest) grew ;

'Twas here one noon, the gaudiest of the May,
The still, the secret, silent hour of day,
Beneath a lofty tulip's ample shade
Sat the young lover and th' immortal maid.
They thought all fairies slept; ah luckless pair!
Hid, but in vain, in the sun's noon-tide glare!
When Albion leaning on his Kenna's breast,
Thus all the softness of his soul express'd:

"All things are hush'd. The sun's meridian
" rays

" Veil the horizon in one mighty blaze;
" Nor moon nor star in heav'n's blue arch is
" seen

" With kindly rays to silver o'er the green,
" Grateful to fairy eyes; they secret take
" Their rest, and only wretched mortals wake.

" This dead of day I fly to thee alone,
" A world to me, a multitude in one.

" Oh sweet as dew-drops on these flowery lawns,
" When the sky opens and the evening dawns!

" Straight as the pink, that tow'rs so high in air,
" Soft as the blue-bell! as the daisy, fair!

" Blest be the hour, when first I was convey'd
" An infant captive to this blissful shade!

" And bless'd the hand that did my form refine,
" And shrunk my stature to a match with thine!

" Glad I for thee renounce my royal birth,
" And all the giant-daughters of the earth.

" Thou, if thy breast with equal ardor burn,
" Renounce thy kind, and love for love return;

" So from us two, combin'd by nuptial ties,
" A race unknown of demi-gods shall rise.

" Oh speak, my love, my vows with vows repay,
" And sweetly swear my rising fears away!"

To whom (the shining azure of her eyes
More brighten'd) thus th' enamour'd maid replies:

" By all the stars, and first the glorious moon,
" I swear, and by the head of Oberon,

" A dreadful oath! no prince of fairy line
" Shall e'er in wedlock plight his vows with

" mine.
" Where'er my footsteps in the dance are seen,

" May toadstools rise, and mildews blast the
" green! [flowers,

" May the keen east-wind blight my fav'rite
" And snakes and spotted adders haunt my

" bowers!
" Confin'd whole ages in an hemlock shade,

" There rather pine I a neglected maid;
" Or worse, exil'd from Cynthia's gentle rays,

" Parch in the sun a thousand summer days,
" Than any prince, a prince of fairy line,

" In sacred wedlock plight his vows with mine."
She ended: and with lips of rosy hue

Dipt five times over in ambrosial dew,
Stifled his words. When, from his covert
rear'd,

The frowning brow of Oberon appear'd.
A sun-flower's trunk was near, whence (killing sight!)

The monarch issu'd, half an ell in height:

Full on the pair a furious look he cast,
Nor spoke, but gave his bugle-horn a blast,

That through the woodland echo'd far and wide,
And drew a swarm of subjects to his side.

A hundred chosen knights, in war renown'd,
Drive Albion banish'd from the sacred ground;
And twice ten myriads guard the bright abodes,
Where the proud king, among his demi-gods,
For Kenna's sudden bridal bids prepare,
And to Azuriel gives the weeping fair.

If fame in arms, with ancient birth combin'd,
And faultless beauty, and a spotless mind,
To love and praise can generous souls incline,
That love, Azuriel, and that praise were thine.
Blood, only less than royal, fill'd thy veins,
Proud was thy roof, and large thy fair domains.
Where now the skies high Holland-house invades, [shades,

And short-liv'd Warwick sadden'd all the
Thy dwelling stood; nor did in him afford
A nobler owner, or a lovelier lord.

For thee an hundred fields produc'd their store,
And by that name ten thousand vassals swore;
So lov'd thy name, that, at their monarch's
All Fairies shouted with a gen'ral voice. [choice,
Oriel alone a secret rage suppress'd,

That from his bosom heav'd the golden vest.
Along the banks of Thame his empire ran,
Wide was his range, and populous his clan.
When cleanly servants, if we trust old tales,
Besides their wages, had good fairy vails,
Whole heaps of silver tokens nightly paid
The careful wife or the neat dairy maid, [bribes
Sunk not his stores, with smiles and powerful
He gain'd the leaders of his neighbour tribes,
And ere the night the face of heav'n had chang'd,
Beneath his banners half the fairies rang'd.

Meanwhile driv'n back to earth, a lonely way
The cheerless Albion wander'd half the day,
A long, long journey, choak'd with brakes and thorns,

Ill-measur'd by ten thousand barley-corns.
Tir'd out at length, a spreading stream he spy'd
Fed by old Thame, a daughter of the tide:

'Twas then a spreading stream, though now, its
fame

Obscur'd, it bears the creek's inglorious name,
And creeps, as through contracted bounds it
A leap for boys in these degen'rate days. [strays,

On the clear crystal's verdant bank he stood,
And thrice look'd backward on the fatal wood,
And thrice he groan'd, and thrice he beat his
breast,

And thus in tears his kindred gods address'd:

" If true, ye wat'ry powers, my lineage came
" From Neptune mingling with a mortal dame;
" Down to his court, with coral garlands
" crown'd, [sound,

" Through all your grottoes waft my plaintive
" And urge the god, whose trident shakes the
" earth,

" To grace his offspring, and assert my birth."
He said. A gentle Naiad heard his pray'r,
And, touch'd with pity for a lover's care,
Shoots to the sea, where low beneath the tides
Old Neptune in th' unfathom'd depth resides.

Rous'd at the news, the sea's stern sultan swore
Revenge, and scarce from present arms forbore;
But first the nymph his harbinger he sends,
And to her care his fav'rite boy commends.

As through the Thames her backward course
she guides,
Driven up his current by the reflux tides,
Along his banks the pigmy legions spread
She spies, and haughty Oriel at their head.
Soon with wrong'd Albion's name the host she fires,

And counts the ocean's god among his sires;
"The ocean's god, by whom shall be o'erthrown
"(Styx heard his oath) the tyrant Oberon.

"See here beneath a toadstool's deadly gloom
"Lies Albion: him the Fates your leader
"doom.

"Hear and obey; 'tis Neptune's powerful call,
"By him Azuriel and his king shall fall."

She said. They bow'd: and on their shield up-bore

With shouts their new-saluted emperor.
Even Oriel smil'd: at least to smile he strove,
And hopes of vengeance triumph'd over love.
See now the mourner of the lonely shade
By gods protected, and by hosts obey'd,
A slave, a chief, by fickle Fortune's play,
In the short course of one revolving day.

What wonder, if the youth, so strangely blest,
Felt his heart flutter in his little breast!
His thick-embattel'd troops, with secret pride,
He views extended half an acre wide;
More light he treads, more tall he seems to rise,
And struts a straw-breadth nearer to the skies.

O for thy Muse, great Bard*, whose lofty strains

In battle join'd the Pigmies and the Cranes!
Each gaudy knight, had I that warmth divine,
Each color'd legion in my verse should shine,
But simple I, and innocent of art,
The tale that sooth'd my infant years impart,
The tale I heard whole winter eves untir'd,
And sing the battles that my nurse inspir'd.

Now the shrill corn-pipes, echoing loud to arms,

To rank and file reduce the straggling swarms.
Thick rows of spears at once with sudden glare,
A grove of needles, glitter in the air;
Loose in the wind small ribbon streamers flow,
Dipt in all colors of the heav'nly bow,
And the gay host, that now its march pursues,
Gleams o'er the meadows in a thousand hues.

On Buda's plains thus formidably bright,
Shone Asia's sons, a pleasing dreadful sight.
In various robes their silken troops were seen,
The blue, the red, and prophet's sacred green:
When blooming Brunswick near the Danube's
flood,

First stain'd his maiden sword in Turkish blood.

Unseen and silent march the slow brigades
Through pathless wilds, and unfrequented
shades,

In hope already, vanquish'd by surprise,
In Albion's power the fairy empire lies;
Already has he seiz'd on Kenna's charms,
And the glad beauty trembles in his arms.

The march concludes; and now in prospect
near,

But fenc'd with arms, the hostile towers appear:
For Oberon, or Druids falsely sing,
Wore his prime visir in a magic ring,
A subtle spright, that opening plots foretold
By sudden dimness on the beamy gold.

Hence, in a crescent form'd, his legions bright
With beating bosoms waited for the fight;
To charge their foes they march, a glittering band,

And in their van doth bold Azuriel stand.

What rage that hour doth Albion's soul pos-
Let chiefs imagine, and let lovers guess! [sess
Forth issuing from his ranks, that strove in vain
To check his course, athwart the dreadful plain
He strides indignant: and with haughty cries
To single fight the fairy prince defies.

Forbear, rash youth, th' unequal war to try;
Nor, sprung from mortals, with immortals vie.
No god stands ready to avert thy doom,
Nor yet thy grandsire of the waves is come.
My words are vain—no words the wretch can
move,

By beauty dazzled, and bewitch'd by love:
He longs, he burns to win the glorious prize,
And sees no danger, while he sees her eyes.

Now from each host the eager warriors start,
And furious Albion flings his hasty dart:
'Twas feather'd from the bee's transparent wing,
And its shaft ended in a hornet's sting;
But, toss'd in rage, it flew without a wound,
High o'er the foe, and guiltless pierc'd the
ground.

Not so Azuriel's: with unerring aim
Too near the needle-pointed javelin came,
Drove through the seven-fold shield and silken
And lightly ras'd the lover's ivory breast. [vest
Rous'd at the smart, and rising to the blow,
With his keen sword he cleaves his fairy foe,
Sheer from the shoulder to the waist he cleaves,
And of one arm the tott'ring trunk bereaves.

His useless steel brave Albion wields no
more,

But sternly smiles, and thinks the combat o'er;
So had it been, had aught of mortal strain,
Or less than fairy felt the deadly pain.
But empyreal forms, howe'er in sight
Gash'd and dismember'd, easily unite.

As some frail cup of China's purest mould,
With azure varnish'd, and bedropp'd with gold,
Though broke, if cur'd by some nice virgin's
hands,

In its old strength and pristine beauty stands;
The tumults of the boiling Bohea braves,
And holds secure the Coffee's sable waves;
So did Azuriel's arm, if fame say true,
Rejoin the vital trunk whence first it grew;

And, whilst in wonder fix'd poor Albion stood,
Plung'd the curs'd sabre in his heart's warm
blood.

The golden broidery tender Milkah wove,
The breast to Kenna sacred and to love,
Lie rent and mangled: and the gaping wound
Pours out a flood of purple on the ground.

The jetty lustre sickens in his eyes;
On his cold cheeks the bloomy freshness dies;
"Oh Kenna, Kenna!" thrice he try'd to say,
"Kenna, farewell!" and sigh'd his soul away.
His fall the Dryads, with loud shrieks
deplore,

By sister Naiads echo'd from the shore, [vey'd,
Thence down to Neptune's secret realms con-
Through grots and glooms, and many a coral
shade.

The sea's great sire, with looks denouncing war,
The trident shakes, and mounts the pearly car:
With one stern frown the wide-spread deep deforms,

And works the madden'd ocean into storms.
O'er foaming mountains, and through bursting
tides,

Now high, now low, the bounding chariot rides,
'Till through the Thames in a loud whirlwind's roar

It shoots, and lands him on the destin'd shore.

Now fix'd on earth his tow'ring stature stood,
Hung o'er the mountains, and o'erlook'd the wood.

To Brumpton's grove one ample stride he took,
(The valleys trembled and the forest shook,)
The next huge step reach'd the devoted shade,
Where choak'd in blood was wretched Albion
laid; [join'd,

Where now the vanquish'd, with the victors
Beneath the regal banners stood combin'd.

Th' embattled dwarfs with rage and scorn he
And on their town his eye vindictive cast: [past,
Its deep foundations his strong trident cleaves,
And high in air th' uprooted empire heaves;
On his broad engine the vast ruin hung,
Which on the foe with force divine he flung;
Aghast the legions in th' approaching shade,
Th' inverted spires and rocking domes survey'd,
That downward tumbling on the host below
Crush'd the whole nation at one dreadful blow.
Towers, arms, nymphs, warriors, are together lost, [ghost.

And a whole empire falls to soothe sad Albion's
Such was the period, long restrain'd by Fate,
And such the downfall of the fairy state.

This dale, a pleasing region, not unblest,
This dale possess'd they; and had still possess'd,
Had not their monarch, with a father's pride,
Rent from her lord th' inviolable bride,
Rash to dissolve the contract seal'd above,
The solemn vows and sacred bonds of love.

Now, where his elves so brightly danc'd the
round,

No violet breathes, nor daisy paints the ground;

His towers and people fill one common grave,
A shapeless ruin, and a barren cave.

Beneath huge hills of smoking piles he lay,
Stunn'd and confounded a whole summer's day.
At length awak'd, (for what can long restrain Unbody'd spirits!) but awak'd in pain:

And as he saw the desolated wood,
And the dark den where once his empire stood,
Grief chill'd his heart: to his half-open'd eyes
In every oak a Neptune seem'd to rise:
He fled; and left, with all his trembling peers,
The long possession of a thousand years.

Through bush, through brake, through groves
and gloomy dales, [vales,

Through dank and dry, o'er streams and flowery
Direct they fled; but often look'd behind,
And stopp'd and startled at each rustling wind.

Wing'd with like fear, his abdicated bands
Disperse, and wander into different lands;
Part did beneath the Peak's deep caverns lie,
In silent glooms impervious to the sky;

Part on fair Avon's margin seek repose, [flows,
Whose stream o'er Britain's midmost region
Where formidable Neptune never came,

And seas and oceans are but known by fame;
Some to dark woods and secret shades retreat,
And some on mountains choose their airy seat.

There haply by the ruddy damsel seen,
Or shepherd-boy, they featly foot the green,
While from their steps a circling verdure springs;
But fly from towns, and dread the courts of kings.

Meanwhile sad Kenna, loth to quit the grove,
Hung o'er the body of her breathless love,
Try'd every art (vain arts!) to change his doom,
And vow'd (vain vows!) to join him in the tomb.
What could she do? the Fates alike deny
The dead to live, or fairy forms to die.

An herb there grows (the same old * Homer Ulysses bore to rival Circe's spells), [tells
Its root is ebon-black, but sends to light
A stem that bends with flow'rets milky white,
Moly the plant, which gods and fairies know,
But secret kept from mortal men below.

On his pale limbs its virtuous juice she shed,
And murmur'd mystic numbers o'er the dead,
When lo! the little shape by magic power
Grew less and less, contracted to a flower;
A flower, that first in this sweet garden smil'd,
To virgins sacred, and the Snow-drop styl'd.

The new-born plant with sweet regret she view'd, [dew'd,

Warm'd with her sighs, and with her tears be-
Its ripen'd seeds from bank to bank convey'd,
And with her lover whiten'd half the shade.

Thus won from death each spring she sees him
And glories in the vegetable snow, [grow,
Which now increas'd through wide Britannia's
plains,

Its parent's warmth and spotless name retains;
First leader of the flowery race aspires,
And foremost catches the sun's genial fires,

* Odyss. l. 10.

'Midst frosts and snows triumphant dares appear,
Mingles the seasons, and leads on the year.

Deserted now of all the pigmy race,
Nor man nor fairy touch'd this guilty place.
In heaps on heaps, for many a rolling age,
It lay accurs'd, the mark of Neptune's rage;
'Till great Nassau recloth'd the desert shade,
'Thence sacred to Britannia's monarchs made.
'Twas then the green-rob'd nymph, fair Kenna,
came

(Kenna that gave the neighb'ring town its name)
Proud when she saw th' ennobled garden shine
With nymphs and heroes of her lover's line.
She vow'd to grace the mansions once her own,
And picture out in plants the fairy town.
To far-fam'd Wise her flight unseen she sped,
And with gay prospects fill'd the craftsman's head,
Soft in his fancy drew a pleasing scheme,
And plann'd that landscape in a morning dream.

With the sweet view the sire of gardens fir'd,
Attempts the labor by the nymph inspir'd,
The walls and streets in rows of yew designs,
And forms the town in all its ancient lines;
The corner trees he lifts more high in air,
And girds the palace with a verdant square:
Nor knows, while round he views the rising
He builds a city as he plants his greens. [scenes,

With a sad pleasure the ærial maid
This image of her ancient realm survey'd;
How chang'd, how fall'n from its primæval
pride!

Yet here each moon, the hour her lover dy'd,
Each moon his solemn obsequies she pays,
And leads the dance beneath pale Cynthia's rays;
Pleas'd in the shades to head her fairy train,
And grace the groves where Albion's kinsmen
reign.

§ 150. A Moral Epistle.

THROUGH the wild maze of life's still varying
Bliss is alone th' important task of man. [plan,
All else is trifling, whether grave or gay,
A Newton's labors, or an infant's play;
Whether this vainly wastes th' unheeded sun,
Or those more vainly mark the course it run;
For of the two, sure smaller is the fault,
To err unthinking, than to err with thought;
But if, like them, we still must trifles use,
Harmless at least, like theirs, be those we choose.
Enough it is that reason blames the choice,
Join not to hers the wretch's plaintive voice;
Be folly free from guilt: let foplings play,
Or write, or talk, or dress, or die away.
Let those, if such there be, whose giant-mind
Superior tow'rs above their pigmy kind,
Unaided and alone, the realms explore,
Where hail and snow renew their treasur'd
store*.

Lo! heav'n spreads all its stars; let those ex-
What balanc'd pow'rs the rolling orbs sustain;

Nor in more humble scales, pernicious weigh Sense, justice, truth, against seducing pay.
So distant regions shall employ their thought,
And spotless senates here remain unbought.

Well had great Charles †, by early want in-spir'd,
With warring puppets, guiltless praise acquir'd;
So would that flame have mimic fights engag'd,
Which, fann'd by pow'r, o'er wasted nations
rag'd.

Curs'd be the wretch, should all the mouths
of fame [claim,
Wide o'er the world his deathless deeds pro-
Who like a baneful comet spreads his blaze,
While trembling crowds in stupid wonder gaze;
Whose potent talents serve his lawless will,
Which turns each virtue to a public ill,
With direful rage perverted right employs,
And heav'n's great ends with heav'n's best means destroys.

The praise of pow'r is his, whose hand supplies
Fire to the bold, and prudence to the wise;
While man this only real merit knows,
Fity to use the gifts which Heav'n bestows:
If savage valor be his vaunted fame,
The mountain-lion shall dispute his claim:
Or, if perfidious wiles deserve applause,
Through slighted vows, and violated laws;
The subtle plotter's title stands confess'd,
Whose dagger gores the trusting tyrant's breast.
And sure the villain less deserves his fate, [state.
Who stabs one wretch, than he who stabs a
Now, mighty hero! boast thy dear delights,
The price of toilsome days and sleepless nights;
Say, canst thou aught in purple grandeur find,
Sweet as the slumbers of the lowly hind?

Better are ye, the youthful and the gay,
Who jocund rove through pleasure's flow'ry way!
Yet seek not there for bliss! your toil were vain,
(And disappointed toil is double pain,)
Though from the living fount your nectar-bowls
Pour the soft balm upon your thirsty souls;
Though pure the spring, though every draught
sincere,
By pain unbitter'd, and unpall'd by fear;
Though all were full as high as thought can soar,

'Till fancy fires, and wishes crave no more:
Let lovely woman artless charms display,
Where truth and goodness bask in beauty's ray;
Let heav'nly melody luxuriant float [note;
In swelling sounds, and breathe the melting
Let gen'rous wines enliv'ning thoughts inspire,
While social converse soothes the genial fire:
If aught can yet more potent charms dispense,
Some stronger rapture, some sublimer sense;
Be these enjoy'd.—Then from the crowd arise
Some chief, in life's full pride maturely wise.
E'en you, my Lord, with titles, honors grac'd,
And higher still by native merit plac'd:

* Job, chap. xxxviii.

† Charles V., Emperor of Germany, who in his retirement amused himself with puppets. See Strada de bello Belgico.

By stinted talents to no sphere confin'd,
Free ranging every province of the mind :
Equally fit, a nation's weight to bear,
Or shine in circles of the young and fair ;
In grave debates instructed senates move,
Or melt the glowing dame to mutual love.
To heighten these, let conscious worth infuse
Sweet ease, and smiling mirth th' inspiring
Muse.

Then answer, thou of every gift possess'd,
Say, from thy soul, art thou sincerely blest !
To various objects wherefore dost thou range ?
Pleasure must cease, ere man can wish to change.

Hast thou not quitted Flaccus' sacred lay,
To talk with Bavius, or with Flavia play ;
When wasted nature shuns the large expense
Of deep attention to exalted sense ! [cloy,
Precarious bliss ! which soon, which oft must
And which how few, how very few enjoy !

Say, is there aught, on which, completely blest,

Fearless and full the raptur'd mind may rest ?
Is there aught constant ? Or, if such there be,
Can varying man be pleas'd with constancy ?
Mark then what sense the blessing must employ !

The senses change, and loathe accustom'd joy :
Eden in vain immortal sweets displays,
If the taste sickens, or our frame decays.

The range of life contracted limits bound ;
Yet more confin'd is pleasure's faithless round :
Fair op'ning to the sight, when first we run,
But, ah ! how alter'd, when again begun !
When tir'd we view the same known prospect o'er,

And lagging, tread the steps we trod before.
Now clogg'd with spleen, the lazy current flows,
Through doubts, and fears, and self-augmenting
woes ;

'Till sated, loathing, hopeless here of bliss,
Some plunge to seek it into death's abyss.

Of all superfluous wealth's unnumber'd stings,
The sharpest is that knowledge which it brings :
Enjoyment purchas'd makes its object known,
And then, alas ! each soft illusion's flown ;
Love's promis'd sweet, ambition's lofty scheme,
The painter's image, and the poet's theme.

These, in perspective fair exalted high,
Attract with seeming charms the distant eye ;
But when by envious Fortune plac'd too near,
Mis-shapen forms, and grosser tints appear :
Where lovely Venus led her beauteous train,
Some fiend gigantic holds her monstrous reign ;
Crowns, sceptres, laurels are confusely strow'd,
A wild, deform'd, unmeaning, heavy load.

Some pleasures here with sparing hand are giv'n, [heav'n ;

That sons of earth should taste their promis'd
But what was meant to urge us to the chace,
Now stops, or sideways turns our devious race :
Though still to make the destin'd course more
plain,

Thick are our erring paths beset with pain ;

Nor has one object equal charms to prove
The fitting centre of our restless love.
And when the great Creator's will had join'd,
Unequal pair ! the body and the mind,
Lest the proud spirit should neglect her clay,
He bade corporeal objects thought convey ;
Each strong sensation to the soul impart,
Ecstatic transport or afflicting smart :
By that entic'd, the useful she enjoys ;
By this deterr'd, she flies whate'er destroys :
Hence from the dagger's point sharp anguish
flows,

And the soft couch is spread with sweet repose
In something frail, though gen'ral this de-
For some exceptions every rule confine : [sign ;
Yet few were they, while nature's genuine store
Supply'd our wants, nor man yet sought for
more ;

Ere diff'rent mixtures left no form the same,
And vicious habits chang'd our sickly frame.
Now subtle art may gild the venom'd pill,
And bait with soothing sweets destructive ill.

To narrow self heav'n's impulse unconfin'd
Diffusive reigns, and takes in all our kind.
The smile of joy reflected joy imparts ;
The wretch's groans pierce sympathising hearts.
Yet not alike are all conjoin'd with all,
Nor throng with rival heat to nature's call :
By varying instinct different ties are known,
While love superior points to each his own ;
Those next the reach of our assisting hands,
And those to whom we're linked by kindred bands ; [care,

Those who most want, and best deserve our
In warmer streams the sacred influence share :
Ambrosial sweets her infant's lip distils,
While through the mother's heart quick rapture thrills.

The social fires friend, servant, neighbour claim,
Which blaze collected in the patriot's flame :
Hence Britain throbs superior in thy soul,
Nor idly wak'st thou for the distant pole.

Yet farther still the saving instinct moves,
And to the future wide extends our loves ;
Glow in our bosoms for an unborn race,
And warms us mutual to the kind embrace.
For this, to man was giv'n the graceful air ;
For this, was woman form'd divinely fair.

But now to pleasure sensual views confin'd,
Reach not the use, for which it was design'd :
To this one point our hopes, our wishes tend,
And thus mistake the motive for the end.
Whate'er sensations from enjoyment flow,
Our erring thought to matter's force would owe ;

To that ascribe our pleasures and our pains,
And blindly for the cause mistake the means ;
In od'rous meads the vernal gale we praise,
Or the dread storm, that blows the wintry seas ;
While he's unheeded, who alone can move,
Claims all our fears, and merits all our love ;
Alone to souls can sense and thought convey,
Through the dark mansions of surrounding clay.

Man, part from heav'n, and part from humble earth,
 A motley substance, takes his various birth;
 Close link'd to both, he hangs in diff'rent chains,
 The pliant fetter length'ning as he strains,
 If, bravely conscious of her native fires,
 To the bold height his nobler frame aspires;
 Near as she soars to join th' approaching skies,
 Our earth still lessens to her distant eyes.
 But if o'erpois'd she sinks, her downward course
 Each moment weighs, with still augmenting force;
 Low and more low, the burden'd spirits bends,
 While weaker still each heav'nly link extends;
 'Till prostrate, grov'ling, fetter'd to the ground,
 She lies in matter's heap o'erwhelm'd and bound.
 Wrapt in the toils of sin, just heav'n employs
 What caus'd her guilt, to blast her lawless joys:
 Love, potent guardian of our length'ning race,
 Unnerves the feeble lecher's cold embrace;
 And appetite, by nature giv'n to save,
 Sinks the gorg'd glutton in his early grave.

What sends yon fleet o'er boist'rous seas to roll,
 Beneath the burning line, and frozen pole?
 Why ravage men the hills, the plains, the woods?
 Why spoil all nature, earth, and air, and floods?
 Seek they some prize to help a sinking state?
 No!—this must all be done ere * Bernard eat.
 Tell it some untaught savage; with surprise
 He asks, "How vast must be that giant's size!
 "How great his pow'r, who thousands can "employ!" [stroy!"
 "How great his force, who millions can de-
 But if the savage would, more curious, know
 What potent virtues from such viands flow,
 What blest effects they cause—consult with Sloane,

Let him explain the colic, gout, and stone.
 Pleasure's for use; it differs in degree,
 Proportion'd to the thing's necessity.
 Hence various objects variously excite,
 And diff'rent is the date of each delight;
 But when th' allotted end we once attain,
 Each step beyond it, is a step to pain.
 Nor let us murmur—Hath not earth a store
 For every want? it was not meant for more.

Blest is the man, as far as earth can bless,
 Whose measur'd passions reach no wild excess;
 Who, urg'd by nature's voice, her gifts enjoys,
 Nor other means, than nature's force, employs.
 While warm with youth the sprightly current
 flows,
 Each vivid sense with vig'rous rapture glows;
 And when he droops beneath the hand of age,
 No vicious habit stings with fruitless rage;
 Gradual, his strength, and gay sensations cease,
 While joys tumultuous sink in silent peace.

Far other is his lot, who, not content
 With what the bounteous care of nature meant,

With labor'd skill would all her joys dilate,
 Sublime their sense, and lengthen out their date:

Add, blend, compose, each various mixture try,
 And wind up appetite to luxury.

Thus guilty art unknown desires implants,
 And viler arts must satisfy their wants;
 When to corruption by himself betray'd,
 Gold blinds the slave, whom luxury has made.

The hand that form'd us, must some use intend,

It gives us pow'rs proportion'd to that end;
 And happiness may justly be defin'd,
 A full attainment of the end design'd.
 Virtue and wisdom this alike implies,
 And blest must be the virtuous and the wise.

Bliss is ordain'd for all, since Heaven intends
 All beings should attain their destin'd ends:
 For this the fair idea shines confess'd
 To every mind, and glows in every breast.
 Compar'd with this, all mortal joys are vain;
 Inspir'd by this, we restless onward strain.
 High though we mount, the object mounts more
 high,

Eludes our grasp, and mingles with the sky.
 With nothing less th' aspiring soul's content,
 For nothing less her gen'rous flame was meant;
 Th' unerring rule which all our steps should guide,

The certain test, by which true good is try'd.
 Blest when we reach it, wretched while we miss, [bliss.

Our joys, our sorrows prove, there must be
 Nor can this be some visionary dream,
 Where heated fancy forms the flatt'ring scheme.
 There sure is bliss—else, why by all desir'd?
 What guileful pow'r has the mad search in-
 Could accident produce in all the same, [spir'd?
 Or a vain shadow raise a real flame?

When nature in the world's distended space,
 Or fill'd, or almost fill'd each smaller place;
 Careful in meanest matter to produce
 Each single motion for some certain use;
 Hard was the lot of her first fav'rite, man,
 Faulty the scheme of his contracted span,
 If that alone must know an useless void,
 And he feel longings ne'er to be enjoy'd.

That only can produce consummate joy,
 Which equals all the pow'rs it would employ;
 Such fitting object to each talent giv'n,
 Earth cannot fit what was design'd for heav'n.
 Why then is man with gifts sublimest fraught,
 And active will, and comprehensive thought?
 For what is all this waste of mental force?
 What! for a house, a coach, a dog, a horse?
 Has nature's Lord inverted nature's plan?
 Is man now made for what was made for man?

There must be pleasures past the reach of
 sense,

Some nobler source must happiness dispense:
 Reason, arise! and vindicate thy claim,
 Flash on our minds the joy-infusing flame;

* A Frenchman rendered famous for a most extravagant expense in eating.

Pour forth the fount of light, whose endless store [more.
Thought drinks insatiate, while it thirsts for
And thou, seraphic flame! who couldst inspire
The prophet's voice, and wrap his soul in fire;
Ray of th' eternal beam! who canst pervade
The distant past, and future's gloomy shade;
While trembling reason tempts heav'n's dazzling height,
Sublime her force, and guide her dubious flight;
Strengthen'd by thee! she bears the streaming blaze, [rays,
And drinks new light from truth's immortal
Great, only evidence of things divine!
By thee reveal'd, the mystic wonders shine!
What puzzled sophists vainly would explore,
What humbled pride in silence must adore,
What plainly mark'd in heav'n's deliver'd page,
Makes the taught hind more wise than Greece's sage.

Yet reason proves thee in her low degree,
And owns thy truths, from their necessity.

Conspicuous now is happiness display'd,
Possessing him for whom alone we're made.
For he alone all human bliss completes,
To him alone th' expanding bosom beats;
Who fills each faculty, each pow'r can move,
Exerts all thought, and deep absorbs all love;
Whose ceaseless being years would tell in vain,
Whose attributes immense all bounds disdain.
No sickly taste the heav'nly rapture cloy,
Nor wearied senses sink in whelming joys;
While, rais'd above low matter's grosser frame,
Pure spirit blazes in his purer flame.
Such are th' immortal blessings that attend
The just, the good, the patriot, and the friend.
Nor such alone in distant prospect cheer,
They taste heav'n's joys anticipated here.
These in the smiling cups of pleasure flow,
Or, mingling, soothe the bitter stream of woe;
These pay the loss of honors and of place,
And teach that guilt alone is true disgrace;
These with the glorious exile cheerful rove,
And, far from courts, fresh bloom in Curio's grove.

Long may such bliss, by such enjoy'd, attest,
The greatly virtuous are the greatly blest!
Enough there are amidst yon gorgeous train,
Who, wretched, prove all other joys are vain.

So shines the truth these humble lines un-
"Fair virtue ever is unwisely sold." [fold,
Too mean a price sublimest fortune brings,
Too mean the wealth, the smiles, the crowns of
kings:

For rais'd o'er these, she makes our bliss secure,
The present pleasing, and the future sure.
While prosp'rous guilt a sad reverse appears,
And in the tasteless now, the future fears.

SONNET I.

O *, whom virtue makes the worthy heir
Of **'s titles, and of *'s estate,

Blest in a wife, whose beauty, though so rare,
Is the least grace of all that round her wait.
While other youths, sprung from the good and great,
In devious paths of pleasure seek their bane,
Reckless of wisdom's lore, of birth, or state,
Meanly debauch'd, or insolently vain;
Through Virtue's sacred gate to honor's fane
You and your fair associate ceaseless climb
With glorious emulation, sure to gain
A meed, shall last beyond the reign of Time:
From your example long may Britain see,
Degen'rate Britain, what the great should be!

§ 152. SONNET II.

WISELY, O C*, enjoy the present hour,
The present hour is all the time we have,
High God the rest has plac'd beyond our pow'r, Consign'd, perhaps, to grief—or to the grave.

Wretched the man who toils ambition's slave;
Who pines for wealth, or sighs for empty fame; [prave,
Who rolls in pleasures which the mind de-
Bought with severe remorse, and guilty shame.

Virtue and knowledge be our better aim;
These help us ill to bear, or teach to shun;
Let Friendship cheer us with her gen'rous
flame,

Friendship, the sum of all our joys in one:
So shall we live each moment fate has giv'n;
How long, or short, let us resign to Heav'n.

WHEN black-brow'd Night her dusky mantle
spread,

And wrapt in solemn gloom the sable sky;
When soothing Sleep her opiate dew had shed,
And seal'd in silken slumbers every eye:
My wakeful thoughts admit no balmy rest,
Nor the sweet bliss of soft oblivion share;
But watchful woe distracts my aching breast,
My heart the subject of corroding care:
From haunts of men with wand'ring steps and

I solitary steal, and soothe my pensive woe.

Yet no fell passion's rough discordant rage
Untun'd the music of my tranquil mind:
Ambition's tinsell'd charms could ne'er engage,
No harbour there could sordid av'rice find:
From lust's foul spring my grief disdains to flow,
No sighs of envy from my bosom break,
But soft compassion melts my soul to woe,
And social tears fast trickle down my cheek;

Ah me! when nature gives one general groan,
Each heart must beat with woe, each voice responsive mourn.

Sinking in night each vital form is seen,
Like air-blown bubbles on the wat'ry plain;
* Fell Death, like brooding Harpy, the repast
Will snatch with talons foul, or sour its grateful taste.

IV.

Ye smiling glories of the youthful year,
That ope your fragrant bosoms to the day,
That clad in all the pride of spring appear,
And steep'd in dew your silken leaves display:
In Nature's richest robes though thus bedight,
Though her soft pencil trace your various dye,
Though lures your roseate hue the charmed sight,
Though odors sweet your nect'rous breath supply,
Soon on your leaves Time's cank'rous tooth shall
Your dulcet dew exhale, your beauteous bloom decay.

V.

Ye hedge-row elms, beneath whose spreading shade
The grazing herds defy the rattling shower;
Ye lofty oaks, in whose wide arms display'd,
The clam'rous rook builds high his airy bower;
Stript by hoar Winter's rough inclement rage,
In mournful heaps your leafy honors lie,
E'en your hard ribs shall feel the force of age,
And your bare trunks the friendly shade deny;
No more by cheerful vegetation green,
Your sapless boles shall sink, and quit th' evanid scene.

VI.

Ye feather'd warblers of the vernal year
That careless sing, nor fear the frowns of fate,
Tune your sad notes to death and winter drear!
Ill suit these mirthful strains your transient state.
Nor more with cheerful song nor sprightly air
Salute the blushes of the rising day,
With doleful ditties, drooping wings repair
To the lone covert of the nightly spray:
Where love-lorn Philomela strains her throat,
Surround the budding thorn, and swell the mournful note.

VII.

Come, sighing Elegy, with sweetest airs
Of melting music teach my grief to flow,

I too must mix my sad complaint with theirs,
Our fates are equal, equal be our woe.
Come, Melancholy, spread thy raven wing,
And in thy ebon car, by Fancy led,
To the dark charnel vault thy vot'ry bring,
The murky mansions of the mould'ring dead,
Where dank dew breathe, and taint the sickly skies,
Where in sad loathsome heaps all human glory

VIII.

Wrapt in the gloom of uncreated night
Secure we slept in senseless matter's arms,
Nor pain could vex, nor pallid fear affright,
Our quiet fancy felt no dream's alarms.
Soon as to life our animated clay
Awakes, and conscious being opes our eyes,
Care's fretful family at once dismay,
With ghastly air a thousand phantoms rise,
Sad Horror hangs o'er all the deep'ning gloom,
Grief prompts the labor'd sigh, Death opes the marble tomb.

IX.

Yet life's strong love intoxicates the soul,
And thirst of bliss inflames the fev'rish mind,
With eager draughts we drain the pois'nous bowl,
And in the dregs the cordial hope to find.
O Heav'n! for this light end were mortals made,
And plac'd on earth, with happiness in view,
To catch with cheated grasp the flitting shade,
And with vain toil the fancied form pursue,
Then give their short-liv'd being to the wind,
As the wing'd arrow flies, and leaves no track behind!

X.

Thus lonely wand'ring through the nightly shade
Against the stern decrees of stubborn Fate,
To mockful Echo my complaints I made,
Of life's short period, or its toilsome state.
'Tis death-like silence all, no sound I hear,
Save the hoarse raven croaking from the sky,
Or scaly beetle murmur'ing through the air,
Or screech-owl screaming with ill-omen'd cry;
Save when with brazen tongue from you high
The clock deep-sounding speaks, and counts the passing hour.

XI.

Pale Cynthia mounted on her silver car,
O'er heav'n's blue concave drives her nightly round;
See a torn abbey, wrapt in gloom, appear
Scatter'd in wild confusion o'er the ground.
Here rav'nous Ruin lifts her wasteful hands
O'er briar-grown grotts and bramble-shaded graves;
Safe from her wrath one weeping marble stands,
O'er which the mournful yew its umbrage waves:

* Vid. Virg. Æn. lib. iii. ver. 210, et seq.

Ope, ope thy pond'rous jaws, thou friendly tomb,
Close the sad deathful scene, and shroud me in thy womb !

XII.

Forth issuing lovely from the gloomy shade,
Which stately pines in phalanx deep com-
pose,

Fair above mortals comes a smiling maid
To soothe my sighs, and cheer my heart-felt woes.

Here nurs'd by Contemplation, matron sage,
Where with mute Solitude she loves to dwell,
In truth's fair lore she form'd her early age,
And trimm'd the midnight lamp in lonely cell, [to raise,

Here learn'd clear reason's heav'n-sprung light
O'er passion's low-born mists, or pleasure's spurious blaze.

XIII.

Her azure mantle flows with easy grace,
Nor fashion's folds constrain, nor custom's tie ;

An optic tube she bears, each sphere to trace
That rolls its rapid orbit round the sky :
Yet not to heav'n alone her view's confin'd ;
A clear reflecting plane she holds, to show
The various movements of the reas'ning mind,
How strange ideas link, and habits grow,
Passion's fierce impulse, will's free power to scan,
To paint the featur'd soul, and mark th' internal man.

XIV.

Whence these sad strains, said she, of plaintive grief, [rest !

Which pierce the sleep-clos'd ear of peaceful
Oft has the sick'ning mind here found relief, Here quell'd the throbbing tumults of the
breast :

Lift up thy leaden eyes to yon fair cloud,
Where moon-sprung Iris* blends her beau-teous dyes :

I lift them soon, and as I gazing stood,
The fleeting phantom in a moment flies ;
Where beam'd the gilded arch of gaudy hue,
Frowns the dark low'ring cloud all gloomy to the view.

XV.

Life's emblem fit, said I, that roscid bow !
The gay illusive pageant of an hour
To real semblance tricks her airy show,
Then sinks in night's dull arms, and is no
more !

Ah ! fool, said she, though now to fancy's sight
The violet pale, the blushing red decays,
Though now no painted cloud reflect the light,
Nor drops prismatic break the falling rays,
Yet still the colors live, though none appear,
Glow in the darting beam that gilds yon crystal sphere.

XVI.

Then let not Fancy with her vagrant blaze
Mislead in trackless paths of wild deceit ;
On reason's steady lamp still ardent gaze ;
Led by her sober light to Truth's retreat.
Though wond'ring Ign'rance sees each form
decay, [flow'r :
The breathless bird, bare trunk, and shrivel'd
New forms successive catch the vital ray,
Sing their wild notes, or smile th' allotted
hour,
And search creation's ample circuit round,
Though modes of being change, all life's immortal found.

XVII.

See the slow reptile grov'ling o'er the green,
That trails through slimy paths its cumbrous load,
Start in new beauty from the lowly scene,
And wing with flutt'ring pride th' etherial road ;
Burst their shell-prisons, see the feather'd kind,
Where in dark durance pent a while they lie,
Dispread their painted plumage to the wind,
Brush the brisk air, swift shooting through the sky,
Hail with their coral hymns the new-born day, Distend their joy-swoln breast, and carol the sweet lay.

XVIII.

See man by varied periods fixt by fate
Ascend perfection's scale by slow degree ;
The plant-like foetus quits its senseless state,
And helpless hangs sweet-smiling on the
knee ;
Soon outward objects steal into the brain,
Next prattling childhood lisps with mimic air,
Then mem'ry links her fleet ideal train,
And sober reason rises to compare,
The full-grown breast some manly passion
warms,
It pants for glory's meed, or beats to love's alarms.

XIX.

Then say, since nature's high behest appears
That living forms should change of being prove,
In which new joy the novel scene endears,
New objects rise to please, new wings to
move :
Since man too, taught by sage experience, knows
His frame revolving treads life's varying stage,
That the man-plant first vegetating grows,
Then sense directs, then reason rules in age ;
Say, is it strange, should death's all-dreaded hour
Waft to some unknown scenes, or wake some untry'd pow'r ?

XX.

The wise Creator wrapt in fleshly veil
The ray divine, the pure etherial mate ;

* A rainbow formed by the rays of the moon at night : an object often visible, though, from its languid color, not often observed.

Unschool'd in early prime, in riper years
Wretched and scorn'd still struts the bearded
boy :

The tingling rod bedew'd with briny tears
Shoots forth in graceful fruits of manly joy :
The painful cares that vex the toilsome spring
Shall plenteous crops of bliss in life's last harvest bring.

XXX.

She ceas'd, and vanish'd into sightless wind—
O'er my torn breast alternate passions sway,
Now Doubt desponding damps the wav'ring
mind,

Now Hope reviving sheds her cheerful ray.
Soon from the skies in heav'nly white array'd,
Faith, to my sight reveal'd, fair Cherub!
stood,

With life replete the volume she display'd,
Seal'd with the ruddy stains of crimson blood ;
Each fear now starts away, as spectres fly
When the sun's orient beam first gilds the purple sky.

XXXI.

Meanwhile the faithful herald of the day,
The village cock, crows loud with trumpet
shrill,

The warbling lark soars high, and morning gray
Lifts her glad forehead o'er the cloud-wrapt hill :
Nature's wild music fills the vocal vale ;

The bleating flocks that bite the dewy ground,
The lowing herds that graze the woodland dale,
And cavern'd echo, swell the cheerful sound ;
Homeward I bend with clear unclouded mind,
Mix with the busy world, and leave each care
behind.

§ 154. From the Shipwreck. FALCONER.

Now, borne impetuous o'er the boiling deeps,
Her course to Attic shores the vessel keeps :
The pilots, as the waves behind her swell,
Still with the wheeling stern their force repel.
For this assault should either quarter feel,
Again to flank the tempest she might reel.
The steersmen every bidden turn apply ;
To right and left the spokes alternate fly.
Thus when some conquer'd host retreats in fear,
The bravest leaders guard the broken rear ;
Indignant they retire, and long oppose
Superior armies that around them close ;
Still shield the flanks ; the routed squadrons
join ;

And guide the flight in one embodied line :
So they direct the flying bark before
Th' impelling floods that lash her to the shore.
As some benighted traveller, through the shade,
Explores the devious path with heart dismay'd ;
While prowling savages behind him roar,
And yawning pits and quagmires lurk before—
High o'er the poop the audacious seas aspire,
Uproll'd in hills of fluctuating fire.

As some fell conqueror, frantic with success,
Sheds o'er the nations ruin and distress ;

So while the wat'ry wilderness he roams,
Incens'd to sevenfold rage the tempest foams ;
And o'er the trembling pines, above, below,
Shrill through the cordage howls, with notes of
woe.

Now thunders, wafted from the burning zone,
Growl, from afar, a deaf and hollow groan !
The ship's high battlements, to either side
For ever rocking, drink the briny tide :
Her joints unhing'd, in palsied languors play,
As ice dissolves beneath the noon-tide ray.
The skies, asunder torn, a deluge pour ;
The impetuous hail descends in whirling shower.

High on the masts, with pale and livid rays,
Amid the gloom portentous meteors blaze.
Th' etherial dome, in mournful pomp array'd,
Now lurks behind impenetrable shade ;
Now, flashing round intolerable light,
Redoubles all the terrors of the night.
Such terror Sinai's quaking hill o'erspread,
When heaven's loud trumpet sounded o'er his
head.

It seem'd, the wrathful angel of the wind
Had all the horrors of the skies combin'd ;
And here to one ill-fated ship oppos'd,
At once the dreadful magazine disclos'd.
And lo ! tremendous o'er the deep he springs,
Th' inflaming sulphur flashing from his wings !
Hark ! his strong voice the dismal silence
breaks !

Mad chaos from the chains of death awakes !
Loud and more loud the rolling peals enlarge,
And blue on deck their blazing sides discharge :
There, all aghast, the shivering wretches stood,
While chill suspense and fear congeal'd their
blood.

Now in a deluge bursts the living flame,
And dread concussion rends th' etherial frame :
Sick earth convulsive groans from shore to shore,
And nature shuddering feels the horrid roar.
Still the sad prospect rises on my sight,
Reveal'd in all its mournful shade and light.
Swift through my pulses glides the kindling
fire,

As lightning glances on th' electric wire.
But ah ! the force of numbers strives in vain,
The glowing scene unequal to sustain.

But lo ! at last, from tenfold darkness born,
Forth issues o'er the wave the weeping morn.
Hail, sacred vision ! who, on orient wing,
The cheering dawn of light propitious bring !
All nature smiling hail'd the vivid ray,
That gave her beauties to returning day :
All but our ship, that, groaning on the tide,
No kind relief, no gleam of hope descri'd.
For now in front, her trembling inmates see
The hills of Greece emerging on the lee.
So the lost lover views that fatal morn,
On which, for ever from his bosom torn,
The nymph ador'd resigns her blooming charms
To bless with love some happier rival's arms.
So to Eliza dawn'd that cruel day,
That tore Aeneas from her arms away ;

That saw him parting, never to return,
Herself in funeral flames decreed to burn.
O yet in clouds, thou genial source of light,
Conceal thy radiant glories from our sight!
Go, with thy smile adorn the happy plain,
And gild the scenes where health and pleasure
reign;

But let not here, in scorn, thy wanton beam
Insult the dreadful grandeur of my theme!

While shoreward now the bounding vessel
Full in her van St. George's cliffs arise: [flies,
High o'er the rest a pointed crag is seen,
That hung projecting o'er a mossy green.
Nearer and nearer now the danger grows,
And all their skill relentless fates oppose.
For, while more eastward they direct the prow,
Enormous waves the quivering deck o'erflow.
While, as she wheels, unable to subdue
Her sallies, still they dread her broaching-to.
Alarming thought! for now no more a-lee
Her riven side could bear th' invading sea;
And if the following surge she scuds before,
Headlong she runs upon the dreadful shore;
A shore where shelves and hidden rocks abound,
Where death in secret ambush lurks around.
Far less dismay'd, Anchises' wandering son
Was seen the straits of Sicily to shun;
When Palinurus, from the helm, descry'd
The rocks of Scylla on his eastern side;
While in the west, with hideous yawn disclos'd,
His onward path Charybdis' gulph oppos'd;
The double danger as by turns he view'd,
His wheeling bark her arduous track pursu'd.
Thus, while to right and left destruction lies,
Between th' extremes the daring vessel flies.
With boundless involution, bursting o'er
The marble cliffs, loud-dashing surges roar.
Hoarse through each winding creek the tempest
raves,

And hollow rocks repeat the groan of waves.
Destruction round th' insatiate coast prepares,
To crush the trembling ship, unnumber'd snares.

But haply now she 'scapes the fatal strand,
Though scarce ten fathoms distant from the
land.

Swift as the weapon issuing from the bow,
She cleaves the burning waters with her prow;
And forward leaping with tumultuous haste,
As on the tempest's wing the isle she past.
With longing eyes, and agony of mind,
The sailors view this refuge left behind;
Happy to bribe, with India's richest ore,
A safe accession to that barren shore!

When in the dark Peruvian mine confin'd,
Lost to the cheerful commerce of mankind,
The groaning captive wastes his life away,
For ever exil'd from the realms of day;
Not equal pangs his bosom agonise,
When far above the sacred light he eyes,
While, all forlorn, the victim pines in vain,
For scenes he never shall possess again.

But now Athenian mountains they descry,
And o'er the surge Colonna frowns on high.

Beside the cape's projecting verge is plac'd
A range of columns, long by time defac'd;
First planted by devotion to sustain,
In elder times, Tritonia's sacred fane.
Foams the wild beach below with madd'ning
rage,

Where waves and rocks a dreadful combat
The sickly heaven, fermenting with its freight,
Still vomits o'er the main the feverish weight:
And now, while wing'd with ruin from on
high,

Through the rent cloud the ragged lightnings fly,
A flash, quick-glancing on the nerves of light,
Struck the pale helmsman with eternal night:
Rodmond, who heard a piteous groan behind,
Touch'd with compassion gaz'd upon the blind;
And while around his sad companions crowd,
He guides th' unhappy victim to the shroud.
Hie thee aloft, my gallant friend! he cries;
Thy only succour on the mast relies!
The helm, bereft of half its vital force,
Now scarce subdu'd the wild unbridled course:
Quick to th' abandon'd wheel Arion came,
The ship's tempestuous sallies to reclaim.
Amaz'd he saw her, o'er the sounding foam
Upborne, to right and left distracted roam.
So gaz'd young Phaeton, with pale dismay,
When mounted on the flaming car of day,
With rash and impious hand the stripling try'd
Th' immortal coursers of the sun to guide.—
The vessel, while the dread event draws nigh,
Seems more impatient o'er the waves to fly:
Fate spurs her on.—Thus issuing from afar,
Advances to the sun some blazing star;
And, as it feels th' attraction's kindling force,
Springs onward with accelerated course.

With mournful look the seamen ey'd the
strand,

Where death's inexorable jaws expand:
Swift from their minds elaps'd all dangers past,
As, dumb with terror, they beheld the last.
Now on the trembling shrouds, before, behind,
In mute suspense they mount into the wind.—
The Genius of the deep, on rapid wing,
The black eventful moment seem'd to bring.
The fatal sisters on the surge before,
Yok'd their infernal horses to the prore.—
The steersmen now receiv'd their last commands
To wheel the vessel sidelong to the strand.
Twelve sailors, on the foremast who depend,
High on the platform of the top ascend;
Fatal retreat! for while the plunging prow
Immerges headlong in the wave below,
Down-press'd by wat'ry weight the bowsprit
bends,

And from above the stem deep crashing rends.
Beneath her beak the floating ruins lie;
The foremast totters, unsustain'd on high:
And now the ship, fore-lifted by the sea,
Hurls the tall fabric backward o'er her lee,
While, in the general wreck, the faithful stay
Drags the main-topmast from its post away.
Flung from the mast, the seamen strive in vain
Through hostile floods their vessel to regain.

The waves they buffet, till, bereft of strength,
O'erpower'd they yield to cruel fate at length.
The hostile waters close around their head,
They sink for ever, number'd with the dead!

Those who remain their fearful doom await,
Nor longer mourn their lost companions' fate.
The heart that bleeds with sorrows all its own,
Forgets the pangs of friendship to bemoan.—
Albert and Rodmond and Palemon here,
With young Arion, on the mast appear;
E'en they, amid th' unspeakable distress,
In every look distracting thoughts confess;
In every vein the reflux blood congeals,
And every bosom fatal terror feels.
Inclos'd with all the demons of the main,
They view'd th' adjacent shore, but view'd in vain.

Such torments in the drear abodes of hell,
Where sad despair laments with rueful yell,
Such torments agonize the damned breast,
While fancy views the mansions of the blest.
For Heaven's sweet help their suppliant cries
implore;

But Heaven, relentless, deigns to help no more!
And now, lash'd on by destiny severe,
With horror fraught, the dreadful scene drew near!—

The ship hangs hovering on the verge of death,
Hell yawns, rocks rise, and breakers roar beneath!—

In vain, alas! the sacred shades of yore,
Would arm the mind with philosophic lore;
In vain they'd teach us, at the latest breath,
To smile serene amid the pangs of death.
E'en Zeno's self, and Epictetus old,
This fell abyss had shudder'd to behold.
Had Socrates, for godlike virtue fam'd,
And wisest of the sons of men proclaim'd,
Beheld this scene of phrensy and distress,
His soul had trembled to its last recess!—
O yet confirm my heart, ye powers above,
This last tremendous shock of fate to prove;
The tottering frame of reason yet sustain,
Nor let this total ruin whirl my brain!

In vain the cords and axes were prepar'd,
For now th' audacious seas insult the yard;
High o'er the ship they throw a horrid shade,
And o'er her burst, in terrible cascade.
Uplifted on the surge, to heaven she flies,
Her shatter'd top half buried in the skies.
Then headlong plunging thunders on the ground;
Earth groans! air trembles! and the deeps re-
sound!

Her giant bulk the dread concussion feels,
And, quivering with the wound, in torment reels.

So reels, convuls'd with agonising throes,
The bleeding bull beneath the murd'rer's blows.
Again she plunges! hark! a second shock
Tears her strong bottom on the marble rock!
Down on the vale of death, with dismal cries,
The fated victims shuddering roll their eyes
In wild despair! while yet another stroke,
With deep convulsion, rends the solid oak:

Till like the mine, in whose infernal cell
The lurking demons of destruction dwell,
At length asunder torn her frame divides,
And crashing spreads in ruin o'er the tides.

O were it mine with tuneful Maro's art
To wake to sympathy the feeling heart,
Like him the smooth and mournful verse to dress
In all the pomp of exquisite distress!
Then, too severely taught by cruel fate,
To share in all the perils I relate,
Then might I with unrivall'd strains deplore
Th' impervious horrors of a leeward shore.

As o'er the surge the stooping mainmast hung,
Still on the rigging thirty seamen clung:
Some, struggling, on a broken crag were cast,
And there by oozy tangles grappled fast:
A while they bore o'erwhelming billows' rage,
Unequal combat with their fate to wage;
Till all benumb'd and feeble they forego
Their slippery hold, and sink to shades below.
Some, from the main-yard-arm impetuous
thrown

On marble ridges, die without a groan.
Three with Palemon on their skill depend,
And from the wreck on oars and rafts descend.
Now on the mountain-wave on high they ride,
Then downward plunge beneath th' involving
tide,

Till one, who seems in agony to strive,
The whirling breakers heave on shore alive;
The rest a speedier end of anguish knew,
And prest the stony beach, a lifeless crew!

Next, O unhappy chief! th' eternal doom
Of Heaven decreed thee to the briny tomb!
What scenes of misery torment thy view!
What painful struggles of thy dying crew!
Thy perish'd hopes all buried in the flood,
O'erspread with corpses, red with human blood!
So pierc'd with anguish hoary Priam gaz'd,
When Troy's imperial domes in ruin blaz'd;
While he, severest sorrow doom'd to feel,
Expir'd beneath the victor's murdering steel.
Thus with his helpless partners till the last,
Sad refuge! Albert hugs the floating mast;
His soul could yet sustain the mortal blow,
But droops, alas! beneath superior woe:
For now soft nature's sympathetic chain
Tugs at his yearning heart with powerful strain;
His faithful wife for ever doom'd to mourn
For him, alas! who never shall return;
To black adversity's approach expos'd,
With want and hardships unforeseen enclos'd:
His lovely daughter left without a friend,
Her innocence to succour and defend;
By youth and indigence set forth a prey
To lawless guilt, that flatters to betray—
While these reflections rack his feeling mind,
Rodmond, who hung beside, his grasp re-
sign'd;

And, as the tumbling waters o'er him roll'd,
His outstretch'd arms the master's legs enfold.
Sad Albert feels his dissolution near,
And strives in vain his fetter'd limbs to clear;
For death bids every clinching joint adhere.

All faint, to heaven he throws his dying eyes,
And, "O protect my wife and child!" he cries:
The gushing streams roll back th' unfinish'd
sound!

He gasps, he dies, and tumbles to the ground;

Five only left of all the perish'd throng,
Yet ride the pine which shoreward drives along;
With these Arion still his hold secures,
And all the assaults of hostile waves endures.

O'er the dire prospect as for life he strives,
He looks if poor Palemon yet survives.

Ah wherefore, trusting to unequal art,
Didst thou, incautious, from the wreck depart?
Alas! these rocks all human skill defy,
Who strikes them once beyond relief must die;
And now, sore wounded, thou perhaps art tost
On these, or in some oozy cavern lost.

Thus thought Arion, anxious gazing round
In vain, his eyes no more Palemon found.
The demons of destruction hover nigh,
And thick their mortal shafts commission'd fly.
And now a breaking surge, with forceful sway,
Two next Arion furious tears away.

Hurl'd on the crags, behold, they gasp, they bleed!
And, groaning, cling upon th' elusive weed!
Another billow bursts in boundless roar!

Arion sinks! and Memory views no more!

Ha! total night and horror here preside!
My stunn'd ear tingles to the whizzing tide!
It is the funeral knell! and gliding near,
Methinks the phantoms of the dead appear!

But lo! emerging from the watery grave,
Again they float incumbent on the wave!
Again the dismal prospect opens round,
The wreck, the shores, the dying, and the drown'd!

And see! enfeebled by repeated shocks,
Those two who scramble on th' adjacent rocks,
Their faithless hold no longer can retain,
They sink o'erwhelm'd and never rise again!

Two with Arion yet the mast upbore,
That now above the ridges reach'd the shore:
Still trembling to descend, they downward gaze,
With horror pale, and torpid with amaze:
The floods recoil! the ground appears below!
And life's faint embers now rekindling glow:
A while they wait th' exhausted waves' retreat,
Then climb slow up the beach with hands and feet.

O Heaven! deliver'd by whose sovereign hand,
Still on the brink of hell they shuddering stand,
Receive the languid incense they bestow,
That damp with death appears not yet to glow.
To thee each soul the warm oblation pays,
With trembling ardor of unequal praise;
In every heart dismay with wonder strives,
And Hope the sicken'd spark of life revives;
Her magic powers their exil'd health restore,
Till horror and despair are felt no more.

A troop of Grecians who inhabit nigh,
And oft these perils of the deep descry,
Rous'd by the blustering tempest of the night,
Anxious had climb'd Colonna's neighbouring
height;

When gazing downward on th' adjacent flood,
Full to their view the scene of ruin stood;
The surf with mangled bodies strew'd around,
And those yet breathing on the sea-wash'd
ground!

Though lost to science and the nobler arts,
Yet nature's lore inform'd their feeling hearts;
Straight down the vale with hastening steps they hied,

Th' unhappy suff'ers to assist and guide.

Mean while those three escap'd beneath explore

The first advent'rous youth who reach'd the Panting, with eyes averted from the day,
Prone, helpless, on the tangly beach he lay—
It is Palemon:—oh! what tumults roll
With hope and terror in Arion's soul!

If yet unhurt he lives again to view
His friend and this sole remnant of our crew!
With us to travel through this foreign zone,
And share the future good or ill unknown.
Arion thus; but ah, sad doom of fate!

That bleeding Memory sorrows to relate,
While yet afloat on some resisting rock,
His ribs were dash'd and fractur'd with the shock:

Heart-piercing sight! those cheeks so late ar-
In beauty's bloom, are pale with mortal shade!
Distilling blood his lovely breast o'erspread,
And clogg'd the golden tresses of his head!
Nor yet the lungs by this pernicious stroke
Were wounded, or the vocal organs broke.
Down from his neck, with blazing gems array'd,
Thy image, lovely Anna, hung portray'd;
Th' unconscious figure smiling all serene,
Suspended in a golden chain was seen.

Hadst thou, soft maiden, in this hour of woe,
Beheld him writhing from the deadly blow,
What force of art, what language could express
Thine agony? thine exquisite distress?
But thou, alas! art doom'd to weep in vain
For him thine eyes shall never see again!
With dumb amazement pale, Arion gaz'd,
And cautiously the wounded youth uprais'd;
Palemon then, with cruel pangs oppress,
In faltering accents thus his friend address'd:

"O rescu'd from destruction late so nigh,
"Beneath whose fatal influence doom'd I lie;
"Are we then exil'd to this last retreat
"Of life, unhappy! thus decreed to meet?
"Ah! how unlike what yester-morn enjoy'd,
"Enchanting hopes, for ever now destroy'd!
"For wounded far beyond all healing power,
"Palemon dies, and this his final hour;
"By those fell breakers, where in vain I strove,
"At once cut off from fortune, life, and love!
"Far other scenes must soon present my sight,
"That lie deep-buried yet in tenfold night.
"Ah! wretched father of a wretched son,
"Whom thy paternal prudence has undone!
"How will remembrance of this blinded care
"Bend down thy head with anguish and despair!
"Such dire effects from avarice arise,
"That, deaf to nature's voice, and vainly woe,

" With force severe endeavours to control
 " The noblest passions that inspire the soul.
 " But O, thou sacred Power! whose law connects
 " Th' eternal chain of causes and effects,
 " Let not thy chastening ministers of rage
 " Afflict with sharp remorse his feeble age!
 " And you, Arion! who with these the last
 " Of all our crew survive the shipwreck past—
 " Ah! cease to mourn! those friendly tears restrain!
 " Nor give my dying moments keener pain!
 " Since heaven may soon thy wandering steps restore,
 " When parted hence, to England's distant [shore;
 " Shouldst thou, th' unwilling messenger of fate,
 " To him the tragic story first relate,
 " Oh! friendship's generous ardor then suppress!
 " Nor hint the fatal cause of my distress;
 " Nor let each horrid incident sustain
 " The lengthen'd tale to aggravate his pain.
 " Ah! then remember well my last request
 " For her who reigns for ever in my breast;
 " Yet let him prove a father and a friend,
 " The helpless maid to succour and defend.
 " Say, I this suit implor'd with parting breath,
 " So Heaven befriend him at his hour of death!
 " But oh! to lovely Anna shouldst thou tell
 " What dire untimely end thy friend befel,
 " Draw o'er the dismal scene soft pity's veil,
 " And lightly touch the lamentable tale:
 " Say that my love, inviolably true,
 " No change, no diminution ever knew.
 " Lo! her bright image, pendent on my neck,
 " Is all Palemon rescu'd from the wreck;
 " Take it, and say, when panting in the wave,
 " I struggled, life and this alone to save!
 " My soul that fluttering hastens to be free,
 " Would yet a train of thoughts impart to thee,
 " But strives in vain!—the chilling ice of death
 " Congeals my blood, and chokes the stream of breath:
 " Resign'd she quits her comfortless abode,
 " To course that long, unknown, eternal road.
 " O sacred Source of ever-living light!
 " Conduct the weary wanderer in her flight!
 " Direct her onward to that peaceful shore,
 " Where peril, pain, and death, are felt no more!
 " When thou some tale of hapless love shalt
 " That steals from pity's eye the melting tear,
 " Of two chaste hearts, by mutual passion join'd,
 " To absence, sorrow, and despair, consign'd;
 " Oh! then, to swell the tides of social woe,
 " That heal th' afflicted bosom they o'erflow,
 " While Memory dictates, this sad shipwreck tell,
 " And what distress thy wretched friend befel!
 " Then, while in streams of soft compassion drown'd,
 " The swains lament, and maidens weep around;

" While lisping children, touch'd with infant fear,
 " With wonder gaze, and drop th' unconscious [tear;
 " Oh! then this moral bid their souls retain,
 " All thoughts of happiness on earth are vain."
 The last faint accents trembled on his tongue,
 That now inactive to the palate clung;
 His bosom heaves a mortal groan—he dies!
 And shades eternal sink upon his eyes!
 As thus defac'd in death Palemon lay,
 Arion gaz'd upon the lifeless clay;
 Transfix'd he stood, with awful terror fill'd,
 While down his cheek the silent drops distill'd.
 Oh, ill-starr'd vot'ry of unspotted truth!
 Untimely perish'd in the bloom of youth,
 Should e'er thy friend arrive on Albion's land
 He will obey, though painful, thy command:
 His tongue the dreadful story shall display,
 And all the horrors of this dismal day!
 Disastrous day! what ruin hast thou bred!
 What anguish to the living and the dead!
 How hast thou left the widow all forlorn,
 And ever doom'd the orphan child to mourn,
 Through life's sad journey hopeless to complain!
 Can sacred justice these events ordain?
 But, O my soul! avoid that wondrous maze,
 Where, reason, lost in endless error, strays!
 As through this thorny vale of life we run,
 Great Cause of all effects, "thy will be done!"
 Now had the Grecians on the beach arriv'd,
 To aid the helpless few who yet surviv'd:
 While passing they behold the waves o'erspread
 With shatter'd raris and corpses of the dead,
 Three still alive, benumb'd and faint they find,
 In mournful silence on a rock reclin'd.
 The generous natives, mov'd with social pain,
 The feeble strangers in their arms sustain;
 With pitying sighs their hapless lot deplore,
 And lead them trembling from the fatal shore.

§ 155. Lewesdon Hill. CROWE.

UP to thy summit, Lewesdon, to the brow
 Of yon proud rising, where the lonely thorn
 Bends from the rude South-east with top cut sheer
 By his keen breath, along the narrow track,
 By which the scanty-pastured sheep ascend
 Up to thy furze-clad summit, let me climb,—
 My morning exercise,—and thence look round
 Upon the variegated scene, of hills
 And woods and fruitful vales and villages
 Half hid in tufted orchards, and the sea
 Boundless, and studded thick with many a sail.
 Ye dew-fed vapors, nightly balm, exhaled
 From earth, young herbs and flowers, that in Ascend as incense to the Lord of day, [the morn
 I come to breathe your odors; while they float
 Yet near this surface, let me walk embathed
 In your invisible perfumes, to health
 So friendly, nor less grateful to the mind,
 Administering sweet peace and cheerfulness.
 How changed is thy appearance, beauteous hill!

Thou hast put off thy wintry garb, brown heath
And russet fern, thy seemly-colour'd cloak
To bide the hoary frosts and dripping rains
Of chill December, and art gaily robed
In livery of the spring: upon thy brow
A cap of flowery hawthorn, and thy neck
Mantled with new-sprung furze and spangles thick

Of golden bloom: nor lack thee tufted woods
Adown thy sides: tall oaks of lusty green,
The darker fir, light ash, and the nesh tops
Of the young hazel join, to form thy skirts
In many a wavy fold of verdant wreath:—
So gorgeously hath Nature drest thee up
Against the birth of May: and, vested so,
Thou dost appear more gracefully array'd
Than fashion-mongering fops, whose gaudy
Fantastical as are a sick man's dreams, [shows,
From vanity to costly vanity
Change oftener than the moon. Thy comely dress,
From sad to gay returning with the year,
Shall grace thee still till Nature's self shall change.

These are the beauties of thy woodland scene
At each return of spring: yet some delight
Rather to view the change; and fondly gaze
On fading colours, and the thousand tints
Which Autumn lays upon the varying leaf:
I like them not, for all their boasted hues
Are kin to Sickliness; mortal decay
Is drinking up their vital juice; that gone,
They turn to sear and yellow. Should I praise
Such false complexions, and for beauty take
A look consumption-bred? As soon, if gray
Were mixt in young Louisa's tresses brown,
I'd call it beautiful variety,
And therefore doat on her. Yet I can spy
A beauty in that fruitful change, when comes
The yellow Autumn and the hopes o' the year
Brings on to golden ripeness; nor dispraise
The pure and spotless form of that sharp time,
When January spreads a pall of snow
O'er the dead face of th' undistinguish'd earth.
Then stand I in the hollow comb beneath,
And bless this friendly mount, that weatherfends

My reed-roof'd cottage, while the wintry blast
From the thick north comes howling: till the Spring

Return, who leads my devious steps abroad,
To climb, as now, to Lewesdon's airy top.

Above the noise and stir of yonder fields
Uplifted, on this height I feel the mind
Expand itself in wider liberty.
The distant sounds break gently on my sense,
Soothing to meditation: so methinks,
Even so, sequester'd from the noisy world,
Could I wear out this transitory being
In peaceful contemplation and calm ease.
But conscience, which still censures on our acts,
That awful voice within us, and the sense
Of an hereafter, wake and rouse us up [else

From such unshaped retirement; which were
A blest condition on this earthy stage. [else
For who would make his life a life of toil
For wealth, o'erbalanced with a thousand cares;
Or power, which base compliance must uphold;
Or honour, lavish'd most on courtly slaves;
Or fame, vain breath of a misjudging world;
Who for such perishable gaudes would put
A yoke upon his free unbroken spirit,
And gall himself with trammels and the rubs
Of this world's business; so he might stand clear
Of judgment and the tax of idleness
In that dread audit, when his mortal hours
(Which now with soft and silent stealth pace by)
Must all be counted for? But, for this fear,
And to remove, according to our power,
The wants and evils of our brother's state,
'Tis meet we juggle with the world; content,
If by our sovereign Master we be found
At last not profitless: for worldly meed,
Given or withheld, I deem of it alike.

From this proud eminence on all sides round
Th' unbroken prospect opens to my view,
On all sides large; save only where the head
Of Pillesdon rises, Pillesdon's lofty Pen:
So call (still rendering to his ancient name Observance due) that rival height south-west,
Which like a rampire bounds the vale beneath.
There woods, there blooming orchards, there are seen

Herds ranging, or at rest beneath the shade
Of some wide-branching oak; there goodly fields
Of corn, and verdant pasture, whence the kine
Returning with their milky treasure home
Store the rich dairy: such fair plenty fills
The pleasant vale of Marshwood, pleasant now,
Since that the Spring has deck'd anew the meads
With flowery vesture, and the warmer sun
Their foggy moistness drain'd; in wintry days
Cold, vapourish, miry, wet, and to the flocks
Unfriendly, when autumnal rains begin
To drench the spongy turf: but ere that time
The careful shepherd moves to healthier soil,
Rechasing, lest his tender ewes should coath*
In the dank pasturage. Yet not the fields
Of Evesham, nor that ample valley named
Of the White Horse, its antique monument Carved in the chalky bourne, for beauty and wealth

Might equal, though surpassing in extent,
This fertile vale, in length from Lewesdon's base
Extended to the sea, and water'd well
By many a rill; but chief with thy clear stream,
Thou nameless rivulet, who, from the side
Of Lewesdon softly welling forth, dost trip
Adown the valley, wandering sportively.
Alas, how soon thy little course will end!
How soon thy infant stream shall lose itself
In the salt mass of waters, ere it grow
To name or greatness! Yet it flows along
Untainted with the commerce of the world,
Nor passing by the noisy haunts of men;

* To coath, signifies to faint.

But through sequester'd meads, a little space,
Winds secretly, and in its wanton path
May cheer some drooping flower, or minister
Of its cool water to the thirsty lamb:
Then falls into the ravenous sea, as pure
As when it issued from its native hill.

So to thine early grave didst thou run on,
Spotless Francesca, so, after short course,
Thine innocent and playful infancy
Was swallowed up in death, and thy pure spirit
In that illimitable gulph which bounds
Our mortal continent. But not there lost,
Not there extinguish'd, as some falsely teach,
Who can talk much and learnedly of life,
Who know our frame and fashion, who can tell
The substance and the properties of man,
As they had seen him made,—aye and stood by Spies on Heaven's work. They also can discourse Wisely, to prove that what must be must be,
And show how thoughts are jogg'd out of the
By a mechanical impulse; pushing on [brain
The minds of us, poor unaccountables,
To fatal resolution. Know they not,
That in this mortal life, whate'er it be,
We take the path that leads to good or evil,
And therein find our bliss or misery?
And this includes all reasonable ends
Of knowledge or of being; farther to go
Is toil unprofitable, and th' effect
Most perilous wandering. Yet of this be sure;
Where freedom is not, there no virtue is:
If there be none, this world is all a cheat,
And the divine stability of heaven
(That assured seat for good men after death)
Is but a transient cloud, display'd so fair
To cherish virtuous hope, but at our need
Eludes the sense, and fools our honest faith,
Vanishing in a lie. If this be so,
Were it not better to be born a beast,
Only to feel what is, and thus to 'scape
The aguish fear that shakes the afflicted breast
With sore anxiety of what shall be—
And all for nought? Since our most wicked act
Is not our sin, and our religious awe
Delusion, if that strong Necessity
Chains up our will. But that the mind is free,
The mind herself, best judge of her own state,
Is feelingly convinced; nor to be moved
By subtle words, that may perplex the head,
But ne'er persuade the heart. Vain argument,
That with false weapons of philosophy
Fights against hope, and sense, and nature's strength!

See how the sun, here clouded, afar off
Pours down the golden radiance of his light
Upon the enridged sea; where the black ship
Sails on the phosphor-seeming waves. So fair,
But falsely-flattering, was yon surface calm,
When forth for India sail'd, in evil time,
That vessel, whose disastrous fate, when told,
Fill'd every breast with horror, and each eye
With piteous tears, so cruel was the loss*.

Methinks I see her, as, by the wintry storm
Shatter'd and driven along past yonder Isle,
She strove, her latest hope, by strength or art,
To gain the port within it, or at worst
To shun that harbourless and hollow coast
From Portland eastward to the promontory,
Where still St. Alban's high built chapel stands.
But art nor strength avail her—on she drives,
In storm and darkness to the fatal coast; [cliffs
And there 'mong rocks and high-o'erhanging
Dash'd piteously, with all her precious freight
Was lost, by Neptune's wild and foamy jaws
Swallow'd up quick! The richliest-laden ship
Of spicy Ternate, or that annual, sent
To the Philippines o'er the southern main
From Acapulco, carrying massy gold, [youth,
Were poor to this;—freighted with hopeful
And beauty, and high courage undismayed
By mortal terrors, and paternal love
Strong, and unconquerable even in death—
Alas, they perish'd all, all in one hour!

Now yonder high-way view, wide-beaten,
bare [track
With ceaseless tread of men and beasts, and
Of many indenting wheels, heavy and light,
That violently rush with unsafe speed,
Or slowly turn, oft-resting, up the steep.
Mark how that road, with mazes serpentine,
From Shipton's bottom to the lofty down
Winds like a path of pleasure, drawn by art
Through park or flowery garden for delight.
Nor less delightful this—if, while he mounts
Not wearied, the free journeyer will pause
To view the prospect oft, as oft to see
Beauty still changing: yet not so contrived
By fancy, or choice, but of necessity,
By soft gradations of ascent to lead
The laboring and way-worn feet along,
And make their toil less toilsome. Half way up,
Or nearer to the top, behold a cot,
O'er which the branchy trees, those sycamores,
Wave gently: at their roots a rustic bench
Invites to short refreshment, and to taste
What grateful beverage the house may yield
After fatigue, or dusty heat; thence call'd [seat,
The Traveller's Rest. Welcome, embower'd
Friendly repose to the slow passenger
Ascending, ere he takes his sultry way
Along th' interminable road, stretch'd out
Over th' unshelter'd down; or when at last
He has that hard and solitary path
Measur'd by painful steps. And blest are they,
Who in life's toilsome journey may make pause
After a march of glory: yet not such
As rise in causeless war, troubling the world
By their mad quarrel, and in fields of blood Hail'd victors, thence renown'd, and call'd on earth
Kings, heroes, demi-gods, but in high heaven
Thieves, ruffians, murderers; these find no re-
Thee rather, patriot conqueror, to thee [pose:
Belongs such rest; who in the western world,

* The Halswell.

Thine own deliver'd country, for thyself
Hast planted an immortal grove, and there,
Upon the glorious mount of Liberty
Reposing, sitt'st beneath the palmy shade.

But what is yonder hill, whose dusky brow
Wears, like a regal diadem, the round
Of ancient battlements and ramparts high,
And frowns upon the vales? I know thee not—
Thou hast no name, no honorable note,
No chronicle of all thy warlike pride,
To testify what once thou wert, how great,
How glorious, and how fear'd. So perish all,
Who seek their greatness in dominion held
Over their fellows, or the pomp of war,
And be as thou forgotten, and their fame
Cancell'd like thine! But thee in after times
Reclaim'd to culture, shepherds visited,
And call'd thee Orgarston; so thee they call'd
Of Orgar, Saxon earl, the wealthy sire
Of fair Elfrida; she, whose happy bard
Has with his gentle witchery so wrought
Upon our sense, that we can see no more
Her mad ambition, treacherous cruelty,
And purple robes of state with royal blood
Inhospitably stain'd; but in their place
Pure faith, soft manners, filial duty meek,
Connubial love, and stoles of saintly white.

Sure 'tis all false what poets fondly tell
Of rural innocence and village love;
Else had thy simple annals, Nethercombe,
Who bosom'd in the vale below dost look
This morn so cheerful, been unstain'd with crimes,

Which the pale rustic shudders to relate.
There liv'd, the blessing of her father's age,—
I fable not, nor will with fabled names
Varnish a melancholy tale all true,—
A lowly maid; lowly, but like that flower,
Which grows in lowly place, and thence has
name,

Lily o' the vale, within her parent leaves
As in retreat she lives; yet fair and sweet
Above the gaudiest blooms, that flaunt abroad,
And play with every wanton breath of heaven.
Thus innocent, her beauties caught the eye
Of a young villager, whose vows of love
Soon won her easy faith: her sire meantime
Alas! nor knowing nor suspecting ought,
Till that her shape, erewhile so graceful seen, (Dian first rising after change was not
More delicate) betray'd her secret act,
And grew to guilty fullness: then farewell
Her maiden dignity, and comely pride,
And virtuous reputation. But this loss
Worse follow'd, loss of shame, and wilful wreck
Of what was left her yet of good, or fair,
Or decent: now her meek and gentle voice
To petulant turn'd; her simply-neat attire
To sluttish tawdry: her once timid eye
Grew fix'd, and parley'd wantonly with those
It look'd on. Change detestable! for she,
Erewhile the light of her fond father's house,
Became a grievous darkness: but his heart

Endured not long; all in despair he went Into the chambers of the grave, to seek
A comfortless repose from sorrow and shame.
What then befel this daughter desolate?
For he, the partner of her earliest fault,
Had left her, false perhaps, or in dislike
Of her light carriage. What could then befal,
What else, but of her self-injurious life
The too sad penance—hopeless penury,
Loathsome disease unpitied, and thereto
The brand of all-avoided infamy
Set on her, like the fearful token o'er
A plague-infested house:—at length to death
Impatient and distract she made bold way.

How is it vanish'd in a hasty spleen,
The Tor of Glastonbury! Even but now
I saw the hoary pile cresting the top
Of that north-western hill; and in this now
A cloud hath past on it, and its dim bulk
Becomes annihilate, or if not, a spot
Which the strain'd vision tires itself to find.

And even so fares it with the things of earth
Which seem most constant: there will come the cloud

That shall infold them up, and leave their place
A seat for Emptiness. Our narrow ken
Reaches too far, when all that we behold
Is but the havoc of wide-wasting Time,
Or what he soon shall spoil. His outspread wings
(Which bear him like an eagle o'er the earth)
Are plumed in front so downy soft, they seem
To foster what they touch, and mortal fools
Rejoice beneath their hovering: woe the while!
For in that indefatigable flight
The multitudinous strokes incessantly
Bruise all beneath their cope, and mark on all
His secret injury; on the front of man
Grey hairs and wrinkles; still as Time speeds on Hard and more hard his iron pennons beat
With ceaseless violence; nor overpass,
Till all the creatures of this nether world
Are one wide quarry: following dark behind,
The cormorant Oblivion swallows up
The carcasses that Time has made his prey.

But hark! the village clock strikes nine—the Merrily follow, tuneful to the sense [chimes
Of the pleased clown attentive, while they make False-measured melody on crazy bells.
O wondrous power of modulated sound!
Which like the air (whose all-obedient shape
Thou mak'st thy slave) canst subtilly pervade
The yielded avenues of sense, unlock
The close affections, by some fairy path
Winning an easy way through every ear,
And with thine unsubstantial quality
Holding in mighty chains the hearts of all;
All, but some cold and sullen-temper'd spirits,
Who feel no touch of sympathy or love.

Yet what is music, and the blended power
Of voice with instruments of wind and string?
What but an empty pageant of sweet noise?
'Tis past: and all that it has left behind
Is but an echo dwelling in the ear

Of the toy-taken fancy, and beside,
A void and countless hour in life's brief day.

But ill accords my verse with the delights
Of this gay month:—and see the villagers
Assembling jocund in their best attire
To grace this genial morn. Now I descend
To join the worldly crowd; perchance to talk,
To think, to act as they: then all these
thoughts,

That lift th' expanded heart above this spot
To heavenly musing, these shall pass away
(Even as this goodly prospect from my view)
Hidden by near and earthy-rooted cares.
So passeth human life—our better mind
Is as a Sunday's garment, then put on
When we have nought to do; but at our work
We wear a worse for thrift. Of this enough:
To-morrow for severer thought; but now
To breakfast, and keep festival to-day.

§ 156. The Last Minstrel.

(From the Lay of the Last Minstrel.)

SCOTT.

THE way was long, the wind was cold,
The Minstrel was infirm and old;
His wither'd cheek, and tresses gray,
Seemed to have known a better day;
The harp his sole remaining joy
Was carried by an orphan boy;
The last of all the Bards was he,
Who sung of Border chivalry.
For well-a-day! their date was fled,
His tuneful brethren all were dead;
And he neglected and oppressed,
Wished to be with them, and at rest.
No more, on prancing palfrey borne,
He carolled, light as lark at morn;
No longer courted and caressed,
High-placed in hall, a welcome guest,
He poured, to lord and lady gay,
The unpremeditated lay;
Old times were changed, old manners gone,
A stranger filled the Stuarts' throne;
The bigots of the iron time
Had called his harmless art a crime.
A wandering Harper, scorned and poor,
He begged his bread from door to door;
And tuned, to please a peasant's ear,
The harp, a king had loved to hear.

He passed where Newark's stately tower
Looks out from Yarrow's birchen bower:
The Minstrel gazed with wishful eye—
No humbler resting place was nigh.
With hesitating step, at last,
The embattled portal-arch he passed,
Whose ponderous grate and massy bar
Had oft rolled back the tide of war,

But never closed the iron door
Against the desolate and poor.
The duchess* marked his weary pace,
His timid mien, and reverend face,
And bade her page the menials tell,
That they should tend the old man well:
For she had known adversity,
Though born in such a high degree;
In pride of power, in beauty's bloom,
Had wept o'er Monmouth's bloody tomb!

When kindness had his wants supplied,
And the old man was gratified,
Began to rise his minstrel pride:
And he began to talk anon,
Of good earl Francis†, dead and gone,
And of earl Walter‡, rest him God!
A braver ne'er to battle rode:
And how, full many a tale he knew,
Of the old warriors of Buccleugh;
And, would the noble duchess deign
To listen to an old man's strain,
Though stiff his hand, his voice though weak,
He thought even yet, the sooth to speak,
That, if she loved the harp to hear,
He could make music to her ear.

The humble boon was soon obtained;
The aged minstrel audience gained.
But, when he reached the room of state,
Where she, with all her ladies, sate,
Perchance he wished his boon denied:
For, when to tune his harp he tried,
His trembling hand had lost the ease,
Which marks security to please;
And scenes, long past, of joy and pain,
Came wildering o'er his aged brain—
He tried to tune his harp in vain.
The pitying duchess praised its chime,
And gave him heart, and gave him time,
Till every string's according glee
Was blended into harmony.
And then, he said, he would full fain
He could recal an ancient strain,
He never thought to sing again.
It was not framed for village churls,
But for high dames and mighty earls;
He had played it to King Charles the Good,
When he kept court in Holyrood;
And much he wished, yet feared, to try
The long forgotten melody.

Amid the strings his fingers strayed,
And an uncertain warbling made,
And oft he shook his hoary head.
But when he caught the measure wild,
The old man raised his face, and smiled;
And lightened up his faded eye,
With all a poet's ecstasy!

* Anne, duchess of Buccleugh and Monmouth, representative of the ancient lords of Buccleugh, and widow of the unfortunate James, duke of Monmouth, who was beheaded in 1685.

† Francis Scott, earl of Buccleugh, father of the duchess.

‡ Walter, earl of Buccleugh, grandfather of the duchess, and a celebrated warrior.

In varying cadence, soft or strong,
 He swept the sounding chords along:
 The present scene, the future lot,
 His toils, his wants, were all forgot:
 Cold diffidence, and age's frost,
 In the full tide of song were lost;
 Each blank, in faithless memory void,
 The poet's glowing thought supplied;
 And, while his harp responsive rung,
 'Twas thus the Latest Minstrel sung.

§ 175. Melrose Abbey, and the Charm of the Wizard, Michael Scott.

(From the same.)

I.

If thou wouldst view fair Melrose aright,
 Go visit it by the pale moon-light;
 For the gay beams of lightsome day
 Gild, but to flout, the ruins gray.
 When the broken arches are black in night,
 And each shafted oriel glimmers white;
 When the cold light's uncertain shower
 Streams on the ruined central tower;
 When buttress and buttress, alternately,
 Seem framed of ebon and ivory;
 When silver edges the imagery,
 And the scrolls that teach thee to live and die;
 When distant Tweed is heard to rave,
 And the owlet to hoot o'er the dead man's grave,
 Then go—but go alone the while—
 Then view St. David's ruined pile;
 And, home returning, soothly swear,
 Was never scene so sad and fair!

II.

Short halt did Deloraine make there;
 Little recked he of the scene so fair.
 With dagger's hilt, on the wicket strong,
 He struck full loud, and struck full long.
 The porter hurried to the gate—
 "Who knocks so loud, and knocks so late?"
 "From Branksome I," the warrior cried;
 And straight the wicket opened wide:
 For Branksome's chiefs had in battle stood,
 To fence the rights of fair Melrose;
 And lands and livings, many a rood,
 Had gifted the shrine for their souls' repose.

III.

Bold Deloraine his errand said;
 The porter bent his humble head;
 With torch in hand, and feet unshod,
 And noiseless step, the path he trode:
 The arched cloisters, far and wide,
 Rang to the warrior's clanking stride;
 Till, stooping low his lofty crest,
 He entered the cell of the ancient priest,
 And lifted his barred aventayle*,
 To hail the Monk of St. Mary's aisle.

IV.

"The ladye of Branksome greets thee by me;
 Says, that the fated hour is come,
 And that to-night I shall watch with thee,
 To win the treasure of the tomb."—
 From sackcloth couch the monk arose,
 With toil his stiffened limbs he reared;
 A hundred years had flung their snows
 On his thin lock and floating beard.

V.

And strangely on the knight looked he,
 And his blue eyes gleamed wild and wide;
 "And dar'st thou, warrior! seek to see
 What heaven and hell alike would hide?
 My breast, in belt of iron pent,
 With shirt of hair and scourge of thorn,
 For threescore years, in penance spent,
 My knees those flinty stones have worn;
 Yet all too little to atone
 For knowing what should ne'er be known:
 Wouldst thou thy every future year
 In ceaseless prayer and penance dree,
 Yet wait thy latter end with fear—
 Then, daring warrior, follow me!"

VI.

"Penance, father, will I none;
 Prayer know I hardly one;
 For mass or prayer can I rarely tarry,
 Save to patter an Ave Mary,
 When I ride on a border foray;
 Other prayer can I none;
 So speed me my errand, and let me begone."—

VII.

Again on the knight looked the churchman old,
 And again he sighed heavily;
 For he had himself been a warrior bold,
 And fought in Spain and Italy,
 And he thought on the days that were long since by, [high:—
 When his limbs were strong and his courage was
 Now, slow and faint, he led the way,
 Where, cloistered round, the garden lay;
 The pillared arches were over their head,
 And beneath their feet were the bones of the dead.

VIII.

Spreading herbs, and flowerets bright,
 Glistened with the dew of night;
 Nor herb, nor floweret, glistened there,
 But was carved in the cloister-arches as fair.
 The monk gazed long on the lovely moon,
 Then into the night he looked forth;
 And red and bright the streamers light
 Were dancing in the glowing north.
 So had he seen, in fair Castile,
 The youth in glittering squadrons start;
 Sudden the flying jennet wheel,
 And hurl the unexpected dart.
 He knew, by the streamers that shot so bright,
 That spirits were riding the northern light.

* Aventayle, visor of the helmet.

IX.

By a steel-clenched postern door,
 They entered now the chancel tall;
 The darkened roof rose high aloof
 On pillars, lofty, and light, and small;
 The key-stone, that locked each ribbed aisle,
 Was a fleur-de-lys, or a quatre-feuille;
 The corbells* were carved grotesque and grim;
 And the pillars with clustered shafts so trim,
 With base and with capital flourished around,
 Seemed bundles of lances which garlands had bound.

X.

Full many a scutcheon and banner, riven,
 Shook to the cold night-wind of heaven,
 Around the screened altar's pale;
 And there the dying lamps did burn,
 Before thy low and lonely urn,
 O gallant chief of Otterburne,
 And thine, dark knight of Liddesdale!
 O fading honours of the dead!
 O high ambition, lowly laid!

XI.

The moon on the east oriel shone,
 Through slender shafts of shapely stone,
 By foliated tracery combined;
 Thou wouldst have thought some fairy's hand
 'Twixt poplars straight the ozier wand,
 In many a freakish knot, had twined;
 Then framed a spell, when the work was done,
 And changed the willow wreaths to stone.
 The silver light so pale and faint,
 Showed many a prophet, and many a saint,
 Whose image on the glass was dyed;
 Full in the midst, his cross of red
 Triumphant Michael brandished
 And trampled the apostate's pride.
 The moon-beam kissed the holy pane,
 And threw on the pavement a bloody stain.

XII.

They sate them down on a marble stone,
 A Scottish monarch slept below;
 Thus spoke the monk, in solemn tone:—
 "I was not always a man of woe;
 For Paynim countries I have trod,
 And fought beneath the Cross of God;
 Now, strange to mine eyes thine arms appear,
 And their iron clang sounds strange to my ear."

XIII.

"In these far climes, it was my lot
 To meet the wondrous Michael Scott;
 A wizard of such dreaded fame,
 That when, in Salamanca's cave,
 Him listed his magic wand to wave,
 The bells would ring in Notre Dame!
 Some of his skill he taught to me;
 And, warrior, I could say to thee
 The words that cleft Eildon hills in three,
 And bridled the Tweed with a curb of stone:
 But to speak them were a deadly sin;
 And for having but thought them my heart
 A treble penance must be done. [within,

XIV.

"When Michael lay on his dying bed,
 His conscience was awakened;
 He bethought him of his sinful deed,
 And he gave me a sign to come with speed:
 I was in Spain when the morning rose,
 But I stood by his bed ere evening close.
 The words may not again be said,
 That he spoke to me, on death-bed laid;
 They would rend this abbaye's massy nave,
 And pile it in heaps above his grave."

XV.

"I swore to bury his Mighty Book,
 That never mortal might therein look;
 And never to tell where it was hid,
 Save at his chief of Branksome's need;
 And when that need was past and o'er,
 Again the volume to restore.
 I buried him on St. Michael's night, [bright;
 When the bell tolled one, and the moon was
 And I dug his chamber among the dead,
 When the floor of the chancel was stained red,
 That his patron's cross might over him wave,
 And scare the fiends from the wizard's grave."

XVI.

"It was a night of woe and dread,
 When Michael in the tomb I laid!
 Strange sounds along the chancel past,
 The banners waved without a blast."—
 Still spoke the monk, when the bell tolled One!
 "I tell you, that a braver man
 Than William of Deloraine, good at need,
 Against a foe ne'er spurred a steed;
 Yet somewhat was he chilled with dread,
 And his hair did bristle upon his head."

XVII.

"Lo, warrior! now, the Cross of Red
 Points to the grave of the mighty dead;
 Within it burns a wondrous light,
 To chase the spirits that love the night:
 That lamp shall burn unquenchably,
 Until the eternal doom shall be."—
 Slow mov'd the monk to the broad flag-stone,
 Which the bloody Cross was traced upon:
 He pointed to a secret nook;
 An iron bar the warrior took;
 And the monk made a sign with his withered
 The grave's huge portal to expand. [hand,

XVIII.

With beating heart to the task he went;
 His sinewy frame o'er the grave-stone bent;
 With bar of iron heaved amain,
 Till the toil-drops fell from his brows, like rain.
 It was by dint of passing strength,
 That he moved the massy stone at length.
 I would you had been there, to see
 How the light broke forth so gloriously,
 Streamed upward to the chancel roof,
 And through the galleries far aloof!

* Corbells, the projections from which the arches spring, usually cut in a fantastic face, or mask.

No earthly flame blazed e'er so bright ;
It shone like heaven's own blessed light ;
And issuing from the tomb,
Showed the monk's cowl, and visage pale,
Danced on the dark-brow'd warrior's mail,
And kissed his waving plume.

XIX.

Before their eyes the wizard lay,
As if he had not been dead a day.
His hoary beard in silver rolled,
He seemed some seventy winters old ;
A palmer's amice wrapped him round,
With a wrought Spanish baldric bound,
Like a pilgrim from beyond the sea :
His left hand held his Book of Might ;
A silver cross was in his right ;
The lamp was placed beside his knee :
High and majestic was his look,
At which the fellest fiends had shook,
And all unruffled was his face :—
They trusted his soul had gotten grace.

XX.

Often had William of Deloraine
Rode through the battle's bloody plain,
And trampled down the warriors slain,
And neither known remorse or awe ;
Yet now remorse and awe he own'd ;
His breath came thick, his head swam round,
When this strange scene of death he saw.
Bewilder'd and unnerv'd he stood,
And the priest prayed fervently and loud :
With eyes averted prayed he ;
He might not endure the sight to see,
Of the man he had loved so brotherly.

XXI.

And when the priest his death-prayer had prayed,
Thus unto Deloraine he said :—
“ Now, speed thee what thou hast to do,
Or, warrior, we may dearly rue ;
For those thou mayst not look upon,
Are gathering fast round the yawning stone !”
Then Deloraine, in terror, took
From the cold hand the Mighty Book,
With iron clasped, and with iron bound :
He thought as he took it the dead man frowned ;
But the glare of the sepulchral light
Perchance had dazzled the warrior's sight.

XXII.

When the huge stone sunk o'er the tomb,
The night return'd in double gloom ;
For the moon had gone down, and the stars
were few ;
And, as the knight and the priest withdrew,
With wavering steps and dizzy brain,
They hardly might the postern gain.
'Tis said, as through the aisles they passed,
They heard strange noises on the blast ;
And through the cloister-galleries small,
Which at mid-height thread the chancel wall,

* Fail, turf.

Loud sobs, and laughter louder, ran,
And voices unlike the voice of man ;
As if the fiends kept holiday,
Because these spells were brought to day.
I cannot tell how the truth may be ;
I say the tale as 'twas said to me.

§ 158. Force of Love.

(From the Same.)

I.

AND said I that my limbs were old ;
And said I that my blood was cold,
And that my kindly fire was fled,
And my poor withered heart was dead,
And that I might not sing of love?—
How could I to the dearest theme,
That ever warmed a minstrel's dream,
So foul, so false, a recreant prove !
How could I name love's very name,
Nor wake my heart to notes of flame !

II.

In peace, Love tunes the shepherd's reed ;
In war, he mounts the warrior's steed ;
In halls, in gay attire is seen ;
In hamlets, dances on the green.
Love rules the court, the camp, the grove,
And men below, and saints above ;
For love is heaven, and heaven is love.

§ 159. The Two Corbies.

(From the Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border.)

By WALTER SCOTT.

As I was walking all alane,
I heard twa corbies making a mane,
The tane unto the t'other say,
“ Where sall we gang and dine to-day†

“ In behint yon auld fail * dyke,
I wot there lies a new-slain knight ;
And nae body kens that he lies there,
But his hawk, his hound, and lady fair.

“ His hound is to the hunting gane,
His hawk to fetch the wild fowl hame,
His lady is ta'en another mate,
So we may mak our dinner sweet.

“ Ye'll sit on his white hause bane,
And I'll pike out his bonny blue een :
Wi' ae lock o' his gowden hair,
We'll theek † our nest when it grows bare.

“ Mony a one for him makes mane,
But nane sall ken where he is gane :
O'er his white banes, when they are bare,
The wind sall blaw for evermair.”

† Theek, thatch.

§ 160. The Douglas Tragedy.

(From the Same.)

"RISE up, rise up, now, lord Douglas," she
 "And put on your armour so bright, [says,
 Let it never be said, that a daughter of thine
 Was married to a lord under night.

"Rise up, rise up, my seven bold sons,
 And put on your armour so bright,
 And take better care of your youngest sister,
 For your eldest's awa the last night."

He's mounted her on a milk-white steed,
 And himself on a dapple gray,
 With a bugelet horn hung down by his side,
 And lightly they rode away.

Lord William look it o'er his left shoulder,
 To see what he could see,
 And there he spy'd her seven brethren bold
 Come riding o'er the lee.

"Light down, light down, lady Marg'ret," he
 And hold my steed in your hand, [said
 Until that against your seven brethren bold,
 And your father, I make a stand."

She held his steed in her milk-white hand,
 And never shed one tear,
 Until that she saw her seven brethren fa',
 And her father hard fighting, who lov'd her so dear.

"O hold your hand, lord William!" she said,
 "For your strokes they are wond'rous sair;
 True lovers I can get many a ane,
 But a father I can never get mair."

O she's ta'en out her handkerchief,
 It was o' the Holland sae fine,
 And ay she dighted her father's bloody wounds,
 That were redder than the wine.

"O chuse, O chuse, lady Marg'ret," he said,
 "O whether will ye gang or bide?"
 "I'll gang, I'll gang, lord William," she said,
 "For ye have left me no other guide."

He's lifted her on a milk-white steed,
 And himself on a dapple gray,
 With a bugelet horn hung down by his side,
 And slowly they baith rade away.

O they rade on, and on they rade,
 And a' by the light of the moon,
 Until they came to yon wan water,
 And there they lighted down.

They lighted down to tak a drink,
 Of the spring that ran sae clear:
 And down the stream ran his gude heart's blood,
 And sair she gan to fear.

"Hold up, hold up, lord William," she says,
 "For I fear that you are slain!"

"'Tis naething but the shadow of my scarlet
 That shines in the water sae plain." [cloak,

O they rade on, and on they rade,
 And a' by the light of the moon,
 Until they cam' to his mother's ha' door,
 And there they lighted down.

"Get up, get up, lady mother," he says,
 "Get up, and let me in!"
 "Get up, get up, lady mother," he says,
 "For this night my fair lady I've win."

"O mak my bed, lady mother," he says,
 "O mak it braid and deep!"
 And lay lady Marg'ret close at my back,
 And the sounder I will sleep."

Lord William was dead lang ere midnight,
 Lady Marg'ret lang ere day—
 And all true lovers that go thegither,
 May they have mair luck than they!

Lord William was buried in St. Marie's kirk,
 Lady Marg'ret in Mary's quire,
 Out o' the lady's grave grew a bonny red rose,
 And out o' the knight's a brier.

And they twa met, and they twa plat,
 And fain they wad be near;
 And a' the warld might ken right weel
 They were twa lovers dear.

But bye and rade the Black Douglas,
 And wow but he was rough!
 For he pull'd up the bonny brier,
 And flang'd in St. Mary's loch.

§ 161. Young Benjie.

(From the Same.)

OF a' the maids o' fair Scotland,
 The fairest was Marjorie;
 And young Benjie was her ae true love,
 And a dear true love was he.

And wow! but they were lovers dear,
 And loved fu' constantlie;
 But ay the mair when they fell out,
 The sairer was their plea*.

And they hae quarrelled on a day,
 Till Marjorie's heart grew wae,
 And she said she'd chuse another luvie,
 And let young Benjie gae.

And he was stout†, and-proud-hearted,
 And thought o't bitterlie,
 And he's ga'en by the wan moon-light,
 To meet his Marjorie.

"O open, open, my true love,
 O open and let me in!"
 "I dare na open, young Benjie,
 My three brothers are within."

"Ye lied, ye lied, ye bonny burd,
 Sae loud's I hear ye lie;
 As I came by the Lowden banks,
 They bade gude e'en to me.

* Plea, used obliquely for dispute.† Stout, through this whole ballad, signifies haughty.

“ But fare ye weel, my ae fause love,
That I hae loved sae lang!
It sets * ye chuse another love,
And let young Benjie gang.”

Then Marjorie turned her round about,
The tear blinding her ee,
“ I dare na, dare na, let thee in,
But I'll come down to thee.”

Then saft she smiled, and said to him,
“ O what ill hae I done?”
He took her in his armis twa,
And threw her o'er the linn.

The stream was strang, the maid was stout,
And laith laith to be dang†,
But, ere she wan the Lowden banks,
Her fair colour was wan.

Then up bespak her eldest brother,
“ O see na ye what I see?”
And out then spak her second brother,
“ It's our sister Marjorie!”

Out then spak her eldest brother,
“ O how shall we her ken?”
And out then spak her youngest brother,
“ There's a honey-mark on her chin.”

Then they've ta'en up the comely corpse,
And laid it on the ground—
“ O wha has killed our ae sister,
And how can he be found?

“ The night it is her low lykewake,
The morn her burial day,
And we maun watch at mirk midnight,
And hear what she will say?”

Wi' doors ajar, and candle light,
And torches burning clear,
The streikit corpse, till still midnight,
They waked, but naething hear.

About the middle o' the night,
The cocks began to crow,
And at the dead hour o' the night,
The corpse began to thraw.

“ O wha has done thee wrang, sister,
Or dared the deadly sin?
Wha was sae stout, and feared nae dout,
As thraw ye o'er the linn?”

“ Young Benjie was the first ae man,
I laid my love upon;
He was sae stout and proud-hearted,
He threw me o'er the linn.”

“ Sall we young Benjie head, sister,
Sall we young Benjie hang,
Or, sall we pike out his twa gray een,
And punish him ere he gang?”

“ Ye mauna Benjie head, brothers,
Ye mauna Benjie hang,
But ye maun pike out his twa gray e'en,
And punish him e'er he gang.

“ Tie a green gravat round his neck,
And lead him out and in,
And the best ae servant about your house,
To wait young Benjie on.

“ And ay, at every seven years' end,
Ye'll tak him to the linn;
For that's the penance he maun drie,
To scugg‡ his deadly sin.”

§ 162. Introduction to Canto Second of Marmion.
SCOTT.

WHEN, musing on companions gone,
We doubly feel ourselves alone,
Something, my friend, we yet may gain,
There is a pleasure in this pain:
It soothes the love of lonely rest,
Deep in each gentler heart impressed.
'Tis silent amid worldly toils,
And stifled soon by mental broils;
But, in a bosom thus prepared,
Its still small voice is often heard,
Whispering a mingled sentiment,
'Twixt resignation and content.
Oft in my mind such thoughts awake,
By lone St. Mary's silent lake;
Thou know'st it well,—nor fen, nor sedge,
Pollute the pure lake's crystal edge;
Abrupt and sheer, the mountains sink
At once upon the level brink;
And just a trace of silver sand
Marks where the water meets the land.
Far in the mirror, bright and blue,
Each hill's huge outline you may view;
Shaggy with heath, but lonely bare,
Nor tree, nor bush, nor brake is there,
Save where, of land, yon slender line
Bears thwart the lake the scatter'd pine.
Yet even this nakedness has power,
And aids the feeling of the hour:
Nor thicket, dell, nor copse you spy,
Where living thing concealed might lie;
Nor point, retiring, hides a dell,
Where swain, or woodman lone, might dwell;
There's nothing left to fancy's guess,
You see that all is loneliness:
And silence aids—though the steep hills
Send to the lake a thousand rills;
In summer tide, so soft they weep,
The sound but lulls the ear asleep;
Your horse's hoof-tread sounds too rude,
So stilly is the solitude.

Nought living meets the eye or ear,
But well I ween the dead are near;
For though, in feudal strife, a foe
Hath laid Our Lady's chapel low,
Yet still, beneath the hallowed soil,
The peasant rests him from his toil,
And, dying, bids his bones be laid,
Where erst his simple fathers prayed.
If age had tamed the passions' strife,
And fate had cut my ties to life,

* Sets ye—Becomes you—ironical.

† Dang—defeated.

‡ Scug—shelter or expiate.

Here, have I thought, 'twere sweet to dwell,
 And rear again the chaplain's cell,
 Like that same peaceful hermitage,
 Where Milton longed to spend his age.
 'Twere sweet to mark the setting day
 On Bourhope's lonely top decay;
 And, as it faint and feeble died,
 On the broad lake, and mountain's side,
 To say "Thus pleasures fade away;
 Youth, talents, beauty thus decay,
 And leave us dark, forlorn, and grey;"—
 Then gaze on Dryhope's ruined tower,
 And think on Yarrow's faded flower:
 And when that mountain-sound I heard
 Which bids us be for storm prepared,—
 The distant rustling of his wings,
 As up his force the tempest brings,
 'Twere sweet, ere yet his terrors rave,
 To sit upon the wizard's grave;
 That wizard priest's, whose bones are thrust
 From company of holy dust;
 On which no sun-beam ever shines—
 (So superstition's creed divines,)—
 Thence view the lake, with sullen roar,
 Heave her broad billows to the shore;
 And mark the wild swans mount the gale,
 Spread wide through mist their snowy sail,
 And ever stoop again, to lave
 Their bosoms on the surging wave:
 Then, when against the driving hail
 No longer might my plaid avail,
 Back to my lonely home retire,
 And light my lamp, and trim my fire:
 There ponder o'er some mystic lay,
 Till the wild tale had all its sway,
 And, in the bittern's distant shriek,
 I heard unearthly voices speak,
 And thought the wizard priest was come,
 To claim again his ancient home!
 And bade my busy fancy range,
 To frame him fitting shape and strange,
 Till from the task my brow I cleared,
 And smiled to think that I had feared.

§ 163. Trial of Constance. SCOTT.

WHILE round the fire such legends go,
 Far different was the scene of woe,
 Where, in a secret aisle beneath,
 Council was held of life and death.
 It was more dark and lone that vault,
 Than the worst dungeon cell;
 Old Colwulf built it, for his fault,
 In penitence to dwell,
 When he, for cowl and beads, laid down
 The Saxon battle-axe and crown.
 This den, which, chilling every sense
 Of feeling, hearing, sight,
 Was called the Vault of Penitence,
 Excluding air and light,
 Was, by the prelate Sexhelm, made
 A place of burial, for such dead
 As, having died in mortal sin,
 Might not be laid the church within.

'Twas now a place of punishment;
 Whence if so loud a shriek was sent,
 As reached the upper air,
 The hearers blessed themselves, and said,
 The spirits of the sinful dead
 Bemoaned their torments there.
 But though, in the monastic pile,
 Did of this penitential aisle
 Some vague tradition go,
 Few only, save the abbot, knew
 Where the place lay; and still more few
 Were those, who had from him the clew
 To that dread vault to go.
 Victim and executioner
 Were blind-fold when transported there.
 In low dark rounds the arches hung,
 From the rude rock the side-walls sprung;
 The grave-stones, rudely sculptured o'er,
 Half sunk in earth, by time half wore,
 Were all the pavement of the floor;
 The mildew drops fell one by one,
 With tinkling splash, upon the stone.
 A cresset, in an iron chain,
 Which served to light this drear domain,
 With damp and darkness seemed to strive,
 As if it scarce might keep alive;
 And yet it dimly served to show
 The awful conclave met below.
 There, met to doom in secrecy,
 Were placed the heads of convents three;
 All servants of Saint Benedict,
 The statutes of whose order strict
 On iron table lay;
 In long black dress, on seats of stone,
 Behind were these three judges shown,
 By the pale cresset's ray:
 The abbess of Saint Hilda, there,
 Sat for a space with visage bare,
 Until, to hide her bosom's swell,
 And tear-drops that for pity fell,
 She closely drew her veil:
 Yon shrouded figure, as I guess,
 By her proud mien and flowing dress,
 Is Tynemouth's haughty prioress,
 And she with awe looks pale:
 And he, that ancient man, whose sight
 Has long been quenched by age's night,
 Upon whose wrinkled brow alone,
 Nor ruth nor mercy's trace is shown,
 Whose look is hard and stern,—
 Saint Cuthbert's abbot is his style;
 For sanctity called, through the isle,
 The saint of Landisfarn.
 Before them stood a guilty pair;
 But, though an equal fate they share,
 Yet one alone deserves our care.
 Her sex a page's dress belied;
 The cloak and doublet, loosely tied,
 Obscured her charms, but could not hide.
 Her cap down o'er her face she drew,
 And, on her doublet breast,
 She tried to hide the badge of blue,
 Lord Marmion's falcon crest.

But, at the prioress' command,
A monk undid the silken band,
That tied her tresses fast,
And raised the bonnet from her head,
And down her slender form they spread,
In ringlets rich and rare.

Constance de Beverley they know,
Sister professed of Fontevraud,
Whom the church numbered with the dead,
For broken vows, and convent fled.

When thus her face was given to view,
(Although so pallid was her hue,
It did a ghastly contrast bear
To those bright ringlets glistening fair,)
Her look composed, and steady eye,
Bespoke a matchless constancy;
And there she stood so calm and pale,
That, but her breathing did not fail,
And motion slight of eye and head,
And of her bosom, warranted,
That neither sense nor pulse she lacks,
You might have thought a form of wax,
Wrought to the very life was there;
So still she was, so pale, so fair.

Her comrade was a sordid soul,
Such as does murder for a meed;
Who, but of fear, knows no controul,
Because his conscience, seared and foul,
Feels not the import of his deed;
One, whose brute-feeling ne'er aspires
Beyond his own more brute desires,
Such tools the tempter ever needs,
To do the savagest of deeds;
For them no visioned terrors daunt,
Their nights no fancied spectres haunt;
One fear with them, of all most base,
The fear of death,—alone finds place.
This wretch was clad in frock and cowl,
And shamed not loud to moan and howl,
His body on the floor to dash,
And crouch, like hound beneath the lash;
While his mute partner, standing near,
Waited her doom without a tear.

Yet well the luckless wretch might shriek,
Well might her paleness terror speak!
For there were seen in that dark wall,
Two niches, narrow, deep, and tall;—
Who enters at such griesly door,
Shall ne'er, I ween, find exit more.
In each a slender meal was laid,
Of roots, of water, and of bread:
By each, in Benedictine dress,
Two haggard monks stood motionless;
Who, holding high a blazing torch,
Shewed the grim entrance of the porch:
Reflecting back the smoky beam,
The dark-red walls and arches gleam.
Hewn stones and cement were displayed,
And building tools in order laid.

These executioners were chose,
As men who were with mankind foes,
And, with despite and envy fired,
Into the cloister had retired;

Or who, in desperate doubt of grace,
Strove, by deep penance, to efface
Of some foul crime the stain;
For, as the vassals of her will,
Such men the church selected still,
As either joyed in doing ill,

Or thought more grace to gain,
If, in her cause, they wrestled down
Feelings their nature strove to own.
By strange device were they brought there,
They knew not how, and knew not where.
And now that blind old abbot rose,

To speak the chapter's doom,
On those the wall was to inclose,
Alive, within the tomb;
But stopped, because that woful maid,
Gathering her powers, to speak essayed.
Twice she essayed, and twice in vain;
Her accents might no utterance gain;
Nought but imperfect murmurs slip
From her convulsed and quivering lip:
'Twixt each attempt all was so still,
You seemed to hear a distant rill—
'Twas ocean's swells and falls;
For though this vault of sin and fear
Was to the sounding surge so near,
A tempest there you scarce could hear,
So massive were the walls.

At length, an effort sent apart
The blood that curdled to her heart,
And light came to her eye,
And colour dawned upon her cheek,
A hectic and a fluttered streak,
Like that left on the Cheviot peak,
By autumn's stormy sky;
And when her silence broke at length,
Still as she spoke, she gathered strength,
And armed herself to bear.

It was a fearful sight to see
Such high resolve and constancy,
In form so oft and fair.
"I speak not to implore your grace;
Well know I, for one minute's space
Successful might I sue:
Nor do I speak your prayers to gain;
For if a death of lingering pain,
To cleanse my sins, be penance vain,
Vain are your masses too.—

I listened to a traitor's tale,
I left the convent and the veil,
For three long years I bowed my pride,
A horse-boy in his train to ride;
And well my folly's meed he gave,
Who forfeited, to be his slave,
All here and all beyond the grave.—
He saw young Clara's face more fair,
He knew her of broad lands the heir,
Forgot his vows, his faith forswore,
And Constance was beloved no more.

'Tis an old tale, and often told;
But, did my fate and wish agree,
Ne'er had been read, in story old,
Of maiden true betrayed for gold,
That loved, or was avenged, like me!

"The king approved his favourite's aim ;
 In vain a rival barred his claim,
 Whose faith with Clare's was plight,
 For he attaints that rival's fame
 With treason's charge—and on they came,
 In mortal lists to fight.
 Their oaths are said,
 Their prayers are prayed,
 Their lances in the rest are laid,
 They meet in mortal shock ;
 And hark ! the throng, with thundering cry,
 Shout " Marmion, Marmion, to the sky !
 De Wilton to the block !"
 Say ye, who preach heaven shall decide,
 When in the lists two champions ride,
 Say, was heaven's justice here ?
 When, loyal in his love and faith,
 Wilton found overthrow or death,
 Beneath a traitor's spear.
 How false the charge, how true he fell,
 This guilty packet best can tell."—
 Then drew a packet from her breast,
 Paused, gathered voice, and spoke the rest.
 " Still was false Marmion's bridal staid ;
 To Whitby's convent fled the maid,
 The hated match to shun.
 ' Ho ! shifts she thus ?' king Henry cried.
 ' Sir Marmion, she shall be thy bride,
 If she were sworn a nun.'
 One way remained—the king's command
 Sent Marmion to the Scottish land :
 I lingered here, and rescue plann'd
 For Clara and for me :
 This caitiff monk, for gold did swear,
 He would to Whitby's shrine repair,
 And, by his drugs, my rival fair
 A saint in heaven should be.
 But ill the dastard kept his oath,
 Whose cowardice hath undone us both.
 " And now my tongue the secret tells,
 Not that remorse my bosom swells,
 But to assure my soul, that none
 Shall ever wed with Marmion.
 Had fortune my last hope betrayed,
 This packet to the king conveyed,
 Had given him to the headsman's stroke,
 Although my heart that instant broke.—
 Now, men of death, work forth your will,
 For I can suffer, and be still ;
 And come he slow, or come he fast,
 It is but Death who comes at last.
 " Yet dread me, from my living tomb,
 Yet vassal slaves of bloody Rome !
 If Marmion's late remorse should wake,
 Full soon such vengeance will he take,
 That you shall wish the fiery Dane
 Had rather been your guest again.
 Behind, a darker hour ascends !
 The altars quake, the crosier bends,
 The ire of a despotic king
 Rides forth upon Destruction's wing.
 Then shall these vaults so strong and deep,
 Burst open to the sea-winds' sweep ;

Some traveller then shall find my bones,
 Whitening amid disjointed stones,
 And, ignorant of priests' cruelty,
 Marvel such relics here should be."—
 Fixed was her look, and stern her air ;
 Back from her shoulders streamed her hair ;
 The locks, that wont her brow to shade,
 Stared up erectly from her head ;
 Her figure seemed to rise more high ;
 Her voice, despair's wild energy
 Had given a tone of prophecy.
 Appalled the astonish'd conclave sate ;
 With stupid eyes, the men of fate
 Gazed on the light inspired form,
 And listened for the avenging storm ;
 The judges felt the victim's dread ;
 No hand was moved, no word was said,
 Till thus the abbot's doom was given,
 Raising his sightless balls to heaven :—
 " Sister, let thy sorrows cease ;
 Sinful brother, part in peace !"—
 From that dire dungeon, place of doom,
 Of execution too, and tomb,
 Paced forth the judges three ;
 Sorrow it were, and shame, to tell
 The butcher-work that there befell,
 When they had glided from the cell
 Of sin and misery.
 An hundred winding steps convey
 That conclave to the upper day ;
 But, ere they breathed the fresher air,
 They heard the shriekings of despair,
 And many a stifled groan :
 With speed their upward way they take,
 (Such speed as age and fear can make,)
 And crossed themselves for terror's sake,
 As hurrying, tottering on :
 Even in the vesper's heavenly tone,
 They seemed to hear a dying groan,
 And bade the passing knell to toll
 For welfare of a parting soul.
 Slow o'er the midnight wave it swung,
 Northumbrian rocks in answer rung ;
 To Warkworth cell the echoes rolled,
 His beads the wakeful hermit told ;
 The Bamborough peasant raised his head,
 But slept ere half a prayer he said ;
 So far was heard the mighty knell,
 The stag sprung up on Cheviot Fell,
 Spread his broad nostril to the wind,
 Listed before, aside, behind,
 Then couched him down beside the hind ;
 And quaked among the mountain fern,
 To hear that sound, so dull and stern.

§ 164. Song of Fitz-Eustace. SCOTT.

WHERE shall the lover rest,
 Whom the fates sever
 From his true maiden's breast,
 Parted for ever ?
 Where through groves deep and high,
 Sounds the far billow,

Where early violets die,
Under the willow.

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, &c. Soft shall be his pillow.

There, through the summer day,
Cool streams are laving;
There, while the tempests sway,
Scarce are boughs waving;
There, thy rest shalt thou take,
Parted for ever,
Never again to wake,
Never, O never.

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, &c. Never, O never.

Where shall the traitor rest,
He, the deceiver,
Who could win maiden's breast,
Ruin, and leave her?
In the lost battle,
Borne down by the flying,
Where mingles war's rattle,
With groans of the dying.

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, &c. There shall he be lying.

Her wing shall the eagle flap
O'er the false-hearted;
His warm blood the wolf shall lap,
Ere life be parted.
Shame and dishonor sit
By his grave ever;
Blessing shall hallow it,— Never, O never.

CHORUS.

Eleu loro, &c. Never, O never.

§ 165. Banquet at Holyrood House. Where James IV. of Scotland held his Court.

SCOTT.

THROUGH this mixed crowd of glee and game,
The king to greet lord Marmion came,
While, reverent, all made room.
An easy task it was, I trow,
King James's manly form to know,
Although, his courtesy to show,
He doffed, to Marmion bending low,
His brodered cap and plume.
For royal were his garb and mien,
His cloak, of crimson velvet piled,
Trimmed with the fur of martin wild;
His vest, of changeful sattin sheen,
The dazzled eye beguiled;
His gorgeous collar hung adown,
Wrought with the badge of Scotland's crown,
The thistle brave, of old renown;
His trusty blade, Toledo right,
Descended from a baldric bright;
White were his buskins, on the heel
His spurs inlaid of gold and steel;
His bonnet, all of crimson fair,
Was buttoned with a ruby rare:
And Marmion deemed he ne'er had seen
A prince of such a noble mien.

The monarch's form was middle size;
For feat of strength or exercise,
Shaped in proportion fair;
And hazel was his eagle eye,
And auburn of the darkest dye
His short curled beard and hair.
Light was his footstep in the dance,
And firm his stirrup in the lists;
And, oh! he had that merry glance,
That seldom lady's heart resists.
Lightly from fair to fair he flew,
And loved to plead, lament, and sue;—
Suit lightly won, and short-lived pain!
For monarchs seldom sigh in vain.

I said he joyed in banquet-bower;
But, mid his mirth, 'twas often strange,
How suddenly his cheer would change,
His look o'ercast and lower,
If, in a sudden turn, he felt
The pressure of his iron belt,
That bound his breast in penance pain,
In memory of his father slain.
Even so 'twas strange how, evermore,
Soon as the passing pang was o'er,
Forward he rushed, with double glee,
Into the stream of revelry;
Thus, dim-seen object of affright
Startles the courser in his flight,
And half he halts, half springs aside;
But feels the quickening spur applied,
And, straining on the tighten'd rein,
Scours doubly swift o'er hill and plain.

O'er James's heart, the courtiers say,
Sir Hugh the Heron's wife held sway:
To Scotland's court she came,
To be a hostage for her lord,
Who Cessford's gallant heart had gored,
And with the king to make accord,
Had sent his lovely dame.
Nor to that lady free alone
Did the gay king allegiance own:
For the fair queen of France
Sent him a turquois ring, and glove,
And charged him, as her knight and love,
For her to break a lance;
And strike three stokes with Scottish brand,
And march three miles on Southron land,
And bid the banners of his band
In English breezes dance.
And thus, for France's queen he drest
His manly limbs in mailed vest;
And thus admitted English fair
His inmost counsels still to share;
And thus, for both, he madly planned
The ruin of himself and land!
And yet, the sooth to tell,
Nor England's fair, nor France's queen,
Were worth one pearl-drop, bright and sheen,
From Margaret's eyes that fell, [bower,
His own queen Margaret, who, in Lithgow's
All lonely sat, and wept the weary hour.
The queen sits lone in Lithgow pile,
And weeps the weary day,

The war against her native soil,
 Her monarch's risk in battle broil;—
 And in gay Holy-Rood, the while,
 Dame Heron rises with a smile
 Upon the harp to play.
 Fair was her rounded arm, as o'er
 The strings her fingers flew;
 And as she touched and tuned them all,
 Ever her bosom's rise and fall
 Was plainer given to view;
 For all, for heat, was laid aside,
 Her wimple, and her hood untied.
 And first she pitched her voice to sing,
 Then glanced her dark eye on the king,
 And then around the silent ring;
 And laughed, and blushed, and oft did say
 Her pretty oath, by yea and nay,
 She could not, would not, durst not play:
 At length, upon the harp, with glee,
 Mingled with arch simplicity,
 A soft, yet lively, air she rung,
 While thus the wily lady sung:—

O, young Lochinvar is come out of the west,
 Through all the wide border his steed was the best; [none,
 And save his good broad-sword he weapon had
 He rode all unarm'd, and he rode all alone.
 So faithful in love, and so dauntless in war,
 There never was knight like the young Lo-chinvar.

He staid not for brake, and he stopped not for stone, [none;
 He swam the Eske river where ford there was
 But, ere he alighted at Netherby gate,
 The bride had consented, the gallant came late:
 For a laggard in love, and a dastard in war,
 Was to wed the fair Ellen of brave Lochinvar.

So boldly he entered the Netherby Hall,
 Among bride's-men, and kinsmen, and brothers
 and all: [sword,
 Then spoke the bride's father, his hand on his (For the poor craven bridegroom said never a word,)

“O come ye in peace here, or come ye in war,
 Or to dance at our bridal, young lord Lochin-var?”—

“I long wooed your daughter, my suit you denied;— [tide—

Love swells like the Solway, but ebbs like its
 And now am I come, with this lost love of mine,
 To lead but one measure, drink one cup of wine.
 There are maidens in Scotland more lovely by far, [chinvar.”

That would gladly be bride to the young Lo-
 The bride kissed the goblet; the knight took it

He quaffed off the wine, and he threw down the
 She looked down to blush, and she looked up to sigh,

With a smile on her lips, and a tear in her eye.

He took her soft hand, ere her mother could bar,— [chinvar.

“Now tread we a measure!” said young Lo-

So stately his form, and so lovely her face,
 That never a hall such a galliard did grace;
 While her mother did fret, and her father did
 fume; [and plume;

And the bridegroom stood dangling his bonnet
 And the bride-maidens whisper'd, “’Twere better by far [chinvar.”

To have matched our fair cousin with young Lo-
 One touch to her hand, and one word in her ear, [stood near;

When they reached the hall-door, and the charger
 So light to the croupe the fair lady he swung,
 So light to the saddle before her he sprung!

“She is won! we are gone, over bank, bush,
 and scaur, [young Lochinvar.

They'll have fleet steeds that follow,” quoth
 There was mounting 'mong Græmes of the Netherby clan; [and they ran:

Forsters, Fenwicks, and Musgraves, they rode
 There was racing, and chasing, on Cannobie
 Lee, [see.

But the lost bride of Netherby ne'er did they
 So daring in love, and so dauntless in war, [var?
 Have ye e'er heard of gallant like young Lochin-

§ 166. Harp of the North. SCOTT.

HARP of the North! that mouldering long hast hung [spring.

On the witch-elm that shades Saint Fillan's
 And down the fitful breeze thy numbers flung,
 Till envious ivy did around thee cling,
 Muffling with verdant ringlet every string,—

O minstrel Harp, still must thine accents
 sleep?

'Mid rustling leaves and fountains murmuring,
 Still must thy sweeter sounds their silence
 keep, [weep?

Nor bid a warrior smile, nor teach a maid to
 Not thus, in ancient days of Caledon,

Was thy voice mute amid the festal crowd,
 When lay of hopeless love, or glory won,
 Aroused the fearful, or subdued the proud.

At each according pause, was heard aloud
 Thine ardent symphony sublime and high!
 Fair dames and crested chiefs attention bow'd;

For still the burthen of thy minstrelsy
 Was knighthood's dauntless deed, and beauty's matchless eye.

O wake once more! how rude soe'er the hand
 That ventures o'er thy magic maze to stray;

O wake once more! though scarce my skill command

Some feeble echoing of thine earlier lay:
 Though harsh and faint, and soon to die away,
 And all unworthy of thy nobler strain,

Yet if one heart throb higher at its sway,
 The wizard note has not been touched in vain.
 Then silent be no more! Enchantress, wake again!

§ 167. Portrait of Ellen. SCOTT.

THE boat had touch'd this silver strand,
Just as the hunter left his stand,
And stood conceal'd amid the brake,
To view this Lady of the Lake.
The maiden paused, as if again
She thought to catch the distant strain.
With head up-rais'd; and look intent,
And eye and ear attentive bent,
And locks flung back, and lips apart,
Like monument of Grecian art,
In listening mood, she seem'd to stand
The guardian Naiad of the strand.

And ne'er did Grecian chisel trace
A Nymph, a Naiad, or a Grace,
Of finer form, or lovelier face!
What though the sun, with ardent frown,
Had slightly ting'd her cheek with brown,—
The sportive toil, which, short and light,
Had dyed her glowing hue so bright,
Served too in hastier swell to show
Short glimpses of a breast of snow:
What though no rule of courtly grace
To measur'd mood had train'd her pace,—
A foot more light, a step more true,
Ne'er from the heath-flower dash'd the dew;
E'en the slight hare-bell rais'd its head,
Elastic from her airy tread:
What though upon her speech there hung
The accents of the mountain tongue,—
Those silver sounds, so soft, so dear,
The list'ner held his breath to hear.

A chieftain's daughter seem'd the maid;
Her satin snood, her silken plaid,
Her golden brooch such birth betray'd.
And seldom was a snood amid
Such wild luxuriant ringlets hid,
Whose glossy black to shame might bring
The plumage of the raven's wing;
And seldom o'er a breast so fair,
Mantled a plaid with modest care,
And never brooch the folds combin'd
Above a heart more good and kind.
Her kindness and her worth to spy,
You need but gaze on Ellen's eye;
Not Katrine, in her mirror blue,
Gives back the shaggy banks more true,
Than every free-born glance confess'd
The guileless movements of her breast;
Whether joy danc'd in her dark eye,
Or woe or pity claim'd a sigh,
Or filial love was glowing there,
Or meek devotion pour'd a prayer,
Or tale of injury call'd forth
The indignant spirit of the north.
One only passion, unrevealed,
With maiden pride the maid concealed,
Yet not less purely felt, the flame;—
Oh need I tell that passion's name!

§ 168. The Harper. SCOTT.

As died the sounds upon the tide,
The shallop reached the main-land side.

And ere his onward way he took,
The Stranger cast a lingering look,
Where easily his eye might reach
The harper on the islet beach,
Reclined against a blighted tree,
As wasted, grey, and worn as he.
To minstrel meditation given,
His reverend brow was rais'd to heaven,
As from the rising sun to claim
A sparkle of inspiring flame.
His hand, reclined upon the wire,
Seemed watching the awakening fire;
So still he sate, as those who wait
Till judgment speak the doom of fate;
So still, as if no breeze might dare
To lift one lock of hoary hair;
So still, as life itself were fled,
In the last sound his harp had sped.

§ 169. The Sacrifice. SCOTT.

'Twas all prepared;—and from the rock,
A goat, the patriarch of the flock,
Before the kindling pile was laid,
And pierced by Roderick's ready blade.
Patient the sickening victim eyed
The life-blood ebb in crimson tide,
Down his clogged beard and shaggy limb,
Till darkness glazed his eye-balls dim.
The grisly priest, with murmuring prayer,
A slender crosslet framed with eare,
A cubit's length in measure due,
The shaft and limbs were rods of yew,
Whose parents in Inch-Cailliach wave
Their shadows o'er Clan-Alpine's grave,
And answering Lomond's breezes deep,
Soothe many a chieftain's endless sleep.
The cross, thus formed, he held on high,
With wasted hand and haggard eye,
And strange and mingled feelings woke,
While his anathema he spoke.

' Woe to the clans-man, who shall view
This symbol of sepulchral yew,
Forgetful that its branches grew
Where weep the heavens their holiest dew
On Alpine's dwelling low!
Deserter of his Chieftain's trust,
He ne'er shall mingle with their dust,
But, from his sires and kindred thrust,
Each clans-man's execration just
Shall doom him wrath and woe."
He paused;—the word the vassals took,
With forward step, and fiery look,
On high their naked brands they shook,
Their clattering targets wildly strook;
And first, in murmur low,
Then, like the billow in his course,
That far to seaward finds his source,
And flings to shore his mustered force,
Burst, with loud roar, their answer hoarse,
" Woe to the traitor, woe!"
Ben-an's grey scalp the accents knew,
The joyous wolf from covert drew,

The exulting eagle screamed afar,—
They knew the voice of Alpine's war.

The shout was hushed on lake and fell,
The Monk resumed his muttered spell.
Dismal and low its accents came,
The while he scathed the Cross with flame.
And the few words that reached the air,
Although the holiest name was there,
Had more of blasphemy than prayer.
But when he shook above the crowd
Its kindled points, he spoke aloud:—

“Woe to the wretch, who fails to rear
At this dread sign the ready spear!
For, as the flames this symbol sear,
His home the refuge of his fear,
A kindred fate shall know;
Far o'er its roof the volumed flame
Clan-Alpine's vengeance shall proclaim,
While maids and matrons on his name
Shall call down wretchedness and shame,
And infamy and woe.”—

Then rose the cry of females, shrill
As goss-hawk's whistle on the hill,
Denouncing misery and ill,
Mingled with childhood's babbling trill
Of curses stammered slow;

Answering, with imprecation dread,
“Sunk be his home in embers red!
And cursed be the meanest shed
That e'er shall hide the houseless head,
We doom to want and woe!”

A sharp and shrieking echo gave,
Coir-Uaiskin, thy goblin cave!
And the grey pass where birches wave,
On Beala-nam-bo.

Then deeper paused the priest anew,
And hard his labouring breath he drew,
While, with set teeth and clenched hand,
And eyes that glowed like fiery brand,
He meditated curse more dread,
And deadlier, on the clansman's head,
Who, summoned to his Chieftain's aid,
The signal saw and disobeyed.
The crosslet's points of sparkling wood,
He quenched among the bubbling blood,
And, as again the sign he reared,
Hollow and hoarse his voice was heard:
“When flits this cross from man to man,
Vich-Alpine's summons to his clan,
Burst be the ear that fails to heed!
Palsied the foot that shuns to speed!
May ravens tear the careless eyes,
Wolves make the coward heart their prize!
As sinks that blood-stream in the earth,
So may his heart's blood drench this hearth!
As dies in hissing gore the spark,
Quench thou his light, Destruction dark!
And be the grace to him denied,
Bought by this sign to all beside!”—
He ceased: no echo gave again
The murmur of the deep Amen.

§ 170. The Wedding. SCOTT.

A BLITHESOME rout, that morning tide,
Had sought the chapel of Saint Bride.
Her troth Tombea's Mary gave
To Norman, heir of Armandave,
And, issuing from the Gothic arch,
The bridal now resumed their march.
In rude, but glad procession, came
Bonnetted sire and coif-clad dame;
And plaided youth, with jest and jeer,
Which snooded maiden would not hear;
And children, that, unwitting why,
Lent the gay shout their shrilly cry;
And minstrels, that in measure vied
Before the young and bonny bride,
Whose downcast eye and cheek disclose
The tear and blush of morning rose.
With virgin step, and bashful hand,
She held the kerchief's snowy band;
The gallant bridegroom, by her side,
Beheld his prize with victor's pride,
And the glad mother in her ear
Was closely whispering word of cheer.

Who meets them at the church-yard gate?—
The messenger of fear and fate!
Haste in his hurried accent lies,
And grief is swimming in his eyes.
All dripping from the recent flood,
Panting and travel-soiled he stood,
The fatal sign of fire and sword
Held forth, and spoke the appointed word;
“The muster-place is Lanrick mead,
Speed forth the signal! Norman, speed!”—
And must he change so soon the hand,
Just linked to his by holy band,
For the fell cross of blood and brand?
And must the day, so blithe that rose,
And promis'd rapture in the close,
Before its setting hour, divide
The bridegroom from the plighted bride?
O fatal doom!—it must! it must!
Clan-Alpine's cause, her Chieftain's trust,
Her summons dread, brooks no delay;
Stretch to the race—away! away!
Yet slow he laid his plaid aside,
And, lingering, eyed his lovely bride,
Until he saw the starting tear
Speak woe he might not stop to cheer;
Then, trusting not a second look,
In haste he sped him up the brook,
Nor backward glanced till on the heath
Where Lubnaig's lake supplies the Teith.
—What in the racer's bosom stirred?
The sickening pang of hope deferred,
And memory, with a torturing train
Of all his morning visions vain.
Mingled with love's impatience, came
The manly thirst of martial fame;
The stormy joy of mountaineers,
Ere yet they rush upon the spears;
And zeal for clan and chieftain burning,
And hope, from well-fought field returning,

With war's red honours on his crest,
To clasp his Mary to his breast.
Stung by such thoughts, o'er bank and brae,
Like fire from flint he glanced away,
While high resolve, and feeling strong,
Burst into voluntary song.

Song.

The heath this night must be my bed,
The bracken curtain for my head,
My lullaby the warder's tread,
Far, far, from love and thee, Mary;
To-morrow eve, more stilly laid,
My couch may be my bloody plaid,
My vesper song, thy wail, sweet maid!
It will not waken me, Mary!

I may not, dare not, fancy now
The grief that clouds thy lovely brow,
I dare not think upon thy vow,

And all it promised me, Mary.
No fond regret must Norman know;
When bursts Clan-Alpine on the foe,
His heart must be like bended bow,
His foot like arrow free, Mary!

A time will come with feeling fraught!
For, if I fall in battle fought,
Thy hapless lover's dying thought
Shall be a thought on thee, Mary.
And if returned from conquered foes,
How blithely will the evening close,
How sweet the linnet sing repose,
To my young bride and me, Mary!

§ 171. Farewell Address to the Harp of the North. SCOTT.

HARP of the North, farewell! The hills grow dark,
On purple peaks a deeper shade descending;
In twilight copse the glow-worm lights her
spark,

The deer, half-seen, are to the covert wending.
Resume thy wizard elm! the fountain lending,
And the wild breeze, thy wilder minstrelsy;
Thy numbers sweet with Nature's vespers blending,

With distant echo from the fold and lea,
And herd-boy's evening pipe, and hum of housing bee.

Yet once again, farewell, thou Minstrel Harp!

Yet once again, forgive my feeble sway,
And little reck I of the censure sharp

May idly cavil at an idle lay. [way,
Much have I owed thy strains on life's long.
Through secret woes the world has never
known,

When on the weary night dawned wearier day,
And bitterer was the grief devoured alone.

That I o'erlive such woes, Enchantress! is thine own.

Hark! as my lingering footsteps slow retire,
Some Spirit of the Air has wak'd thy string!
'Tis now a Seraph bold, with touch of fire,
'Tis now the brush of Fairy's frolic wing.
Receding now, the dying numbers ring
Fainter and fainter down the rugged dell,
And now the mountain breezes scarcely bring
A wandering witch-note of the distant spell—
And now, 'tis silence all!—Enchantress, fare thee well!

The Pirate's Song.

§ 173. Athenian Prospect LORD BYRON.

SLOW sinks, more lovely ere his race be run,
 Along Morea’s hills the setting sun;
 Not as in Northern climes obscurely bright,
 But one unclouded blaze of living light!
 O’er the hush’d deep the yellow beam he throws,
 Gilds the green wave, that trembles as it glows.
 On old Ægina’s rock, and Idra’s isle,
 The god of gladness sheds his parting smile;
 O’er his own regions lingering loves to shine,
 Though there his altars are no more divine.
 Descending fast the mountain shadows kiss
 Thy glorious gulph, unconquer’d Salamis!
 Their azure arches through the long expanse
 More deeply purpled meet his mellowing glance,
 And tenderest tints, along their summits driven,
 Mark his gay course and own the hues of
     heaven;
 Till, darkly shaded from the land and deep,
 Behind his Delphian cliff he sinks to sleep.
 On such an eve, his palest beam he cast, [last.
 When—Athens! here thy wisest look’d his
 How watch’d thy better sons his farewell ray,
 That closed their murder’d sage’s latest day!
 Not yet—not yet—Sol pauses on the hill—
 The precious hour of parting lingers still;
 But sad his light to agonizing eyes,
 And dark the mountain’s once delightful dyes:
 Gloom o’er the lovely land he seem’d to pour,
 The land, where Phœbus never frown’d before;
 But ere he sunk below Cithæron’s head,
 The cup of woe was quaff’d—the spirit fled;
 The soul of him who scorn’d to fear or fly—
 Who lived and died, as none can live or die!
 But lo! from high Hymettus to the plain,
 The queen of night asserts her silent reign.
 No murky vapor, herald of the storm,
 Hides her fair face, nor girds her glowing form;
 With cornice glimmering as the moon-beams
     play,
 There the white column greets her grateful ray,
 And bright around with quivering beams beset
 Her emblem sparkles o’er the minaret:
 The groves of olive scatter’d dark and wide
 Where meek Cephissus pours his scanty tide,
 The cypress saddening by the sacred mosque,
 The gleaming turret of the gay Kiosk,
 And, dun and sombre ’mid the holy calm,
 Near Theseus’ fane yon solitary palm,
 All tinged with varied hues arrest the eye—
 And dull were his that pass’d them heedless by.
 Again the Ægean, heard no more afar,
 Lulls his chaf’d breast from elemental war;
 Again his waves in milder tints unfold
 Their long array of sapphire and of gold,
 Mixt with the shades of many a distant isle,
 That frown—where gentler ocean seems to smile.

§ 174. Address on the Opening of Drury-Lane Theatre. LORD BYRON.

IN one dread night our city saw, and sighed,
 Bowed to the dust, the Drama’s tower of pride;
 In one short hour beheld the blazing fane,
 Apollo sink, and Shakespeare cease to reign.
 Ye who beheld, O sight, admired and mourn’d,
 Whose radiance mock’d the ruin it adorn’d!
 Through clouds of fire the massy fragments
     riven, [heav’n,
 Like Israel’s pillar, chase the night from
 Saw the long column of revolving flames
 Shake its red shadow o’er the startled Thames;
 While thousands throng’d around the burning dome, [home;
 Shrunk back appalled, and trembled for their
 As glared the volumed blaze, and ghastly shone
 The skies, with lightnings awful as their own;
 Till blackening ashes and the lonely wall
 Usurped the Muse’s realm, and marked her fall;
 Say—shall this new nor less aspiring pile,
 Reared, where once rose the mightiest in our isle, [knew,
 Know the same favour which the former
 A shrine for Shakespearé—worthy him and you?

Yes, it shall be—the magic of that name
 Defies the sithe of time, the torch of flame,
 On the same spot still consecrates the scene,
 And bids the Drama be where she hath been:—
 This fabric’s birth attests the potent spell;
 Indulge our honest pride, and say, How well!
 As soars this fane to emulate the last,
 Oh! might we draw our omens from the past.
 Some hour propitious to our prayers, may boast
 Names such as hallow still the dome we lost.
 On Drury first your Siddons’ thrilling art
 O’erwhelm’d the gentlest, stormed the sternest
 On Drury, Garrick’s latest laurels grew: [heart;
 Here your last tears retiring Roscius drew,
 Sigh’d his last thanks, and wept his last adieu.
 But still for living wit the wreaths may bloom
 That only waste their odours o’er the tomb.
 Such Drury claimed, and claims,—nor you refuse
 One tribute to revive his slumbering muse;
 With garlands deck your own Menander’s head;
 Nor hoard your honours idly for the dead!

Dear are the days which made our annals
     bright,
 Ere Garrick fled, or Brinsley ceased to write.
 Heirs to their labours, like all high-born heirs,
 Vain of our ancestry as they of theirs; [glass,
 While thus Remembrance borrows Banquo’s
 To claim the sceptred shadows as they pass,
 And we the mirror hold, where imaged shine
 Immortal names emblazoned on our line;
 Pause—ere their feebler offspring you condemn,
 Reflect how hard the task to rival them.

Friends of the Stage—to whom both Players and Plays
 Must sue alike for pardon, or for praise,
 Whose judging voice and eye alone direct
 The boundless power to cherish or reject,

If e'er frivolity has led to fame,
 And make us blush that you forbore to blame,
 If e'er the sinking stage could condescend
 To soothe the sickly taste it dare not mend,
 All past reproach may present scenes refute,
 And censure, wisely loud, be justly mute!
 Oh! since your fiat stamps the Drama's laws,
 Forbear to mock us with misplac'd applause:
 So pride shall doubly nerve the actor's powers,
 And reason's voice be echo'd back by ours!
 This greeting o'er,—the ancient rule obey'd,
 The Drama's homage by her herald paid,
 Receive our welcome too—whose every tone
 Springs from our hearts, and fain would win your own.

The curtain rises—may our stage unfold
 Scenes not unworthy Drury's days of old!
 Britons our judges, Nature for our guide, [side.
 Still may we please, long—long may you pre-

§ 175. From Childe Harold's Pilgrimage.

LORD BYRON.

HE that has sailed upon the dark blue sea,
 Has view'd at times, I ween, a full fair sight;
 When the fresh breeze is fair as breeze may be,
 The white sail set, the gallant frigate tight;
 Masts, spires, and strand retiring to the right,
 The glorious main expanding o'er the bow,
 The convoys spread like wild swans in their flight,
 The dullest sailer wearing bravely now, [prow.

So gaily curl the waves before each dashing
 And oh, the little warlike world within!
 The well reev'd guns, the netted canopy,
 The hoarse command, the busy humming din,
 When, at a word, the tops are mann'd on high:
 Hark to the Boatswain's call, the cheering cry!
 While through the seaman's hand the tackle
 glides;

Or school-boy Midshipman that standing by,
 Strains his shrill pipe as good or ill betides,
 And well the docile crew that skilful urchin guides.

White is the glassy deck, without a stain,
 Where on the watch the staid Lieutenant walks:
 Look on that part which sacred doth remain
 For the lone chieftain, who majestic stalks,
 Silent and fear'd by all—not oft he talks
 With aught beneath him, if he would preserve
 That strict restraint, which broken, ever balks
 Conquest and Fame: but Britons rarely swerve From Law, however stern, which tends their strength to nerve.

Blow! swiftly blow, thou keel-compelling gale!
 Till the broad sun withdraws his lessening ray;
 Then must the pennant-bearer slacken sail,
 That lagging barks may make their lazy way.
 Ah, grievance sore! and listless dull delay,
 To waste on sluggish hulks the sweetest breeze!
 What leagues are lost before the dawn of day,
 Thus loitering pensive on the willing seas,
 The flapping sail haul'd down to halt for logs like these!

The moon is up; by Heaven a lovely eve!
 Long streams of light o'er dancing waves expand; [lieve:
 Now lads on shore may sigh and maids be-
 Such be our fate when we return to land!
 Meantime some rude Arion's restless hand
 Wakes the brisk harmony that sailors love;
 A circle there of merry listeners stand,
 Or to some well-known measure featly move,
 Thoughtless, as if on shore they still were free to rove.

Through Calpe's straits survey the steepy shore,
 Europe and Afric on each other gaze!
 Lands of the dark-ey'd Maid and dusky Moor,
 Alike beheld beneath pale Hecate's blaze:
 How softly on the Spanish shore she plays,
 Disclosing rock, and slope, and forest brown,
 Distinct though darkening with her waning
 But Mauritania's giant shadows frown, [phase;
 From mountain cliff to coast descending sombre down.

'Tis night, when meditation bids us feel
 We once have lov'd, though love is at an end:
 The heart, lone mourner of its baffled zeal,
 Though friendless now, will dream it had a friend. [bend,
 Who with the weight of years would wish to
 When Youth itself survives young Love and Joy?
 Alas! when mingling souls forget to blend,
 Death hath but little left him to destroy!
 Ah! happy years! once more who would not be a boy?

Thus bending o'er the vessel's laving side,
 To gaze on Dian's wave-reflected sphere;
 The soul forgets her schemes of Hope and Pride,
 And flies unconscious o'er each backward year:
 None are so desolate but something dear,
 Dearer than self, possesses or possess'd
 A thought, and claims the homage of a tear;
 A flashing pang! of which the weary breast
 Would still, albeit, in vain, the heavy heart divest.

To sit on rocks, to muse o'er flood and fell,
 To slowly trace the forest's shady scene,
 Where things that own not man's dominion
 dwell,
 And mortal foot hath ne'er, or rarely been;
 To climb the trackless mountain all unseen,
 With the wild flock that never needs a fold;
 Alone o'er steeps and foaming falls to lean;
 This is not solitude; 'tis but to hold Converse with Nature's charms, and see her stores unroll'd.

But midst the crowd, the hum, the shock of
 To hear, to see, to feel, and to possess, [men,
 And roam along, the world's tir'd denizen,
 With none who bless us, none whom we can bless;
 Minions of splendour shrinking from distress!
 None that, with kindred consciousness endued,
 If we were not, would seem to smile the less
 Of all that flatter'd, followed, sought, and sued:
 This is to be alone; this, this is solitude!

§ 176. To Thyrsa. By the same.

ONE struggle more, and I am free
 From pangs that rend my heart in twain;
 One last long sigh to love and thee,
 Then back to busy life again.
 It suits me well to mingle now
 With things that never pleas'd before:
 Though ev'ry joy is fled below,
 What future grief can touch me more?
 Then bring me wine, the banquet bring:
 Man was not form'd to live alone:
 I'll be that light unmeaning thing
 That smiles with all, and weeps with none.
 It was not thus in days more dear,
 It never would have been, but thou
 Hast fled, and left me lonely here;
 Thou'rt nothing, all are nothing now.
 In vain my lyre would lightly breathe!
 The smile that sorrow fain would wear
 But mocks the woe that lurks beneath,
 Like roses o'er a sepulchre.
 Though gay companions o'er the bowl
 Dispel a while the sense of ill;
 Though pleasure fires the madd'ning soul;
 The heart—the heart is lonely still!
 On many a lone and lovely night
 It sooth'd to gaze upon the sky;
 For then I deem'd the heav'nly light
 Shone sweetly on thy pensive eye:
 And oft I thought at Cynthia's noon,
 When sailing o'er the Ægean wave,
 "Now Thyrsa gazes on that moon—"
 Alas, it gleam'd upon her grave.
 When stretch'd on fever's sleepless bed,
 And sickness shrunk my throbbing veins,
 "'Tis comfort still," I faintly said,
 "'That Thyrsa cannot know my pains:—"
 Like freedom to the time-worn slave,
 A boon 'tis idle then to give;
 Relenting nature vainly gave
 My life, when Thyrsa ceas'd to live!
 My Thyrsa's pledge in better days,
 When love and life alike were new!
 How different now thou meet'st my gaze!
 How ting'd by time with sorrows hue!
 The heart that gave itself with thee
 Is silent—ah, were mine as still!
 Though cold as e'en the dead can be,
 It feels, it sickens with the chill.
 Thou bitter pledge! thou mournful token!
 Though painful, welcome to my breast!
 Still, still, preserve that love unbroken,
 Or break the heart to which thou'rt prest!
 Time tempers love, but not removes,
 More hallow'd when its hope is fled:
 Oh! what are thousand living loves
 To that which cannot quit the dead?

Recollections of Greece.

CLIME of the unforgotten brave!
 Whose land from plain to mountain-cave
 Was Freedom's home or Glory's grave—

Shrine of the mighty! can it be,
 That this is all remains of thee?
 Approach, thou craven crouching slave—
 Say, is not this Thermopylæ?
 These waters blue that round you lave
 Oh servile offspring of the free—
 Pronounce what sea, what shore is this?
 The gulf, the rock of Salamis!
 These scenes—their story not unknown—
 Arise, and make again your own;
 Snatch from the ashes of your sires
 The embers of their former fires,
 And he who in the strife expires
 Will add to theirs a name of fear,
 That Tyranny shall quake to hear,
 And leave his sons a hope, a fame,
 They too will rather die than shame;
 For Freedom's battle once begun,
 Bequeathed by bleeding Sire to Son,
 Though baffled oft is ever won.
 Bear witness, Greece, thy living page,
 Attest it many a deathless age!
 While kings in dusty darkness hid,
 Have left a nameless pyramid,
 Thy heroes—though the general doom
 Hath swept the column from their tomb,
 A mightier monument command,
 The mountains of their native land!
 There points thy Muse to stranger's eye,
 The graves of those that cannot die!
 'Twere long to tell, and sad to trace,
 Each step from splendour to disgrace,
 Enough—no foreign foe could quell
 Thy soul, till from itself it fell,
 And Self-abasement pav'd the way
 To villain-bonds and despot-sway.
 What can he tell who treads thy shore?
 No legend of thine olden time,
 No theme on which the muse might soar,
 High as thine own in days of yore,
 When man was worthy of thy clime.
 The hearts within thy valleys bred,
 The fiery souls that might have led
 Thy sons to deeds sublime;
 Now crawl from cradle to the grave,
 Slaves—nay the bondsmen of a slave,
 And callous, save to crime;
 Stain'd with each evil that pollutes
 Mankind, where least above the brutes;
 Without even savage virtue blest,
 Without one free or valiant breast,
 Still to the neighbouring ports they waft
 Proverbial wiles, and ancient craft,
 In this the subtle Greek is found,
 For this, and this alone, renown'd.
 In vain might Liberty invoke
 The spirit to its bondage broke,
 Or raise the neck that courts the yoke.

§ 178. The Palace of Fortune. An Indian Tale.
 SIR W. JONES.

MILD was the vernal gale, and calm the day,
 When Maia near a crystal fountain lay,
 Young Maia, fairest of the blue-eyed maids,
 That rov'd at noon in Tibet's musky shades;

But, haply, wandering through the fields of air,
Some fiend had whisper'd—Maia, thou art fair!
Hence swelling pride had fill'd her simple breast,
And rising passions robb'd her mind of rest;
In courts and glittering towers she wish'd to dwell,
And scorn'd her laboring parent's lowly cell.
And now, as gazing o'er the glassy stream,
She saw her blooming cheek's reflected beam,
Her tresses brighter than the morning sky,
And the mild radiance of her sparkling eye,
Low sighs and trickling tears by turns she stole,
And thus discharg'd the anguish of her soul:

'Why glow those cheeks, if unadmir'd they glow?

'Why flow those tresses, if unprais'd they flow?

'Why dart those eyes their liquid ray serene,

'Unfelt their influence, and their light unseen?

'Ye heavens! was that love-breathing bosom made [glade?

'To warm dull groves, and cheer the lonely

'Ah, no: those blushes, that enchanting face,

'Some tap'stried hall, or gilded bower, might
grace;

'Might deck the scenes, where love and pleasure reign, train.'

'And fire with amorous flames the youthful

While thus she spoke, a sudden blaze of light
Shot through the clouds, and struck her dazzled
sight.

She rais'd her head, astonish'd, to the skies,
And veil'd with trembling hands her aching eyes; [far

When through the yielding air she saw from
A goddess gliding in a golden car,

That soon descended on the flowery lawn,

By two fair yokes of starry peacocks drawn:

A thousand nymphs with many a sprightly glance

Form'd round the radiant wheels an airy dance,

Celestial shapes! in fluid light array'd;

Like twinkling stars their beamy sandals play'd;

Their lucid mantles glitter'd in the sun,

(Webs half so bright the silkworm never spun),

Transparent robes, that bore the rainbow's hue,

And finer than the nets of pearly dew

That morning spreads o'er every opening flow'r,

When sportive summer decks his bridal bow'r.

The queen herself, too fair for mortal sight,

Sat in the centre of encircling light. [maid,

Soon with soft touch she rais'd the trembling

And by her side in silent slumber laid: [train,

Straight the gay birds display'd their spangled

And flew refulgent through th' aerial plain;

The fairy band their shining pinions spread,

And, as they rose, fresh gales of sweetness shed;

Fann'd with their flowing skirts, the sky was mild;

And heaven's blue fields with brighter radiance
smild.

Now in a garden deck'd with verdant bow'rs

The glittering car descends on bending flow'rs:

The goddess still with looks divinely fair

Surveys the sleeping object of her care;

Then o'er her cheek her magic finger lays,

Soft as the gale that o'er a violet plays,

And thus in sounds, that favor'd mortals hear,
She gently whispers in her ravish'd ear:

'Awake, sweet maid, and view this charming

'For ever beauteous, and for ever green; [scene

'Here living rills of purest nectar flow

'O'er meads that with unfading flowerets glow;

'Here amorous gales their scented wings display,

'Mov'd by the breath of ever-blooming May;

'Here in the lap of pleasure shalt thou rest,

'Our lov'd companion, and our honor'd guest.'

The damsel hears the heav'nly notes distil,
Like melting snow, or like a vernal rill.

She lifts her head, and, on her arm reclin'd,

Drinks the sweet accents in her grateful mind:

On all around she turns her roving eyes, [prise;

And views the splendid scene with glad sur-

Fresh lawns, and sunny banks, and roseate

bow'rs, [with flow'rs;

Hills white with flocks, and meadows gemm'd

Cool shades, a sure defence from summer's ray,

And silver brooks, (where wanton damsels play,) [roll'd

Which with soft notes their dimpled crystal

O'er color'd shells and sand of native gold;

A rising fountain play'd from every stream,

Smil'd as it rose, and cast a transient gleam,

Then, gently falling in a vocal show'r,

Bath'd every shrub, and sprinkled every flow'r,

That on the banks, like many a lovely bride,

View'd in the liquid glass their blushing pride;

Whilst on each branch, with purple blossoms
hung,

The sportful birds their joyous descant sung.

While Maia, thus entranc'd in sweet delight,

With each gay object fed her eager sight,

The goddess mildly caught her willing hand,

And led her trembling o'er the flow'ry land;

Soon she beheld where, through an opening glade,

A spacious lake its clear expanse display'd;

In mazy curls, the flowing jasper wav'd

O'er its smooth bed, with polish'd agate pav'd;

And on a rock of ice, by magic rais'd,

High in the midst a gorgeous palace blaz'd;

The sunbeams on the gilded portals glanc'd,

Play'd on the spires, and on the turrets danc'd:

To four bright gates four ivory bridges led,

With pearls illumin'd, and with roses spread:

And now, more radiant than the morning sun,

Her easy way the gliding goddess won;

Still by her hand she held the fearful maid,

And, as she pass'd, the fairies homage paid:

They enter'd, straight, the sumptuous palace-hall,

Where silken tapestry emblaz'd the wall,

Refulgent tissue, of an heavenly woof;

And gems unnumber'd sparkled on the roof,

On whose blue arch the flaming diamonds

As on a sky with living stars inlay'd: [play'd,

Of precious diadems a regal store, [floor;

With globes and sceptres, strew'd the porphyry

Rich vests of eastern kings around were spread,

And glittering zones a starry lustre shed:

But Maia most admir'd the pearly strings,

Gay bracelets, golden chains, and sparkling rings.

High, in the centre of the palace, shone,
Suspended in mid-air, an opal throne :
To this the queen ascends, with royal pride,
And sets the favor'd damsel by her side.
Around the throne, in mystic order, stand
The fairy train, and wait her high command :
When thus she speaks: (the maid attentive sips                                 [lips.)
Each word that flows, like nectar, from her 'Favorite of heaven, my much lov'd Maia
    know,
'From me all joys, all earthly blessings, flow :
'Me suppliant men imperial Fortune call,
'The mighty empress of yon rolling ball :'
(She rais'd her finger, and the wondering maid,
At distance hung, the dusky globe survey'd ;
Saw the round earth with foaming oceans vein'd,                                 [tain'd.)
And laboring crowds on mountain tops sus-
'To me has fate the pleasing task assign'd,
'To rule the various thoughts of humankind ;
'To catch each rising wish, each ardent prayer,
'And some to grant, and some to waste in air.
'Know further,—as I rang'd the crystal sky,
'I saw thee near the murmuring fountain lie ;
'Mark'd the rough storm that gather'd in thy
    breast,
'And knew what care thy joyless soul opprest.
'Straight I resolv'd to bring thee quick relief,
'Ease every weight, and soften every grief ;
'If in this court contented thou canst live,
'And taste the joys these happy gardens give:—
'But fill thy mind with vain desires no more,
'And view without a wish yon shining store,
'Soon shall a numerous train before me bend,
'And kneeling votaries my shrine attend ;
'Warn'd by their empty vanities beware,
'And scorn the folly of each human prayer.'

She said ; and straight a damsel of her train
With tender fingers touch'd a golden chain.
Now a soft bell delighted Maia hears,
That sweetly trembles on her listening ears ;
Through the calm air the melting numbers
And wanton echo lengthens every note. [float,
Soon, through the dome, a mingled hum arose,
Like the swift stream that o'er a valley flows ;
Now louder still it grew, and still more loud,
As distant thunder breaks the bursting cloud :
Through the four portals rush'd a various throng,
That like a wintry torrent pour'd along :
A crowd, of every tongue and every hue, [flew.
Toward the bright throne, with eager rapture,
A lovely stripling * stepp'd before the rest
With hasty pace, and tow'rd the goddess prest ;
His mien was graceful, and his looks were mild,
And in his eye celestial sweetness smil'd :
Youth's purple glow, and beauty's rosy beam,
O'er his smooth cheeks diffus'd a lively gleam ;
The floating ringlets of his musky hair
Wav'd on the bosom of the wanton air :
With modest grace, the goddess he address'd,
And, thoughtless, thus preferr'd his fond request.

* Pleasure.

'Queen of the world! whose wide-extended sway, [obey,
'Gay youth, firm manhood, and cold age
'Grant me, while life's fresh blooming roses smile,
'The day with varied pleasures to beguile.
'Let me on beds of dewy flowers recline,
'And quaff, with glowing lips, the sparkling wine;
'Grant me to feed on beauty's rifled charms,
'And clasp a willing damsel in my arms,—
'Her bosom, fairer than a hill of snow,
'And gently bounding like a playful roe :
'Her lips, more fragrant than the summer air ;
'And sweet as Scythian musk, her hyacinthine
hair ;
'Let new delights each dancing hour employ,
'Sport follow sport, and joy succeed to joy.'

The goddess grants the simple youth's request,
And, mildly, thus accosts her lovely guest :
' On that smooth mirror, full of magic light,
' A while, dear Maia, fix thy wandering sight.'
She looks ; and in th' enchanted crystal sees
A bower o'er-canopied with tufted trees .
The wanton stripling lies beneath the shade ;
And, by his side, reclines a blooming maid ;
O'er her fair limbs a silken mantle flows,
Through which her youthful beauty softly glows,
And, part conceal'd and part disclos'd to sight,
Through the thin texture casts a ruddy light ;
As the ripe clusters of the mantling vine
Beneath the verdant foliage, faintly, shine,
And, fearing to be view'd by envious day,
Their glowing tints unwillingly display.

The youth, while joy sits sparkling in his eyes,
Pants on her neck, and on her bosom dies ;
From her smooth cheek nectareous dew he sips,
And all his soul comes breathing to his lips.
But Maia turns her modest eyes away,
And blushes to behold their amorous play.

She looks again ; and sees, with sad surprise,
On the clear glass far different scenes arise :
The bower, which late outshone the rosy morn, O'erhung with weeds she saw, and rough with thorn ;                                 [wreath'd ;
With sting of asps, the leafless plants were
And curling adders gales of venom breath'd :—
Low sat the stripling on the faded ground ;
And, in a mournful knot, his arms were bound ;
His eyes, that shot before a sunny beam,
Now scarcely shed a saddening, dying gleam,
Faint as a glimm'ring taper's wasted light,
Or a dull ray that streaks the cloudy night :—
His crystal vase was on the pavement roll'd,
And from the bank was fall'n his cup of gold ;
From which, th' envenom'd dregs of deadly hue                                 [dew,
Flow'd on the ground, in streams of baleful
And, slowly stealing through the wither'd bow'r,
Poison'd each plant, and blasted every flow'r :
Fled were his slaves, and fled his yielding fair,
And each gay phantom was dissolv'd in air ;
Whilst in their place was left a ruthless train,
Despair, and grief, remorse, and raging pain.

Aside the damsel turns her weeping eyes,
 And sad reflections in her bosom rise; [queen:
 To whom thus, mildly, speaks the radiant
 'Take sage example from this moral scene;
 'See! how vain pleasures sting the lips they kiss, [bliss!
 'How asps are hid beneath the bowers of
 'Whilst ever fair the flow'r of temperance blows, [rose;
 'Unchang'd her leaf, and without thorn her
 'Smiling she darts her glittering branch on high, [sky.
 'And spreads her fragrant blossoms to the Next, tow'rd the throne she saw a knight* advance;

Erect he stood, and shook a quiv'ring lance;
 A fiery dragon on his helmet shone;
 And on his buckler beam'd a golden sun;
 O'er his broad bosom blaz'd his jointed mail
 With many a gem, and many a shining scale;
 He trod the sounding floor with princely mien,
 And thus with haughty words address'd the
 queen:

'Let falling kings beneath my javelin bleed,
 'And bind my temples with a victor's meed;
 'Let every realm that feels the solar ray,
 'Shrink at my frown, and own my regal sway:
 'Let Ind's rich banks declare my deathless fame, [name.]

'And trembling Ganges dread my potent
 The queen consented to the warrior's pray'r;
 And his bright banners floated in the air;
 He bade his darts in steely tempests fly, [sky;
 Flames burst the clouds, and thunder shake the Death aim'd his lance, earth trembled at his nod,

And crimson conquest glow'd where'er he trod.
 And now, the damsel, fix'd in deep amaze,
 Th' enchanted glass with eager look surveys,
 She sees the hero in his dusky tent,
 His guards retir'd, his glimm'ring taper spent;
 His spear, vain instrument of dying praise,
 On the rich floor, with idle state, he lays;
 His gory falchion near his pillow stood,
 And stain'd the ground with drops of purple
 A busy page his nodding helm unlac'd, [blood;
 And on the couch his scaly hauberk plac'd:
 Now on the bed his weary limbs he throws,
 Bath'd in the balmy dew of soft repose:
 In dreams he rushes o'er the gloomy field,
 He sees new armies fly, new heroes yield;
 Warm with the vigorous conflict he appears,
 And ev'n in slumber seems to move the spheres.
 But lo! the faithless page, with stealing tread,
 Advances to the champion's naked head;
 With his sharp dagger wounds his bleeding breast,
 And steeps his eyelids in eternal rest: [gore,) Then cries, (and waves the steel that drops with
 'The tyrant dies; oppression is no more.'

Now came an aged sire†, with trembling pace;
 Sunk were his eyes, and pale his ghastly face;

* Glory.

† Riches.

A ragged weed of dusky hue he wore,
 And on his back a ponderous coffer bore.
 The queen with faltering speech he thus address'd:
 'O, fill with gold thy true adorer's chest!'

'Behold,' said she, and wav'd her pow'rful hand,
 'Where yon rich hills in glittering order stand:
 'There load thy coffer with the golden store;
 'Then bear it full away, and ask no more.'

With eager steps he took his hasty way, [lay;
 Where the bright coin in heaps unnumber'd
 There, hung enamour'd o'er the gleaming spoil, Scoop'd the gay dross, and bent beneath the
 But bitter was his anguish, to behold [toil.
 The coffer widen, and its sides unfold:

And, every time he heap'd the darling ore,
 His greedy chest grew larger than before;
 Till, spent with pain, and falling o'er his hoard,
 With his sharp steel his maddening breast he gor'd:

On the lov'd heap he cast his closing eye,
 Contented on a golden couch to die.

A stripling, with the fair adventure pleas'd,
 Stepp'd forward, and the massy coffer seiz'd;
 But with surprise he saw the stores decay,
 And all the long-sought treasures melt away:
 In winding streams the liquid metal roll'd,
 And through the palace ran a flood of gold.

Next, to the shrine advanc'd a reverend sage‡,
 Whose beard was hoary with the frost of age;
 His few grey locks a sable fillet bound,
 And his dark mantle flow'd along the ground:
 Grave was his port, yet show'd a bold neglect,
 And fill'd the young beholder with respect;
 Time's envious hand had plough'd his wrinkled
 Yet on those wrinkles sat superior grace; [face,
 Still full of fire appear'd his vivid eye, [sky.
 Darted quick beams, and seem'd to pierce the
 At length, with gentle voice and look serene,
 He wav'd his hand, and thus address'd the
 queen:

'Twice forty winters tip my beard with snow,
 'And age's chilling gusts around me blow:
 'In early youth, by contemplation led,
 'With high pursuits, my flatter'd thoughts
 were fed;

'To nature first my labors were confin'd,
 'And all her charms were open'd to my mind,
 'Each flower that glisten'd in the morning dew,
 'And every shrub that in the forest grew:
 'From earth to heaven I cast my wond'ring
 eyes,

'Saw suns unnumber'd sparkle in the skies,
 'Mark'd the just progress of each rolling sphere,
 'Describ'd the seasons, and reform'd the year.
 'At length sublimer studies I began,
 'And fix'd my level'd telescope on man;
 'Knew all his powers, and all his passions
 trac'd, [bas'd:

'What virtue rais'd him, and what vice de-
 'But when I saw his knowledge so confin'd,
 'So vain his wishes, and so weak his mind,

‡ Knowledge.

' His soul, a bright obscurity at best,
' And rough with tempests his afflicted breast,
' His life, a flower ere evening sure to fade,
' His highest joys, the shadow of a shade;
' To thy fair court I took my weary way,
' Bewail my folly, and heaven's laws obey,
' Confess my feeble mind for prayers unfit,
' And to my Maker's will my soul submit:
' Great empress of yon orb that rolls below,
' On me the last best gift of heaven bestow.'

He spoke: a sudden cloud his senses stole,
And thickening darkness swam o'er all his soul;
His vital spark her earthly cell forsook,
And into air her fleeting progress took.

Now, from the throng a deafening sound was heard,

And all at once their various prayers preferr'd;
The goddess, wearied with the noisy crowd,
Thrice wav'd her silver wand, and spoke aloud:
' Our ears no more with vain petitions tire,
' But take unheard whate'er you first desire.'
She said: each wish'd, and what he wish'd obtain'd;

And wild confusion in the palace reign'd.
But Maia, now grown senseless with delight,
Cast on an emerald ring her roving sight;
And, ere she could survey the rest with care,
Wish'd on her hand the precious gem to wear.

Sudden the palace vanish'd from her sight,
And the gay fabric melted into night;
But, in its place, she view'd with weeping eyes
Huge rocks around her, and sharp cliffs arise:
She sat deserted on the naked shore, [roar;
Saw the curl'd waves, and heard the tempest
Whilst on her finger shone the fatal ring,
A weak defence from hunger's pointed sting,
From sad remorse, from comfortless despair,
And all the painful family of care!

Frantic with grief her rosy cheek she tore,
And rent her locks, her darling charge no more:
But when the night his raven wing had spread,
And hung with sable every mountain's head,
Her tender limbs were numb'd with biting cold,
And round her feet the curling billows roll'd;
With trembling arms a rifted crag she grasp'd,
And the rough rock with hard embraces clasp'd.

While thus she stood, and made a piercing moan, [stone;

By chance her emerald touch'd the rugged
That moment gleam'd from heaven a golden ray,
And taught the gloom to counterfeit the day:

A winged youth, for mortal eyes too fair,
Shot, like a meteor, through the dusky air;
His heavenly charms o'ercame her dazzled sight,
And drown'd her senses in a flood of light;
His sunny plumes, descending, he display'd;
And, softly, thus address'd the mournful maid:

' Say, thou, who dost yon wondrous ring possess,
What cares disturb thee, or what wants oppress;
' To faithful ears disclose thy secret grief,
' And hope (so heaven ordains) a quick relief.'

The maid replied: ' Ah, sacred genius! bear
' A hopeless damsel from this land of care;

' Waft me to softer climes and lovelier plains.
' Where nature smiles, and spring eternal reigns.'

She spoke; and, swifter than the glance of thought,

To a fair isle his sleeping charge he brought.

Now morning breath'd: the scented air was mild,
Each meadow blossom'd, and each valley smil'd;
On every shrub the pearly dewdrops hung,
On every branch a feather'd warbler sung;
The cheerful spring her flowery chaplets wove,
And incense-breathing gales perfum'd the grove.

The damsel rose; and, lost in glad surprise,
Cast round the gay expanse her opening eyes,
That shone with pleasure, like a starry beam,
Or moonlight sparkling on a silver stream.

She thought some nymph must haunt that lovely scene,

Some woodland goddess, or some fairy queen;
At least she hop'd in some sequester'd vale
To hear the shepherd tell his amorous tale:
Led by these flattering hopes,—from glade to glade,

From lawn to lawn, with hasty steps she stray'd;
But not a nymph by stream or fountain stood,
And not a fairy glided through the wood;
No damsel wanton'd o'er the dewy flow'rs,
No shepherd sung beneath the rosy bow'rs:
On every side she saw vast mountains rise,
That thrust their daring foreheads in the skies;
The rocks of polish'd alabaster seem'd,
And in the sun their lofty summits gleam'd.
She call'd aloud; but not a voice replied,
Save Echo babbling from the mountain's side.

By this, had night o'ercast the gloomy scene,
And twinkling stars emblaz'd the blue serene:—
Yet on she wander'd—till, with grief oppress'd,
She fell; and, falling, smote her snowy breast:
Now, to the heavens her guilty head she rears,
And pours her bursting sorrow into tears;
Then plaintive speaks, ' Ah, fond mistaken maid!
' How was thy mind by gilded hopes betray'd!
' Why didst thou wish for bowers and flowery hills,

' For smiling meadows, and for purling rills;
' Since on those hills no youth or damsel roves,
' No shepherd haunts the solitary groves?
' Ye meads that glow with intermingled dyes,
' Ye flowering palms that from yon hillocks rise,

' Ye quivering brooks that softly murmur by,
' Ye panting gales that on the branches die;
' Ah! why has Nature through her gay domain
' Display'd your beauties, yet display'd in vain?
' In vain, ye flowers, you boast your vernal bloom,

' And waste in barren air your fresh perfume.
' Ah! leave, ye wanton birds, yon lonely spray;
' Unheard you warble, and unseen you play:
' Yet stay till fate has fix'd my early doom,
' And strow with leaves a hapless damsel's tomb.

' Some grot or grassy bank shall be my bier,
' My maiden hearse unwater'd with a tear.'

Thus while she mourns, o'erwhelm'd in deep despair,
 She rends her silken robes, and golden hair:
 Her fatal ring, the cause of all her woes,
 On a hard rock with maddening rage she throws;
 The gem, rebounding from the stone, displays
 Its verdant hue, and sheds refreshing rays:
 Sudden descends the Genius of the Ring,
 And drops celestial fragrance from his wing;
 Then speaks: 'Who calls me from the realms of day?
 'Ask, and I grant; command, and I obey!'
 She drank his melting words with ravish'd ears,
 And stopp'd the gushing current of her tears;
 Then kiss'd his skirts, that like a ruby glow'd,
 And said, 'O bear me to my sire's abode!'

Straight, o'er her eyes a shady veil arose,
 And all her soul was lull'd in still repose.

By this, with flow'rs the rosy-finger'd dawn
 Had spread each dewy hill and verdurous lawn;— [stood
 She wak'd; and saw a new built tomb, that
 In the dark bosom of a solemn wood, [vade,— While these sad sounds her trembling ears in—
 'Beneath yon marble, sleeps thy father's shade.'

She sigh'd; she wept; she struck her pensive
 breast;
 And bade his urn in peaceful slumber rest.
 And now, in silence, o'er the gloomy land,
 She saw advance a slowly-winding band;
 Their cheeks were veil'd, their robes of mournful hue
 Flow'd o'er the lawn, and swept the pearly dew;
 O'er the fresh turf they sprinkled sweet perfume,
 And strow'd with flowers the venerable tomb.
 A graceful matron walk'd before the train,
 And tun'd in notes of woe the funeral strain:
 When from her face her silken veil she drew,
 The watchful maid her aged mother knew.
 O'erpow'r'd with bursting joy, she runs to meet
 The mourning dame, and falls before her feet.
 The matron with surprise her daughter rears,
 Hangs on her neck, and mingles tears with
 tears.
 Now o'er the tomb their hallow'd rites they pay,
 And form with lamps an artificial day:
 Ere long the damsel reach'd her native vale,
 And told, with joyful heart, her moral tale;
 Resign'd to heaven, and lost to all beside,
 She liv'd contented, and contented died.

POETICAL.

BOOK THE THIRD.

DRAMATIC, CHIEFLY FROM SHAKSPEARE.

§ 1. ALL'S WELL THAT ENDS WELL.

SHAKSPEARE.

Advice.

BE thou blest, Bertram! and succeed thy father

In manners as in shape; thy blood and virtue
Contend for empire in thee, and thy goodness
Share with thy birth-right. Love all; trust a few;

Do wrong to none; be able for thine enemy
Rather in power than use; and keep thy friend
Under thy own life's key; be check'd for silence

But never tax'd for speech. What Heaven more will, [down,
That thee may furnish, and my prayers pluck
Fall on thy head!

Too ambitious Love.

I am undone; there is no living, none,
If Bertram be away. It were all one,
That I should love a bright particular star,
And think to wed it, he is so above me!
In his bright radiance and collateral light
Must I be comforted, not in his sphere,
Th' ambition in my love thus plagues itself:
The hind that would be mated by the lion
Must die for love. 'Twas pretty tho' a plague,
To see him every hour; to sit and draw
His arched brows, his hawking eye, his curls,
In our heart's table: heart, too capable
Of every line and trick of his sweet favor!
But now he's gone, and my idolatrous fancy
Must sanctify his relics.

A parasitical vain Coward.

I know him a notorious liar;
Think him a great way fool, solely a coward;
Yet these fix'd evils sit so fit in him,
That they take place, when virtue's steely bones
Look bleak in the cold wind: withal, full oft we see
Cold wisdom waiting on superfluous folly.

The Remedy of Evils generally in ourselves.

Our remedies oft in ourselves do lie,
Which we ascribe to Heaven. The fated sky

Gives us free scope; only doth backward pull
Our slow designs, when we ourselves are dull.
Impossible be strange attempts to those
That weigh their pain in sense, and do suppose
What hath been cannot be. Who ever strove
To show her merit, that did miss her love?

Character of a noble Courtier, by an old Cotemporary.

King. I would I had that corporal soundness
now,

As when thy father and myself in friendship
First tried our soldiership! He did look far Into the service of the time, and was Disciplined of the bravest. He lasted long;
But on us both did haggish age steal on,
And wore us out of act. It much repairs me
To talk of your good father. In his youth
He had the wit which I can well observe
To day in our young lords; but they may jest
Till their own scorn return to them unnoted,
Ere they can hide their levity in honor:
So like a courtier, contempt nor bitterness
Were in his pride or sharpness; if they were,
His equal had awak'd them; and his honor,
Clock to itself, knew the true minute when Exception bid him speak; and at that time
His tongue obey'd his hand. Who were below
He us'd as creatures of another place, [him
And bow'd his imminent top to their low ranks,
Making them proud of his humility,
In their poor praise he humbled; such a man
Might be a copy to these younger times,
Which, follow'd well, would demonstrate them
But goes backward. [now
Would I were with him!—He would always say—

(Methinks I hear him now; his plausible words
He scatter'd not in ears; but grafted them
To grow there, and to bear) 'Let me not live'
—Thus his good melancholy oft began,
On the catastrophe and heel of pastime,
When it was out—'Let me not live,' quoth he,
'After my flame lacks oil; to be the snuff'
'Of younger spirits, whose apprehensive senses
'All but new things disdain; whose judgements are [stances
'Mere fathers of their garments; whose con-
'Expire before their fashions'—This he wish'd.

I, after him, do after him wish too,
—Since I nor wax nor honey can bring home,
I quickly were dissolved from my hive,
To give some laborer room.

Idolatrous Worship.

—Thus Indian like,
Religious in mine error, I adore
The sun, that looks upon his worshipper,
But knows of him no more!

Mean Instruments often successful.

What I can do, can do no hurt to try,
Since you set up your rest 'gainst remedy,
He that of greatest works is finisher,
Oft does them by the weakest minister;
So holy writ in babes hath judgement shown,
When judges have been babes; great floods
have flown

From simple sources; and great seas have dry'd,
When miracles have by the greatest been deny'd.
Oft expectation fails, and most oft there
Where most it promises; and oft it hits
Where hope is coldest, and despair most fits.

Honor due to personal Virtue, not to Birth.

Strange is it, that our bloods, [together,
Whose color, weight, and heat, pour'd out
Would quite confound distinction, yet stand off
In differences so mighty. If she be
All that is virtuous, save what thou dislik'st,
—A poor physician's daughter, thou dislik'st
Of virtue for the name,—But do not so—
From lowest place when virtuous things proceed,

The place is dignified by the doer's deed.
Where great addition swells, and virtue none,
It is a dropsied honor; good alone
Is good without a name; vileness is so:
The property, by what it is, should go,
Not by the title. She is young, wise, fair;
In these, to nature she's immediate heir;
And these breed honor: that is honor's scorn,
Which challenges itself as honor's born,
And is not like the sire. Honors thrive
When rather from our acts we them derive
Than our fore-goers; the mere word's a slave
Debauch'd on every tomb, on every grave;
A lying trophy, and as oft is dumb,
Where dust and damn'd oblivion is the tomb
Of honor'd bones indeed.

Self-accusation of too great Love.

Poor lord! is't I

That chase thee from thy country, and expose
Those tender limbs of thine to the event
Of the none-sparing war? And is it I [thou
That drive thee from the sportive court, where Wast shot at with fair eyes, to be the mark
Of smoky muskets? O you leaden messengers,
That ride upon the violent speed of fire,
Fly with false aim; move the still-piercing air,
That sings with piercing, do not touch my lord!

Whoever shoots at him, I set him there:
Whoever charges on his forward breast,
I am the caitiff that do hold him to it:
And though I kill him not, I am the cause
His death was so effected. Better 'twere

I met the raving lion, when he roar'd
With sharp constraint of hunger, better 'twere
That all the miseries which nature owes
Were mine at once. No, come thou home,
Rousillon,

Whence honor but of danger wins a scar,
As oft it loses all. I will be gone:
My being here it is, that holds thee hence.
Shall I stay here to do it? No, no, although
The air of Paradise did fan the house,
And angels offic'd all: I will be gone;
That pitiful rumor may report my flight,
To console thine ear.

Custom of Seducers.

As, so you serve us, [roses,
Till we serve you; but when you have our
You barely leave our thorns to prick ourselves,
And mock us with our bareness.

Chastity.

Mine honor's such a ring:
My chastity's the jewel of our house,
Bequeathed down from many ancestors;
Which were the greatest obloquy i' th' world
In me to lose.

Cowardly Braggart.

Yet am I thankful: if my heart were great,
'Twould burst at this. Captain I'll be no more:
But I will eat, and drink, and sleep as soft
As captain shall: simply the thing I am Shall make me live. Who knows himself a braggart,

Let him fear this; for it will come to pass,
That every braggart shall be found an ass.
Rust, sword! cool, blushes! and Parolles, live
Safest in shame! being fool'd, by fool'ry thrive.
There's place and means for every man alive.

The Rashness of youth excused.

I beseech your majesty to make it
Natural rebellion, done in the blaze of youth,
When oil and fire, too strong for reason's force,
O'erbear it, and burn on.

What's lost most valued.

Praising what is lost,
Makes the remembrance dear.

Against Delay.

Let's take the instant by the forward top;
For we are old, and on our quick'st decrees
Th' inaudible and noiseless foot of time
Steals, ere we can effect them.

Excuse for unreasonable Dislike.

At first
I stuck my choice upon her, ere my heart
Durst make too bold a herald of my tongue:
Where the impression of mine eye enfixing,
Contempt his scornful perspective did lend me,
Which warp'd the line of every other favor;
Scorned a fair color, or express'd it stolen;
Extended or contracted all proportions
To a most hideous object: thence it came,
That she whom all men prais'd, and whom myself,

Since I have lost, have lov'd, was in my eye
The dust that did offend it.

Impediments stimulate.

As "all impediments in fancy's course
Are motives of mere fancy."

§ 2. AS YOU LIKE IT. SHAKSPEARE.

Playfellow.

WE have still slept together; [ther;
Rose at an instant; learn'd, play'd, eat toge-
And wheresoe'er we went, like Juno's swans,
Still we went coupled, and inseparable.

Fond youthful Friendship.

Celia. O my poor Rosalind, whither wilt thou go? [mine.

Wilt thou change fathers? I will give thee I charge thee, be not thou more griev'd than

Rosalind. I have more cause. [I am.

Celia. Thou hast not, cousin. [Duke
Pr'ythee be cheerful: know'st thou not, the
Has banish'd me, his daughter?

Rosalind. That he hath not. [the love

Celia. No? hath not? Rosalind lacks then
Which teacheth me that thou and I are one:
Shall we be sundered? Shall we part, sweet
No, let my father seek another heir. [girl?
Therefore devise with me how we may fly,
Whither to go, and what to bear with us:

And do not seek to take your change upon you,
To bear your griefs yourself, and leave me out:
For by this heaven, now at our sorrows pale,
Say what thou canst, I'll go along with thee.

Beauty.

Beauty provoketh thieves sooner than gold.

Woman in a Man's Dress.

Wer't not better,

Because that I am more than common tall,
That I did suit me all points like a man?
A gallant curtle-axe upon my thigh,
A boar-spear in my hand, and (in my heart,
Lie there what hidden woman's fears there will)

I'll have a swashing and a martial outside;
As many other mannish cowards have,
That do outface it with their semblances.

Solitude preferred to a Court Life, and the Advantages of Adversity.

Now, my co-mates and brothers in exile,
Hath not old custom made this life more sweet Than that of painted pomp? Are not these woods

More free from peril than the envious court?
Here feel we but the penalty of Adam,
The season's difference; as the icy fang,
And churlish chiding of the winter's wind;
Which, when it bites and blows upon my body,
Even till I shrink with cold, I smile and say,
"This is no flattery;" these are counsellors,
That feelingly persuade me what I am.

Sweet are the uses of adversity,
Which, like the toad, ugly and venomous,
Wears yet a precious jewel in his head:
And this our life, exempt from public haunt,
Finds tongues in trees, books in the running
brooks,

Sermons in stones, and good in every thing.
I would not change it!

Amiens. Happy is your grace,
That can translate the stubbornness of fortune
Into so quiet and so sweet a style!

Reflections on a wounded Stag, and on the melancholy Jaques.

Come, shall we go and kill us venison?

And yet it irks me, the poor dappled fools,
Being native burghers of this desert city,
Should in their old confines, with forked heads,
Have their round haunches goled.

1st Lord. Indeed, my lord,
The melancholy Jaques grieves at that;
And, in that kind swears, you do more usurp
Than doth your brother who hath banish'd you.
To-day my lord of Amiens and myself,
Did steal behind him, as he lay along
Under an oak, whose antique roots peep out
Upon the brook that brawls along this wood:
To the which place a poor sequester'd stag,
That from the hunter's aim had ta'en a hurt,
Did come to languish: and, indeed, my lord,
The wretched animal heav'd forth such groans,
That their discharge did stretch his leathern coat

Almost to bursting; and the big round tears
Cours'd one another down his innocent nose
In piteous chase; and thus the hairy fool,
Much marked of the melancholy Jaques,
Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook
Augmenting it with tears.

Duke s. But what said Jaques?
Did he not moralize this spectacle?

1st Lord. O yes, into a thousand similes.
First, for his weeping in the needless stream,
Poor deer, quoth he, thou mak'st a testament
As worldlings do, giving thy sum of more
To that which had too much. Then, being
alone,

Left and abandon'd of his velvet friends;
'Tis right, quoth he; thus misery doth part
The flux of company. Anon, a careless herd,
Full of the pasture, jumps along by him,
And never stays to greet him: Ah, quoth
Jaques,

Sweep on, you fat and greasy citizens;
'Tis just the fashion; wherefore do you look
Upon that poor and broken bankrupt there?
Thus most invectively he pierceth through
The body of the country, city, court,
Yea, and of this our life; swearing that we
Are mere usurpers, tyrants, and what's worse,
To fright the animals, and kill them up,
In their assign'd and native dwelling-place.

D. s. And did you leave him in this contemplation? [menting

Amiens. We did, my lord, weeping and com-
Upon the sobbing deer.

D. s. Shew me the place;
I love to cope him in these sullen fits,
For then he is full of matter.

Conspicuous Virtue exposed to Envy.

Adam. What! my young master? O my gentle master,
O my sweet master! O you memory
Of old Sir Rowland! why what make you here?
Why are you virtuous? Why do people love you? [liant?
And wherefore are you gentle, strong, and va-
Why would you be so fond to overcome
The bony priser of the humorous duke?
Your praise is come too swiftly home before you.
Know you not, master, to some kind of men
Their graces serve them but as enemies?

No more do yours ; your virtues, gentle master,
Are sanctified and holy traitors to you.
Oh ! what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it ?

Resolved Honesty.

Orlando. What, wouldst thou have me go and beg my food ?
Or with a base and boisterous sword enforce
A thievish living on the common road ?
This I must do, or know not what to do—
Yet this I will not do, do how I can ;
I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood, and bloody brother.

Gratitude in an old Servant.

Adam. But do not so ; I have five hundred crowns,
The thrifty hire I sav'd under your father,
Which I did store, to be my foster nurse
When service should in my old limbs lie lame,
And unregarded age in corners thrown.
Take that ; and He that doth the ravens feed,
Yea, providently caters for the sparrow,
Be comfort to my age ! Here is the gold ;
All this I give you ; let me be your servant :
Though I look old, yet I am strong and lusty ;
For in my youth I never did apply
Hot and rebellious liquors in my blood ;
Nor did I with unbashful forehead woo
The means of weakness and debility :
Therefore my age is as a lusty winter,
Frosty but kindly. Let me go with you,
I'll do the service of a younger man,
In all your business and necessities. [appears]

Orlando. Oh ! good old man, how well in thee
The constant service of the antique world,
When servants sweat for duty not for meed !
Thou art not for the fashion of these times,
Where none will sweat but for promotion ;
And, having that, do choak their service up,
Even with the having. It is not so with thee—
But, poor old man, thou prun'st a rotten tree,
That cannot so much as a blossom yield,
In lieu of all thy pains and husbandry.
But come thy ways, we'll go along together,
And ere we have thy youthful wages spent,
We'll light upon some settled low content.

Adam. Master, go on ; and I will follow thee,
To the last gasp, with truth and loyalty—
From seventeen years till now almost fourscore
Here lived I, but now live here no more.
At seventeen years many their fortunes seek,
But at fourscore it is too late a week ;
Yet fortune cannot recompense me better
Than to die well and not my master's debtor.

Lover described.

Oh thou didst then ne'er love so heartily.
If thou remember'st not the slightest folly
That ever love did make thee run into
Thou hast not lov'd—
Or if thou hast not sate as I do now,
Wearying thy hearer in thy mistress' praise,
Thou hast not lov'd—
Or if thou hast not broke from company
Abruptly, as my passion now makes me,
Thou hast not lov'd—

Description of a Fool, and his Morals on the Time.

Jaques. As I do live by food, I met a fool ;

Who laid him down, and bask'd him in the sun,
And rail'd on lady Fortune in good terms—
In good set terms—and yet a motley fool.
' Good-morrow, fool,' quoth I : ' No, Sir,' quoth
he, [fortune.]
' Call me not fool, till Heaven hath sent me
And then he drew a dial from his poke,
And looking on it with lack-lustre eye,
Says, very wisely, ' It is ten o'clock : ' [wags :
' Thus we may see' quoth he, ' how the world
' 'Tis but an hour ago since it was nine :
' And after one hour more 'twill be eleven :
' And so from hour to hour we ripe and ripe,
' And then from hour to hour we rot and rot,
' And thereby hangs a tale ' When I did hear
The motley fool thus moral on the time,
My lungs began to crow like chanticleer,
That fools should be so deep contemplative :
And I did laugh, sans intermission,
An hour by his dial.

Duke. What fool is this ? [courtier ;

Jaques. O worthy fool ! one that had been a
And says, if ladies be but young and fair,
They have the gift to know it : and in his brain,
Which is as dry as the remainder biscuit
After a voyage, he hath strange places cramm'd
With observation, the which he vents
In mangled forms. Oh that I were a fool !
I am ambitious for a motley coat !

A Fool's Liberty of Speech.

Duke. Thou shalt have one.

Jaques. It is my only suit :
Provided that you weed your better judgements
Of all opinion, that grows rank in them,
That I am wise. I must have liberty
Withal ; as large a charter as the wind,
To blow on whom I please ; for so fools have :
And they that are most galled with my folly,
They most must laugh. And why, Sir, must they so ?

The why is plain as way to parish-church :
He, whom a fool doth very wisely hit,
Doth very foolishly, although he smart,
Not to seem senseless of the bob. If not,
The wise man's folly is anatomiz'd
Even by the squandering glances of the fool.
Invest me in my motley ; give me leave [through
To speak my mind, and I will through and Cleanse the foul body of th' infected world,
If they will patiently receive my medicine.

Duke. Fie on thee—I can tell thee what thou wouldst do. [but good ?

Jaques. What, for a counter, would I do

Duke. Most mischievous foul sin in chiding
For thou thyself hast been a libertine, [sin ;
As sensual as the brutish sting itself :
And all th' imbossed sores and headed evils,
That thou with licence of freefoot hast caught,
Wouldst thou disgorge into the general world.

An Apology for Satire.

Jaques. Why, who cries out on pride,
That can therein tax any private party ?
Doth it not flow as hugely as the sea,
Till that the very means do ebb ?
What woman in the city do I name,
When that I say, the city woman bears
The cost of princes on unworthy shoulders ?

Who can come in and say that I mean her,
When such a one as she, such is her neighbour?
Or what is he of basest function,
That says, his bravery is not on my cost;
(Thinking that I mean him) but therein suits
His folly to the metal of my speech. [wherein
There then, how then? What then? let me see My tongue hath wronged him. If it do him
right,

Then he hath wrong'd himself. If he be free,
Why, then, my taxing, like a wild goose, flies
Unclaim'd of any man.

Distress prevents Ceremony.

The thorny point
Of bare distress hath ta'en from me the show
Of smooth civility.

A tender Petition and Reply.

Orlando. Speak you so gently? Pardon me,
I pray you:

I thought that all things had been savage here;
And therefore put I on the countenance
Of stern commandment. But whate'er you are,
That in this desert inaccessible,
Under the shade of melancholy boughs,
Lose and neglect the creeping hours of time;
If ever you have look'd on better days;
If ever been where bells have knoll'd to church;
If ever sat at any good man's feast;
If ever from your eye-lids wip'd a tear,
And know what 'tis to pity and be pitied—
Let gentleness my strong enforcement be;
In the which hope I blush and hide my sword.

Duke. True it is that we have seen better days,
And have with holy bell been knoll'd to church,

And sat at good men's feasts: and wip'd our eyes
Of drops that sacred pity hath engender'd:
And therefore sit you down in gentleness,
And take upon command what help we have,
That to your wanting may be minister'd [while,

Orlando. Then but forbear your food a little Whiles, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. There is an old poor man,
Who after me hath many a weary step
Limp'd in pure love; till he be first suffic'd,
Oppress'd with two weak evils, age and hunger,
I will not touch a bit!

The World compared to a Stage.

Thou see'st we are not all alone unhappy—
This wide and universal theatre
Presents more woful pageants than the scene
Wherein we play.

Jaques. All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances;
And one man in his time plays many parts,
His acts being seven ages. At first the infant,
Mewling and puking in the nurse's arms:
And then the whining school-boy, with his satchel

And shining morning face, creeping like snail
Unwillingly to school. And then the lover,
Sighing like furnace, with a woful ballad Made to his mistress's eye-brow. Then the soldier,

Full of strange oaths, and bearded like the pard,
Jealous in honor, sudden and quick in quarrel,

Seeking the bubble reputation [justice,
Even in the cannon's mouth. And then the
In fair round belly with good capon lin'd,
With eyes severe, and beard of formal cut
Full of wise saws and modern instances,
And so he plays his part. The sixth age shifts
Into the lean and slipper'd pantaloon,
With spectacles on's nose and pouch on's side:
His youthful hose, well sav'd, a world too wide
For his shrunk shanks; and his big manly voice,
Turning again towards childish treble, pipes
And whistles in his sound. Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness, and mere oblivion,
Sans teeth, sans eyes, sans taste, sans every thing.

Ingratitude. A Song.

Blow, blow, thou winter-wind,
Thou art not so unkind
As man's ingratitude:
Thy tooth is not so keen,
Because thou art not seen,
Although thy breath be rude.
Freeze, freeze, thou bitter sky,
Thou dost not bite so nigh
As benefits forgot:
Tho' thou the waters warp,
Thy sting is not so sharp
As friend remember'd not.

Scornful Love.

Sylvius. The common executioner, Whose heart th' accusom'd sight of death makes hard,

Falls not the axe upon the humble neck,
But first begs pardon: will you sterner be
Than he that dies and lives by bloody drops?

Phæbe. I would not be thy executioner:
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee.
Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eye;
'Tis pretty, sure, and very probable,
That eyes, that are the frail'st and softest things,
Who shut their coward gates on atomies,
Should be call'd tyrants, butchers, murderers!
Now I do frown on thee with all my heart;
And, if mine eyes can wound, now let them
kill thee:

Now counterfeit to swoon: why now fall down;
Or, if thou canst not, O, for shame, for shame,
Lie not, to say mine eyes are murderers. [thee.
Now show the wound mine eye hath made in Scratch thee but with a pin, and there remains
Some scar of it: lean but upon a rush,
The cicatrice and capable impressure [eyes,
Thy palm some moment keeps: but now mine
Which I have darted at thee, hurt thee not;
Now, I am sure, there is no force in eyes
That can do hurt to any.

Sylvius. O dear Phœbe,

If ever (as that ever may be near) [fancy,
You meet in some fresh cheek the power of
Then shall you know the wounds invisible
That Love's keen arrows make.

Scorn retorted.

Od's my little life!

I think she means to tangle mine eyes too.
No, 'faith, proud mistress! hope not after it.
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,

Your bugle eye-balls, nor your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.
You foolish shepherd, wherefore do you follow
her,

Like foggy south, puffing with wind and rain!
You are a thousand times a properer man
Than she a woman: 'Tis such fools as you
That make the world full of ill-favour'd children.

'Tis not her glass, but you that flatters her;
And out of you she sees herself more proper
Than any of her lineaments can show her.
But, mistress, know yourself; down on your knees

And thank Heaven, fasting, for a good man's
For I must tell you friendly in your ear, [love:
Sell when you can, you are not for all markets.
Cry the man mercy, love him, take his offer:
Foul is most foul, being foul to be a scoffer.

Tender Love.

So holy, and so perfect is my love,
And I in such a poverty of grace,
That I shall think it a most plenteous crop
To glean the broken ears after the man
That the main harvest reaps: loose now and then
A scatter'd smile, and that I'll live upon.

Real Love dissembled.

Think not I love him, though I ask for him;
'Tis but a peevish boy:—yet he talks well.—
But what care I for words? Yet words do well,
When he that speaks them pleases those that hear.
It is a pretty youth;—not very pretty;—
But sure he's proud: and yet his pride becomes
him:

He'll make a proper man: the best thing in him
Is his complexion: and faster than his tongue
Did make offence, his eye did heal it up.

He is not very tall; yet for his years he's tall;
His leg is but so so: and yet 'tis well:

There was a pretty redness in his lip,
A little ripper and more lusty red
Than that mix'd in his cheek; 'twas just the difference

Betwixt the constant red and mingled damask.
There be some women, Sylvius, had they mark'd him

In parcels, as I did, would have gone near
To fall in love with him; but, for my part,
I love him not, nor hate him not; and yet
I have more cause to hate him than to love him;
For what had he to do to chide at me?

He said mine eyes were black, and my hair black;
And now I am remember'd, scorn'd at me:

I marvel why I answer'd not again;
But that's all one; omittance is no quittance.

A fine Description of a sleeping Man, about to be destroyed by a Snake and a Lioness.

Under an oak, whose boughs were moss'd
with age,

And high top bald with high antiquity,
A wretched, ragged man, o'ergrown with hair,
Lay sleeping on his back; about his neck
A green and gilded snake had writh'd itself,
Who with her head, nimble in threats, approach'd

The opening of his mouth; but suddenly
Seeing Orlando, it unlink'd itself,

And with intended glides did slip away
Into a bush; under which bush's shade
A lioness, with udders all drawn dry, [watch
Lay couching, head on ground, with cat-like
When that the sleeping man should stir; for 'tis
The royal disposition of that beast
To prey on nothing that doth seem as dead.

Conversion.

I do not shame
To tell you what I was, since my conversion
So sweetly tastes, being the thing I am.

Love.

Phæbe. Good shepherd, tell this youth what
'tis to love. [tears;

Sylvius. It is to be all made of sighs and
It is to be all made of faith and service;
It is to be all made of fantasie,
All made of passion, and all made of wishes:
All adoration, duty, and observance:
All humbleness, all patience and impatience:
All purity, all trial, all observance.

The Uncertainty of Opinion in Anxiety.

Duke. Dost thou believe, Orlando, that the boy
Can do all this that he hath promised?

Orlando. I sometimes do believe, and sometimes do not;
As those that fear they hope, and know they fear.

Song. On Matrimony.

Wedding is great Juno's crown;
O blessed bond of board and bed!
'Tis Hymen peoples every town,
High wedlock then be honored:
Honor, high honor and renown,
To Hymen, god of every town!

§ 3. THE COMEDY OF ERRORS.
SHAKSPEARE.

Child-bearing prettily expressed.

Herself almost at fainting under
The pleasing punishment that women bear.

Cheats well described.

They say this town is full of cozenage;
As nimble jugglers that deceive the eye,
Dark-working sorcerers, that change the mind,
Soul-killing witches, that deform the body,
Disguised cheaters, prating mountebanks,
And many such-like liberties of sin!

Man's Pre-eminence.

Why head-strong liberty is lash'd with woe,
There's nothing situate under Heaven's eye,
But hath its bound, in earth, in sea, in sky;
The beasts, the fishes, and the winged fowls,
Are their males' subjects, and at their controuls.
Men, more divine, the master of all these,
Lords of the wide world, and wild wat'ry seas,
Indued with intellectual sense and souls,
Of more pre-eminence than fish or fowls,
Are masters to their females, and their lords:
Then let your will attend on their accords.

Patience easier taught than practised.

Patience unmov'd, no marvel though she pause;
They can be meek, that have no other cause.

A wretched soul, bruis'd with adversity,
We bid be quiet, when we hear it cry;
But, were we burden'd with like weight of pain,
As much or more we should ourselves complain.

Defamation.

I see the jewel best enamelled
Will lose its beauty; and tho' gold bides still,
That others touch; yet often touching will Wear gold. And so no man that hath a name,
But falsehood and corruption doth it shame.

Wife's Exhortation on a Husband's Infidelity.

Ay, ay, Antipholus, look strange and frown;
Some other mistress hath thy sweet aspects:
I am not Adriana, nor thy wife. [vow

The time was once when thou, unurg'd, wouldst
That never words were music to thine ear,
That never object pleasing in thine eye,
That never touch well welcome to thine hand,
That never meat sweet savor'd in thy taste,
Unless I spake, or look'd, or touch'd, or carv'd
to thee. [comes it,

How comes it now, my husband, Oh, how
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?

Thyself I call it, being strange to me:

That, undividable, incorporate,
Am better than thy dear self's better part.

Ah, do not tear away thyself from me:

For know, my love, as easy mayst thou fall

A drop of water in the breaking gulf,

And take unmingled thence that drop again,

Without addition or diminishing,

As take from me thyself, and not me too.

How dearly would it touch thee to the quick,

Shouldst thou but hear I were licentious;

And that this body consecrate to thee,

By ruffian lust should be contaminate!

Wouldst thou not spit at me, and spurn at me,

And hurl the name of husband in my face,

And tear the stain'd skin off my harlot brow,

And from my false hand cut the wedding-ring,

And break it with a deep divorcing vow?

I know thou wouldst; and therefore see thou do

I am possess'd with an adulterate blot, [it.

My blood is mingled with the crime of lust.

For if we two be one, and thou play false,

I do digest the poison of thy flesh,

Being strumpeted by thy contagion.

A Respect to Decency and the Opinion of the World, an excellent Bulwark to our Virtues.

Have patience, Sir; O, let it not be so;

Herein you war against your reputation,

And draw within the compass of suspect

Th' inviolated honor of your wife.

Once this—Your long experience of her wis-

Her sober virtues, years, and modesty, [dom,

Plead on her part some cause to you unknown;

And doubt not, Sir, but she will well excuse

Why at this time the doors are made against you.

Be rul'd by me; depart in patience,

And let us to the Tiger all to dinner;

And, about evening, come yourself alone,

To know the reason of this strange restraint.

If by strong hand you offer to break in,

Now in the stirring passage of the day,

A vulgar comment will be made of it;

And that supposed by the common rout

Against your yet ungalled reputation,
That may with foul intrusion enter in,
And dwell upon your grave when you are dead.
For slander lives upon succession;
For ever hous'd where it once gets possession.

Document for Wives, and the ill Effects of Jealousy.

Abbess. Hath he not lost much wealth by wreck at sea?

Buried some dear friend? Hath not else his eye
Stray'd his affection in unlawful love?

A sin prevailing much in youthful men,

Who give their eyes the liberty of gazing.

Which of these sorrows is he subject to?

Adriana. To none of these, except it be the last;

Namely, some love that drew him off from home. [ed him.

Abbess. You should for that have reprehend-

Adriana. Why so I did.

Abbess. But not rough enough. [let me.

Adriana. As roughly as my modesty would Abbess. Haply in private.

Adriana. And in assemblies too.

Abbess. But not enough.

Adriana. It was the copy of our conference;

In bed, he slept not for my urging it;

At board, he fed not for my urging it;

Alone, it was the subject of my theme:

In company, I often glanced at it:

Still did I tell him it was vile and bad.

Abbess. And therefore came it that the man was mad.

The venom clamors of a jealous woman

Poison more deadly than a mad-dog's tooth.

It seems his sleeps were hindered by thy railing;

And therefore comes it that his head is light.

Thou say'st his meat was sauc'd with thy up-

Unquiet meals make ill digestions, [braidings;

Thereof the raging fire of fever bred;

And what's a fever, but a fit of madness?

Thou say'st his sports were hindered by thy brawls:

Sweet recreation barr'd, what doth ensue

But moody and dull melancholy,

Kinsman to grim and comfortless despair?

And, at her heels, a huge infectious troop

Of pale distemperatures and foes to life.

Ill Deeds and ill Words double Wrong.

'Tis double wrong to truant with your bed,

And let her read it in your looks at board:

Shame hath a bastard fame well managed;

Ill deeds are doubled with an evil word.

Passionate Lover's Address to his Mistress.

Sing, Syren, for thyself, and I will dote;

Spread o'er the silver waves thy golden hairs.

And as a bed I'll take them, and there lie:

And in that glorious supposition think

Hegains by death, that hath such means to die.

Description of a beggarly Conjurer, or a Fortune-Teller.

A hungry, lean-faced villain,

A mere anatomy, a mountebank,

A thread-bare juggler, and a fortune-teller,

A needy, hollow-ey'd, sharp-looking wretch,

A living dead-man: this pernicious slave,

Forsooth, took on him as a conjurer:
And gazing in my eyes, feeling my pulse,
And with no face as't were outfacing me,
Cries out, I was possest.

Old Age.

Not know my voice! O time's extremity,
Hast thou so crack'd and splitted my poor tongue
In seven short years, that here my only son
Knows not my feeble key of untun'd cares?
Though now this grained face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up:
Yet hath my night of life some memory;
My wasting lamp some fading glimmer left;
My dull deaf ears a little use to hear:
All these old witnesses,—I cannot err,—
Tell me, thou art my son, Antipholus.

§ 4. LOVE'S LABOUR'S LOST.

SHAKSPEARE.

A laudable Ambition for Fame and true Conquest described.

King. LET Fame, that all hunt after in their lives,
Live register'd upon our brazen tombs,
And then grace us in the disgrace of death;
When, spite of cormorant devouring time,
Th' endeavour of this present breath may buy
That honor which shall bate his scythe's keen edge,

And make us heirs of all eternity.
Therefore, brave conquerors! for so you are
That war against your own affections,
And the huge army of the world's desires;—
Our late edict shall strongly stand in force.
Navarre shall be the wonder of the world:
Our court shall be a little academe,
Still and contemplative in living art.

Longaville. I am resolv'd; 'tis but a three years' fast;
The mind shall banquet tho' the body pine—
Fat paunches have lean pates: and dainty bits
Make rich the ribs, but bank'rout the wits.

Dumain. My loving lord, Dumain is mortified;
The grosser manner of the world's delights [fied;
He throws upon the gross world's baser slaves—
To love, to wealth, to pomp, I pine and die:
With all these living in philosophy.

Vanity of Pleasures.

Why, all delights are vain: but that most vain,
Which, with pain purchas'd, doth inherit pain.

On Study.

Study is like the heaven's glorious sun,
That will not be deepsearch'd with saucy looks;
Small have continual plodders ever won
Save base authority from others' books:
These earthly godfathers of heaven's lights,
That give a name to every fixed star,
Have no more profit of their shining nights,
Than those that walk, and wot not what they are.
Too much to know, is to know nought but fame,
And every godfather can give a name.

Again.

So study evermore is overshot;

While it doth study to have what it would,
It doth forget to do the things it should:
And when it hath the thing it hunteth most,
'Tis won, as towns with fire; so won, so lost.

Frost.

An envious sneaping frost,
That bites the first-born infants of the spring.

The Folly and Danger of making Vows.

Necessity will make us all forsworn [space:
Three thousand times within these three years'
For every man with his affects is born,
Not by might master'd, but by special grace:
If I break faith, this word shall speak for me,
I am forsworn on mere necessity.

A conceited Courtier, or Man of Compliments.

Our court, you know, is haunted
With a refined traveller of Spain;
A man in all the world's new fashion planted,
That hath a mint of phrases in his brain:
One whom the music of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish, like enchanting harmony:
A man of compliments, whom right and wrong
Have chose as umpire of their mutiny.

This child of fancy, that Armado hight,
For interim to our studies, shall relate
In high-born words the worth of many a knight,
From tawny Spain, lost in the word's debate.
How you delight, my lords, I know not, I:
But, I protest, I love to hear him lie,
And I will use him for my minstrelsy.

Biron. Armado is a most illustrious wight,
A man of fire-new words, fashion's own knight.

Beauty.

My beauty though but mean,
Needs not the painted flourish of your praise:
Beauty is bought by judgement of the eye,
Not uttered by base sale of chapmen's tongues.

A Wit.

In Normandy saw I this Longaville:
A man of sovereign parts he is esteem'd;
Well fitted in the arts, glorious in arms:
Nothing becomes him ill, that he would well:
The only foil of his fair virtue's gloss
(If virtue's gloss will stain with any foil)
Is a sharp wit match'd with too blunt a will;
Whose edge hath pow'r to cut, whose will still wills

It should none spare that come within his power.

Pri. Some merry mocking lord, be like: is't so?

Mar. They say so most, that most his humors know. [grow.

Pri. Such short-liv'd wits do wither as they

A Merry Man.

A merrier man,
Within the limit of becoming mirth,
I never spent an hour's talk withal.
His eye begets occasion for his wit;
For every object that the one doth catch
The other turns to a mirth-moving jest;
Which his fair tongue (conceit's expositor)
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales,
And younger hearings are quite ravished;
So sweet and voluble is his discourse.

A Comical Description of Cupid or Love.

O! and I forsooth, in love!
I, that have been love's whip:

A very beadle to a humorous sigh :
 A critic ; nay, a night-watch constable ;
 A domineering pedant o'er the boy,
 Than whom no mortal more magnificent !
 This whimpled, whining, purblind, wayward
 boy,

This Signior Julio's giant dwarf, Dan Cupid,
 Regent of love-rhymes, lord of folded arms,
 Th' anointed sovereign of sighs and groans ;
 Liege of all loiterers and malcontents ;
 Sole imperator, and great general
 Of trotting 'paritors : (O my little heart)
 And I to be a corporal of his file,
 And wear his colours ! like a tumbler's hoop !
 What ? I ! I love ! I sue ! I seek a wife !
 A woman, that is like a German clock,
 Still a-repairing ; ever out of frame,
 And never going right, being a watch,
 But being watch'd, that it may still go right ?

Ill Deeds often done for the Sake of Fame.

A giving hand, though foul, shall have fair
 praise—

But come, the bow :—Now mercy goes to kill,
 And shooting well is then accounted ill.
 Thus will I save my credit in the shoot :
 Not wounding, pity would not let me do 't ;
 If wounding, then it was to show my skill,
 That more for praise than purpose meant to kill.
 And, out of question, so it is sometimes :
 Glory grows guilty of detested crimes ; [part,
 When, for fame's sake, for praise, an outward
 We bend to that the working of the heart :
 As I, for praise alone, now seek to spill [ill.
 The poor deer's blood that my heart means no

Sonnet.

Did not the heavenly rhetoric of thine eye
 ('Gainst whom the world cannot hold argu-Persuade my heart to this false perjury ? [ment.)

Vows, for thee broke, deserve not punish-
 A woman I forswore ; but I will prove [ment.
 (Thou being a goddess) I forswore not thee.

My vow was earthly, thou a heavenly love :

Thy grace being gain'd cures all disgrace in
 me.

Vows are but breath, and breath a vapor is ;

Then thou, fair sun, which on my earth dost
 Exhal'st this vapor vow ; in thee it is : [shine,

If broken then, it is no fault of mine ;

If by me broke, what fool is not so wise,

To lose an oath to win a paradise ?

Another.

On a day (alack the day !)

Love, whose month is ever May,

Spy'd a blossom passing fair

Playing in the wanton air :

Through the velvet leaves the wind,

All unseen, 'gan passage find ;

That the lover, sick to death,

Wish'd himself the heaven's breath.

Air, quoth he, thy cheeks may blow ;—

Air, would I might triumph so !

But, alack ! my hand is sworn

Ne'er to pluck thee from thy thorn.

Vow, alack ! for youth unmeet,

Youth so apt to pluck a sweet.

Do not call it sin in me,

That I am forsworn for thee :

Thou for whom e'en Jove would swear
 Juno but an Ethiope were ;
 And deny himself for Jove,
 Turning mortal for thy love.

Commanding Beauty.

—Who sees the heavenly Rosalind,
 That, like a rude and savage man of Inde,
 At the first opening of the gorgeous east,
 Bows not his vassal head, and, stricken blind,
 Kisses the base ground with obedient breast ?
 What peremptory eagle-sighted eye
 Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
 That is not blinded by her majesty ?

The Power of Love.

Why universal plodding prisons up
 The nimble spirits in the arteries,
 As motion and long-during action tire
 The sinewy vigor of the traveller.

— — — — —
 When would you, my liege—or you—or you—
 In leaden contemplation have found out
 Such fiery numbers, as the prompting eyes
 Of beauteous tutors have enrich'd you with ?
 Other slow arts entirely keep the brain ;
 And therefore finding barren practisers,
 Scarce show a harvest of their heavy toil :
 But love, first learned in a lady's eyes,
 Lives not alone immured in the brain ;
 But, with the motion of all elements,
 Courses as swift as thought in every pow'r ;
 And gives to every pow'r a double pow'r ;
 Above their functions and their offices,
 It adds a precious seeing to the eye ;
 A lover's eyes will gaze an eagle blind :
 A lover's ears will hear the lowest sound,
 When the suspicious head of theft is stopt.
 Love's feeling is more soft and sensible
 Than are the tender horns of cockled snails.
 Love's tongue proves dainty Bacchus gross in
 For valor, is not love a Hercules, [taste.
 Still climbing trees in the Hesperides ?
 Subtle as Sphinx ; as sweet and musical
 As bright Apollo's lute, strung with his hair :
 And when love speaks, the voice of all the gods
 Makes heaven drowsy with the harmony.
 Never durst poet touch a pen to write,
 Until his ink were tempered with love's sighs :
 O then his eyes would ravish savage ears,
 And plant in tyrants mild humility.
 From women's eyes this doctrine I derive :
 They sparkle still the right Promethean fire :
 They are the books, the arts, the academes,
 That show, contain, and nourish all the world ;
 Else, none at all in aught proves excellent.

Wise Men greatest Fools in Love.

Ri. None are so surely caught, when they are catch'd

As wit turn'd fool : folly in wisdom hatch'd,
 Hath wisdom's warrant, and the help of school,
 And wit's own grace to grace a learned fool.

Ros. The blood of youth burns not with such excess

As gravity's revolt to wantonness.

Mar. Folly in fools bears not so strange a note,
 As foolery in the wise, when wit doth dote :
 Since all the power thereof it doth apply,
 To prove by wit, worth in simplicity.

Keanness of Women's Tongues.

The tongues of mocking wenches are as keen
As is the razor's edge invisible,
Cutting a smaller hair than may be seen ;
Above the sense of sense, so sensible Seemeth their conference ; their conceit hath
wings
Fleeter than arrows, bullets, wind, thought, swifter things.

Ladies mask'd and unmask'd.

Fair ladies mask'd are roses in the bud ;
Dismask'd, their damask sweet commixture
shown,
Are angels vailing clouds, or roses blown.

A Lord Chamberlain or Gentleman Usher.

This fellow pecks up wit, as pigeons pease ;
And utters it again when God doth please :
He is wit's pedlar ; and retails his wares
At wakes, and wassels, meetings, markets, fairs.
And we that sell by gross, the Lord doth know,
Have not the grace to grace it with such show.
This gallant pins the wenches on his sleeve ;
Had he been Adam he had tempted Eve.
He can carve too, and lisp : Why this is he
That kiss'd his hand away in courtesy ;
This is the ape of form, Monsieur the nice,
That when he plays at tables, chides the dice
In honorable terms : nay, he can sing
A mean most meanly ; and in ushering
Mend him who can : the ladies call him sweet ;
The stairs as he treads on them kiss his feet.
This is the flower that smiles on every one,
To show his teeth as white as whale his bone :
And consciences that will not die in debt,
Pay him the due of honey-tongu'd Boyet.

See where it comes ! Behaviour, what wert thou Till this man show'd thee ? and what art thou
now ?

Elegant Compliment to a Lady.

Fair, gentle, sweet, [greet
Your wit makes wise things foolish : when we
With eyes best seeing Heaven's fiery eye,
By light we lose light : your capacity
Is of that nature, as to your huge store [poor.
Wise things seem foolish, and rich things but

Humble Zeal to please. [how ;

That sport best pleases that doth least know
When zeal strives to content, and the contents
Die in the zeal of that which it presents,
Their form confounded makes most form in mirth, [birth.
When great things laboring perish in their

The Effects of Love.

For your fair sakes have we neglected time,
Play'd foul play with our oaths ; your beauty,
ladies, [mors
Hath much deform'd us, fashioning our hu-
Even to the opposed end of our intents ;
And what in us hath seem'd ridiculous—
As love is full of unbefitting strains,
All wanton as a child, skipping and vain ;
Form'd by the eye ; and therefore like the eye,
Full of strange shapes, of habits, and of forms,
Varying in subjects as the eye doth roll

To every vary'd object in his glance :
Which party-colored presence of loose love,
Put on by us, if, in your heavenly eyes,
'T hath misbecom'd our oaths and gravities,
Those heavenly eyes that look into these faults
Suggested us to make them : therefore, ladies,
Our love being yours, the error that love makes
Is likewise yours.

Trial of Love.

If this austere, insociable life
Change not your offer made in heat of blood ;
If frosts, and fasts, hard lodging and thin weeds,
Nip not the gaudy blossoms of your love,
But that it bear this trial, and last love ;
Then, at the expiration of the year,
Come challenge me.

Jest and Jester.

Ros. Oft have I heard of you, my lord Biron,
Before I saw you : and the world's large tongue
Proclaims you for a man replete with mocks ;
Full of comparisons, and wounding flouts ;
Which you on all estates will execute,
That lie within the mercy of your wit : [brain
To weed this wormwood from your fruitful
And therewithal to win me, if you please,
(Without the which I am not to be won) [day,
You shall this twelvemonth term, from day to Visit the speechless sick, and still converse
With groaning wretches : and your task shall
With all the fierce endeavour of your wit, [be,
'T enforce the pained impotent to smile.

Bir. To move wild laughter in the throat of death ?

It cannot be, it is impossible :
Mirth cannot move a soul in agony. [spirit,

Ros. Why, that's the way to choak a gibing
Whose influence is begot of that loose grace
Which shallow laughing hearers give to fools :
A jest's prosperity lies in the ear
Of him that hears it, never in the tongue
Of him that makes it. Then, if sickly ears,
Deaft with the clamors of their own dear groans,
Will bear your idle scorns, continue then,
And I will have you, and that fault withal ;
But if they will not, throw away that spirit,
And I shall find you empty of that fault,
Right joyful of your reformation.

Spring. A Song.

When daisies pied, and violets blue,
And lady-smocks all silver white,
And cuckow buds of yellow hue,
Do paint the meadows with delight :
The cuckow, then, on every tree,
Mocks married men ; for thus sings he,
Cuckow !

Cuckow ! Cuckow ! O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear !
When shepherds pipe on oaten straws,
And merry larks are plowmen's clocks ;
When turtles tread, and rooks and daws ;
And maidens bleach their summer smocks :
The cuckow then, on every tree,
Mocks married men ; for thus sings he,
Cuckow !

Cuckow ! Cuckow ! O word of fear,
Unpleasing to a married ear !

Winter. A Song.

When icicles hang by the wall,
 And Dick the shepherd blows his nail;
 And Tom bears logs into the hall,
 And milk comes frozen home in pail;
 When blood is nipt, and ways be foul,
 Then nightly sings the staring owl
 To-whoo!

Tu-whit, to-whoo, a merry note,
 While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.
 When all aloud the wind doth blow,
 And coughing drowns the parson's saw;
 And birds sit brooding in the snow,
 And Marian's nose looks red and raw:
 When roasted crabs hiss in the bowl,
 Then nightly sings the staring owl
 To-whoo!

Tu-whit, to-whoo, a merry note,
 While greasy Joan doth keel the pot.

§ 5. MEASURE FOR MEASURE.

SHAKSPEARE.

Virtue given to be exerted.

THERE is a kind of character in thy life,
 That, to the observer, doth thy history
 Fully unfold: thyself and thy belongings
 Are not thine own so proper, as to waste
 Thyself upon thy virtues, them on thee.
 Heav'n doth with us as we with torches do,
 Not light them for themselves: for if our virtues
 Did not go forth of us, 'twere all alike [touch'd
 As if we had them not. Spirits are not finely
 But to fine issues: nor nature never lends
 The smallest scruple of her excellence,
 But, like a thrifty goddess, she determines Herself the glory of a creditor,
 Both thanks and use.

Dislike of Popularity.

I love the people,
 But do not like to stage me to their eyes:
 Though it do well, I do not relish well
 Their loud applause and aves vehement:
 Nor do I think the man of safe discretion
 That does affect it.

Authority.

Thus can the demi-god authority
 Make us pay down for our offence by weight.
 The words of Heav'n: On whom it will, it will;
 On whom it will not, so; yet still 'tis just.

The Consequence of Liberty indulged.

Lucio. Why how now, Claudio? whence comes this restraint?

Claud. From too much liberty, my Lucio,
 As surfeit is the father of much fast, [liberty:
 So every scope, by the immoderate use,
 Turns to restraint. Our natures do pursue,
 Like rats that raven down their proper bane,
 A thirsty evil; and when we drink we die.

Neglected Laws.

This new governor
 Awakes me all th' enrolled penalties,
 Which have, like unscour'd armour, hung by the wall
 So long, that nineteen zodiacs have gone round,

And none of them been worn; and for a name,
 Now puts the drowsy and neglected act
 Freshly on me: 'tis surely for a name.

Eloquence and Beauty.

In her youth
 There is a prone and speechless dialect,
 Such as moves men; beside she hath a pro-
 sp'rous art,
 When she will play with reason and discourse,
 And well she can persuade.

Retired Life.

My holy Sir, none better knows than you
 How I have ever lov'd the life remov'd:
 And held in idle price to haunt assemblies
 Where youth, and cost, and witless bravery keeps.

Licentiousness the Consequence of unexecuted Laws.

We have strict statutes, and most biting laws, [steeds),
 (The needful bits and curbs to headstrong
 Which for these nineteen years we have let sleep;
 Even like an o'ergrown lion in a cave,
 That goes not out to prey: now as fond fathers
 Having bound up the threat'ning twigs of birch,
 Only to stick it in their children's sight
 For terror, not for use; in time the rod Becomes more mock'd than fear'd; so our decrees,
 Dead to infliction, to themselves are dead;
 And liberty plucks justice by the nose:
 The baby beats the nurse, and quite athwart
 Goes all decorum.

Pardon the Sanction of Wickedness.

For we bid this be done,
 When evil deeds have their permissive pass,
 And not the punishment.

A severe saint-like Governor.

Lord Angelo is precise:
 Stands at a guard with envy: scarce confesses
 That his blood flows, or that his appetite
 Is more to bread than stone: hence shall we see,
 If pow'r change purpose, what our seemers be.

A Virgin addressed.

Hail, virgin, if you be; as those cheek-roses
 Proclaim you are no less!

A Religious protest.

I hold you as a thing ensky'd and sainted;
 By your renouncement, an immortal spirit,
 And to be talk'd with in sincerity,
 As with a saint.

Embracing.

Your brother and his lover have embrac'd:
 As those that feed grow full; as blossoming
 time,
 That from the seedness the bare fallow brings
 To teeming foison; so her plenteous womb
 Expresseth his full tilth and husbandry.

School-fellows.

Luc. Is she your cousin? [their names,
 Isab. Adoptedly, as schoolmaids change
 By vain though apt affection.

Resolution.

Our doubts are traitors;
 And make us lose the good we oft might win,
 By fearing to attempt.

The Prayers of Maidens effectual.

Go to lord Angelo,
And let him learn to know, when maidens sue,
Men give like gods; but when they weep and kneel,
All their petitions are as freely theirs
As they themselves would owe them.

All Men frail.

Angelo. We must not make a scare-crow of the law,
Setting it up to scare the birds of prey,
And let it keep one shape till custom make it
Their perch and not their terror.

Esca. Ay, but yet
Let us be keen, and rather cut a little,
Than fall, and bruise to death: alas! this gentleman,
Whom I would save, had a most noble father.
Let but your honor know,
(Whom I believe to be most strait in virtue)
That in the working of your own affections,
Had time coher'd with place, or place with wishing,
Or that the resolute acting of your blood
Could have attain'd th' effect of your own purpose,
Whether you had not some time in your life
Err'd in this point, which now you censure him,
And pull'd the law upon you.

Angelo. 'Tis one thing to be tempted, Es-
Another thing to fall. I not deny, [calus,
The jury, passing on the pris'ner's life,
May in the sworn twelve have a thief or two Guiltier than him they try; what's open made
To justice, that justice seizes. What know
the laws [pregnant,
That thieves do pass on thieves? 'Tis very
The jewel that we find, we stoop and take it,
Because we see it; but what we do not see,
We tread upon, and never think of it.
You may not so extenuate his offence,
For I have had such faults: but rather tell me,
When I that censure him do so offend,
Let mine own judgement pattern out my death,
And nothing come in partial.

Mercy frequently mistaken.

Mercy is not itself, that oft looks so;
Pardon is still the nurse of second woe.

Not to be too hasty in Actions irremediable.

Under your good correction I have seen
When, after execution, judgement hath Repented o'er his doom.

Bad Actions already condemned, the Actors to be punished.

Condemn the fault, and not the actor of it?
Why, every fault's condemn'd, ere it be done:
Mine were the very cipher of a function,
To fine the faults whose fine stands in record,
And let go by the actor.

Mercy in Governors recommended.

No ceremony that to great ones 'longs,
Not the king's crown, nor the deputed sword,
The marshal's truncheon, nor the judge's robe,
Become them with one half so good a grace
As mercy does. If he had been as you,

And you as he, you would have slept like him,
But he, like you, would not have been so stern.

The Duty of mutual Forgiveness.

—Alas! alas!

Why, all the souls that were, were forfeit once,
And he that might the vantage best have took,
Found out the remedy. How would you be,
If he, which is the top of judgement, should
But judge you as you are? Oh! think on that:
And mercy then will breathe within your lips,
Like man new made.

Unprepared Death.

Isab. To-morrow! O, that's sudden! spare him, spare him: [kitchens
He's not prepar'd for death! Even for our
We kill the fowl of season; shall we serve Hea-
With less respect than we do minister [ven
To our gross selves? Good, good my lord, bethink you;
Who is it that hath dy'd for this offence?
—There's many have committed it.

Ang. The law hath not been dead, though it hath slept;
Those many had not dar'd to do that evil,
If the first man that did th' edict infringe
Had answer'd for his deed: now, 'tis awake;
Takes note of what is done; and, like a prophet,
Looks in a glass, that shows what future evils
(Or new, or by remissness new conceiv'd,
And so in progress to be hatch'd and born)
Are now to have no successive degrees,
But, ere they live, to end.

Justice.

Isab. Yet show some pity. [justice;
Ang. I show it most of all when I show
For then I pity those I do not know,
Which a dismiss'd offence would after gall;
And do him right, that, answering one foul
Lives not to act another. [wrong,

The Abuse of Authority.

Oh, 'tis excellent
To have a giant's strength! but it is tyrannous
To use it like a giant.

Great Men's Abuse of Power.

Could great men thunder, [quiet;
As Jove himself does, Jove would ne'er be
For ev'ry pelting, petty officer [but thunder!
Would use his heav'n for thunder! Nothing
Merciful heav'n!

Thou rather with thy sharp and sulphurous bolt
Split'st the unwedgable and gnarled oak,
Than the soft myrtle. O, but man! proud man,
Drest in a little brief authority,
Most ignorant of what he's most assur'd,
His glassy essence—like an angry ape,
Plays such fantastic tricks before high Heav'n
As makes the angels weep; who, with our
Would all themselves laugh mortal. [spleens,

The Privilege of Authority.

We cannot weigh our brother with ourself.
Great men may jest with saints; 'tis wit in them;
But, in the less, foul profanation.
That in the captain's but a choleric word,
Which in the soldier is flat blasphemy.

Consciousness of our own Faults should make us merciful.

Ang. Why do you put these sayings upon me?

Isab. Because authority, though it err like Hath yet a kind of medicine in itself, [others, That skims the vice o' the top: go to your bosom:

Knock there; and ask your heart what it doth know

That's like my brother's fault: if it confess A natural guiltiness, such as is his, Let it not sound a thought upon your tongue Against my brother's life.

Honest Bribery.

Isab. Hark how I'll bribe you! Good my

Ang. How! bribe me? [Lord, turn back.

Isab. Not with fond shekels of the tested gold, Or stones whose rate is either rich or poor As fancy values them; but with true prayers, That shall be up at heaven, and enter there Ere the sun rise: prayers from preserved souls, From fasting maids whose minds are dedicate To nothing temporal.

The Power of virtuous Beauty.

Isab. Save your honour! [Exit Isab.

Ang. From thee; even from thy virtue!— What's this? What's this? Is this her fault, or mine? [ha!

The tempter, or the tempted, who sins most? Not she; nor doth she tempt; but it is I, That, lying by the violet, in the sun, Do, as the carrion does, not as the flower, Corrupt with virtuous season. Can it be, That modesty may more betray our sense Than woman's lightness? Having waste ground Shall we desire to rase the sanctuary, [enough, And pitch our evils there? Oh, fie, fie, fie, What dost thou, or what art thou, Angelo? Dost thou desire her foully, for those things That make her good? Oh, let her brother live: Thieves for their robbery have authority, When judges steal themselves. What! do I love That I desire to hear her speak again, [her, And feast upon her eyes? What is't I dream Oh, cunning enemy, that to catch a saint, [on? With saints dost bait thy hook! Most dange- Is that temptation, that does goad us on [rous To sin in loving virtue: ne'er could the strumpet,

With all her double vigor, art and nature, Once stir my temper: but this virtuous maid Subdues me quite.—

True Repentance. [carry?

Duke. Repent you, fair one, of the sin you

Jul. I do; and bear the shame most patiently.

Duke. I'll teach you how you shall arraign your conscience,

And try your penitence, if it be sound, Or hollowly put on.

Jul. I'll gladly learn.

Duke. Love you the man that wrong'd you?

Jul. Yes, as I love the woman that wrong'd him. [ful act

Duke. So then, it seems, your most offence— Was mutually committed?

Jul. Mutually. [than his.

Duke. Then was your sin of heavier kind

Jul. I do confess it, and repent, father.

Duke. 'Tis meet so, daughter: but—lest you do repent

As that the sin hath brought you to this shame, Which sorrow is always to ourselves, not Heaven;

Showing we would not spare Heaven, as we But as we stand in fear— [love it,

Jul. I do repent me as it is an evil; And take the shame with joy.

Duke. There rest.

Love in a grave severe Governor.

When I would pray and think, I think and pray To sev'ral subjects: Heav'n hath my empty words:

Whilst my invention, hearing not my tongue, Anchors on Isabel. Heav'n's in my mouth, As if I did but only chew his name; And in my heart the strong and swelling evil Of my conception: the state whereon I studied, Is like a good thing, being often read, Grown fear'd and tedious; yea, my gravity, Wherein (let no man hear me) I take pride, Could I with boot, change for an idle plume Which the air beats for vain. O place! O form!

How often dost thou with thy case, thy habit, Wrench awe from fools, and tie the wiser souls To thy false seeming! Blood, thou still art blood!

Let's write good angel on the devil's horn;— 'Tis not the devil's crest.

A simile on the Presence of the beloved Object.

——O Heavens!

Why does my blood thus muster to my heart, Making both it unable for itself, And dispossessing all my other parts Of necessary fitness? So play the foolish throngs with one that swoons; Come all to help him, and thus stop the air By which he should revive: and even so The gen'ral subject to a well-wish'd king, Quit their own part, and in obsequious fondness Crowd to his presence, where their untaught love Must needs appear offence.

Fornication and Murder equalled.

Fie, these filthy vices!—It were as good, To pardon him that hath from nature stol'n A man already made, as to remit [image Their saucy sweetness, that do coin Heaven's In stamps that are forbid: 'tis all as easy Falsely to take away a life true made, As to put mettle in restrained means, To make a false one.

Compelled Sins.

Our compell'd sins Stand more for number than for account.

Lowliness of Mind. [good,

Isab. Let me be ignorant, and in nothing But graciously to know I am no better. [bright,

Ang. Thus wisdom wishes to appear most When it does tax itself: as these black masks Proclaim an enshiel'd beauty ten times louder Than beauty could display'd.

Heroic Female Virtue.

Ang. Admit no other way to save his life
(As I subscribe not that or any other,
But in the loss of question), that you his sister,
Finding yourself desir'd of such a person,
Whose credit with the judge, or own great
place,
Could fetch your brother from the manacles
Of the all-binding law ; and that there were
No earthly mean to save him, but that either
You must lay down the treasures of your body,
To this supposed, or else to let him suffer ;
What would you do ?

Isab. As much for my poor brother as myself :
That is, were I under the terms of death,
Th' impression of keen whips I'd wear as rubies,
And strip myself to death as to a bed
That longing I have been sick for, ere I'd yield
My body up to shame.

Ang. Then must your brother die.

Isab. And 'twere the cheaper way :
Better it were a brother died at once,
Than that a sister, by redeeming him
Should die for ever.

Ang. Were not you then as cruel as the sentence
That you have slander'd so ? [tence

Isab. An ignominious ransom, and free par-
Are of two houses ; lawful mercy sure, [don,
Is nothing kin to foul redemption.

Self-interest palliates Faults.

Isab. It oft falls out, [what we mean.
To have what we would have, we speak not
I something do excuse the thing I hate,
For his advantage that I dearly love.

Woman's Frailty.

Ang. —Nay, women are frail too.

Isab. Ay, as the glasses where they view themselves ;
Which are as easy broke as they make forms.
Women ! help Heaven ! men their creation
mar, [frail ;
In profiting by them : nay call us ten times
For we are soft as our complexions are,
And credulous to false prints.

Weight of established Reputation.

Ang. Who will believe thee, Isabel ?
My unsoil'd name, th' austereness of my life,
My vouch against you, and my place i' the state,
Will so your accusation overweigh,
That you shall stifle in your own report,
And smell of calumny.

Hope.

The miserable have no other medicine
But only hope.

Moral Reflections on the Vanity of Life.

Be absolute for death ; either death or life
Shall thereby be the sweeter. Reason thus with
If I do lose thee, I do lose a thing [life :
That none but fools would keep : a breath thou
Servile to all the skiey influences, [art,
That do this habitation, where thou keep'st,
Hourly afflict : merely, thou art death's fool ;
For him thou labour'st by thy flight to shun,

And yet runn'st tow'rd him still. Thou art not noble ;

For all the accommodations that thou bear'st
Are nurs'd by baseness : thou art by no means valiant ;

For thou dost fear the soft and tender fork
Of a poor worm. Thy best of rest is sleep,
And that thou oft provok'st : yet grossly fear'st Thy death, which is no more. Thou art not thyself ;

For thou exist'st on many a thousand grains ;
That issue out of dust. Happy thou art not ;
For what thou hast not, still thou striv'st to get ;
And what thou hast, forgett'st. Thou art not certain ;

For thy complexion shifts to strange effects,
After the moon. If thou art rich, thou'rt poor ;
For, like an ass, whose back with ingots bows,
Thou bear'st thy heavy riches but a journey,
And death unloads thee. Friend thou hast none ;

For thine own bowels, which do call thee sire,
The mere effusion of thy proper loins,
Do curse the gout, serpigo, and the rheum,
For ending thee no sooner. Thou hast not youth nor age,

But as it were an after dinner's sleep,
Dreaming on both ; for all thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld ; and when thou art old and rich, Thou hast neither heat, affection, limb, nor
beauty,

To make thy riches pleasant. What's yet in this,
That bears the name of life ? Yet in this life Lie hid more thousand deaths : yet death we
That makes these odds all even. [fear,

The Terrors of Death most in Apprehension.

Claud. Is there no remedy ? [head,

Isab. None but such remedy as, to save a
Would cleave a heart in twain.

Claud. But is there any ?

Isab. O, I do fear thee, Claudio ; and I quake,
Lest thou a feverous life shouldst entertain,
And six or seven winters more respect
Than a perpetual honor. Dar'st thou die ?
The sense of death is most in apprehension ;
And the poor beetle that we tread upon,
In corp'ral sufferance feels a pang as great
As when a giant dies.

Resolution from a Sense of Honor.

Claud. Why give you me this shame ?
Think you I can a resolution fetch
From flow'ry tenderness ? If I must die,
I will encounter darkness as a bride,
And hug it in my arms ! [ther's grave

Isab. There spake my brother ; there my father
Did utter forth a voice.

A sainted Hypocrite.

Isab. Yes, thou must die :
Thou art too noble to conserve a life [puty
In base appliances. This outward sainted de-
Whose settled visage and delib'rate word
Nips youth i' th' head, and follies doth emmew
As falcon doth the fowl, is yet a devil ;

His filth within being cast, he would appear
A pond as deep as hell.

Claud. The princely Angelo?

Isab. O, 'tis the cunning livery of hell,
The damnedst body to invest and cover
In princely guards!

The Terrors of Death.

Isab. O, were it but my life,
I'd throw it down for your deliverance
As frankly as a pin!

Claud. Ah, Isabel!

Isab. What says my brother?

Claud. — Death's a fearful thing.

Isab. And shamed life a hateful. [where;

Claud. Ah, but to die, and go we know not
To lie in cold obstruction, and to rot;
This sensible warm motion to become
A kneaded clod; and the dilated spirit
To bathe in fiery floods; or to reside
In thrilling regions of thick-ribbed ice:
To be imprison'd in the viewless winds,
And blown with restless violence round about
The pendant world; or to be worse than worst
Of those, that lawless and incertain thoughts
Imagine howling! 'tis too horrible!
The weariest and most loathed worldly life
That age, ache, penury, imprisonment,
Can lay on nature, is a paradise
To what we fear of death.

Cowardly Apprehension of Death reproached.

Isab. O, faithless coward! O dishonest
wretch!

Wilt thou be made a man out of my vice?
Is't not a kind of incest, to take life [think?
From thine own sister's shame? What should I
Heaven grant my mother play'd my father fair!
For such a warped slip of wilderness [ance—
Ne'er issued from his blood.—Take my defi-
Die, perish! might but my bending down
Reprieve thee from thy fate, it should proceed—
Oh, fie, fie, fie!

Thy sin's not accidental, but a trade;
Mercy to thee would prove itself a bawd;
'Twere best thou diest quickly!

Virtue and Goodness.

Virtue is bold, and goodness never fearful.

A Bawd.

Fie, sirrah! a bawd—a wicked bawd!
The evil that thou causest to be done,
That is thy means to live. Dost thou but think
What 'tis to cram a maw, or clothe a back,
From such a filthy vice? Say to thyself,
From their abominable and beastly touches
I drink, I eat, array myself, and live:—
Canst thou believe thy living is a life
So stinkingly depending! Go, mend; go mend!

Calumny unavoidable.

No might nor greatness in mortality
Can censure 'scape: back-wounding calumny
The whitest virtue strikes. What king so strong,
Can tie the gall up in the sland'rous tongue?

Good Example necessary in Rulers.

He, who the sword of Heaven will bear,
Should be as holy as severe;

Pattern in himself to know,
Grace to stand, and virtue go;
More or less to others paying,
Than by self offences weighing:
Shame to him whose cruel striking
Kills for faults of his own liking!
Twice treble shame on Angelo,
To weed my vice and let his grow!
O, what may man within him hide,
Though angel on the outward side!
How may likeness made in crimes,
Mocking practice on the times,
To draw with idle spider's strings,
Most pond'rous and substantial things!

A beautiful Song.

Take, O take those lips away,
That so sweetly were forsworn;
And those eyes, the break of day,
Lights that do mislead the morn:
But my kisses bring again;
Seals of love, but seal'd in vain.
Hide, O hide those hills of snow,
Which thy frozen bosom bears,
On whose tops the pinks that grow
Are of those that April wears;
But my poor heart first set free,
Bound in those icy chains by thee.

Guilty Diligence.

With whispering and most guilty diligence,
In action all of precept, he did show me
The way twice o'er.

Greatness subject to Censure.

O place and greatness! millions of false eyes
Are struck upon thee; volumes of report
Run with these false and most contrarious quests
Upon thy doings: thousand 'scapes of wit
Make thee the father of their idle dream,
And rack thee in their fancies.

Execution finely expressed.

By eight to-morrow
Thou shalt be made immortal!

Sound Sleep.

As fast lock'd up in sleep, as guiltless labor
When it lies starkly in the traveller's bones.

Upright Governor supposed.

Prov. It is a bitter deputy.

Duke. Not so, not so; his life is parallel'd Even with the stroke and line of his great
justice;

He doth with holy abstinence subdue
That in himself, which he spurs on his power
To qualify in others: were he meal'd
With that which he corrects, then were he
But this being so, he's just. [tyrannous:

Good Jailor.

This is a gentle provost; seldom, when
The steeled jailor is the friend of men.

Comfort from Despair.

But I will keep her ignorant of her good,
To make her heavenly comforts of despair,
When it is least expected.

Complaining useless.

Isab. Injurious world! most damned Angelo!

Duke. This nor hurts him, nor profits you a jot:
Forbear it therefore, give your cause to Heaven!

That therefore only are reputed wise,
 For saying nothing; who, I am very sure,
 If they should speak, would almost damn those
 ears,
 Which, hearing them, would call their brothers fools.
 I'll tell thee more of this another time:
 But fish not with this melancholy bait,
 For this fool gudgeon, this opinion.

Jocose Satire on Silence.

Silence is only commendable [dible.
 In a neat's tongue dried, and a maid not ven-

Generous and disinterested Friendship.

Ant. I pray you, good Bassanio, let me know it:
 And, if it stand, as you yourself still do,
 Within the eye of honor, be assur'd
 My purse, my person, my extremest means,
 Lie all unlock'd to your occasions.

Bass. In my school-days, when I had lost one
 I shot his fellow of the self-same flight [shaft,
 The self-same way, with more advised watch,
 To find the other; and, by advent'ring both,
 I oft found both: I urge this childhood proof,
 Because what follows is pure innocence.
 I owe you much; and, like a wilful youth,
 That which I owe is lost: but if you please
 To shoot another arrow that self way
 Which you did shoot the first, I do not doubt—
 As I will watch the aim,—or to find both,
 Or bring your latter hazard back again,
 And thankfully rest debtor for the first.

Ant. You know me well; and herein spend but time,
 To wind about my love with circumstance;
 And, out of doubt, you do me now more wrong,
 In making question of my uttermost,
 Than if you had made waste of all I have.
 Then do but say to me what I should do,
 That in your knowledge may by me be done,
 And I am prest unto it: therefore, speak.

—Thou know'st that all my fortunes are at sea;
 Neither have I money, nor commodity
 To raise a present sum: therefore go forth,
 Try what my credit can in Venice do;
 That shall be rack'd even to the uttermost,
 To furnish thee to Belmont, to fair Portia.
 Go, presently inquire, and so will I,
 Where money is; and I no question make
 To have it of my trust, or for my sake.

A Jew's Malice.

Bass. This is signior Antonio.

Shyl. How like a fawning publican he looks!
 I hate him, for he is a Christian: [Aside.
 But more for that, in low simplicity,
 He lends out money gratis, and brings down
 The rate of usance here with us in Venice.
 If I can catch him once upon the hip
 I will feed fat the ancient grudge I bear him.
 He hates our sacred nation; and he rails [gate,
 E'en there, where merchants most do congre-
 On me, my bargains, and my well-won thrift,
 Which he calls interest. Cursed be my tribe,
 If I forgive him!

A Jew's Sanctity and Hypocrisy.

Shyl. When Jacob graz'd his uncle Laban's sheep,

This Jacob from our holy Abraham was
 (As his wise mother wrought in his behalf)
 The third possessor; ay, he was the third.

Ant. And what of him? did he take interest?

Shyl. No, not take interest; not as you would Directly interest; mark what Jacob did: [say,
 When Laban and himself were compromis'd,
 That all the eanlings, which were streak'd and
 py'd, [rank,

Should fall as Jacob's hire,—the ewes being
 In end of autumn turned to the rams:
 And when the work of generation was Between those woolly breeders in the act,
 The skilful shepherd peel'd me certain wands,
 And, in the doing of the deed of kind,
 He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes;
 Who then conceiving, did in eaning time
 Fall party-colour'd lambs, and those were Jacob's.

This was a way to thrive, and he was blest;
 And thrift is blessing, if men steal it not.

Ant. This was a venture, Sir, that Jacob serv'd for;

A thing not in his power to bring to pass,
 But sway'd and fashion'd by the hand of Hea-
 Was this inserted to make interest good? [ven.
 Or is your gold and silver ewes and rams?

Shyl. I cannot tell; I make it breed as fast:
 But note me, signior.—

Ant. Mark you this, Bassanio,
 The devil can cite Scripture for his purpose.
 An evil soul, producing holy witness,
 Is like a villain with a smiling cheek;
 A goodly apple, rotten at the heart:
 O, what a goodly outside falsehood hath!

The Jew's Expostulation.

Signior Antonio, many a time and oft
 In the Rialto you have rated me
 About my monies and my usances:
 Still have I borne it with a patient shrug,
 For sufferance is the badge of all our tribe.
 You call me misbeliever, cut-throat dog,
 And spit upon my Jewish gabardine,
 And all for use of that which is my own.
 Well then, it now appears you need my help:—

Go to then;—you come to me, and you say,
 “Shylock, we would have monies;” you say so;
 You, that did void your rheum upon my beard,
 And foot me, as you spurn a stranger-cur
 Over your threshold:—Monies is your suit.—
 What should I say to you?—Should I not say,
 “Hath a dog money?—Is it possible
 A cur can lend three thousand ducats?”—or Shall I bend low, and, in a bondman's key,
 With 'bated breath and whisp'ring humble-
 ness,

Say this: “Fair Sir, you spit on me on Wednesday last;

You spurn'd me such a day; another time
 You call'd me dog; and for these courtesies
 I'll lend you thus much monies?”

A Villain's fair Offers suspicious.
I like not fair terms, and a villain's mind.

An Apology for a black Complexion.
Mislike me not for my complexion,
The shadow'd livery of the burnish'd sun,
To whom I am a neighbour, and near bred.
Bring me the fairest creature northern born,
Where Phœbus' fire scarce thaws the icicles,
And let us make incision for your love,
To prove whose blood is reddest, his or mine.
I tell thee, lady, this aspect of mine
Hath fear'd the valiant; by my love, I swear
The best regarded virgins of our clime
Have lov'd it too: I would not change this hue,
Except to steal your thoughts, my gentle queen.

Merit no Match for the Caprice of Fortune.
——Lead me to the caskets,
To try my fortune. By this scymitar,
That slew the sophy, and a Persian prince,
That won three fields of Sultan Solymán,—
I would o'erstare the sternest eyes that look,
Out-brave the heart most daring on the earth,
Pluck the young sucking cubs from the she-
bear,
Yea, mock the lion when he roars for prey,
To win thee, lady: But, alas the while!
If Hercules and Lychas play at dice,
Which is the better man? the greater throw
May turn by fortune from the weaker hand:
So is Alcides beaten by his page;
And so may I, blind fortune leading me,
Miss that which one unworthier may attain,
And die with grieving.

Gravity assumed.
Bass. ——But hear thee, Grátiano;
Thou art too wild, too rude, and bold of voice;
Parts that become thee happily enough,
And in such eyes as ours appear not faults:
But where thou art not known, why there
they show,
Something too liberal; pray thee take pain
To allay with some cold drops of modesty
Thy skipping spirit; lest, through thy wild behaviour,
I be misconstrued in the place I go to,
And lose my hopes.

Gra. ——Signior Bassanio, hear me:
If I do not put on a sober habit,
Talk with respect, and swear but now and then,
Wear prayer-books in my pocket, look de-murely;
Nay more, while grace is saying, hood mine eyes
Thus with my hat, and sigh, and say Amen;
Use all the observance of civility,
Like one well studied in a sad ostent,
To please his grandam—never trust me more.

The Jew's Commands to his Daughter.
Hear you me, Jessica: [drum,
Lock up my doors; and when you hear the
And the vile squeaking of the wry-neck'd fife,
Clamber you not up to the casemen then,
Nor thrust your head into the public-street,
To gaze on Christian fools with varnish'd faces:
But stop my house's ears:—I mean my casements:——

Let not the sound of shallow foppery enter
My sober house.

Shylock's Description of his Servant.
Shyl. The patch is kind enough; but a huge feeder,
Snail-slow in profit, and he sleeps by day
More than the wild cat. Drones hive not with
me:

Therefore I part with him: and part with him
To one, that I would have him help to waste
His borrow'd purse.

Fruition more languid than Expectation.
O, ten times faster Venus' pigeons fly
To seal love's bonds new made, than they are
To keep obliged faith unforfeited. [wont

——Who riseth from a feast
With that keen appetite that he sits down?
Where is the horse that doth untread again
His tedious measures with the unbated fire
That he did pace them first? All things that are,
Are with more spirit chased than enjoy'd.
How like a younker, or a prodigal,
The scarfed bark puts from her native bay,
Hugg'd and embraced by the strumpet wind!
How like a prodigal doth she return;
With over-weather'd ribs, and ragged sails,
Lean, rent, and beggar'd by the strumpet wind!

Portia's Suitors.
From the four corners of the earth they come
To kiss this shrine, this mortal breathing saint.
Th' Hyrcanian deserts, and the vasty wilds
Of wide Arabia, are as thoroughfares
Now, for princes to come view fair Portia.
The wat'ry kingdom, whose ambitious head
Spits in the face of heaven, is no bar
To stop the foreign spirits; but they come,
As o'er a brook, to see fair Portia.

The Parting of Friends.
I saw Bassanio and Antonio part:
Bassanio told him, he would make some speed
Of his return; he answer'd, "Do not so;
Slubber not business for my sake, Bassanio,
But stay the very riping of the time:
And for the Jew's bond, which he hath of me,
Let it not enter in your mind of love.
Be merry; and employ your chiefest thoughts
To courtship, and such fair ostents of love
As shall conveniently become you there."
And even there his eye being big with tears,
Turning his face, he put his hand behind him,
And with affection wondrous sensible
He wrung Bassanio's hand, and so they parted.

False Judgement of the Many.
——Fortune now,
To my heart's hope!—Gold, silver, and base lead. [he hath."
"Who chooseth me, must give and hazard all
You shall look fairer, ere I give or hazard.
What says the golden chest? ha! let me see:—
"Who chooseth me, shall gain what many men desire." [meant
What many men desire!—That many may be
Of the fool multitude, that choose by show,
Not learning more than the fond eye doth teach: [martlet,
Which pries not to the interior, but, like the

Builds in the weather on the outward wall,
Even in the force and road of casualty.
I will not choose what many men desire,
Because I will not jump with common spirits,
And rank me with the barbarous multitudes.

Honour ought to be conferred on Merit only.

Why then to thee, thou silver treasure-house;
Tell me once more what title thou dost bear:
"Who chooseth me, shall get as much as he deserves."

And well said too; for who shall go about
To cozen fortune and be honorable [sume
Without the stamp of merit? Let none pre-
To wear an undeserved dignity.

O, that estates, degrees, and offices [honor
Were not deriv'd corruptly! and that clear
Were purchas'd by the merit of the wearer!
How many then should cover, that stand bare!
How many be commanded, that command!
How much low peasantry would then be glean'd [honor
From the true seed of honor! and how much
Pick'd from the chaff and ruin of the times
To be new-varnish'd!

Love's Messenger compared to an April Day.

I have not seen
So likely an ambassador of love;
A day in April never came so sweet,
To show how costly summer was at hand,
As this fore-spurrer comes before his lord.

Music.

Let music sound, while he doth make his choice!
Then, if he lose, he makes a swan-like end,
Fading in music.—That the comparison
May stand more proper, my eye shall be the
stream

And wat'ry death-bed for him: he may win;
And what is music then? Then music is,
Even as the flourish, when true subjects bow
To a new-crowned monarch: such it is
As are those dulcet sounds in break of day,
That creep into the dreaming bridegroom's ear,
And summon him to marriage.—

———Now he goes

With no less presence, but with much more
love,

Than young Alcides, when he did redeem
The virgin tribute paid by howling Troy
To the sea-monster: I stand for sacrifice;
The rest aloof are the Dardanian wives,
With bleared visages, come forth to view
The issue of the exploit.

A Song. On Fancy.

I.

Tell me, where is fancy bred;
Or in the heart, or in the head?
How begot, how nourished?

Reply.

II.

It is engender'd in the eyes;
With gazing fed: and fancy dies
In the cradle where it lies:
Let us all ring fancy's knell:
I'll begin it,—Ding dong, bell.

The Deceit of Ornament or Appearances.

So may the outward shows be least themselves.

The world is still deceiv'd with ornament.
In law, what plea so tainted and corrupt,
But, being season'd with a gracious voice,
Obscures the show of evil? In religion,
What damned error, but some sober brow
Will bless it, and approve it with a text,
Hiding the grossness with fair ornament?
There is no vice so simple, but assumes
Some mark of virtue on his outward parts.
How many cowards, whose hearts are all as false

As stairs of sand, wear yet upon their chins
The beards of Hercules and frowning Mars;
Who, inward search'd, have livers white as milk!

And these assume but valor's excrement,
To render them redoubted. Look on beauty,
And you shall see 'tis purchas'd by the weight,
Which therein works a miracle in nature,
Making them lightest that wear most of it.
So are those crisped, snaky, golden locks,
Which make such wanton gambols with the
Upon supposed fairness, often known [wind
To be the dowry of a second head,
The scull that bred them in the sepulchre.
Thus ornament is but the gilded shore
To a most dangerous sea; the beauteous scarf
Veiling an Indian beauty; in a word, [on
The seeming truth which cunning times put T' entrap the wisest—Therefore, thou gaudy
gold,

Hard food for Midas, I will none of thee:
Nor none of thee, thou pale and common drudge, [lead,
Tween man and man: but thou, thou meagre
Which rather threat'nest than dost promise aught,

Thy plainness moves me more than eloquence,
And here choose I; joy be the consequence.

Joy on Success.

How all the other passions fleet to air,
As doubtful thoughts, and rash embrac'd despair,

And shuddering fear, and green-eyed jealousy!
O love, be moderate, allay thy ecstasy:
In measure rein thy joy, scant this excess:
I feel too much thy blessing, make it less,
For fear I surfeit!

Portia's Picture.

What find I here?

Fair Portia's counterfeit? What demi-god
Hath come so near creation? Move these eyes?
Or whether, riding on the balls of mine,
Seem they in motion? Here are sever'd lips
Parted with sugar breath; so sweet a bar [hairs
Should sunder such sweet friends: Here in her
The painter plays the spider; and hath woven
A golden mesh t' intrap the hearts of men,
Faster than gnats in cobwebs: but her eyes,—
How could he see to do them? Having made one, [his,
Methinks it should have power to steal both
And leave itself unfurnished.

Successful Lover compared to a Conqueror.

Like one of two contending for a prize,
That thinks he hath done well in people's eyes,
Hearing applause and universal shout,
Giddy in spirit, still gazing in a doubt
Whether those peals of praise be his or no;
So, thrice fair lady, stand I even so.

An amiable Bride.

Portia.—Though for myself alone
I would not be ambitious, in my wish,
To wish myself much better: yet for you
I would be trebled twenty times myself;
A thousand times more fair, ten thousand times more rich;
That only to stand high in your account,
I might in virtues, beauties, livings, friends,
Exceed account: but the full sum of me
Is sum of nothing; which, to term in gross,
Is an unlesson'd girl, unschool'd, unpractis'd:
Happy in this: she is not yet so old
But she may learn; happier than this, in that
She is not bred so dull but she can learn;
Happiest of all is, that her gentle spirit
Commits itself to yours to be direct,
As from her lord, her governor, her king.

Lover's Thoughts compared to the inarticulate Joys of a Crowd.

Bass. Madam, you have bereft me of all words;
Only my blood speaks to you in my veins:
And there is such confusion in my powers,
As, after some oration fairly spoke
By a beloved prince, there doth appear
Among the buzzing, pleased multitude;
Where every something, being blent together,
Turns to a wild of nothing, save of joy
Exprest and not exprest.

Valuable Friend.

Por. Is it your dear friend that is thus in trouble? [man,

Bass. The dearest friend to me, the kindest
The best condition'd and unwearied spirit
In doing courtesies, and one in whom
The ancient Roman honor more appears
Than any that draws breath in Italy.

Por. What sum owes he the Jew?

Bass. For me three thousand ducats.

Por. What, no more?

Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond;
Double six thousand, and then treble that,
Before a friend of this description
Should lose a hair through my Bassanio's fault.

Implacable Revenge.

I'll have my bond; I will not hear thee speak,
I'll have my bond; and therefore speak no more.
I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors.

Generous Friendship.

Lor. Madam, although I speak it in your pre-
You have a noble and a true conceit [sence,
Of godlike amity: which appears most strongly
In bearing thus the absence of your lord.
But, if you knew to whom you show this honor,

How true a gentleman you send relief,
How dear a lover of my lord your husband,
I know you would be prouder of the work
Then customary bounty can enforce you.

Por. I never did repent for doing good,
Nor shall not now: for in companions
That do converse and waste the time together,
Whose souls do bear an equal yoke of love,
There must be needs a like proportion
Of lineaments, of manners, and of spirit;
Which makes me think that this Antonio,
Being the bosom lover of my lord,
Must needs be like my lord; if it be so,
How little is the cost I have bestow'd
In purchasing the semblance of my soul
From out the state of hellish cruelty!
This comes too near the praising of myself:
Therefore no more of it.

A pert, bragging Youth.

I'll hold thee any wager,
When we are both accoutred like young men,
I'll prove the prettier fellow of the two,
And wear my dagger with a braver grace;
And speak, between the change of man and
boy,
With a reed voice: and turn two mincing steps
Into a manly stride; and speak of frays,
Like a fine bragging youth: and tell quaint
lies,

How honorable ladies sought my love,
Which I denying, they fell sick and died;
I could not do with all; then I'll repent,
And wish, for all that, that I had not kill'd
'em!

And twenty of these puny lies I'll tell;
That men shall swear I've discontinued school Above a twelvemonth: I have within my
mind

A thousand raw tricks of these bragging jacks
Which I will practise.

Affectation in Words.

O dear discretion, how his words are suited!
The fool hath planted in his memory
An army of good words; and I do know
A many fools that stand in better place,
Garnish'd like him, that for a tricky word
Defy the matter.

Portia's Merit.

It is very meet

The lord Bassanio live an upright life;
For, having such a blessing in his lady,
He finds the joys of heaven here on earth;
And, if on earth he do not mean it, it
Is reason he should never come to heaven.
Why, if two gods should play some heav'nly match,

And on the wager lay two earthly women,
And Portia one—there must be something else
Pawn'd with the other; for the poor rude
world

Hath not her fellow.

The Jew's Reason for his Revenge.

Shyl. I have possess'd your grace of what I purpose;
And by our holy sabbath have I sworn
To have the due and forfeit of my bond.

If you deny it, let the danger light
Upon your charter and your city's freedom.
You'll ask me, why I rather choose to have
A weight of carrion flesh, than to receive
Three thousand ducats: I'll not answer that;
But, say, it is my humor. Is it answer'd?
What if my house be troubled with a rat,
And I be pleas'd to give ten thousand ducats
To have it ban'd? What, are you answer'd yet?

Some men there are, love not a gaping pig;
Some that are mad if they behold a cat;
And others, when the bag-pipe sings i' th' nose,
Cannot contain their urine for affection:
Masters of passion sway it to the mood
Of what it likes, or loathes. Now for your answer:

As there is no firm reason to be render'd,
Why he cannot abide a gaping pig;
Why he, a harmless necessary cat;
Why he, a woollen bag-pipe; but of force
Must yield to such inevitable shame
As to offend, himself being offended;
So can I give no reason, nor I will not,
More than a lodg'd hate, and a certain loathing
I bear Antonio, that I follow thus
A losing suit against him. Are you answer'd?

Unfeeling Revenge.

You may as well go stand upon the beach,
And bid the main flood bate his usual height;
You may as well use questions with the wolf,
Why he hath made the ewe bleat for the lamb;
You may as well forbid the mountain pines
To wag their high tops, and to make no noise
When they are fretted with the gusts of heaven;
You may as well do any thing most hard,
As seek to soften that (than which what's His Jewish heart. [harder?])

Retaliation.

Duke. How shalt thou hope for mercy,
rend'ring none?

Shyl. What judgement shall I dread, doing no wrong?

You have among you many a purchas'd slave,
Which, like your asses, and your dogs and
You use in abject and in slavish parts, [mules,
Because you bought them: shall I say to you,
Let them be free, marry them to your heirs;
Why sweat they under burthens? let their beds
Be made as soft as yours, and let their palates
Be season'd with such viands: you will answer,
The slaves are yours. So do I answer you:
The pound of flesh, which I demand of him,
Is dearly bought, is mine, and I will have it:
If you deny me, fie upon your law!
There is no force in the decrees of Venice:
I stand for judgement: answer: shall I have it?

Jew's wolfish Spirit, an Argument for Transmigration.

Gra. Oh, be thou damn'd, inexorable dog!
And for thy life, let justice be accus'd.
Thou almost mak'st me waver in my faith,
To hold opinion with Pythagoras,
That souls of animals infuse themselves

Into the trunks of men: thy curriish spirit
Govern'd a wolf, who, hang'd for human slaughter,
Even from the gallows did his fell soul fleet,
And, whilst thou lay'st in thy unhallow'd dam,
Infus'd itself in thee: for thy desires
Are wolfish, bloody, starv'd, and ravenous.

Shyl. Till thou canst rail the seal from off
my bond,
Thou but offend'st thy lungs to speak so loud:
Repair thy wit, good youth, or it will fall
To cureless ruin.—I stand here for law.

Mercy.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth as a gentle rain from heaven
Upon the place beneath. It is twice blessed;
It blesseth him that gives, and him that takes.
'Tis mightiest in the mightiest; it becomes
The throned monarch better than his crown:
His sceptre shows the force of temporal power,
The attribute to awe and majesty,
Wherein doth sit the dread and fear of kings:
But mercy is above the sceptred sway:
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings:
It is an attribute to God himself;
And earthly power doth then show likest God's,
When mercy seasons justice. Therefore, Jew,
Though justice be thy plea, consider this—
That in the course of justice, none of us
Should see salvation: we do pray for mercy;
And that same prayer doth teach us all to render
The deeds of mercy.

Justice must be impartial.

I beseech you,
Wrest once the laws to your authority:
To do a great right, do a little wrong;
And curb this cruel devil of his will.

Por. It must not be; there is no power in
Can alter a decree established; [Venice
'Twill be recorded for a precedent;
And many an error, by the same example,
Will rush into the state: it cannot be.

Cheerful Resignation, with friendly Tenderness.

Ant. I am arm'd and well prepar'd—
Give me your hand, Bassanio: fare you well!
Grieve not that I am fallen to this for you;
For herein fortune shows herself more kind
Than is her custom.—It is still her use
To let the wretched man outlive his wealth,
To view with hollow eye and wrinkled brow
An age of poverty; from which ling'ring pe-
Of such a misery doth she cut me off. [nance
Commend me to your honorable wife:
Tell her the process of Antonio's end!
Say how I loved you, speak me fair in death:
And, when the tale is told, bid her be judge,
Whether Bassanio had not once a love.
Repent not you that you shall lose your friend,
And he repents not that he pays your debt.

Ample Payment.

He is well paid that is well satisfied.

*Description of a Moon-light Night, with fine
Music.*

Lor. The moon shines bright: in such a night as this,
When the sweet wind did gently kiss the trees,

And they did make no noise ; in such a night,
Troilus, methinks, mounted the Trojan wall,
And sigh'd his soul towards the Grecian tents,
Where Cressid' lay that night,

Jes. In such a night,
Did Thisbe fearfully o'ertrip the dew ;
And saw the lion's shadow ere himself,
And ran away dismay'd.

Lor. In such a night,
Stood Dido, with a willow in her hand,
Upon the wild sea-banks, and waft her love
To come again to Carthage.

Jes. In such a night,
Medea gather'd the enchanted herbs
That did renew old Æson.

Lor. In such a night
Did Jessica steal from the wealthy Jew ;
And with an unthrif love did run from Venice
As far as Belmont.

Jes. And in such a night,
Did young Lorenzo swear he lov'd her well ;
Stealing her soul with many vows of faith,
And ne'er a true one.

Lor. And in such a night,
Did pretty Jessica, like a little shrew,
Slander her love, and he forgave it her.

• • • • •
How sweet the moon-light sleeps upon this bank !

Here will we sit, and let the sounds of music
Creep in our ears : soft stillness and the night
Become the touches of sweet harmony.
Sit, Jessica ; look, how the floor of heav'n
Is thick inlaid with patines of bright gold ;
There's not the smallest orb which thou be-
But in his motion like an angel sings, [hold'st,
Still quiring to the young-eyed cherubims :
Such harmony is in immortal souls ;
But, whilst this muddy vesture of decay
Doth grossly close it in, we cannot hear it.—
Come, ho, and wake Diana with a hymn ;
With sweetest touches pierce your mistress' ear,
And draw her home with music.

Jes. I am never merry when I hear sweet
music.

Lor. The reason is, your spirits are attentive :
For do but note a wild and wanton herd,
Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
Fetching mad bounds, bellowing and neighing
loud,

Which is the hot condition of their blood ;
If they perchance but hear a trumpet sound,
Or any air of music touch their ears,
You shall perceive them make a mutual stand,
Their savage eyes turn'd to a modest gaze
By the sweet pow'r of music. Therefore the poet Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods ;

Since nought so stockish, hard, and full of rage,
But music for the time doth change his nature.
The man that hath not music in himself,
Nor is not mov'd with concord of sweet sounds,
Is fit for treasons, stratagems, and spoils ;
The motions of his spirit are dull as night,
And his affections dark as Erebus :
Let no such man be trusted.

A good Deed compared to a Candle, and the Effects of Time, Circumstances, &c.

Por. How far that little candle throws his beams !

So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

Ner. When the moon shone we did not see the candle.

Por. So doth the greater glory dim the less :
A substitute shines brightly as a king,
Until a king be by ; and then his state
Empties itself, as doth an inland brook
Into the main of waters. Music ! hark !

Ner. It is your music, madam, of the house.

Por. Nothing is good, I see, without respect ;
Methinks it sounds much sweeter than by day.

Ner. Silence bestows that virtue on it, madam.

Por. The crow does sing as sweetly as the lark
When neither is attended ; and, I think,
The nightingale, if she should sing by day,
When ev'ry goose is cackling, would be thought
No better a musician than the wren.

How many things by season season'd are
To their right praise, and true perfection !
Peace, ho ! the moon sleeps with Endymion,
And would not be awak'd !

Moon-light Night.

This night methinks, is but the day-light
It looks a little paler ; 'tis a day, [sick ;
Such as the day is when the sun is hid.

Professions needless, where Intentions are sincere.

Sir, you are very welcome to our house :
It must appear in other ways than words,
Therefore I scant this breathing courtesy.

Elegant Compliment.

Fair ladies, you drop manna in the way
Of starved people.

§ 7. MERRY WIVES OF WINDSOR.

SHAKESPEARE.

Description of Spendthrifts, who seek to better their Fortunes by rich Wives.

HE doth object, I am too great of birth ;
And that, my state being gall'd with my ex-
I seek to heal it only by his wealth : [pense,
Beside these, other bars he lays before me—
My riots past, my wild societies ;
And tells me, 'tis a thing impossible
I should love thee but as a property.

A valuable Woman loved for her own sake.

—Wooing thee, I found thee of more value
Than stamps in gold, or sums in sealed bags ;
And 'tis the very riches of thyself
That now I aim at.

Fairies : their Rewards and Punishments.

Cricket, to Windsor chimneys shalt thou leap :
Where fires thou find'st unrak'd, and hearths
unswept,

There pinch the maids as blue as bilberry.
Our radiant queen hates sluts and sluttery.
Go you ; and where's Pede ? you find a maid
That ere she sleep hath thrice her prayers said,
Rein up the organs of her fantasy ;
Sleep she as sound as careless infancy ;
But those that sleep, and think not on their sins,
Pinch them, arms, legs, back, shoulders, sides,
and shins.

§ 8. A MIDSUMMER NIGHT'S DREAM.

SHAKESPEARE.

Tediousness of Expectation.Thes. How slow

This old moon wanes! she lingers my desires,
Like to a step-dame, or a dowager,
Long withering out a young man's revenue.

The Witchcraft of Love.

My gracious duke,

This man hath witch'd the bosom of my child:
Thou, thou, Lysander, thou hast given her rhymes,

And interchang'd love tokens with my child:
Thou hast by moon-light at her window sung,
With feigning voice, verses of feigning love;
And stol'n the impression of her fantasy
With bracelets of thy hair, rings, gauds, con-ceits, [sengers

Knacks, trifles, nosegays, sweetmeats, mes-
Of strong prevailment in unhardened youth:
With cunning hast thou filch'd my daughter's
heart:

Turn'd her obedience, which is due to me,
To stubborn harshness.

A Father's Authority.

To you your father should be as a god:
One that compos'd your beauties; yea, and one
To whom you are but as a form in wax
By him imprinted; and within his power
To leave the figure, or disfigure it.

Nun.

Thes. Therefore, fair Hermia, question your desires,

Know of your youth, examine well your blood,
Whether (if you yield not to your father's choice)
You can endure the livery of a nun;
For aye to be in shady cloister mew'd;
To live a barren sister all your life,
Chanting faint hymns to the cold fruitless
moon.

Thrice blessed they, that master so their blood,
To undergo such maiden pilgrimage!
But earthlier happy is the rose distill'd,
Than that which, withering on the virgin thorn,
Grows, lives, and dies, in single blessedness.

Her. So will I grow, so live, so die, my lord,
Ere I will yield my virgin-patent up
Unto his lordship, to whose unwish'd yoke
My soul consents not to give sovereignty.

True Love ever crossed.

Lys. Ah me! for aught that ever I could read,
Could ever hear by tale or history,
The course of true love never did run smooth;
But either it was different in blood,
Or else misgrafted in respect of years;
Or else it stood upon the choice of friends;
Or, if there were a sympathy in choice,
War, death, or sickness, did lay siege to it;
Making it momentary as a sound,
Swift as a shadow, short as any dream;
Brief as the lightning in the collied night,
That, in a spleen, unfolds both heav'n and
earth:

And, ere a man hath pow'r to say—Behold!
The jaws of darkness do devour it up:
So quick bright things come to confusion!

Her. Then let us teach our trial patience,
Because it is a customary cross, [sighs,
As due to love, as thoughts and dreams, and Wishes, and tears, poor fancy's followers.

Assination.

I swear to thee, by Cupid's strongest bow,
By his best arrow with the golden head,
By the simplicity of Venus' doves, [loves;
By that which knitteth souls, and prospers
And by that fire which burnt the Carthage
queen,
When the false Trojan under sail was seen;
By all the vows that ever men have broke,
In number more than ever women spoke;
In that same place thou hast appointed me,
To-morrow truly will I meet with thee.

Modest and generous Eulogium of a Rival.

Hel. Call you me fair? That fair again unsay:
Demetrius loves you, fair; O happy fair!
Your eyes are lode-stars, and your tongue
sweet air

More tunable than lark to shepherd's ear,
When wheat is green, when hawthorn buds
appear.

Sickness is catching: O, were favor so!
Yours I would catch, fair Hermia, ere I go:
My ear should catch your voice, my eye your eye; [melody.
My tongue should catch your tongue's sweet
Were the world mine, Demetrius being bated,
The rest I'll give to be to you translated.
O teach me how you look! and with what art
You sway the motion of Demetrius' heart.

Moon.

When Phoebe doth behold
Her silver visage in the watery glass,
Decking with liquid pearl the bladed grass.

Love.

Things base and vile, holding no quantity,
Love can transpose to form and dignity:
Love looks not with the eyes, but with the
mind,
And therefore is wing'd Cupid painted blind;
Nor hath Love's mind of any judgement taste:
Wings, and no eyes, figure unheedy haste;
And therefore is Love said to be a child,
Because in choice he is so oft beguil'd:
As waggish boys in games themselves forswear;
So the boy Love is perjur'd every where.

Cowslips, and Fairy Employment.

The cowslips tall her pensioners be;
In their gold coats spots you see;
Those be rubies, fairy favors;
In those freckles live their savors;
I must go seek some dew-drops here,
And hang a pearl in every cowslip's ear.

Puck, or Robin Good-fellow.

I am that merry wand'rer of the night,
I jest to Oberon, and make him smile,
When I a fat and bean-fed horse beguile,
Neighing in likeness of a filly foal;
And sometimes lurk I in a gossip's bowl,
In very likeness of a roasted crab;
And when she drinks, against her lips I bob,

And on her wither'd dewlap pour the ale ;
 The wisest aunt, telling the saddest tale,
 Sometime for three-foot-stool mistaketh me ;
 Then slip I from her bum, down topples she,
 And rails or cries, and falls into a cough :
 And then the whole quire hold their hips and loffe ; [swear
 And waxen in their mirth, and neeze, and
 A merrier hour was never wasted there.

Fairy Jealousy, and the Effects of it.

These are the forgeries of jealousy ;
 And never, since the middle summer's spring,
 Met we on hill, in dale, forest, or mead,
 By paved fountain, or by rushy brook,
 Or on the beached margent of the sea,
 To dance our ringlets to the whistling wind,
 But with thy brawls thou hast disturb'd our sport :

Therefore the winds, piping to us in vain,
 As in revenge, have suck'd up from the sea
 Contagious fogs ; which, falling in the land,
 Have every pelted river made so proud,
 That they have overborne their continents.
 The ox has therefore stretch'd his yoke in vain,
 The ploughman lost his sweat : and the green corn

Hath rotted, ere its youth attain'd a beard ;
 The fold stands empty in the drowned field,
 And crows are fatted with the murrain stock ;
 The nine men's morris is filled up with mud,
 And the quaint mazes in the wanton green,
 For lack of tread is undistinguishable.
 The human mortals want their winter here ;
 No night is now with hymn or carol blest ;
 Therefore the moon, the governess of floods,
 Pale in her anger, washes all the air,
 That rheumatic diseases do abound.
 And, thorough this distemperature, we see
 The seasons alter ; hoary-headed frosts
 Fall in the fresh lap of the crimson rose ;
 And on old Hyems' chin, and icy crown,
 An od'rous chaplet of sweet summer-buds
 Is, as in mock'ry, set : the spring, the summer,
 The chilling autumn, angry winter, change
 Their wonted liveries, and the 'mazed world
 By their increase now knows not which is which.

Love in Idleness.

Thou remember'st
 Since once I sat upon a promontory,
 And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
 Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath
 That the rude sea grew civil at her song ;
 And certain stars shot madly from their spheres
 To hear the sea-maid's music.
 That very time I saw (but thou couldst not)
 Flying between the cold moon and the earth,
 Cupid, all arm'd : a certain aim he took
 At a fair vestal, throned by the west ;
 And loos'd his love-shaft smartly from his bow,
 As it should pierce a hundred thousand hearts.
 But I might see young Cupid's fiery shaft
 Quench'd in the chaste beams of the wat'ry
 And the imperial vot'ress passed on, [moon ;
 In maiden meditation, fancy free.
 Yet mark'd I where the bolt of Cupid fell :

It fell upon a little western flow'r, [wound,
 Before milk-white ; now purpled with love's
 And maidens call it, " Love in Idleness."

Virtuous Love's Protection and Reliance.

Your virtue is my privilege for that.
 It is not night when I do see your face,
 Therefore I think I am not in the night ;
 Nor doth this wood lack worlds of company ;
 For you in my respect are all the world.
 Then how can it be said, I am alone,
 When all the world is here to look on me ?

A Fairy Bank.

I know a bank, whereon the wild thyme
     blows,
 Where ox-lips and the nodding violet grows ;
 Quite over-canopy'd with luscious woodbine,
 With sweet musk-roses, and with eglantine ;
 There sleeps Titania, sometime of the night,
 Lull'd in these flow'rs with dances and delight.

Fairy Courtesies.

Be kind and courteous to this gentleman :
 Hop in his walks, and gambol in his eyes ;
 Feed him with apricots and dewberries ;
 With purple grapes, green figs, and mulberries ;
 The honey-bags steal from the humble bees,
 And for night-tapers crop their waxen thighs,
 And light them at the fiery glow-worm's eyes ;
 To have my love to bed, and to arise ;
 And pluck the wings from painted butterflies,
 To fan the moon-beams from his sleeping eyes ;
 Nod to him, elves, and do him courtesies.

Swiftness of Fairy's Motion.

I go, I go, look how I go :
 Swifter than arrow from the Tartar's bow.

Sense of Hearing quickened by Loss of Sight.

Dark night, that from the eye his function takes,
 The ear more quick of apprehension makes.
 Wherein it doth impair the seeing sense,
 It pays the hearing double recompense.

Female Friendship.

Is all the council that we two have shar'd,
 The sister vows, the hours that we have spent,
 When we have chid the hasty-footed time
 For parting us : O ! and is all forgot ?
 All school-days' friendship, childhood inno-
 We, Hermia, like two artificial gods, [cence ?
 Have with our needles created both one flower,
 Both on one sampler, sitting on one cushion ;
 Both warbling of one song, both in one key ;
 As if our hands, our sides, voices, and minds,
 Had been incorporate ; so we grew together,
 Like to a double cherry, seeming parted,
 But yet an union in partition :
 Two lovely berries moulded on one stem ;
 So with two seeming bodies, but one heart :
 Two of the first like coats in heraldry,
 Due but to one, and crowned with one crest.
 And will you rend our ancient love asunder,
 To join with men in scorning your poor friend ?
 It is not friendly, 'tis not maidenly :

Our sex as well as I may chide you for it ;
Though I alone do feel the injury.

Lover's Hate the greatest Harm.

What can you do me greater harm than hate?

Female Timidity.

I pray you, though you mock me, gentlemen,
Let her not hurt me ; I was never curst ;
I have no gift at all in shrewishness ;
I am a right maid for my cowardice.

Day-break.

Night's swift dragons cut the clouds full fast,
And yonder shines Aurora's harbinger ;
At whose approach, ghosts wandering here
Troop home to church-yards. [and there,

Embracing.

So doth the woodbine the sweet honey-suckle
Gently entwist—the female ivy so
Enrings the barky fingers of the elm.

Dew in Flowers.

That same dew, which sometime on the buds
Was wont to swell like round and orient pearls,

Stood now within the pretty flowret's eyes
Like tears, that did their own disgrace bewail.

Hunting, and Hounds.

Thes. We will, fair queen, up to the moun-
And mark the musical confusion [tain's top,
Of hounds and echo in conjunction.

Hip. I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
When in a wood of Crete they bay'd the boar
With hounds of Sparta ; never did I hear
Such gallant chiding. For, besides the groves,
The skies, the fountains, ev'ry region near Seem'd all one mutual cry ; I never heard
So musical a discord, such sweet thunder.

Thes. My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind,
So flew'd, so sanded ; and their heads are hung
With ears that sweep away the morning dew ;
Crook-knee'd, and dew-lapp'd, like Thessalian
bulls, [bells,

Slow in pursuit, but match'd in mouth like
Each under each. A cry more tuneable
Was never halloo'd to, nor cheer'd with horn.

Fairy Motion.

Then, my queen, in silence sad
Trip we after the night's shade :
We the globe can compass soon
Swifter than the wand'ring moon.

Confused Remembrance. [able,

These things seem small and undistinguish-
Like far-off mountains turned into clouds.

The Power of Imagination.

The lunatic, the lover, and the poet,
Are of imagination all compact :
One sees more devils than vast hell can hold ;
That is the madman. The lover, all as frantic,
Sees Helen's beauty in a brow of Egypt.
The poet's eye, in a fine phrensy rolling,
Doth glance from heav'n to earth, from earth to
And, as imagination bodies forth [heav'n,
The forms of things unknown, the poet's pen

Turns them to shapes, and gives to airy no-
A local habitation and a name. [thing

Simpleness and modest Duty always acceptable.

Philost. No, my noble lord,
It is not for you. I have heard it over,
And it is nothing, nothing in the world ;
Unless you can find sport in their intents,
Extremely stretch'd, and conn'd with cruel pain,
To do you service.

Thes. I will hear that play :
For never any thing can be amiss,
When simpleness and duty tender it.

Hip. I love not to see wretchedness o'er-
And duty in his service perishing. [charg'd,

Thes. Why, gentle sweet, you shall see no such thing.

Our sport shall be to take what they mistake :
And what poor duty cannot do,
Noble respect takes it in might, not merit.
Where I have come, great clerks have purposed
To greet me with premeditated welcomes ;
Where I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accents in their fears,
And in conclusion dumbly have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome. Trust me, sweet,
Out of this silence, yet, I pick'd a welcome :
And in the modesty of fearful duty
I read as much, as from the rattling tongue
Of saucy and audacious eloquence.
Love, therefore, and tongue-ty'd simplicity,
In least speak most, to my capacity.

Clock.

The iron tongue of midnight hath told twelve.

Night.

Now the hungry lion roars,
And the wolf howls the moon ;
Whilst the heavy ploughman snores,
All with weary task fore-done.
Now the wasted brands do glow,
Whilst the screech-owl screeching loud,
Puts the wretch that lies in woe,
In remembrance of a shroud.
Now it is the time of night,
That the graves, all gaping wide,
Every one lets forth his spright
In the church-yard paths to glide.
And we fairies that do run,
By the triple Hecat's team,
From the presence of the sun,
Following darkness like a dream,
Now are frolic ; not a mouse
Shall disturb this hallow'd house ;
I am sent with broom before,
To sweep the dust behind the door.

§ 9. MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.

SHAKSPEARE.

Peace inspires Love.

BUT now I am return'd, and that war
thoughts
Have left their places vacant, in their rooms
Come thronging soft and delicate desires,
All prompting me how fair young Hero is.

Friendship in Love.

Friendship is constant in all other things,
Save in the office and affairs of love:
Therefore all hearts in love use their own
Let every eye negotiate for itself, [tongues,
And trust no agent: beauty is a witch,
Against whose charms faith melteth into blood.

Merit always modest.

It is the witness still of excellency,
To put a strange face on his own perfection.

A Song.

Sigh no more, ladies, sigh no more,
Men were deceivers ever;
One foot in sea, and one on shore,
To one thing constant never,
Then sigh not so,
But let them go,
And be you blithe and bonny,
Converting all your sounds of woe
Into Hey nonny nonny.

Favourites compared to Honey-suckles, &c.

—Bid her steal into the pleached bower,
Where honey-suckles ripened by the sun
Forbid the sun to enter; like favorites
Made proud by princes, that advance their pride
Against that power that bred it.

Scheme to captivate Beatrice.

Let it be thy part
To praise him more than ever man did merit:
My talk to thee must be, how Benedick
Is sick in love with Beatrice: Of this matter
Is little Cupid's crafty arrow made,
That only wounds by hearsay.

Angling, &c.

The pleasant'st angling is to see the fish
Cut with her golden oars the silver stream,
And greedily devour the treacherous bait:
So angle we for Beatrice.

A scornful and satirical Beauty.

Nature never fram'd a woman's heart
Of prouder stuff than that of Beatrice.
Disdain and scorn ride sparkling in her eyes,
Misprising what they look on: and her wit
Values itself so highly, that to her
All matter else seems weak; she cannot love,
Nor take no shape, nor project of affection,
She is so self-endear'd.

I never yet saw man, [tur'd,
How wise, how noble, young, how rarely fea-
But she would spell him backward; if fair
fac'd, [sister;
She'd swear the gentleman should be her
If black, why Nature drawing of an antic,
Made a foul blot; if tall, a lance ill-headed;
If low, an agate very vilely cut;
If speaking, why, a vane blown with all winds;
If silent, why, a block, moved with none.
So turns she every man the wrong side out:
And never gives to truth and virtue that
Which simpleness and merit purchaseth.

Slandering the Object, a Way to destroy Affection.

No; rather I will go to Benedick,
And counsel him to fight against his passion:

And, truly, I'll devise some honest slanders,
To stain my cousin with; one doth not know
How much an ill word may empoison liking.

Beatrice's Recantation.

What fire is in mine ears? can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd for pride and scorn so much?
Contempt farewell! and maiden pride adieu!
No glory lives behind the back of such.
And, Benedick, love on, I will requite thee,
Taming my wild heart to thy loving hand;
If thou dost love, my kindness shall incite
thee
To bind our loves up in a holy band:
For others say thou dost deserve; and I Believe it better than reportingly.

Dissimulation.

O, what authority and show of truth
Can cunning sin cover itself withal!
Comes not that blood as modest evidence
To witness simple virtue? Would you not swear,
All you that see her, that she were a maid,
By these exterior shows? But she is none:
She knows the heat of a luxurious bed;
Her blush is guiltiness, not modesty.

Female Seeming.

I never tempted her with word too large;
But as a brother to a sister show'd
Bashful sincerity and comely love.

Her. And seem'd I ever otherwise to you?

Clau. Out on thy seeming! I will write against it:

You seem to me as Dian in her orb;
As chaste as is the bud ere it be blown:
But you are more intemperate in your blood
Than Venus, or those pamper'd animals
That rage in savage sensuality.

An injured Lover's Abjuration of Love.

O Hero! what a hero hadst thou been,
If half thy outward graces had been plac'd
About the thoughts and counsels of thy heart!
But fare thee well, most foul, most fair! farewell,
Thou pure impiety, and impious purity!
For thee I'll lock up all the gates of love,
And on my eye-lids shall conjecture hang,
To turn all beauty into thoughts of harm,
And never shall it more be gracious.

A Father lamenting his Daughter's Infamy.

Do not live, Hero; do not ope thine eyes;
For, did I think thou wouldst not quickly die,
Thought I thy spirits were stronger than thy
shames,
Myself would, on the rearward of reproaches,
Strike at thy life.—Griev'd I, I had but one?
Chid I for that at frugal nature's frame?
O, one too much by thee! why had I one?
Why ever wast thou lovely in my eyes?
Why had I not, with charitable hand,
Took up a beggar's issue at my gates?
Who smeared thus, and mir'd with infamy,
I might have said, "No part of it is mine;
This shame derives itself from unknown loins."
But mine, and mine I lov'd, and mine I
prais'd,

And mine that I was proud on ; mine so much
That I myself was to myself not mine,
Valuing of her ; why she——O she is fallen
Into a pit of ink, that the wide sea
Hath drops too few to wash her clean again !
And salt too little, which may season give
To her foul tainted flesh !

Innocence discovered by Countenance.

——I have mark'd

A thousand blushing apparitions
To start into her face ; a thousand innocent
shames,
In angel whiteness, bear away those blushes ;
And in her eye there hath appear'd a fire
To burn the errors that these princes hold
Against her maiden truth. Call me a fool ;
Trust not my reading, nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal doth warrant
The tenor of my book ; trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting error.

Resolution.

I know not : if they speak but truth of her,
These hands shall tear her : if they wrong her
honor,
The proudest of them shall well hear of it.
Time hath not yet so dried this blood of mine,
Nor age so eat up my invention,
Nor fortune made such havoc of my means,
Nor my bad life reft me so much of friends,
But they shall find, awak'd in such a kind,
Both strength of limb, and policy of mind,
Ability in means, and choice of friends,
To quit me of them thoroughly.

The Desire of loved Objects heightened by their Loss.

This, well carried, shall, on her behalf
Change slander to remorse ; that is some good :
But not for that dream I on this strange course,
But on this travail look for greater birth.
She dying, as it must be so maintain'd,
Upon the instant that she was accus'd,
Shall be lamented, pity'd, and excus'd
Of every hearer. For it so falls out,
That what we have, we prize not to the worth
While we enjoy it ; but being lack'd and lost,
Why, then we rack the value ; then we find
The virtue that possession would not show us
While it was ours. So will it fare with Claudio :
When he shall hear she died upon his words,
The idea of her life shall sweetly creep
Into his study of imagination ;
And every lovely organ of her life
Shall come apparell'd in more precious habit,
More moving, delicate, and full of life
Into the eye and prospect of his soul,
Than when she liv'd indeed. Then shall he
(If ever love had interest in his liver) [mourn
And wish he had not so accused her ;
No, though he thought his accusation true.
Let this be so, and doubt not but success
Will fashion the event in better shape
Than I can lay it down in likelihood.
But, if all aim but this be levell'd false,
The supposition of the lady's death

Will quench the wonder of her infamy ;
And, if it sort not well, you may conceal her
(As best befits her wounded reputation)
In some reclusive and religious life,
Out of all eyes, tongues, minds, and injuries.
Leon. Being that, alas !
I flow in grief, the smallest twine may lead me.

Counsel of no Weight in Misery.

I pray thee, cease thy counsel,
Which falls into my ears as profitless
As water in a sieve : give not me counsel ;
Nor let no comforter delight mine ear,
But such a one whose wrongs do suit with mine.

Bring me a father that so lov'd his child,
Whose joy of her is overwhelm'd like mine,
And bid him speak of patience : [mine,
Measure his love the length and breadth of
And let it answer every strain for strain ;
As thus for thus, and such a grief for such,
In every lineament, branch, shape, and form :
If such a one will smile and stroke his beard,
In sorrow wag ; cry hem ! when he should groan ;
Patch grief with proverbs ; make misfortune drunk

With candle-wasters : bring him yet to me,
And I of him will gather patience.
But there is no such man ; for, brother, men
Can counsel, and give comfort to that grief
Which they themselves not feel ; but tasting it,
Their counsel turns to passion, which before
Would give preceptual medicine to rage ;
Fetter strong madness in a silken thread ;
Charm ach with air, and agony with words.
No, no ; 'tis all men's office to speak patience
To those that wring under the load of sorrow ;
But no man's virtue, nor sufficiency,
To be so moral when he shall endure [sel ;
The like himself : therefore give me no coun-
My griefs cry louder than advertisement.

Ant. Therein do men from children nothing differ. [blood :

Leo. I pray thee, peace—I will be flesh and
For there was never yet philosopher,
That could endure the tooth-ach patiently,
However they have writ the style of gods,
And made a pish at change and sufferance.

An aged Father's Resentment of Scandal.

Tush, tush, man ! never fleer and jest at me ;
I speak not like a dotard nor a fool ;
As, under privilege of age, to brag [do,
What I have done, being young, or what would
Were I not old. Know Claudio, to thy head,
Thou hast so wrong'd my innocent child and
That I am forc'd to lay my rev'rence by ; [me,
And, with gray hairs, and brulse of many days,
To challenge thee to trial of a man.
I say, thou hast belied mine innocent child ;
Thy slander hath gone through and through her heart,
And she lies buried with her ancestors :
O ! in a tomb where never scandal slept,
Save this of hers, fram'd by thy villany.

Talking Braggarts.

Cla. Away, I will not have to do with you.

Leo. Canst thou so daffe me? thou hast
kill'd my child:

If thou kill'st me, boy, thou shalt kill a man.

Ant. He shall kill two of us, and men indeed:

But that's no matter; let him kill one first:—
Win me and wear me,—let him answer me:
Come, follow me, boy: come, Sir boy, follow me:

Sir boy, I'll whip you from your foyning fence:
Nay, as I am a gentleman, I will.

Leo. Brother—— [my niece:

Ant. Content yourself. God knows, I lov'd
And she is dead; slandered to death by vil-
That dare as well answer a man indeed, [lains;
As I dare take a serpent by the tongue:

Boys, apes, braggarts, Jacks, milk-sops!—

Leo. Brother Anthony—— [them; yea,

Ant. Hold you content; what, man! I know
And what they weigh, even to the utmost scruple:

Scambling, out-facing, fashion-mongering boys,
That lie, and cog, and flout, deprave, and slander,
Go anticly, and show outward hideousness,
And speak off half a dozen dangerous words,
How they might hurt their enemies, if they
And this is all. [durst:

No Valor in a bad Cause.

In a false quarrel there is no true valor.

Villain to be noted.

Which is the villain? let me see his eyes;
That when I note another man like him,
I may avoid him.

Dirge on Hero's Death by Slander.

Done to death by sland'rous tongues
Was the Hero that here lies;
Death, in guerdon of her wrongs,
Gives her fame which never dies!
So the life that died with shame
Lives in death with glorious fame!

Day-break.

The wolves have prey'd; and look the gentle
day,
Before the wheels of Phœbus round about,
Dapples the drowsy east with spots of grey.

Time of Slander a temporary Death.

She dy'd, my lord, but whiles her slander liv'd.

§ 10. THE TAMING OF THE SHREW.

SHAKSPEARE.

Hounds.

THY hounds shall make the welkin answer
them,
And fetch shrill echoes from the hollow earth.

Painting.

Dost thou love pictures? we will fetch thee
Adonis, painted by a running brook; [straight
And Cytherea all in sedges hid, [breath,
Which seem to move and wanton with her
E'en as the waving sedges play with wind.

Mirth and Merriment, its Advantage.

Seeing too much sadness hath congeal'd your
blood,

And melancholy is the nurse of phrensy,
Therefore they thought it good you hear a
play,

And frame your mind to mirth and merriment,
Which bars a thousand harms and lengthens life.

The Uses of Travel and Study.

Luc. Tranio, since—for the great desire I had
To see fair Padua, nursery of arts—
I am arriv'd from fruitful Lombardy,
The pleasant garden of great Italy;
And, by my father's love and leave, am arm'd
With his good will, and thy good company,
My trusty servant, well approv'd in all:
Here let us breathe, and happily institute
A course of learning and ingenious studies.
Pisa, renowned for grave citizens,
Gave me my being, and my father first,
A merchant of great traffic thro' the world,
Vincentio, come of the Bentivolii.
Vincentio's son, brought up in Florence,
It shall become, to serve all hopes conceiv'd,
To deck his fortune with his virtuous deeds:
And therefore, Tranio, for the time I study,
Virtue, and that part of philosophy
Will I apply, that treats of happiness
By virtue specially to be achiev'd.

Tell me thy mind: for I have Pisa left,
And am to Padua come; as he that leaves
A shallow plash, to plunge him in the deep,
And with satiety seeks to quench his thirst.

Tra. Mi perdonate, gentle master mine,
I am in all affected as yourself;
Glad that you thus continue your resolve,
To suck the sweets of sweet philosophy.
Only good master, while we do admire
This virtue, and this moral discipline,
Let's be no stoics, nor no stocks, I pray;
Or so devote to Aristotle's checks,
As Ovid be an outcast quite abjur'd:
Talk logic with acquaintance that you have,
And practise rhetoric in your common talk:
Music and poesy use to quicken you:
The mathematics, and the metaphysics, [you:
Fall to them as you find your stomach serves
No profit grows where is no pleasure ta'en!—
In brief, Sir, study what you most affect.

Love at first Sight.

Tra. I pray, Sir, tell me—is it possible
That love should of a sudden take such hold?

Luc. O, Tranio, till I found it to be true,
I never thought it possible or likely;
But see! while idly I stood looking on,
I found the effect of love in idleness:
And now in plainness do confess to thee,—
That art to me as secret and as dear
As Anna to the queen of Carthage was—
Tranio, I burn, I pine, I perish, Tranio,
If I achieve not this young modest girl:
Counsel me, Tranio, for I know thou canst;
Assist me, Tranio, for I know thou wilt.

Tra. Master, it is no time to chide you now,
Affection is not rated from the heart: [so,
If love have touch'd you, nought remains but
Redime te captum quam queas minimo.

Travel.

Such wind as scatters young men thro' the
world,

To seek their fortunes farther than at home,
Where small experience grows.

Woman's Tongue.

Think you a little din can daunt my ears?
Have I not in my time heard lions roar?
Have I not heard the sea, puff'd up with winds,
Rage like an angry boar, chafed with sweat?
Have I not heard great ordnance in the field?
And heaven's artillery thunder in the skies?
Have I not in a pitched battle, heard [clang?
Loud 'larums, neighing steeds, and trumpets?
And do you tell me of a woman's tongue,
That gives not half so great a blow to th' ear
As will a chestnut in a farmer's fire?

Extremes cure each other.

Where two raging fires meet together, [fury.
They do consume the thing that feeds their
Though little fire grows great with little wind,
Yet extreme gusts will blow out fire and all.

Beauty.

Say that she frown; I'll say she looks as clear
As morning roses newly wash'd with dew.

Music.

Preposterous ass! that never read so far,
To know the cause why music was ordain'd!
Was it not, to refresh the mind of man
After his studies, or his usual pain?
Then give me leave to read philosophy,
And, while I pause, serve in your harmony.

Wife married to all her Husband's Fortunes.

To me she's married, not unto my clothes:
Could I repair what she will wear in me,
As I can change these poor accoutrements,
'Twere well for Kate, and better for myself.

Description of a mad Wedding.

—When the priest

Did ask if Catherine should be his wife; [loud,
"Ay, by gogs-woons," quoth he, and swore so
That, all amaz'd, the priest let fall the book;
And, as he stoopt again to take it up,
This mad-brain'd bridegroom took him such a cuff [and priest;
That down fell priest and book, and book
"Now take them up," quoth he, "if any list."

Tran. What said the wench when he rose up again? [stamp and swore,

Grem. Trembled and shook: for why, he
As if the vicar meant to cozen him.

But, after many ceremonies done,
He calls for wine: [aboard,

"A health," quoth he, as if he had been Carousing to his mates after a storm:

Quaff'd off the muscadel, and threw the sops
All in the sexton's face; having no other reason,
But that his beard grew thin and hungerly,

And seem'd to ask his sops as he was drinking.
This done, he took the bride about the neck,
And kiss'd her lips with such a clamorous
smack,

That, at the parting, all the church did echo.

Petruchio's Trial of his Wife in the Article of Dress.

Hab. Here is the cap your worship did bespeak.

Pet. Why, this was moulded on a porringer.
A velvet dish!—fie, fie! 'tis lewd and filthy:
Why, 'tis a cockle, or a walnut-shell,
A knack, a toy, a trick, a baby's cap;
Away with it: come, let me have a bigger.

Cath. I'll have no bigger; this doth fit the
time,

And gentlewomen wear such caps as these.

Pet. When you are gentle, you shall have
And not till then. [one too,

Hor. That will not be in haste. [speak;

Cath. Why, Sir, I trust, I may have leave to
And speak I will; I am no child, no babe;
Your betters have endur'd me say my mind;
And if you cannot, best you stop your ears.

My tongue will tell the anger of my heart;

Or else, my heart, concealing it, will break:

And, rather than it shall, I will be free,

Even to the uttermost, as I please, in words.

Pet. Why thou say'st true: it is a paltry cap,

A custard coffin, a bauble, a silken pie:

I love thee well, in that thou lik'st it not.

Cath. Love me or love me not, I like the cap;

And it I will have, or I will have none.

Pet. Thy gown? why, ay, come tailor,
let us see 't.

O, mercy, God! what masking stuff is here!

What's this? a sleeve? 'tis like a demi-cannon:

What! up and down, carv'd like an apple-tart?

Here's snip and nip, and cut, and slish, and

Like to a censer in a barber's shop: [slash,

Why, what, o'devil's name, tailor, call'st thou this? [gown.

Hor. I see, she's like to have neither cap nor

Tail. You bid me make it orderly and well,
According to the fashion and the time.

Pet. Marry, and did; but if you be remem-
I did not bid you mar it to the time. [ber'd,

Go hop me over every kennel home,

For you shall hop without my custom, Sir:

I'll none of it: hence! make your best of it.

Cath. I never saw a better fashioned gown,
More quaint, more pleasing, more commendable:

Belike, you mean to make a puppet of me.

The Mind alone valuable.

Pet. Well, come my Kate; we will unto your father's,

Even in these honest mean habiliments;

Our purses shall be proud, our garments poor;

For 'tis the mind that makes the body rich:

And as the sun breaks thro' the darkest clouds,

So honor peereth in the meanest habit.

What, is the jay more precious than the lark,

Because his feathers are more beautiful?

Or is the adder better than the eel,

Because his painted skin contents the eye?

O, no, good Kate; neither art thou the worse

For this poor furniture and mean array.

A lovely Woman.

Fair, lovely maiden, young and affable,
More clear of hue, and far more beautiful

Than precious sardonyx, or purple rocks

Of amethysts, or glistening hyacinth:

—Sweet Catherine, this lovely woman—

Cath. Fair, lovely lady, bright and crystalline,
Beauteous and stately as the eye-train'd bird,
As glorious as the morning wash'd with dew,
Within whose eyes she takes her dawning
beams,

And golden summer sleeps upon thy cheeks;
Wrap up thy radiations in some cloud,
Lest that thy beauty make this stately town
Unhabitable as the burning zone,
With sweet reflections of thy lovely face.

Happiness attained.

Happily I have arriv'd at last
Unto the wished haven of my bliss.

Others measured by ourselves.

He that is giddy thinks the world turns
round.

Greyhound.

O Sir, Lucentio slipp'd me for his greyhound, [master.
Which runs himself, and catches for his Wife's Submission.

And awful rule, and right supremacy; [happy?

The Wife's Duty to her Husband.

Fie! fie! unknit that threat'ning, unkind
brow,

And dart not scornful glances from those eyes,
To wound thy lord, thy king, thy governor;
It blots thy beauty, as frosts bite the meads;
Confounds thy fame, as whirlwinds shake fair
And in no sense is meet or amiable. [buds,

A woman mov'd is like a fountain troubled,
Muddy, ill-seeming, thick, bereft of beauty,
And while it is so, none so dry or thirsty
Will deign to sip, or touch one drop of it.
Thy husband is thy lord, thy life, thy keeper,
Thy head, thy sovereign; one that cares for
thee,

And for thy maintenance commits his body
To painful labor both by sea and land;
To watch the night in storms, the day in cold,
While thou liest warm at home, secure and safe,
And craves no other tribute at thy hands,
But love, fair looks, and true obedience;—
Too little payment for so great a debt.

Such duty as the subject owes a prince,
Even such, a woman oweth to her husband:
And when she's froward, peevish, sullen, sour,
And not obedient to his honest will

What is she but a foul contending rebel
And graceless traitor to her loving lord?

I am asham'd that women are so simple
To offer war where they should kneel for peace;

Or seek for rule, supremacy, and sway,
When they are bound to serve, love, and obey.

Why are our bodies soft, and weak, and smooth,
Unapt to toil and trouble in the world,

But that our soft conditions and our hearts,
Should well agree with our external parts?

Come, come, you froward and unable worms!
My mind hath been as big as one of yours,

My heart as great; my reason haply more,
To bandy word for word, and frown for frown:

But now I see our lances are but straws;
Our strength as weak, our weakness past compare; [are.

That seeming to be most, which we indeed least
Then veil your stomachs, for it is no boot;

And place your hands beneath your husband's
In token of which duty, if he please, [foot:
My hand is ready—may it do him ease!

§ 11. THE TEMPEST. SHAKESPEARE.

Miranda and Prospero.

Mir. O I have suffer'd
With those that I saw suffer! A brave vessel,
Who had, no doubt, some noble creatures in Dash'd all to pieces. O the cry did knock [her,
Against my very heart! Poor souls! they pe-
Had I been any god of power, I would [rish'd,
Have sunk the sea within the earth, or e'er
It should the good ship so have swallow'd, and
The freighting souls within her.

Pros. Wipe thou thine eyes, have comfort;
The direful spectacle of the wreck which touch'd
The very virtue of compassion in thee,
I have with such provision in mine art
So safely order'd, that there is no soul—
No not so much perdition as an hair,
Betid to any creature in the vessel [sink.
Which thou heard'st cry, which thou saw'st

Caliban's Curses.

As wicked dew, as e'er my mother brush'd
With raven's feather from unwholesome fen,
Drop on you both! a south-west blow on ye,
And blister you all o'er!

I must eat my dinner.

This island's mine, by Sycorax my mother,
Which thou tak'st from me. When thou camest first, [wouldst give me

Thou stroak'dst me, and mad'st much of me:
Water with berries in 't, and teach me how
To name the bigger light, and how the less,
That burn by day and night: and then I lov'd
thee,

And show'd thee all the qualities o' th' isle,
The fresh springs, brine-pits, barren place and fertile;

Curs'd be I, that I did so! all the charms
Of Sycorax, toads, beetles, bats, light on you!
For I am all the subjects that you have, [me
Who first was mine own king: and here you sty
In this hard rock, whiles you do keep from me
Th' rest of th' island.

*Caliban's Exultation after Prospero tells him
he sought to violate the Honor of his Child.*

Oh, ho, ho, ho!—I would it had been done!
Thou didst prevent me, I had peopled else
This isle with Calibans.

Pros. Abhorred slave!
Which any print of goodness will not take,
Being capable of all ill! I pity'd thee,
Took pains to make thee speak, taught thee
each hour

One thing or other; when thou didst not, savage, [like

Know thine own meaning, but wouldst gabble
A thing most brutish, I endow'd thy purposes

With words that made them known: but thy vile race, [good-nature
Though thou didst learn, had that in 't which Could not abide to be with; therefore wast
Deservedly confin'd into this rock, [thou
Who hadst deserv'd more than a prison.

Cal. You taught me language; and my profit on 't [you
Is, I know how to curse: the red plague rid
For learning me your language?

Music.

Where should this music be? in air or earth?
It sounds no more: and sure it waits upon
Some god of th' island. Sitting on a bank,
Weeping again the king my father's wreck,
This music crept by me upon the waters;
Allaying both their fury and my passion
With its sweet air.

Ariel's Song.

Full fathom five thy father lies;
Of his bones are coral made;
Those are pearls that were his eyes;
Nothing of him that doth fade
But doth suffer a sea change
Into something rich and strange.
Sea Nymphs hourly ring his knell.

Hark now I hear them, ding, dong, bell.

Amiable Simplicity of Miranda on first View of Ferdinand.

Pros. This gallant, which thou seest,
Was in the wreck: and, but he's something stain'd [mightst call him
With grief, that's beauty's canker, thou
A goodly person—

Mir. I might call him
A thing divine: for nothing natural
I ever saw so noble.

Fer. Most sure, the goddess
On whom these airs attend!

Mir. There's nothing ill can dwell in such a
If the ill spirit have so fair a house, [temple:
Good things will strive to dwell with 't.

A Lover's Speech.

My spirits, as in a dream, are all bound up.
My father's loss, the weakness which I feel,
The wreck of all my friends, or this man's threats,

To whom I am subdu'd, are but light to me,
Might I but through my prison once a day
Behold this maid: all corners else o' th' earth
Let liberty make use of; space enough
Have I in such a prison.

Resignation and Gratitude.

Beseech you, Sir, be merry; you have cause
(So have we all) of joy; for our escape
Is much beyond our loss: our hint of woe
Is common; every day some sailor's wife,
The master of some merchant, and the merchant [racle,
Have just our theme of woe: but for the mi-
(I mean our preservation) few in millions
Can speak like us: then wisely, good Sir,
Our sorrow with our comfort. [weigh

Description of Ferdinand's swimming ashore.

I saw him beat the surges under him,

And ride upon their backs: he trod the water,
Whose enmity he flung aside, and breasted
The surge most swoln that met him; his bold
head

'Bove the contentious waves he kept, and oar'd
Himself with his good arms in lusty strokes
To th' shore: that o'er his wave-worn basis
bow'd,

As stooping to relieve him: I not doubt
He came alive to land.

Too severe Reproof animadverted upon.

The truth you speak doth lack some gentle-
And time to speak it in: you rub the sore [ness,
When you should find the plaster.

Satire on Utopian Forms of Government.

I' the commonwealth I would by contraries
Execute all things: for no kind of traffic
Would I admit; no name of magistrate;
Letters should not be known; riches, poverty,
And use of service, none; contracts, succession,
Bourn, bound of land, tilth, vineyard, olive
No use of metal, corn, or wine, or oil: [none;
No occupation: all men idle, all:
And women too, but innocent and pure:
No sovereignty:
All things in common nature should produce,
Without sweat or endeavour: treason, felony,
Sword, pike, knife, gun, or need of any engine,
Would I not have; but nature should bring forth

Of its own kind, all foison, all abundance,
To feed my innocent people.

I would with such perfection govern, Sir,
To excel the golden age.

Sleep.

Do not omit the heavy offer of it,
It seldom visits sorrow: when it doth,
It is a comforter.

A fine Aposiopesis.

They fell together all, as by consent;
They dropp'd, as by a thunder-stroke. What might [more.
Worthy Sebastian?—O, what might?—no
And yet, methinks, I see it in thy face,
What thou shouldst be: th' occasion speaks thee; and

My strong imagination sees a crown
Dropping upon thy head.

Caliban's Curses.

All the infections that the sun sucks up
From bogs, fens, flats, on Prosper fall, and make him
By inch-meal a disease! His spirits hear me,
And yet I needs must curse. But they'll not pinch, [mire,
Fright me with urchin-shows, pitch me i' th'
Nor lead me, like a fire-brand, in the dark
Out of my way, unless he bid them; but
For every trifle are they set upon me: [me,
Sometimes, like apes, that moe and chatter at
And after bite me; then like hedge-hogs,
which
Lie tumbling in my bare-foot way, and mount
Their pricks at my foot-fall: sometime am I
All wound with adders, who with cloven tongues

Do hiss me into madness——Lo, now, lo!
Here comes a spirit of his, and to torment me,
For bringing wood in slowly: I'll fall flat:
Perchance, he will not mind me.

Caliban's Promises.

I'll show thee the best springs: I'll pluck thee berries;
I'll fish for thee, and get thee wood enough.
A plague upon the tyrant that I serve!
I'll bear him no more sticks, but follow thee,
Thou wondrous man.——
I pry thee, let me bring thee where crabs grow;
And I with my long nails will dig thee pig-nuts;
Show thee a jay's nest, and instruct thee how
To snare the nimble marmozet: I'll bring thee
To clust'ring filberds, and sometimes I'll get Young sea-mels from the rock. [thee

True and unbiassed Affection. Ferdinand bearing a Log.

There be some sports are painful: but their labor [ness
Delight in them sets off: some kinds of base-
Are nobly undergone: and most poor matters
Point to rich ends. This my mean task would be
As heavy to me, as 'tis odious; but [dead,
The mistress whom I serve, quickens what's
And makes my labors pleasures: O, she is Ten times more gentle than her father's crabbed: [move
And he's compos'd of harshness. I must re-
Some thousands of these logs, and pile 'em up,
Upon a sore injunction. My sweet mistress
Weeps when she sees me work: and says, such
Had ne'er such executor. I forget; [baseness
But these sweet thoughts do even refresh my Most busy-less when I do it. [labors,

Admir'd Miranda!

Indeed, the top of admiration: worth
What's dearest to the world! full many a lady
I have eyed with best regard; and many a time
The harmony of their tongues hath into bondage [tues
Brought my too diligent ears; for several vir-
Have I lik'd several women: never any
With so full soul, but some defect in her
Did quarrel with the noblest grace she own'd,
And put it to the foil: but you, O you,
So perfect, and so peerless, are created
Of every creature's best.

Miranda's offering to carry the Logs for him is peculiarly elegant.

If you'll sit down, [that,
I'll bear your logs the while; pray give me
I'll carry it to the pile.

And afterwards how innocent!

—— I am a fool,
To weep at what I'm glad of.
I am your wife, if you will marry me:
If not, I'll die your maid: to be your fellow
You may deny me: but I'll be your servant,
Whether you will or no.

*Punishment of Crimes delayed, not forgotten.
For which foul deed*

The pow'rs, delaying, not forgetting, have

Incens'd the seas and shores, yea, all the crea-
Against your peace. [tures

Guilty Conscience.

O, it is monstrous! monstrous! [it:
Methought the billows spoke, and told me of
The winds did sing it to me; and the thunder,
That deep and dreadful organ-pipe, pro-nounc'd

The name of Prosper. It did bass my trespass.

Gon. All three of them are desperate; their great guilt,

Like poison given to work a great time after,
Now gins to bite the spirits.

Prospero's Boast of Miranda.

O Ferdinand,

Do not smile at me that I boast her off:
For thou shalt find she will outstrip all praise,
And make it halt behind her.

Continence before Marriage.

Pros. If thou dost break her virgin-knot,
All sanctimonious ceremonies may [before
With full and holy rite be minister'd,
No sweet aspersion shall the heavens let fall
To make this contract grow; but barren hate,
Sour-eyed disdain, and discord shall bestrew
The union of your bed with weeds so loathly,
That you shall hate it both; therefore, take
As Hymen's lamps shall light you. [heed,

A Lover's Protestation.

Ferd. As I hope

For quiet days, fair issue, and long life,
With such love as 'tis now; the murkiest den,
The most opportune place, the strong'st suggestion

Our worser genius can, shall never melt
Mine honor into lust: to take away
The edge of that day's celebration,
When I shall think, or Phœbus' steeds are
Or night kept chain'd below. [founder'd,

Passion too strong for Vows.

Pros. Look thou be true; do not give dal-liance [straw
Too much the rein; the strongest oaths are
To the fire i' the blood: be more abstemious,
Or else, good-night your vow!

Ferdinand's Answer.

I warrant you, Sir:
The white, cold, virgin-snow upon my heart
Abates the ardor of my liver.

Vanity of Human Nature.

Pros. Our revels now are ended: these our actors

(As I foretold you) were all spirits, and
Are melted into air, into thin air:
And, like the baseless fabric of this vision,
The cloud-capt towers, the gorgeous palaces,
The solemn temples, the great globe itself,
Yea all which it inherit, shall dissolve;
And, like this insubstantial pageant faded,
Leave not a rack behind! We are such stuff
As dreams are made on; and our little life
Is rounded with a sleep.

Drunkards enchanted by Ariel.

Ariel. I told you, Sir, they were red hot with drinking;
So full of valor, that they smote the air
For breathing in their faces: beat the ground

For kissing of their feet ; yet always bending
Towards their project. Then I beat my tabor ;
At which, like unback'd colts, they prick'd their ears,

Advanc'd their eye-lids, lifted up their noses,
As they smelt music : so I charm'd their ears,
That, calf-like, they my lowing follow'd thro' Tooth'd briers, sharp furzes, pricking goss, and
thorns,

Which enter'd their frail skins : at last I left 'em
I' th' filthy mantled pool beyond your cell,
There dancing up to the chins.

Caliban.

Pros. A devil, a born devil, on whose nature
Nurture can never stick ; on whom my pains,
Humanely taken, all, all lost, quite lost ;
And as with age his body uglier grows,
So his mind cankers.

Light of Foot.

Pray you, tread softly, that the blind mole
Hear a foot fall. [may not

Fine Sentiment of Humanity on Repentance.

Ariel. — The king, [ed ;
His brother, and yours, abide all three distract-
And the remainder mourning over them,
Brim-full of sorrow and dismay ; but chiefly
Him that you term'd the good old lord Gon-zalo ; [drops
His tears run down his beard, like winter's
From eaves of reeds : your charms so strongly work 'em,

That, if you now beheld them, your affections
Would become tender.

Pros. Dost thou think so, spirit ?

Ariel. Mine would, Sir, were I human.

Pros. And mine shall.

Hast thou, who art but air, a touch, a feeling
Of their afflictions, and shall not myself,
One of their kind, that relish all as sharply,
Passion as they, be kindlier mov'd than thou
art ?

Tho' with their high wrongs I am struck to the quick,

Yet with my nobler reason, 'gainst my fury
Do I take part ; the rarer action is — [nitent,
In virtue than in vengeance : they being pe-
The sole drift of my purpose doth extend
Not a frown farther.

Fairies and Magic.

Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and
groves ;

And ye, that on the sands with printless foot
Do chase the ebbing Neptune, and do fly him,
When he comes back ; you demy-puppets, that
By moon-shine do the green sour ringlets make,
Whereof the ewe not bites ; and you, whose pastime

Is to make midnight mushrooms ; that rejoice
To hear the solemn curfew ; by whose aid
(Weak masters tho' ye be) I have bedimm'd
The noontide sun, call'd forth the mutinous
winds,

And 'twixt the green sea and the azur'd vault
Set roaring war : to the dread rattling thunder
Have I given fire, and rifted Jove's stout oak

With his own bolt : the strong-bas'd promontory [up

Have I made shake : and by the spurs pluck'd
The pine and cedar : graves at my command
Have wak'd their sleepers ; oped and let them
By my so potent art. [forth

Senses returning.

The charm dissolves apace :
And as the morning steals upon the night,
Melting the darkness, so their rising senses
Begin to chase the ign'rant fumes, that mantle
Their clearer reason——

Their understanding
Begins to swell ; and the approaching tide
Will shortly fill the reasonable shores,
That now lie foul and muddy.

Ariel's Song.

Where the bee sucks, there suck I ;
In a cowslip's bell I lie :
There I couch when owls do cry.
On the bat's back I do fly
After sunset merrily :
Merrily, merrily, shall I live now,
Under the blossom that hangs on the bough.

Patience.

Alon. Irreparable is the loss ; and patience
Says, it is past her cure.

Pros. I rather think, [grace,
You have not sought her help ; of whose soft
For the like loss, I have her sovereign aid,
And rest myself content.

§ 12. TWELFTH NIGHT, OR WHAT YOU WILL. SHAKESPEARE.

Music and Love.

If music be the food of love, play on,
Give me excess of it ; that, surfeiting,
The appetite may sicken, and so die.
That strain again :—it had a dying fall :
O, it came o'er my ear, like the sweet south,
That breathes upon a bank of violets,
Stealing, and giving odour.—Enough ; no
more ;

'Tis not so sweet now as it was before.
O spirit of love, how quick and fresh art thou !
That, notwithstanding thy capacity
Receiveth as the sea, nought enters there,
Of what validity and pitch soever,
But falls into abatement and low price,
Even in a minute ! So full of shapes is fancy,
That it alone is high fantastical.

Love, in reference to Hunting.

O, when my eyes did see Olivia first,
Methought she purg'd the air of pestilence ;
That instant was I turn'd into a hart :
And my desires, like fell and cruel hounds,
E'er since pursue me.

Natural Affection akin to Love.

O, she, that hath a heart of that fine frame
To pay this debt of love but to a brother,
How will she love, when the rich golden shaft
Hath kill'd the flock of all affections else
That live in her ; when liver, brain, and heart,
These sovereign thrones, are all supplied, and fill'd

(Her sweet perfections) with one self-king !

Description of Sebastian's Escape.

— I saw your brother,
Most provident in peril, bind himself [tice)
(Courage and hope both teaching him the prac-
To a strong mast, that liv'd upon the sea;
Where, like Arion on the dolphin's back,
I saw him hold acquaintance with the waves,
So long as I could see.

Actions of the Great always talked of.

You know
What great ones do, the less will prattle of.

Outward Appearance a Token of inward Worth.

There is a fair behaviour in thee, captain;
And, though that nature with a beauteous wall
Doth oft close in pollution, yet of thee
I will believe, thou hast a mind that suits
With this thy fair and outward character.

A beautiful Boy.

Dear lad, believe it;
For they shall yet belie thy happy years,
That say, thou art a man; Diana's lip
Is not more smooth and rubious; thy small pipe
Is as the maiden's organ, shrill and sound,
And all is semblative a woman's part.

Beauty.

'Tis beauty truly blent, whose red and white
Nature's own sweet and cunning hand laid on:
Lady, you are the cruel'st she alive,
If you will lead these graces to the grave,
And leave the world no copy.

Extreme Love.

My lord and master loves you: O, such love
Could be but recompens'd, though you were
The nonpareil of beauty. [crown'd

Character of a noble Gentleman.

Yet I suppose him virtuous, know him noble,
Of great estate, of fresh and stainless youth;
In voices well divulg'd, free, learn'd, and valiant,
And, in dimension, and the shape of nature,
A gracious person; but yet I cannot love him;
He might have took his answer long ago.

Resolved Love.

Oliv. — Why, what would you?

Vio. Make me a willow cabin at your gate,
And call upon my soul within the house:
Write royal cantos of contemned love,
And sing them loud even in the dead of night;
Holla your name to the reverberate hills,
And make the babbling gossip of the air
Cry out, Olivia! O, you should not rest
Between the elements of air and earth,
But you should pity me.

Disguise.

Disguise, I see, thou art a wickedness,
Wherein the pregnant enemy does much.
How easy is it, for the proper false
In women's waxen hearts to set their forms!
Alas! our frailty is the cause, not we;
For, such as we are made of, such we be.

Serious Music most agreeable to Lovers.

Now, good Cesario, but that piece of song,
That old and antique song we heard last night:
Methought it did relieve my passion much;

More than light airs and recollected terms
Of these most brisk and giddy-paced times.

True Love.

Duke. Come hither, boy, if ever thou shalt
In the sweet pangs of it remember me: [love,
For such as I am, all true lovers are:
Unstaid and skittish in all motions else,
Save in the constant image of the creature
That is belov'd.—How dost thou like this tune?

Vio. It gives a very echo to the seat
Where love is thron'd.

In Love, the Women should be youngest.

Too old, by heaven! Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways she level in her husband's heart.
For, boy, however we do praise ourselves,
Our fancies are more giddy and unfirm,
More longing, wavering, sooner lost and won,
Than women's are.

Vio. I think it well, my lord. [thyself,

Duke. Then let thy love be younger than
Or thy affection cannot hold the bent:
For women are as roses; whose fair flower,
Being once display'd, doth fall that very hour.

Character of an old Song.

Mark it, Cesario, it is old and plain:
The spinsters and the knitters in the sun,
And the free maids that weave their thread
with bones,
Do use to chant it; it is silly sooth,
And dallies with the innocence of love
Like the old age.

Song.

Come away, come away, death,
And in sad cypress let me be laid:
Fly away, fly away, breath;
I am slain by a fair cruel maid.
My shroud of white stuck all with yew,
O, prepare it;
My part of death no one so true
Did share it.
Not a flower, not a flower sweet,
On my black coffin let there be strown;
Not a friend, not a friend greet [thrown:
My poor corpse, where my bones shall be
A thousand, thousand sighs to save,
Lay me, O where
Sad true lover ne'er find my grave,
To weep there.

Concealed Love.

Duke. There is no woman's sides
Can bide the beating of so strong a passion
As love doth give my heart: no woman's heart
So big, to hold so much; they lack retention.
Alas! their love may be call'd appetite—
No motion of the liver, but the palate.—
That suffers surfeit, cloyment, and revolt:
But mine is all as hungry as the sea,
And can digest as much: make no compare
Between that love a woman can bear me,
And that I owe Olivia.

Vio. Ay, but I know—

Duke. What dost thou know? [owe;

Vio. Too well what love women to men may

In faith, they are as true of heart as we.
My father had a daughter lov'd a man,
As it might be, perhaps, were I a woman,
I should your lordship.

Duke. And what's her history? [love,

Vio. A blank, my lord: she never told her
But let concealment, like a worm i' th' bud, Feed on her damask cheek: she pin'd in
thought;

And, with a green and yellow melancholy,
She sat like Patience on a monument,
Smiling at grief.

A Jester.

This fellow is wise enough to play the fool;
And to do that well, craves a kind of wit:
He must observe their mood on whom he jests,
The quality of persons and the time;
And like the haggard, check at every feather
That comes before his eye. This is a practice,
As full of labour as a wise man's art:
For folly, that he wisely shows, is fit;
But wise men's folly fall'n quite taints their wit.

Flattery, its ill Effects.

My servant, Sir! 'Twas never merry world,
Since lowly-feigning was call'd compliment.

Unsought Love.

Cesario, by the roses of the spring,
By maidhood, honor, truth, and every thing,
I love thee so, that, maugre all thy pride,
Nor wit, nor reason, can my passion hide.
Do not extort thy reasons from this clause,
For that I woo, thou therefore hast no cause:
But rather reason thus with reason fetter:
Love sought is good, but giv'n unsought is better.

Ingratitude.

Ant. Is't possible, that my deserts to you
Can lack persuasion? Do not tempt my misery,
Lest that it make me so unsound a man,
As to upbraid you with those kindnesses
That I have done for you.

Vio. I know of none;
Nor know I you by voice, or any feature:
I hate ingratitude more in a man,
Than lying, vainness, babbling drunkenness,
Or any taint of vice, whose strong corruption
Inhabits our frail blood.

Deformity in the Mind.

Ant. But O, how vile an idol proves this god!
Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.
In nature there's no blemish but the mind;
None can be call'd deform'd but the unkind:
Virtue is beauty; but the beauteous evil
Are empty trunks, o'erflourish'd by the devil.

Ignorance of ourselves:—One Drunkard's Reflection on another.

Then he's a rogue. After a passy-measure,
I hate a drunken rogue. [or a pavin,

§ 13. THE TWO GENTLEMEN OF VERONA. SHAKSPEARE.

The Advantages of Travel, &c.

Val. CEASE to persuade, my loving Protheus;
Home-keeping youth have ever homely wits:

Wer't not affection chains thy tender days
To the sweet glances of thy honor'd love,
I rather would entreat thy company,
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than, living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness;
But, since thou lov'st, love still, and thrive
therein,

Even as I would, when I to love begin. [adieu!

Pro. Wilt thou begone? Sweet Valentine,
Think on thy Protheus, when thou haply seest
Some rare note-worthy object in thy travel:
Wish me partaker in thy happiness,
When thou dost meet good-hap; and, in thy
If ever danger do environ thee, [danger,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayers,
For I will be thy beadsman, Valentine.

The Evils of being in Love.

To be in love, where scorn is bought with groans, [moment's mirth,
Coy looks, with heart-sore sighs; one fading
With twenty watchful, weary, tedious nights,
If haply won, perhaps, a hapless gain;
If lost, why then a grievous labor won;
However, but a folly bought with wit,
Or else a wit by folly vanquished.

Love commended and dispraised.

Pro. Yet writers say, as in the sweetest bud
The eating canker dwells, so eating love
Inhabits in the finest wits of all.

Val. And writers say, as the most forward
Is eaten by the canker, ere it blow, [bud
Even so by love the young and tender wit
Is turn'd to folly; blasting in the bud,
Losing his verdure even in the prime,
And all the fair effects of future hopes.

Pro. He after honor hunts, I after love:
He leaves his friends, to dignify them more:
I leave myself, my friends, and all for love.
Thou, Julia, thou hast metamorphos'd me:
Made me neglect my studies, lose my time,
War with good counsel, set the world at nought;
Made wit with musing weak, heart-sick with
thought.

Love froward and dissembling.

Maids, in modesty, say No, to that [Ay.
Which they would have the proff'rer construe
Fie, fie! how wayward is this foolish love,
That, like a testy babe, will scratch the nurse,
And presently, all humbled, kiss the rod!

The Advantages of Travel.

Pant. He wonder'd that your lordship
Would suffer him to spend his youth at home,
While other men, of slender reputation,
Put forth their sons to seek preferment out:
Some to the wars, to try their fortune there;
Some, to discover islands far away:
Some, to the studious universities.
For any, or for all these exercises,
He said, that Protheus, your son, was meet;
And did request me to importune you,
To let him spend his time no more at home,
Which would be great impeachment to his age
In having known no travel in his youth.

Ant. Nor need'st thou much importune me
to that

Whereon this month I have been hammering,
I have considered well his loss of time;
And how he cannot be a perfect man,
Not being tried and tutor'd in the world:
Experience is by industry achiev'd,
And perfected by the swift course of time.

Love compared to an April Day.

O, how this spring of love resembleth
Th' uncertain glory of an April day;
Which now shows all the beauty of the sun,
And by and by a cloud takes all away!

An accomplished young Gentleman.

His years but young, but his experience old;
His head unmellow'd, but his judgment ripe;
And, in a word (for far behind his worth
Come all the praises that I now bestow),
He is complete in feature, and in mind,
With all good grace to grace a gentleman.

Contempt of Love punished.

I have done penance for contemning love:
Whose high imperious thoughts have punish'd
With bitter fasts, with penitential groans, [me
With nightly tears, and daily heart-sore sighs;
For, in revenge of my contempt of love,
Love hath chas'd sleep from my enthralled eyes,
And made them watchers of my own heart's sorrow.

O gentle Protheus, love's a mighty lord;
And hath so humbled me, as, I confess,
There is no woe to his correction,
Nor to his service, no such joy on earth!
Now no discourse, except it be of love;
Now can I break my fast, dine, sup, and sleep
Upon the very naked name of love.

Love fed by Praise.

—Call her divine.

Pro. I will not flatter her.

Val. O flatter me: for love delights in praises.

Lover's Wealth.

Not for the world: why, man, she is mine
And I as rich in having such a jewel, [own:
As twenty seas, if all their sands were pearl,
The water nectar, and the rocks pure gold.

True Love jealous.

For love, thou know'st, is full of jealousy.

Love compar'd to a waxen Image.

Now my love is thaw'd,
Which, like a waxen image 'gainst a fire,
Bears no impression of the thing it was.

Unheedful Vows to be broken.

Unheedful vows may heedfully be broken;
And he wants wit that wants resolved will
To learn his wit to exchange the bad for better.

Opposition to Love increases it.

Jul. A true devoted pilgrim is not weary
To measure kingdoms with his feeble steps;
Much less shall she that hath love's wings to fly;

And when the flight is made to one so dear,
Of such divine perfection, as Sir Protheus.

Luc. Better forbear, till Protheus make return. [soul's food?

Jul. Oh, know'st thou not, his looks are my Pity the dearth that I have pined in,

By longing for that food so long a time.
Didst thou but know the inly touch of love,
Thou wouldst as soon go kindle fire with snow,
As seek to quench the fire of love with words.

Luc. I do not seek to quench your love's
But qualify the fire's extreme rage, [hot fire;
Lest it should burn above the bounds of reason.

Jul. The more thou damm'st it up, the more
it burns:

The current, that with gentle murmur glides,
Thou know'st, being stopp'd, impatiently doth
But when his fair course is not hindered, [rage;
He makes sweet music with the enamell'd
Giving a gentle kiss to every sedge [stones,
He overtaketh in his pilgrimage;
And by so many winding nooks he strays
With willing sport to the wide ocean.
Then let me go, and hinder not my course
I'll be as patient as a gentle stream,
And make a pastime of each weary step,
Till the last step have brought me to my love:
And there I'll rest, as, after much turmoil,
A blessed soul doth in Elysium.

A faithful and constant Lover.

His words are bonds, his oaths are oracles;
His love sincere, his thoughts immaculate;
His tears, pure messengers sent from his heart;
His heart as far from fraud, as heaven from
earth.

Gifts prevalent with Woman.

Win her with gifts, if she respect not words;
Dumb jewels, often, in their silent kind,
More than quick words, do move a woman's
mind.

Flattery prevalent with Woman.

Flatter and praise, commend, extol their graces;
Tho' ne'er so black, say they have angels' faces.
That man that hath a tongue I say is no man,
If with his tongue he cannot win a woman.

A Lover's Banishment.

And why not death, rather than live in tor-
To die is to be banished from myself: [ment!
And Sylvia is myself. Banish'd from her,
Is self from self; a deadly punishment!
What light is light, if Sylvia be not seen?
What joy is joy, if Sylvia be not by?
Unless it be to think that she is by,
And feed upon the shadow of perfection.
Except I be by Sylvia in the night,
There is no music in the nightingale:
Unless I look on Sylvia in the day,
There is no day for me to look upon.
She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive.

A beautiful Person petitioning (in vain).

Ay, ay; and she hath offered to the doom
(Which unrevers'd stands in effectual force)
A sea of melting pearl, which some call tears:
Those at her father's churlish feet she tender'd;
With them, upon her knees, her humble self;
Wringing her hands, whose whiteness so became them,

As if but now they waxed pale for woe :
But neither bended knees, pure hands held up,
Sad sighs, deep groans, nor silver-shedding tears,
Could penetrate her uncompassionate sire.

Hope.

Hope is a lover's staff ; walk hence with that :
And manage it against despairing thoughts.

Love compared to a Figure on Ice.

This weak impress of love is as a figure
Trenched in ice, which, with an hour's heat,
Dissolves to water, and doth lose his form.

Three Things hated by Women.

Pro. The best way is, to slander Valentine
With falsehood, cowardice, and poor descent :
Three things that women highly hold in hate.

Duke. Ay, but she'll think, that it is spoke

Pro. Ay, if his enemy deliver it ; [in hate Therefore it must, with circumstance, be spoken

By one whom she esteemeth as his friend.

The Power of Poetry with Women.

Say, that upon the altar of her beauty
You sacrifice your tears, your sighs, your heart :
Write, till your ink be dry ; and with your tears
Moist it again ; and frame some feeling line,
That may discover such integrity :—

For Orpheus' lute was strung with poet's sinews ;

Whose golded touch could soften steel and
Make tigers tame, and huge leviathans
Forsake unsounded deeps to dance on sands.

Song.

Who is Sylvia ? what is she,

That all our swains commend her ?

Holy, fair, and wise is she :

The heavens such grace did lend her,
That she might admired be.

Is she kind as she is fair ?

For beauty lives with kindness :

Love doth to her eyes repair,

To help him of his blindness ;

And, being help'd, inhabits there.

Then to Sylvia let us sing,

That Sylvia is excelling ;

She excels each mortal thing

Upon the dull earth dwelling :

To her let us garlands bring.

A Lover's Rest.

Jul. And so, good rest.

Pro. As wretches have o'er night,
That wait for execution in the morn.

True Love.

Thyself hast lov'd : and I have heard thee say,
No grief did ever come so near thy heart,
As when thy lady and thy true love died,
Upon whose grave thou vow'dst pure chastity.

Beauty neglected and lost.

But since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pinch'd the lily-tincture of her face.

The Power of Action.

And, at that time I made her weep a-good,
For I did play a lamentable part :
Madam, 'twas Ariadne, passioning
For Theseus' perjury, and unjust flight ;

Which I so lively acted with my tears,
That my poor mistress, moved therewithal,
Wept bitterly ; and, would I might be dead
If I in thought felt not her very sorrow !

Women sacred even to Banditti.

Fear not ; he bears an honorable mind,
And will not use a woman lawlessly.

A Lover in Solitude.

How use doth breed a habit in a man !
This shadowy desert, unfrequented woods,
I better brook than flourishing peopled towns.
Here can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes.
O, thou that dost inhabit in my breast,
Leave not the mansion so long tenantless ;
Lest, growing ruinous, the building fall,
And leave no memory of what it was ;
Repair me with thy presence, Sylvia :
Thou gentle nymph, cherish thy forlorn swain.

Love unreturned.

What dangerous action, stood it next to
death,

Would I not undergo for one calm look ?

O, 'tis the curse in love, and still approv'd,

When women cannot love where they're be-lov'd.

Infidelity in a Friend, and Reconciliation on Repentance.

Vol. Treacherous man !

[mine eye

Thou hast beguil'd my hopes ; nought but
Could have persuaded me : now I dare not say,
I have one friend alive ; thou wouldst dis-prove me.

[hand

Who should be trusted, when one's own right
Is perjur'd to the bosom ? Protheus,
I am sorry, I must never trust thee more,
But count the world a stranger for thy sake.
The private wound is deepest.

Pro. My shame and guilt confound me.—
Forgive me, Valentine : if hearty sorrow
Be a sufficient ransom for offence,
I tender it here ; I do as truly suffer,
As e'er I did commit.

Val. Then I am paid :

And once again I do receive thee honest.—
Who by repentance is not satisfied,
Is nor of heaven nor earth.

Inconstancy in Man.

O heaven ! were man

But constant, he were perfect : that one error
Fills him with faults.

A worthy Gentleman.

Now by the honor of my ancestry,
I do applaud thy spirit, Valentine,
And think thee worthy of an empress' love.
Know then, I here forget all former griefs,
Cancel all grudge, repeal thee home again,
Plead a new state in thy unrivall'd merit
To which I thus subscribe—Sir Valentine,
Thou art a gentleman, and well deriv'd :
Take thou thy Sylvia, for thou hast deserv'd

Reformed Exiles.

[her.

These banished men

Are men endued with worthy qualities ;
They are reformed, civil, full of good,
And fit for great employment, worthy lord.

§ 14. THE WINTER'S TALE.

SHAKSPEARE.

Youthful Friendship and Innocence.

WE were, fair queen, [behind,
Two lads that thought there was no more
But such a day to-morrow as to-day,
And to be boy eternal. [sun,
We were as twinn'd lambs, that did frisk i' th'
And bleat the one at th' other; what we chang'd,
Was innocence for innocence; we knew not
The doctrine of ill-doing; nor dream'd,
That any did: had we pursued that life,
And our weak spirits ne'er been higher rear'd,
With stronger blood we should have answer'd
Heaven
Boldly—"Not guilty;" the imposition clear'd,
Hereditary ours.

Praise, its Influence on Women.

Cram us with praise, and make us
As fat as tame things: one good deed, dying
tongueless,
Slaughters a thousand, waiting upon that:
Our praises are our wages: you may ride us
With one soft kiss a thousand furlongs, ere
With spur we heat an acre.

Nature.

How sometimes nature will betray its folly,
Its tenderness: and make itself a pastime
To harder bosoms!

A Father's Fondness for his Child.

Leon. Are you so fond of your young prince
Do seem to be of ours? [as we

Pol. If at home, Sir,
He's all my exercise, my mirth, my matter:
Now my sworn friend, and then mine enemy;
My parasite, my soldier, statesman, all:
He makes a July's day short as December:
And, with his varying childness, cures in me
Thoughts that would thicken my blood.

Faithful Service.

Cam. In your affairs, my lord,
If ever I were wilful negligent,
It was my folly: if industriously
I play'd the fool, it was my negligence,
Not weighing well the end: if ever fearful
To do a thing, where I the issue doubted,
Whereof the execution did cry out
Against the non-performance, 'twas a fear
Which oft infects the wisest; these, my lord,
Are such allow'd infirmities, that honesty
Is never free of.

Jealousy.

Is whispering nothing?
Is leaning cheek to cheek? is meeting noses?
Kissing with inside lip? stopping the career
Of laughter with a sigh? (a note infallible
Of breaking honesty:) horsing foot on foot?
Skulking in corners? wishing clocks more swift?
Hours, minutes? noon, midnight? and all eyes
Blind with the pin and web, but theirs, theirs only [thing?
That would, unseen, be wicked? Is this no-Why, then the world, and all that's in't, is nothing;
The covering sky is nothing; Bohemia nothing;

My wife is nothing: nor nothing have these
If this be nothing. [nothings,

King-killing detestable.

—To do this deed

Promotion follows: if I could find example
Of thousands that had struck anointed kings,
And flourish'd after, I'd not do't; but since Nor brass, nor stone, nor parchment, bears not Let villainy itself forswear it. [one,

The Effects of Jealousy.

This Jealousy

Is for a precious creature! as she's rare,
Must it be great; and, as his person's mighty,
Must it be violent: and as he does conceive
He is dishonor'd by a man, which ever
Professed to him, why, his revenges must
In that be made more bitter.

Knowledge sometimes hurtful.

There may be in the cup

A spider steep'd, and one may drink, depart,
And yet partake no venom; for his know-
Is not infected: but if one present [ledge
Th' abhorr'd ingredient to his eye, make known
How he hath drunk, he cracks his gorge, his
With violent hefts. [sides,

Calumny.

Praise her but for this her without-door form
(Which, on my faith, deserves high speech)
and straight [brands,
The shrug, the hum, or ha; these pretty
That calumny doth use:—O! I am out,
That mercy does: for calumny will fear Virtue itself—these shrugs, these hums, and has, [tween,
When you have said, she's goodly, come be-
Ere you can say she's honest.

Fortitude and Innocence.

Her. Do not weep, good fools;
There is no cause: when you shall know your mistress
Has deserved prison, then abound in tears,
As I come out: this action, I now go on,
Is for my better grace.

Honesty and Honor.

Here's a do,
To lock up honesty and honor from
The access of gentle visitors.

The Silence of Innocence eloquent.

The silence often of pure innocence
Persuades, when speaking fails.

Affectionate Child.

To see his nobleness!

Conceiving the dishonor of his mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply:
Fasten'd and fix'd the shame on't in himself!
Threw off his spirit, his appetite, his sleep,
And downright languish'd.

Child resembling his Father.

Behold, my lords,

Although the print be little, the whole matter
And copy of the father, eye, nose, lip,
The trick of his frown, his forehead: nay the valley, [smiles;
The pretty dimples of his chin, and cheek; his

The very mould and frame of hand, nail, finger:
And thou, good goddess nature, which hast made it

So like to him that got it, if thou hast
The ordering of the mind too, 'mongst all colors

No yellow in't; lest she suspect, as he does,
Her children not her husband's!

An Infant to be exposed.

Come on, poor babe: [vens
Some pow'rful spirit instruct the kites and ra-
To be thy nurses! Wolves and bears, they say,
Casting their savageness aside, have done
Like offices of pity.

Hermione pleading her innocence.

If pow'rs divine
Behold our human actions (as they do),
I doubt not then, but innocence shall make
False accusation blush, and tyranny
Tremble at patience. You, my lord, best know
(Who will seem least to do so) my past life
Hath been as continent, as chaste, as true,
As I am now unhappy; which is more
Than history can pattern, though devis'd,
And play'd to take spectators; for behold me,—
A fellow of the royal bed, which owe
A moiety of the throne, a great king's daughter,
The mother to a hopeful prince,—here standing,
To prate and talk of life, and honor, 'fore
Who please to come and hear. For life, I prize it [honor,
As I weigh grief, which I would spare; for
'Tis a derivative from me to mine,
And only that I stand for. I appeal
To your own conscience, Sir, before Polixenes
Came to your court, how I was in your grace,
How merited to be so; since he came,
With what encounter so uncurrent I
Have strain'd, to appear thus: if one jot beyond
The bound of honor: or, in act, or will,
That way inclining; harden'd be the hearts
Of all that hear me, and my near'st of kin
Cry, fie, upon my grave!

*A Wife's Loss of all Things dear, and Contempt
of Death.*

Leo. Look for no less than death.

Her. Sir, spare your threats;
The bug, which you would fright me with, I seek.

To me can life be no commodity;
The crown and comfort of my life, your favor,
I do give lost; for I do feel it gone,
But know not how it went. My second joy,
And first-fruits of my body, from his presence
I am barr'd like one infectious: my third comfort,

Starr'd most unluckily, is from my breast,
The innocent milk in its most innocent mouth,
Haled out to murder: Myself on every post
Proclaim'd a strumpet; with immodest hatred,
The child-bed privilege denied, which 'longs
To women of all fashion: lastly, hurried
Here to this place, i' the open air, before
I have got strength of limit. Now, my liege,
Tell me what blessings I have here alive,

That I should fear to die; therefore proceed.
But yet hear this, mistake me not,—no; life,
I prize it not a straw: but for mine honor,
(Which I would free) if I shall be condemn'd,
Upon surmises; all proofs sleeping else,
But what your jealousies awake; I tell you,
'Tis rigor, and not law,

Despair of Pardon.

But, O thou tyrant!

Do not repent these things; for they are heavier
Than all thy woes can stir: therefore betake
thee

To nothing but despair. A thousand knees,
Ten thousand years together, naked, fasting,
Upon a barren mountain, and still winter,
In storm perpetual, could not move the gods
To look that way thou wert.

An Account of a Ghost's appearing in a Dream.

-I have heard (but not believ'd), the spirits of the dead

May walk again: if such thing be, thy mother
Appear'd to me last night; for ne'er was dream
So like a waking. To me comes a creature,
Sometimes her head on one side, some another;
I never saw a vessel of like sorrow,
So fill'd, and so becoming; in pure white robes
Like very sanctity, she did approach
My cabin where I lay: thrice bow'd before me,
And, gasping to begin some speech, her eyes
Became two spouts: the fury spent, anon
Did this break from her: "Good Antigonus,
Since fate, against thy better disposition,
Hath made thy person for the thrower out
Of my poor babe, according to thine oath;
Places remote enough are in Bohemia,
There weep, and leave it crying: and, for the babe

Is counted lost for ever, Perdita
I pr'ythee call it: for this ungentle business,
Put on thee by my lord, thou ne'er shalt see Thy wife Paulina more." And so with shrieks,
She melted into air. Affrighted much,
I did in time collect myself, and thought
This was so, and no slumber. Dreams are toys:
Yet, for this once, yea superstitiously,
I will be squar'd by this.

An Infant exposed.

—Poor wretch,

That, for thy mother's fault, art thus expos'd
To loss, and what may follow! Weep I cannot,
But my heart bleeds: and most accurs'd am I,
To be by oath enjoin'd to this.—Farewell!
The day frowns more and more; thou art like to have

A lullaby too rough: I never saw
The heavens so dim by day.

Deities transformed for Love.

The gods themselves,
Humbling their deities to love, have taken
The shapes of beasts upon them. Jupiter
Became a bull, and bellow'd; the green Neptune

A ram, and bleated; and the fire-rob'd god,
Golden Apollo, a poor humble swain,
As I seem now: their transformations
Were never for a piece of beauty rarer;

Nor in a way so chaste: since my desires
Run not before mine honor; nor my lusts
Burn hotter than my faith.

Mistress of the Sheep-shearing.

Shep. Fie, daughter! when my old wife liv'd, upon

This day, she was both pantler, butler, cook;
Both dame, and servant; welcom'd all; serv'd
all: [here,

Would sing her song, and dance her turn: now
At upper end o' the table, now i' the middle;
On his shoulder, and his: her face o' fire
With labor; and the thing she took to quench
it,

She would to each one sip: you are retir'd,
As if you were a feasted one, and not
The hostess of the meeting. Pray you, bid
These unknown friends to us welcome, for it is
A way to make us better friends, more known.
Come quench your blushes and present your self [on,
That which you are, mistress o' the feast: come
And bid us welcome to your sheep-shearing,
As your good flock shall prosper.

A Garland for old Men.

Per. Reverend Sirs,

For you there's rosemary, and rue: these keep Seeming, and savor, all the winter long;
Grace, and remembrance, be unto you both,
And welcome to our shearing!

Per. Shepherdess,

(A fair one are you) well you fit our ages
With flowers of winter.

Nature and Art.

Per. Sir, the year growing ancient—

Not yet on summer's death, nor on the birth
Of trembling winter; the fairest flowers o' the season

Are our carnations, and streak'd gilly-flow'rs,
Which some call nature's bastards: of that kind

Our rustic garden's barren; and I care not
To get slips of them.

Pol. Wherefore, gentle maiden,
Do you neglect them?

Per. For I have heard it said,
There is an art, which, in their piedness, shares
With great creating nature.

Pol. Say, there be;

Yet nature is made better by no mean,
But nature makes that mean: so, o'er that art,
Which, you say, adds to nature, is an art
That nature makes. You see, sweet maid, we marry

A gentle cyon to the wildest stock;
And make conceive a bark of baser kind
By bud of nobler race: This is an art
Which does mend nature—change it rather:
The art itself is nature. [but

Per. So it is.

Pol. Then make your garden rich in gilly-
And do not call them bastards. [flowers,

A Garland for a middle aged Man.

Per. ——— I'll not put
The dibble in earth, to set one slip of them;
No more than, were I painted, I would wish

This youth should say, 'twere well; and only Desire to breed by me.— [therefore

Here's flowers for you;

Hot lavender, mints, savory, marjoram;
The marygold that goes to bed with the sun,
And with him rises, weeping; these are flowers
Of middle summer; and, I think, they are given
To men of middle age.

A Garland for Young Men.

Cam. I should leave grazing, were I of your
And only live by gazing. [flock,

Per. Out, alas!

You'd be so lean, that blasts of January
Would blow you through and through. Now, my fairest friend,

I would I had some flowers o' the spring, that might [yours;

Become your time of day; and yours, and
That wear upon your virgin-branches yet
Your maiden-heads growing:—O, Proserpina,
For the flow'rs now, that, frightened, thou lett'st
From Dis's waggon! daffodils [fall

That come before the swallow dares, and take
The winds of March with beauty, violets, dim,
But sweeter than the lids of Juno's eyes,

Or Cytherea's breath; pale primroses,
That die unmarried, ere they can behold
Bright Phoebus in his strength, a malady
Most incident to maids; bold oxlips, and
The crown imperial; lilies of all kinds,
The flower-de-luce being one! O, these I lack,
To make you garlands of; and, my sweet
To strew him o'er and o'er. [friend,

Fol. What like a corse?

Per. No, like a bank, for love to lie and play on;

Not like a corse: or if—not to be buried,
But quick and in mine arms.

A Lover's Commendation.

What you do, [sweet,
Still betters what is done. When you speak,
I'd have you do it ever: when you sing,
I'd have you buy and sell so; so give alms;
Pray so; and, for the ord'ring your affairs,
To sing them too. When you do dance, I wish
you

A wave o' the sea, that you might ever do
Nothing but that; move still, still so,
And own no other function: each your doing,
So singular in each particular,
Crowns what you're doing in the present deeds,
That all your acts are queens.

Honest Wooing.

Per. O Doricles,

Your praises are too large: but that your youth,
And the true blood which peeps so fairly through it,

Do plainly give you out an unstain'd shepherd;
With wisdom I might fear, my Doricles,
You woo'd me the false way.

Fol. I think, you have
As little skill to fear, as I have purpose
To put you to't. But, come; our dance, I pray:
Your hand, my Perdita: so turtles pair,
That never mean to part.

True Love.

They call him Doricles; and he boasts him-
To have a worthy feeding: but I have it [self
Upon his own report, and I believe it;
He looks like sooth: he says he loves my daughter;
I think so too; for never gaz'd the moon
Upon the water, as he'll stand, and read,
As't were my daughter's eyes: and, to be plain,
I think, there is not half a kiss to choose,
Who loves another best.

Presents little regarded by real Lovers.

Pol. ——— How now, fair shepherd?
Your heart is full of something that does take Your mind from feasting. Sooth, when I was young,
And handed love as you do, I was wont
To load my she with knacks: I would have ransack'd
The pedlar's silken treasury, and have pour'd it
To her acceptance: you have let him go,
And nothing marted with him. If your lass Interpretation should abuse, and call this
Your lack of love, or bounty, you were straited
For a reply, at least, if you make care
Of happy holding her.

Flo. Old Sir, I know
She prizes not such trifles as those are:
The gifts, she looks from me, are pack'd and lock'd
Up in my heart; which I have given already,
But not deliver'd. O, hear me breathe my love,
Before this ancient Sir, who, it should seem,
Hath sometime lov'd: I take thy hand; this
hand
As soft as dove's down, and as white as it,
Or Ethiopian's tooth, or the fann'd snow,
That's bolted by the northern blast twice o'er.

Tender Affection.

Were I crown'd the most imperial monarch,
Thereof most worthy; were I the fairest youth
That ever made eye swerve; had force, and knowledge [them,
More than was ever man's—I would not prize
Without her love: for her, employ them all;
Commend them, and condemn them to her
Or to their own perdition. [service,

A Father the best Guest at his Son's Nuptials.

Methinks, a father
Is, at the nuptials of his son, a guest [more;
That best becomes the table. Pray you, once
Is not your father grown incapable
Of reasonable affairs? Is he not stupid
With age, and altering rheums? Can he speak?
hear?

Know man from man? dispute his own estate?
Lies he not bed-rid? and again does nothing,
But what he did, being childish?

Flo. No, good Sir!
He has his health, and ampler strength, indeed,
Than most have of his age.

Pol. By my white beard
You offer him, if this be so, a wrong
Something unfilial: reason, my son,
Should choose himself a wife; but as good rea-
The father (all whose joy is nothing else [son,

But fair posterity) should hold some counsel
In such a business.

Rural Simplicity.

I was not much afraid: for once or twice,
I was about to speak: and tell him plainly,
The self-same sun that shines upon his court
Hides not his visage from our cottage, but Looks on all alike:

Selfish old Man.

O, Sir,
You have undone a man of fourscore-three,
That thought to fill his grave in quiet; yea,
To die upon the bed my father died,
To lie close by his honest bones; but now
Some hangman must put on my shroud, and
Where no priest shovels in dust. [lay me

Prosperity the Bond, Affliction the Looser, of Love.

Prosperity's the very bond of love, [ther
Whose fresh complexion and whose heart toge-Affliction alters.

Self-Conceit.

Ant. How blest are we that are not simple men!
Yet nature might have made me as these are;
Therefore I will not disdain.

Self-Reproach, and too severe Reproof.

Cle. At the last, [evils;
Do, as the heavens have done; forget your
With them forgive yourself.

Leo. Whilst I remember
Her and her virtues, I cannot forget
My blemishes in them; and so still think of
The wrong I did myself; which was so much,
That heirless it hath made my kingdom; and Destroy'd the sweet'st companion, that e'er man
Bred his hopes out of.

Pau. True, too true, my lord;
If, one by one, you wedded all the world,
Or, from the all that are, took something good,
To make a perfect woman; she, you kill'd,
Would be unparallel'd.

Leo. I think so. Kill'd!
She I kill'd! I did so: but thou strik'st me
Sorely, to say I did; it is as bitter
Upon thy tongue, as in my thought: now,
Say so but seldom. [good now,

Cle. Not at all, good lady:
You might have spoken a thousand things, that would

Have done the time more benefit, and grac'd
Your kindness better.

Love more rich for what it gives.

Leo. I might have look'd upon my queen's full eye;
Have taken treasure from her lips—

More rich, for what they yielded.

A captivating Woman.

——— This is a creature,
Would she begin a sect, might quench the zeal
Of all professors else; make proselytes
Of who she but bid follow.

Anguish of Recollection for a lost Friend.

Pr'ythee no more; cease; thou know'st,
He dies to me again, when talk'd of: sure,
When I shall see this gentleman, thy speeches

Will bring me to consider that, which may Unfurnish me of reason.

Effects of Beauty.

The blessed gods,
Purge all infection from our air, whilst you
Do climate here!

A Statue.

What was he, that did make it? See, my lord,
Would you not deem it breath'd? and that those veins
Did verily bear blood?
Masterly done:
The very life seems warm upon her lip.
The fixture of her eye has motion in't,
As we were mock'd with art.

— Still, methinks, [chisel
There is an air comes from her: What fine
Could ever yet cut breath?—Let no man mock
For I will kiss her. [me,

Affliction to a penitent Mind pleasing.

Pau. I am sorry, Sir, I have thus far stirr'd
But I could afflict you further. [you:

Leo. Do, Paulina;
For this affliction has a taste as sweet
As any cordial comfort.

Widow compared to a Turtle.

I an old turtle, [there
Will wing me to some wither'd bough; and
My mate, that's never to be found again,
Lament till I am lost.

§ 15. ANTONY AND CLEOPATRA.
SHAKESPEARE.

Antony's Softness.

His captain's heart,
Which in the scuffles of great fights hath burst
The buckles in his breast, reneges all temper;
And is become the bellows, and the fan,
To cool a gipsy's lust.

Love, the Nobleness of Life.

Let Rome in Tiber melt! and the wide arch
Of the rang'd empire fall! here is my space;
Kingdoms are clay; our dungy earth alike
Feeds beast as man: the nobleness of life
Is, to do thus; when such a mutual pair,
And such a twain can do't; in which, I bind
On pain of punishment, the world to weet,
We stand up peerless.

Lover's Praise.

Fie, wrangling queen!
Whom every thing becomes, to chide, to laugh,
To weep; whose every passion fully strives
To make itself, in thee, fair and admir'd!

Great Minds respect Truth. [teller.

Mes. The nature of bad news infects the

Ant. When it concerns the fool or coward.—

Things that are past are done, with me—'tis
Who tells me true, though in his tale lie death,
I hear him as he flatter'd. [tongue;

Speak to me home, mince not the general
Name Cleopatra as she's call'd in Rome:

Rail thou in Fulvia's phrase; and taunt my faults [lice

With such full licence, as both truth and ma-

Have pow'r to utter. O, then we bring forth weeds [told us,

When our quick winds lie still, and our ills
Is as our earing.

Things lost valued.

Forbear me.—

There's a great spirit gone! Thus did I desire it:
What our contempts do often hurl from us,
We wish it ours again; the present pleasure,
By revolution lowering, does become
The opposite of itself: she's good, being gone;
The hand could pluck her back, that shov'd her on.

The Mutability of the People.

Our slippery people (Whose love is never link'd to the deserver, Till his deserts are past) begin to throw
Pompey the Great, and all his dignities,
Upon his son; who, high in name and pow'r,
Higher than both in blood and life, stands up
For the main soldier.

Cleopatra's contemptuous Raillery.

Nay, pray you, seek no color for your going,
But bid farewell, and go: when you sued staying,

Then was the time for words: no going then—
Eternity was in our lips and eyes; [poor,
Bliss in our brows' bent; none our parts so
But was a race of heaven: they are so still,
Or thou, the greatest soldier in the world,
Art turn'd the greatest liar.

Cleopatra's anxious Tenderness.

Ant. I'll leave you, lady.

Cleo. Courteous lord, one word.

Sir, you and I must part—but that's not it:
Sir, you and I have lov'd—but there's not it;—
That you know well: something it is I would—
O, my oblivion is a very Antony,
And I am all-forgotten.

Cleopatra's Wishes for Antony on Parting.

Your honor calls you hence;
Therefore be deaf to my unpity'd folly,
And all the gods go with you! Upon your sword
Sit laurel'd victory! and smooth success
Be strew'd before your feet!

Antony's Vices and Virtues.

Lep. I must not think
There are evils enough to darken all his goodness:
His faults, in him, seem as the spots of heaven,
More fiery by night's blackness; hereditary,
Rather than purchas'd; what he cannot change,
Than what he chooses.

Cæs. You are too indulgent. Let us grant it is not

Amiss to tumble on the bed of Ptolemy;
To give a kingdom for a mirth; to sit
And keep the turn of tippling with a slave;
To reel the streets at noon, and stand the buffet
With knaves that smell of sweat: say, this becomes him,

(As his composure must be rare indeed, Whom these things cannot blemish) yet must

Antony

No way excuse his foils, when we do bear
So great weight in his lightness. If he fill'd

His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't: but to confound such time,
That drums him from his sport, and speaks as
As his own state and ours—'tis to be chid [loud
As we rate boys, who, being mature in knowledge, [sure,
Pawn their experience to their present plea-
And so rebel to judgement.

Antony,
Leave thy lascivious wassels. When thou once
Wert beaten from Modena, where thou slew'st
Hirtius and Pansa, consuls, at thy heel
Did famine follow; whom thou fought'st against,
Though daintily brought up, with patience
more
Than savages could suffer: Thou didst drink
The stale of horses, and the gilded puddle
Which beasts would cough at. Thy palate then did deign
The roughest berry on the rudest hedge;
Yea, like the stag, when snow the pasture
sheets, [Alps,
The barks of trees thou browsed'st: on the
It is reported, thou didst eat strange flesh,
Which some did die to look on: and all this
(It wounds thine honor that I speak it now)
Was borne so like a soldier, that thy cheek
So much as lank'd not.

Cleopatra on the absence of Antony.

O Charmian, [sits he?
Where think'st thou he is now? stands he? or
Or does he walk? or is he on his horse?
O happy horse, to bear the weight of Antony!
Do bravely, horse! for wot'st thou whom thou mov'st?

The demi-Atlas of this earth, the arm
And burgonet of man. He's speaking now,
Or murmuring, "Where's my serpent of old
For so he calls me; now I feed myself [Nile?"
With most delicious poison: think on me
That am with Phœbus' amorous pinches black;
And wrinkled deep in time! Broad-fronted
Cæsar,

When thou wast here above the ground, I was
A morsel for a monarch; and great Pompey
Would stand, and make his eyes grow in my
brow;
There would he anchor his aspect, and die
With looking on his life.

Messengers from Lovers grateful.

How much unlike art thou Mark Antony!
Yet, coming from him, that great medicine hath
With his tinct gilded thee.

Antony's Love and Dissipation.

Ale. Good friend, quoth he,
Say, "The firm Roman to great Egypt sends
This treasure of an oyster; at whose foot,
To mend the petty present, I will piece
Her opulent throne with kingdoms: all the east,
Say thou, shall call her mistress." So he nodded,
And soberly did mount an arm-gaunt steed,
Who neigh'd so high, that what I would have
Was beastly dumb'd by him. [spoke

Cle. What, was he sad, or merry?

Ale. Like to the time o' th' year, between the extremes

Of hot and cold; he was nor sad or merry.

Cle. O well-divided disposition!—Note him,
Note him, good Charmian, 'tis the man; but note him,

He was not sad; for he would shine on those
That make their looks by his; he was not merry;

Which seem'd to tell them, his remembrance lay
In Egypt with his joy: but between both:
O heavenly mingle!—Be'st thou sad or merry,
The violence of either thee becomes;
So does it no man else.

The Vanity of human Wishes.

Pom. If the great gods be just, they shall
The deeds of justest men. [assist

Men. Know, worthy Pompey,
That what they do delay, they not deny.

Pom. Whiles we are suitors to their throne,
The thing we sue for. [decays

Men. We, ignorant of ourselves,
Beg often our own harms, which the wise pow'rs
Deny us for our good; so find we profit,
By losing of our prayers.

Pompey's Wish for Antony's Captivity in Pleasure.

Pom. I know they are in Rome together,
Looking for Antony: but all the charms of love,
Salt Cleopatra, soften thy wan lip!
Let witchcraft join with beauty, lust with both!
Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming: Epicurean cooks
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite;
That sleep and feeding may prorogue his honor,
Even till a Lethe'd dulness.

Antony's Soldiership.

Pom. ——— Menas, I did not think,
This amorous surfeiter would have don'd his
For such a petty war: his soldiership [helm
Is twice the other twain: but let us rear
The higher our opinion, that our stirring
Can from the lap of Egypt's widow pluck
The ne'er lust-wearied Antony.

Antony's ingenuous Acknowledgement.

Art. The article of my oath—

Cæs. To lend me arms and aid, when I requir'd them;

The which you both denied.

Ant. Neglected, rather; [me up
And then, when poison'd hours had bound From my own knowledge. As nearly as I may,

I'll play the penitent to you: but mine honesty
Shall not make poor my greatness, nor my pow'r
Work without it. Truth is, that Fulvia,
To have me out of Egypt, made wars here;
For which myself, the ignorant motive, do
So far ask pardon, as befits mine honor
To stoop in such a case.

Lep. 'Tis nobly spoken.

Description of Cleopatra's Sailing down the Cydnus.

The barge she sat in, like a burnish'd throne,
Burn'd on the water: the poop was beaten gold,
Purple the sails, and so perfumed, that

The winds were love-sick with them: th' oars were silver: [made

Which to the tune of flutes kept stroke, and
The water which they beat, to follow faster,
As amorous of their strokes. For her own
It beggar'd all description: she did lie [person,
In her pavilion (cloth of gold, of tissue),
O'er-picturing that Venus, where we see
The fancy out-work nature. On each side her Stood pretty dimpled boys, like smiling Cupids,

With divers-color'd fans, whose wind did seem
To glow the delicate cheeks which they did cool,
And what they undid, did.

Agr. O rare for Antony!

Eno. Her gentlewomen, like the Nereids,
So many mermaids, tended her i' th' eyes,
And made their bends adornings. At the helm,
A seeming mermaid steers; the silken tackle
Swell with the touches of those flow'r-soft
hands

That yarely frame the office. From the barge
A strange invisible perfume hits the sense
Of the adjacent wharfs. The city cast
Her people out upon her; and Antony,
Enthron'd i' th' market-place, did sit alone,
Whistling to th' air; which, but for vacancy,
Had gone to gaze on Cleopatra too,
And made a gap in nature.

Cleopatra's infinite Power in pleasing.

Age cannot wither her, nor custom stale
Her infinite variety: other women cloy
The appetites they feed; but she makes hungry,
Where most she satisfies. For vilest things
Become themselves in her, that the holy priests
Bless her when she is riggish.

The unsettled Humor of Lovers.

Enter Cleopatra, Charmian, Iras, and Alexas.

Cleo. Give me some music; music, moody
Of us that trade in love. [food

Omnes. The music, ho!

Enter Mardian the Eunuch.

Cleo. Let it alone: let's to billards: come, Charmian.

Char. My arm is sore, best play with Mardian.

Cleo. As well a woman with an eunuch play, [Sir.

As with a woman; come—you'll play with me,

Mar. As well as I can, Madam.

Cleo. And when good will is show'd, tho'
it come too short,

The actor may plead pardon. I'll none now:—
Give me mine angle—we'll to the river: there,
My music playing far off, I will betray Tawny-fin'd fishes; my bended hook shall pierce

Their slimy jaws; and, as I draw them up,
I'll think them every one an Antony,
And say, Ah, ha! you are caught.

Char. 'Twas merry, when You wager'd on your angling; when your diver

Did hang a salt-fish on his hook, which he
With fervency drew up.

Cleo. That time!—O times!

I laugh'd him out of patience; and that night

I laugh'd him into patience: and next morn,
Ere the ninth hour, I drunk him to his bed;
Then put my tires and mantles on him, whilst
I wore his sword Philippan.

Ambition, jealous of a too successful Friend.

O Silius! Silius!

I have done enough: a lower place, note well,
May make too great an act: for learn this,
Silius,

Better to leave undone, than by our deed
Acquire too high a fame, when him we serve's
away.

Octavia's Entrance, what it should have been.

Why have you stolen upon us thus? You come not

Like Cæsar's sister: the wife of Antony
Should have an army for an usher, and
The neighs of horses to tell of her approach,
Long ere she did appear: the trees by th' way
Should have borne men; and expectation fainted,

Longing for what it had not: nay, the dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heaven Rais'd by our populous troops. But you are come

A market-maid to Rome; and have prevented
The ostentation of our love, which, left un-
shown,

Is often left unlov'd; we should have met
you

By sea and land; supplying ev'ry stage
With an augmented greeting.

Women.

Women are not

In their best fortunes strong; but want will
The ne'er-touch'd vestal. [perjure

Fortune forms our Judgement.

I see man's judgements are
A parcel of their fortunes; and things outward
To draw the inward quality after them,
To suffer all alike.

Loyalty.

Mine honesty and I begin to square.
The loyalty well held to fools does make
Our faith mere folly: yet, he that can endure
To follow with allegiance a fall'n lord,
Does conquer him that did his master conquer,
And earns a place i' the story.

Wisdom superior to Fortune.

Wisdom and fortune combating together,
If that the former dare but what it can,
No chance may shake it.

Vicious persons infatuated by Heaven.

When we in our viciousness grow hard,
(O misery on't!) the wise gods seal our eyes
In our own filth, drop our clear judgements, make us

Adore our errors; laugh at us; while we strut
To our confusion.

Fury expels Fear.

Now he'll outstare the lightning. To be fu-
Is to be frighted out of fear: and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge; and I see still
A diminution in our captain's brain
Restores his heart: when valour preys on reason
It eats the sword it fights with. [rious

A Master taking Leave of his Servants.

Tend me to-night ;
 May be, it is the period of your duty :
 Haply, you shall not see me more ; or if,—
 A mangled shadow. Perchance to-morrow
 You'll serve another master. I look on you
 As one that takes his leave. Mine honest
 friends,

I turn you not away ; but, like a master,
 Married to your good service, stay till death :
 Tend me to-night two hours, I ask no more,
 And the gods yield you for it.

Early Rising the Way to Eminence.

This morning, like the spirit of a youth
 That means to be of note, begins betimes.

Antony to Cleopatra on his return with Victory.

O, thou day o' th' world, [all,
 Chain mine arm'd neck ; leap thou, attire and Through proof of harness to my heart, and there
 Ride on the pants triumphing.

Louathed Life.

O sovereign mistress of true melancholy,
 The poisonous damp of night dispunge upon
 That life, a very rebel to my will, [me ;
 May hang no longer on me.

Antony's Despondency.

Oh sun, thy uprise shall I see no more :
 Fortune and Antony part here ; even here
 Do we shake hands. All come to this ! The hearts

That spaniel'd me at heels, to whom I gave
 Their wishes, do discandy, melt their sweets
 On blossoming Cæsar ; and this pine is bark'd,
 That over-topp'd them all.

Departing Greatness.

The soul and body rive not more in parting
 Than greatness going off.

Antony on his faded Glory.

Ant. Sometime, we see a cloud that's dragon-
 A vapor, sometime, like a bear, or lion, [ish ;
 A tower'd citadel, a pendant rock,
 A forked mountain, or blue promontory,
 With trees upon 't, that nod unto the world,
 And mock our eyes with air :—Thou hast seen
 these signs ;

They are black vespers' pageants.

Eros. Ay, my lord.

Ant. That which is now a horse, even with a thought

The rack dislimns, and makes it indistinct,
 As water is in water.

Eros. It does, my lord. [tain is

Ant. My good knave, Eros, now thy cap-
 Even such a body : here I am Antony,
 Yet cannot hold this visible shape, my knave.
 I made these wars for Egypt ; and the queen,
 Whose heart I thought I had, for she had mine ;
 Which, whilst it was mine, had annex'd unto't
 A million more, now lost ; she, Eros, has Pack'd cards with Cæsar, and false play'd my Unto an enemy's triumph. [glory

Nay, weep not, gentle Eros ; there is left us
 Ourselves to end ourselves,

Description of Cleopatra's (supposed) Death.

Death of one person can be paid but once ;
 And that she has discharged. What thou wouldst do,

Is done unto thy hand ; the last she spake
 Was Antony ! most noble Antony !
 Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
 The name of Antony ; it was divided Between her heart and lips : she render'd life,
 Thy name so buried in her.

Cleopatra on the Death of Antony.

It were for me

To throw my sceptre at th' injurious gods ;
 To tell them, that this world did equal theirs, Till they had stol'n our jewel. All's but
 nought ;

Patience is sottish ; and impatience does
 Become a dog that's mad : then is it sin,
 To rush into the secret house of death, [men ?
 Ere death dare come to us ? How do you, wo-
 What, what ? good cheer ! Why how now, Charinian ?

My noble girls !—Ah women, women ! Look,
 Our lamp is spent, it's out :—Good sirs, take
 heart :

We'll bury him : and then, what's noble,
 Let's do it after the high Roman fashion,
 And make death proud to take us. Come away :
 This case of that huge spirit now is cold.

Death.

My desolation does begin to make
 A better life : 'tis paltry to be Cæsar ;
 Not being fortune, he's but fortune's knave,
 A minister of her will ; and it is great
 To do that thing that ends all other deeds ;
 Which shackles accidents, and bolts up change ;
 Which sleeps, and never palates more the dung,
 The beggar's nurse and Cæsar's.

Cleopatra's Dream, and Description of Antony.

Cleo. I dream'd, there was an emperor
 Antony ;

O, such another sleep, that I might see
 But such another man !

Dol. If it might please you— [in stuck

Cleo. His face was as the heavens ; and there-
 A sun and moon ; which kept their course,
 The little O, the earth. [and lighted

Dol. Most sovereign creature— [arm

Cleo. His legs bestrid the ocean : his rear'd
 Crested the world : his voice was property'd
 As all the tuned spheres, and that to friends ;
 But when he meant to quail and shake the orb,
 He was as rattling thunder. For his bounty,
 There was no winter in 't ; an autumn 'twas
 That grew the more by reaping ; his delights
 Were dolphin-like ; they show'd his back above
 The element they liv'd in ; in his livery
 Walk'd crowns and crownets ; realms and
 As plates dropt from his pocket. [islands were

Firm Resolution.

How poor an instrument
 May do a noble deed ! he brings me liberty.
 My resolution's plac'd, and I have nothing
 Of woman in me : now from head to foot
 I am marble constant : now the fleeting moon
 No planet is of mine.

Cleopatra's Speech on applying the Asp.

Give me my robe, put on my crown ; I have Immortal longings in me. Now no more

The juice of Egypt's grape shall moist this lip:
Yare, yare, good Iras; quick—methinks, I hear
Antony call; I see him rouse himself
To praise my noble act; I hear him mock
The luck of Cæsar, which the gods give men
T' excuse their after wrath. Husband, I come:
Now to that name, my courage, prove my title!
I am fire, and air; my other elements
I give to baser life. So,—have you done?
Come then, and take the last warmth of my lips:
Farewell, kind Charmian; Iras, long farewell.

[Kisses them. Iras falls and dies.]

Have I the aspic in my lips? Dost fall?
If thou and nature can so gently part,
The stroke of death is as a lover's pinch,
Which hurts, and is desired. Dost thou lie still?
If thus thou vanishest, thou tell'st the world
It is not worth leave-taking.

Char. Dissolve, thick cloud, and rain; that I
The gods themselves do weep. [may say,

Cleo. This proves me base—

If she first meet the curled Antony,
He'll make demand of her; and spend that kiss
Which is my heaven to have. Come, thou mortal wretch,

[To the asp, which she applies to her breast.]

With thy sharp teeth this knot intrinsicate
Of life at once untie: poor venomous fool,
Be angry and dispatch. O, couldst thou speak,
That I might hear thee call great Cæsar ass, Unpolicy'd!

Char. O, eastern star.

Cleo. Peace, peace!

Dost thou not see my baby at my breast,
That sucks the nurse asleep?

Char. O, break, O, break! [gentle—

Cleo. As sweet as balm, as soft as air, as O Antony! Nay, I will take thee too:—

[Applying another Asp.

What should I stay— [Dies.

Char. In this wide world? so, fare thee well.
Now, boast, thee, death! in thy possession lies
A lass unparallel'd.

§ 16. CORIOLANUS. SHAKSPEARE.

Mob.

WHAT would you have, you curs!
That like nor peace nor war? The one affrights
you, you,
The other makes you proud. He that trusts to Where he should find you lions, finds you hares;

Where foxes, geese; you are no surer, no,
Than 'is the coal of fire upon the ice,
Or hailstone in the sun. Your virtue is, [him,
To make him worthy, whose offence subdues
And curse that justice did it. Who deserves greatness,

Deserves your hate: and your affections are
A sick man's appetite, who desires most that Which would increase his evil. He that depends

Upon your favors, swims with fins of lead,
And hews down oaks with rushes. Hang ye,— trust ye?

With every minute you do change a mind;

And call him noble, that was now your hate,
Him vile that was your garland.

Aufidius's Hatred to Coriolanus.

—Nor sleep, nor sanctuary,
Being naked, sick; nor fane nor Capitol,
The prayers of priests, nor times of sacrifice,
Embarquements all of fury, shall lift up
Their rotten privilege and custom 'gainst
My hate to Marcius. Where I find him, were it
At home, upon my brother's guard, even there,
Against the hospitable canon, would I
Wash my fierce hand in his heart.

An imaginary Description of Coriolanus warring.

Methinks I hear hither your husband's drum;
See him pluck Aufidius down by the hair;
As children from a bear, the Volscies shunning
him:

[thus,—
Methinks I see him stamp thus,—and call “Come on, ye cowards! ye were got in fear, Though ye were born in Rome:” his bloody brow

[goes
With his mail'd hand then wiping, forth he
Like to a harvest man, that's task'd to mow
Or all, or lose his hire. [blood!

Virge. His bloody brow! Oh, Jupiter, no
Vol. Away, you fool! it more becomes a man,
Than gilt his trophy: the breasts of Hecuba,
When she did suckle Hector, looked not lovelier [blood

Than Hector's forehead, when it spit forth
At Grecian swords contending.

Doing our Duty merits not Praise.

Pray now, no more: my mother,
Who has a charter to extol her blood,
When she does praise me, grieves me: I have done, [duc'd

As you have done; that's what I can! in-
As you have been; that's for my country:
He that has but effected his good will,
Hath overta'en mine act.

Popularity.

[sights
All tongues speak of him; and the bleared
Are spectacl'd to see him. Your prattling nurse
Into a rapture lets her baby cry,
While she chats him: the kitchen malkin pins
Her richest lockram 'bout her reechy neck,
Clamb'ring the walls to eye him: stalls, bulks,
windows,

Are smother'd up, leads fill'd, and ridges hors'd
With variable complexions; all agreeing
In earnestness to see him: seld-shown flamens
Do press among the popular throngs, and puff
To win a vulgar station: our veil'd dames
Commit the war of white and damask, in
Their nicely-gawd'd cheeks, to the wanton spoil
Of Phœbus' burning kisses: such a pothor,
As if that whatsoever god, who leads him,
Were sily crept into his human powers,
And gave him graceful posture.

Cominius' Speech in the Senate.

I shall lack voice: the deeds of Coriolanus
Should not be utter'd feebly. It is held
That valor is the chiefest virtue, and
Most dignifies the haver: if it be,

The man I speak of cannot in the world
Be singly counterpois'd. At sixteen years,
When Tarquin made a head for Rome, he fought

Beyond the mark of others; our then dictator,
Whom with all praise I point at, saw him fight,
When with his Amazonian chin he drove
The bristled lips before him: he bestrid
An o'er-prest Roman, and i' the consul's view
Slew three opposers: Tarquin's self he met,
And struck him on his knee; in that day's feats,

When he might act the woman in the scene,
He prov'd best man i' the field, and for his meed

Was brow-bound with the oak. His pupil-age
Man-entered thus, he waxed like a sea;
And in the brunt of seventeen battles since,
He lurch'd all swords o' the garland. For this Before, and in Corioli, let me say, [last,
I cannot speak him home: he stopp'd the flyers;
And, by his rare example, made the coward
Turn terror into sport: As waves before
A vessel under sail, so men obey'd, [stamp)
And fell below his stem: his sword (death's
Where it did mark, it took; from face to foot
He was a thing of blood, whose every motion
Was tim'd with dying cries; alone he enter'd
The mortal gate o' the city, which he painted
With shunless destiny; aidless came off,
And with a sudden reinforcement struck
Corioli, like a planet. Now all's his:
When by and by the din of war 'gan pierce
His ready sense, then straight his doubled spirit
Requicken'd what in flesh was fatigate,
And to the battle came he; where he did Run reeking o'er the lives of men, as if
'Twere a perpetual spoil: and till we call'd
Both field and city ours, he never stood
To ease his breast with panting.

The Mischief of Anarchy.

My soul aches,

To know, when two authorities are up,
Neither supreme, how soon confusion
May enter 'twixt the gap of both, and take
The one by the other.

Character of Coriolanus.

His nature is too noble for the world:
He would not flatter Neptune for his trident,
Or Jove for his power to thunder. His heart's his mouth; [vent;
What his breast forges, that his tongue must
And, being angry, does forget that ever
He heard the name of death.

Honor and Policy.

I've heard you say,

Honor and policy, like unsever'd friends,
I' the war do grow together: grant that, and tell me,

In peace, what each of them by th' other loss,
That they combine not there!

The Method to gain popular Favor.

Go to them, with this bonnet in thy hand;
And thus far having stretch'd it (here be with them), [siness,
Thy knee bussing the stones (for in such bu-

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of the ignorant
More learned than the ears), waving thy head,
Which often, thus, correcting thy stout heart,
Now humble, as the ripest mulberry, [them,
That will not hold the handling; or, say to Thou art their soldier, and, being bred in broils,
Hast not the soft way, which, thou dost confess,
Were fit for thee to use, as they to claim,
In asking their good loves; but thou wilt frame
Thyself, forsooth, hereafter theirs, so far
As thou hast power and person.

Coriolanus: his Abhorrence of Flattery.

Well, I must do't:

Away, my disposition, and possess me
Some harlot's spirit! my throat of war be turn'd,
Which quird with my drum, into a pipe,
Small as an eunuch, or the virgin voice
That babies lulls asleep! the smiles of knaves
Tent in my cheeks; and school-boy's tears take up
The glasses of my sight! a beggar's tongue
Make motion through my lips; and my arm'd
knees,
Who bow'd but in my stirrup, bend like his
That hath receiv'd an alms!—I will not do't—
Lest I surcease to honor mine own truth,
And, by my body's action, teach my mind
A most inherent baseness.

At thy choice, then:

To beg of thee, it is my more dishonor
Than thou of them. Come all to ruin: let Thy mother rather feel thy pride, than fear
Thy dang'rous stoutness: for I mock at death
With as big heart as thou. Do as thou list.
Thy valiantness was mine, thou suck'dst it
But own thy pride thyself. [from me:

His Detestation of the Vulgar.

You common cry of curs! whose breath I hate,

As reek o' the rotten fens; whose loves I prize
As the dead-carcases of unburied men,
That do corrupt my air: I banish you;
And here remain with your uncertainty!
Let every feeble rumor shake your hearts!
Your enemies with nodding of their plumes
Fan you into despair! have the power still
To banish your defenders: till at length
Your ignorance (which finds not, till it feels,
Making not reservation of yourselves,
Still your own foes), deliver you, as most Abated captives, to some nation
That won you without blows.

Precepts against Ill-fortune.

—You were us'd

To say, extremities were the triers of spirits;
That common chances common men could
bear;
That, when the sea was calm, all boats alike
Show'd mastership in floating. Fortune's blows, [ed, crave
When most struck home, being gentle wound-
A noble cunning. You were used to load me
With precepts that would make invincible
The heart that conn'd them.

On Common Friendships.

Oh, world, thy slippery turns! Friends now fast sworn,
Whose double bosoms seem to wear one heart,
Whose hours, whose bed, whose meal, and exercise,
Are still together, who twin, 'twere, in love,
Unseparable, shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
To bitterest enmity. So fellest foes,
Whose passions and whose plots have broke their sleep
To take the one the other, by some chance,
Some trick not worth an egg, shall grow dear
friends,
And interjoin their issues.

Martial Friendship.

——— Let me twine
Mine arms about that body, where against
My grained ash an hundred times hath broke,
And scarr'd the moon with splinters! here I
The anvil of my sword; and do contest [clip
As hotly and as nobly with thy love,
As ever in ambitious strength I did
Contend against thy valor. Know thou first,
I lov'd the maid I married, never man
Sigh'd truer breath; but that I see thee here,
Thou noble thing! more dances my rapt heart,
Than when I first my wedded mistress saw Bestride my threshold. Why, thou Mars! I tell thee
We have a power on foot; and I had purpose
Once more to hew thy target from thy brawn,
Or lose my arm for't: thou hast beat me out
Twelve several times; and I have nightly since Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me;
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half-dead with nothing.

The Season of Solicitation.

He was not taken well; he had not din'd:
The veins unfill'd, our blood is cold, and then
We pout upon the morning, are unapt
To give or to forgive; but when we have stuff'd
These pipes and these conveyances of our blood,
With wine and feeding, we have suppler souls
Than in our priest-like fasts: therefore I'll Till he be dieted to my request. [watch him

Obstinate Resolution.

My wife comes foremost; then the honor'd mould
Wherein this trunk was fram'd, and in her hand [fection!
The grand-child to her blood—But, out, af-
All bond and privilege of nature, break!
Let it be virtuous to be obstinate:— [eyes,
What is that cur'sy worth? or those dove's
Which can make gods forsworn! I melt, and am not [bows,
Of stronger earth than others!—my mother
As if Olympus to a mole-hill should
In supplication nod; and my young boy
Hath an aspect of intercession, which
Great nature cries, deny not.—Let the Volsees
Plough Rome, and harrow Italy; I'll never

Be such a gosling to obey instinct; but stand,
As if a man were author of himself,
And knew no other kin.

Relenting Tenderness.

——— Like a dull actor now,
I have forgot my part, and I am out,
Even to a full disgrace. Best of my flesh,
Forgive my tyranny; but do not say,
For that, forgive our Romans.—O, a kiss,
Long as my exile, sweet as my revenge!
Now, by the jealous queen of heaven, that kiss
I carried from thee, dear; and my true lip
Hath virgin'd it e'er since. You gods! I prate,
And the most noble mother of the world
Leave unsaluted: sink, my knee, i' th' earth;
Of thy deep duty more impression show
Than that of common sons.

Chastity.

The noble sister of Publicola,
The moon of Rome; chaste as the icicle,
That's curd'd by the frost from purest snow,
And hangs on Dian's temple.

Coriolanus's Prayer for his Son.

———The god of soldiers,
With the consent of supreme Jove, inform Thy thoughts with nobleness, that thou mayst
prove
To shame invulnerable, and stick i' the wars
Like a great sea-mark, standing every flaw,
And saving those that eye thee!

Coriolanus's Mother's pathetic Speech to him.

———Think with thyself,
How more unfortunate than all living women
Are we come hither: since that thy sight, which should
Make our eyes flow with joy, hearts dance
with comforts, [sorrow:
Constrains them weep, and shake with fear and Making the mother, wife, and child, to see
The son, the husband, and the father, tearing
His country's bowels out. And to poor we Thine enmity's most capital: thou barr'st us
Our prayers to the gods, which is a comfort
That all but we enjoy.

———We must find
An evident calamity, though we had [thou
Our wish, which side should win: for either
Must, as a foreign recreant, be led
With manacles along our streets; or else
Triumphantly tread on thy country's ruin;
And bear the palm, for having bravely shed
Thy wife and children's blood. For myself, son,
I purpose not to wait on fortune, till [thee,
These wars determine: if I cannot persuade
Rather to show a noble grace to both parts,
Than seek the end of one, thou shalt no sooner
March to assault thy country, than to tread (Trust to't thou shalt not) on thy mother's
That brought thee to this world. [womb,

Peace after a Siege.

Ne'er through an arch so hurried the blown tide, [hark you;
As the recomfited through the gates. Why
The trumpets, sackbuts, psalteries, and fifes,
Tabors, and cymbals, and the shouting Romans,
Make the sun dance.

§ 17. CYMBELINE. SHAKESPEARE.

Parting Lovers.

Imo. THOU shouldst have made him
As little as a crow, or less, ere left
To after-eye him.

Pis. Madam, so I did.

Imo. I would have broke my eye-strings;
crack'd 'em, but
To look upon him: till the diminution
Of space had pointed him as sharp as my needle:
Nay, follow'd him, till he had melted from
The smallness of a gnat to air: and then
Have turn'd mine eye and wept. But, good
When shall we hear from him? [Pisanio,

Pis. Be assur'd, madam,
With his next vantage.

Imo. I did not take my leave of him, but had
Most pretty things to say: ere I could tell him,
How I would think of him, at certain hours,
Such thoughts, and such; or I would make him swear,

The shes of Italy should not betray Mine interest, and his honor; or have charg'd him, [night,

At the sixth hour of morn, at noon, at mid-
To encounter me with orisons, for then
I am in heaven for him; or ere I could Give him that parting kiss, which I had set Betwixt two charming words, comes in my father,

And, like the tyrannous breathing of the north,
Shakes all our buds from growing.

The Baseness of Falsehood to a Wife.

Since doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Than to be sure they do: for certainties
Either are past remedies; or, timely knowing,
The remedy then born, discover to me
What both you spur and stop.

Iach. Had I this cheek [touch,
To bathe my lips upon: this hand, whose Whose every touch would force the feeler's
soul

To the oath of loyalty; this object, which Takes prisoner the wild motion of mine eye,
Fixing it only here: should I (damn'd then)
Slaver with lips as common as the stairs
That mount the capitol, join gripes with hands
Made hard with hourly falshood (as
With labor), then lie peeping in an eye,
Base and unlustrous as the smoky light
That's fed with stinking tallow: it were fit,
That all the plagues of hell should at one time
Encounter such revolt.

Imogen's Bed-chamber; in one part of it a large Trunk.

Imogen is discovered reading.

Imo. ——— Mine eyes are weak:
Fold down the leaf where I have left: To bed:
Take not away the taper, leave it burning;
And if thou canst awake by four o' th' clock,
I pr'ythee call me—Sleep hath seiz'd me wholly.
To your prot [Exit Lady.

ection I commend me, gods!

From fairies, and the tempters of the night,
Guard me, beseech ye! [Sleeps.

Iachimo rises from the Trunk.

Iach. The crickets sing, and man's o'er-labor'd sense

Repairs itself by rest: our Tarquin thus
Did softly press the rushes, ere he waken'd
The chastity he wounded.—Cytherea,
How bravely thou becom'st thy bed! fresh lily!
And whiter than the sheets! That I might touch!

But kiss; one kiss!—Rubies unparagon'd
How dearly they do't!—'Tis her breathing that Perfumes the chamber thus; the flame o' the taper

Bows towards her; and would under-peep her
To see th' inclosed lights, now canopied [lids
Under these windows: white and azure, lac'd
With blue of heaven's own tinct—but my design?

To note the chamber:—I will write all down:—
Such, and such, pictures; there the window:
such

Th' adornment of her bed;—the arras, figures,
Why, such, and such:—and the contents o'
the story,

Ah, but some natural notes about her body,
Above ten thousand meaner moveables,
Would testify t' enrich mine inventory:
O sleep, thou ape of death, lie dull upon her!
And be her sense but as a monument,
Thus in a chapel lying! Come off, come off;
[Taking off her bracelet.

As slippery, as the Gordian knot was hard!
'Tis mine: and this will witness outwardly,
As strongly as the conscience does within,
To the madding of her lord. On her left breast
A mole cinque spotted, like the crimson drops
I' bottom of a cowslip: Here's a voucher,
Stronger than ever law could make: this secret
Will force him think I have pick'd the lock and ta'en [what end?

The treasure of her honor. No more.—To
Why should I write this down, that's rivetted, Screw'd to my memory? She had been reading late

The tale of Tereus; here the leaf's turn'd down,
Where Philomel gave up;—I have enough:
To the trunk again, and shut the spring of it.
Swift, swift, you dragons of the night! that dawning

May bear the raven's eye: I lodge in fear;
Though this a heavenly angel, hell is here.

[He goes into the Trunk; the Scene closes.
Gold.

'Tis gold [makes
Which buys admittance: oft it doth: yea, and Diana's rangers false themselves, yield up
Their deer to the stand o' the stealer: and 'tis gold

Which makes the true man kill'd, and saves
the thief:

Nay sometime hangs both thief and true man:
What can it not do, and undo?

A Satire on Women.

Is there no way for men to be, but women
Must be half-workers? We are all bastards;

And that most venerable man, which I Did call my father, was I know not where When I was stamp'd; some coiner with his tools

Made me a counterfeit: yet my mother seem'd
The Dian o' that time; so doth my wife
The nonpareil of this.—O, vengeance! vengeance!

Me of my lawful pleasure she restrain'd,
And pray'd me, oft, forbearance; did it with
A pudency so rosy, the sweet view on 't
Might well have warm'd old Saturn;—that I thought her

As chaste as unsunn'd snow.

- - - - Could I find out [tion
The woman's part in me!—for there's no mo-
That tends to vice in man, but I affirm
It is the woman's part: be it lying, note it,
The woman's; flattering, hers; deceiving, hers;
Lust, and rank thoughts, hers, hers; revenges,
hers; [dain,
Ambitions, covetings, change of prides, dis-
Nice-longings, slanders, mutability:
All faults that name, nay, that hell knows,
why, hers;

In part, or all; but, rather, all: for even to vice
They are not constant, but are changing still,
One vice, but of a minute old, for one
Not half so old as that. I'll write against them,
Detest them, curse them:—yet 'tis greater skill
In a true hate, to pray they have their will:
The very devils cannot plague them better.

A Wife's Impatience to meet her Husband.

O, for a horse with wings!—Hear'st thou, Pisanio?

He is at Milford-Haven: read, and tell me
How far 'tis thither. If one of mean affairs
May plod it in a week, why may not I
Glide thither in a day? Then, true Pisanio, (Who long'st, like me, to see thy lord, who long'st—

O, let me 'bate—but not like me:—yet long'st,
But in a fainter kind:—O, not like me;
For mine's beyond beyond)—say, and speak
thick,

(Love's counsellor should fill the bores of hearing

To the smothering of the sense)—how far it is
To this same blessed Milford: And, by th' way
Tell me how Wales was made so happy, as
T' inherit such a haven: But first of all,
How may we steal from hence; and for the gap
That we shall make in time, from our hence-going, [hence?

And our return, t' excuse: but first, how get
Why should excuse be born, or e'er begot?
We'll talk of that hereafter: Pr'ythee, speak,
How many score of miles may we well ride
'Twixt hour and hour?

Pis. One score, 'twixt sun and sun,
Madam, 's enough for you; and too much too.

Imo. Why, one that rode to his execution,
man,
Could never go so slow: I have heard of riding
wagers,
Where horses have been nimbler than the sand

That run i' the clock's behalf. But this is foolery.

Go bid my woman feign a sickness; say, [sently
She'll home t' her father: and provide me pre-
A riding suit; no costlier than would fit
A franklin's housewife.

Pis. Madam, you're best consider.

Imo. I see before me, man, nor here, nor here,
Nor what ensues; but have a fog in them,
That I cannot look through. Away I pr'ythee,
Do as I bid thee: there's no more to say;
Accessible is none but Milford way.

A Forest, with a Cave, in Wales.

Enter Belarius, Guiderius, and Arviragus.

Bel. A goodly day not to keep house, with such [gate
Whose roof's as low as ours. Stoop, boys; this Instructs you how t' adore the heavens! and bows you [narchs
To morning's holy office. The gates of mo-
Are arch'd so high that giants may jet through
And keep their impious turbans on, without Good-morrow to the sun—Hail thou fair
heaven!

We house i' the rock, yet use thee not so hardly
As prouder livers do.

Guid. Hail, heaven!

Arv. Hail, heaven! [yon hill:

Bel. Now for our mountain sport: up to
Your legs are young! I'll tread these flats.

Consider,

When you above perceive me like a crow,
'That it is place which lessens, and sets off.
And you may then revolve what tales I've told
you,

Of courts, of princes, of the tricks in war:
This service is not service, so being done,
But being so allow'd: To apprehend thus,
Draws us a profit {from all things we see;
And often, to our comfort, shall we find
The sharded beetle in a safer hold
Than is the full-wing'd eagle. O, this life
Is nobler, than attending for a check;
Richer, than doing nothing for a bauble!
Prouder, than rustling in unpaid-for silk:
Such gain the cap of him that makes them fine,
Yet keeps his book uncross'd; no life to ours.

Guid. Out of your proof you speak; we, poor
unfledg'd,
Have never wing'd from view o' the nest; nor know not

What air's from home. Haply, this life is best
If quiet life be best; sweeter to you,
That have a sharper known; well correspond-
With your stiff age; but, unto us, it is [ing
A cell of ignorance; travelling a-bed;
A prison for a debtor that not dares
To stride a limit.

Arv. What should we speak of
When we are as old as you? when we shall hear
The rain and wind beat dark December, how,
In this our pinching cave, shall we discourse
The freezing hours away? We have seen nothing:

We are beastly; subtle as the fox, for prey:
Like warlike as the wolf, for what we eat:
Our valor is, to chase what flies; our cage

We make a quire, as doth the prison'd bird,
And sing our bondage freely.

Bel. How you speak!
Did you but know the city's usuries, [court,
And felt them knowingly: the heart o' the
As hard to leave, as keep; whose top to climb
Is certain falling, or so slipp'ry, that
The fear's as bad as falling; the toil of the war,
A pain that only seems to seek out danger
I' the name of fame, and honor: which dies
i' the search;

And hath as oft a sland'rous epitaph,
As record of fair act; nay, many times
Doth ill deserve, by doing well; what's worse,
Must cur'sy at the censure: O, boys, this story
The world may read in me: my body's mark'd
With Roman swords; and my report was once
First with the best of note: Cymbeline lov'd me,
And when a soldier was the theme, my name
Was not far off: then was I as a tree Whose boughs did bend with fruit: but, in one night,

A storm, or robbery, call it what you will,
Shook down my mellow hangings, nay, my
And left me bare to weather. [leaves,

Guid. Uncertain favor! [you oft) Bel. My fault being nothing, (as I have told
But that two villains, whose false oaths prevail'd

Before my perfect honor, swore to Cymbeline,
I was confederate with the Romans: so Follow'd my banishment; and, this twenty years, [world:
'This rock, and these demesnes, have been my
Where I have liv'd at honest freedom; paid
More pious debts to heaven, than in all [tains;
The fore-end of my time.—But up to the moun-
This is not hunter's language: he that strikes
The venison first, shall be the lord o' th' feast;
To him the other two shall minister;
And we will fear no poison, which attends
In place of greater state.

The Force of Nature.

How hard it is, to hide the sparks of nature!
These boys know little, they are sons to th' king;
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive.
They think they're mine: and though train'd up thus meanly

I' the cave, wherein they bow, their thoughts
do hit

The roofs of palaces; and nature prompts them,
In simple and low things, to prince it, much
Beyond the trick of others. 'This Polydore,
The heir of Cymbeline and Britain, whom
The king his father call'd Guiderius, Jove!
When on my three-foot stool I sit, and tell
The warlike feats I've done, his spirits fly out
Into my story: say—thus mine enemy fell;
And thus I set my foot on his neck;—even then
The princely blood flows in his cheek, he sweats, [posture

Strains his young nerves, and puts himself in
That acts my words. The younger brother, Cadwal,

(Once, Arviragus) in as like a figure [more Strikes life into my speech, and shows much
His own conceiving.

Slander.

—No, 'tis slander,

Whose edge is sharper than the sword: whose tongue, [breath
Out-venoms all the worms of Nile: whose
Rides on the posting winds, and doth belie
All corners of the world: Kings, queens, and states,
Maids, matrons, nay, the secrets of the grave,
This viperous slander enters.

A Wife's Innocency.

False to his bed! What is it to be false?
To lie in watch there, and to think on him?
To weep 'twixt clock and clock?—If sleep
charge nature,
To break it with a fearful dream of him,
And cry myself awake? That's false to's bed?

Woman in Man's Dress.

You must forget to be a woman; change
Command into obedience; fear and niceness
(The handmaids of all women, or more truly Woman its pretty self), to a waggish courage,
Ready in gibes, quick-answer'd, saucy and
As quarrellous as the weazel: nay, you must Forget that rarest treasure of your cheek,
Exposing it (but O, the harder heart!
Alack, no remedy!) to the greedy touch
Of common kissing Titan; and forget
Your laborsome and dainty trims, wherein
You made great Juno angry.

The Forest and Cave.

Enter Imogen in Boy's Clothes.

Imo. I see, a man's life is a tedious one:
I've tir'd myself; and for two nights together
Have made the ground my bed. I should be sick,
But that my resolution helps me.—Milford,
When from the mountain-top Pisanio show'd
thee,

Thou wast within a ken. O, Jove! I think,
Foundations fly the wretched: such, I mean,
Where they should be reliev'd. Two beggars told me,

I could not miss my way: will poor folks lie
That have afflictions on them; knowing 'tis
A punishment, or trial? Yes: no wonder,
When rich ones scarce tell true. To lapse in fulness

Is sorer than to lie for need; and falsehood
Is worse in kings than beggars.—My dear lord!
Thou art one o' the false ones: now I think on
thee,

My hunger's gone; but even before I was,
At point to sink for food.—But what is this?

[Seeing the Cave.

Here is a path to it:—'tis some savage hold;
I were best not call; I dare not call: yet famine,
Ere clean it o'erthrow nature, makes it valiant.
Plenty and peace breed cowards: hardness ever
Of hardness is mother.

Labour.

—Weariness

Can snore upon the flint, when resty sloth
Finds the down pillow hard.

Harmless Innocence.

Imo. Good masters, harm me not:
Before I entered here, I call'd; and thought

To have begg'd, or bought, what I have took :
     good troth,
 I have stolen nought ; nor would not, though
     I had found [meat :
 Gold strew'd o' th' floor. Here's money for my
 I would have left it on the board, so soon
 As I had made my meal ; and parted
 With prayers for the provider.

Guid. Money, youth ?

Arv. All gold and silver rather turn to dirt !
 As 'tis no better reckon'd, but of those
 Who worship dirty gods.

Braggart.

To whom ? to thee ? What art thou ? Have An arm as big as thine ? a heart as big ?
 Thy words, I grant, are bigger ; for I wear not
 My dagger in my mouth.

Fool-hardiness.

———Being scarce made up,
 I mean, to man, he had not apprehension
 Of roaring terrors ; for defect of judgment
 Is oft the cure of fear.

Inborn Royalty.

O, thou goddess,
 Thou divine nature, how thyself thou blazon'st
 In these two princely boys ! They are as gentle
 As zephyrs, blowing below the violet,
 Not wagging his sweet head ; and yet as rough
 Their royal blood enchain'd, as the rud'st wind,
 That by the top doth take the mountain pine,
 And make him stoop to the vale. 'Tis wonderful
 That an invisible instinct should frame them
 To royalty unlearn'd ; honor untaught ;
 Civility not seen from other ; valor,
 That wildly grows in them, but yields a crop,
 As if it had been sow'd !

Enter Arviragus, with Imogen as dead, bearing her in his Arms.

Bel. Look, here he comes,
 And brings the dire occasion in his arms,
 Of what we blame him for !

Arv. The bird is dead
 That we have made so much on. I had rather Have skip'd from sixteen years of age to sixty,
 To have turn'd my leaping time into a crutch,
 Than have seen this.

Guid. O, sweetest, fairest lily !
 My brother wears thee not the one half so well,
 As when thou grew'st thyself.

Bel. O, melancholy !
 Who ever yet could sound thy bottom ? find
 The ooze, to show what coast thy sluggish crave
 Might eas'liest harbor in ? Thou blessed thing !
 Jove knows what man thou might'st have made ; but I,

Thou diedst, a most rare boy, of melancholy !
 How found you him ?

Arv. Stark, as you see ;
 Thus smiling, as some fly had tickled slumber,
 Not as death's dart, being laugh'd at : his right
 Reposing on a cushion. [cheek

Guid. Where ?

Arv. O' the floor : [put His arms thus leagued : I thought he slept ; and My clouted brogues from off my feet, whose Answer'd my steps too loud. [rudeness

Guid. Why, he but sleeps :

If he be gone, he'll make his grave a bed ;
 With female fairies will his tomb be haunted,
 And worms will not come to thee.

Arv. With fairest flowers,
 While summer lasts, and I live here, Fidele,
 I'll sweeten thy sad grave : thou shalt not lack
 The flow'r that's like thy face, pale primrose ;
     nor

The azur'd hare-bell, like thy veins ; no, nor
 The leaf of eglantine, whom not to slander,
 Out-sweeten'd not thy breath ; the ruddock
     would

With charitable bill (O bill sore shaming
 Those rich-left heirs, that let their fathers lie
 Without a monument !) bring thee all this ;
 Yea, and furr'd moss besides, when flow'rs are
 To winter-ground thy corse—— [none,

Bel. Great griefs, I see, med'cine the less :
     for Cloten

Is quite forgot. He was a queen's son, boys ;
 And, though he came our enemy, remember
 He was paid for that : though mean and mighty rotting

Together have one dust ; yet reverence
 (That angel of the world) doth make distinction Of place 'tween high and low. Our foe was princely ;

And though you took his life, as being our foe,
 Yet bury him as a prince.

Guid. Pray you fetch him hither.
 Thersites' body is as good as Ajax,
 When neither are alive.

Funereal Dirge.

Guid. Fear no more the heat o' the sun,
 Nor the furious winter's rages ;
 Thou thy worldly task hast done,
 Home art gone, and ta'en thy wages :
 Golden lads and girls all must,
 As chimney-sweepers, come to dust.

Arv. Fear no more the frown o' the great,
 Thou art past the tyrant's stroke ;
 Care no more to clothe and eat ;
 To thee the reed is as the oak :
 The sceptre, learning, physic, must
 All follow this, and come to dust.

Guid. Fear no more the lightning flash,

Arv. Nor the all-dreaded thunder-stone ;

Guid. Fear not slander, censure rash ;

Arv. Thou hast finish'd joy and moan.

Imogen awaking.

Yes, Sir, to Milford-Haven ; which is the way ?——

I thank you—by yond' bush ? pray how far thither ?

'Ods pitikins !—can it be six miles yet ?

I have gone all night—'faith, I'll lie down and
     sleep.

But soft ! no bedfellow :—O gods and goddesses !
     [Seeing the body.

These flow'rs are like the pleasures of the world ;
 This bloody man, the care on't. I hope I dream ;
 For, so, I thought I was a cave-keeper,
 And cook to honest creatures : but 'tis not so :
 'Twas but a bolt of nothing, shot at nothing,

Which the brain makes of fumes: our very eyes [Good faith,
 Are sometimes like our judgements, blind.
 I tremble still with fear: but if there be
 Yet left in heaven as small a drop of pity
 As a wren's eye, fear'd gods, a part of it!
 The dream's here still: even when I awake, it is Without me, as within me; not imagin'd, felt.

Routed Army.

No blame be to you, sir: for all was lost,
 But that the heavens fought: the king himself
 Of his wings destitute, the army broken,
 And but the backs of Britons seen, all flying,
 Through a strait lane; the enemy full-hearted Lolling the tongue with slaught'ring, having work

More plentiful than tools to do't, struck down
 Some mortally, some slightly touch'd, some falling

Merely through fear; that the strait pass was damm'd [living

With dead men, hurt behind, and cowards
 To die with lengthen'd shame.

Death.

I, in mine own woe charm'd, [groan;
 Could not find Death, where I did hear him
 Nor feel him, where he struck: being an ugly monster, [beds,

'Tis strange, he hides him in fresh cups, soft Sweet words; or hath more ministers than we,
 That draw his knives i' the war.

§ 18. HAMLET. SHAKSPEARE.

Prodigies.

IN the most high and palmy state of Rome,
 A little ere the mightiest Julius fell, [dead
 The graves stood tenantless, and the sheeted
 Did squeak and gibber in the Roman streets;
 Stars shone with trains of fire, dews of blood
 fell;

Disasters veil'd the sun; and the moist star,
 Upon whose influence Neptune's empire stands,
 Was sick almost to doomsday with eclipse.

Ghosts vanish at the Crowing of the Cock: and the Reverence paid to Christmas-time.

Ber. It was about to speak, when the cock crew.

Hor. And then it started like a guilty thing,
 Upon a fearful summons. I have heard,
 The cock, that is the trumpet of the morn,
 Doth with his lofty and shrill-sounding throat
 Awake the god of day; and, at his warning,
 Whether in sea or fire, in earth or air,
 Th' extravagant and erring spirit hies
 To his confine: and of the truth herein,
 This present object made probation.

Mar. It faded on the crowing of the cock.
 Some say, that ever 'gainst that season comes,
 Wherein our Saviour's birth is celebrated,
 This bird of dawning singeth all night long:
 And then, they say, no spirit dares stir abroad,
 The nights are wholesome; then no planets strike,

No fairy takes, nor witch hath pow'r to charm,
 So hallow'd and so gracious is the time.

Morning.

But, look, the morn, in russet mantle clad,
 Walks o'er the dew of yon high eastern hill.

Real Grief.

Seems, madam! nay, it is: I know not seems.
 'Tis not alone my inky cloak, good mother,
 Nor customary suits of solemn black,
 Nor windy suspiration of forc'd breath,
 No nor the fruitful river in the eye,
 Nor the dejected 'haviour of the visage,
 Together with all forms, modes, shows of grief,
 That can denote me truly: these, indeed, seem,
 For they are actions that a man might play:
 But I have that within, which passeth show;
 These, but the trapping and the suits of woe.

Immoderate Grief discommended.

'Tis sweet and commendable in your nature,
 Hamlet,

To give these mourning duties to your father:
 But, you must know, your father lost a father;
 That father lost, lost his; and the survivor
 In filial obligation, for some term [bound,
 To do obsequious sorrow. But to persevere
 In obstinate condolment, is a course
 Of impious stubbornness; 'tis unmanly grief:
 It shows a will most incorrect to Heaven;
 A heart unfortified, or mind impatient;
 An understanding simple and unschool'd:
 For what we know, must be, and is as common
 As any the most vulgar thing to sense,
 Why should we, in our peevish opposition,
 Take it to heart? Fie! 'tis a fault to Heaven,
 A fault against the dead, a fault to nature,
 To reason most absurd; whose common theme
 Is death of fathers, and who still hath cried
 From the first corse till he that died to-day,
 This must be so.

Hamlet's Soliloquy on his Mother's Marriage.

O, that this too, too solid flesh would melt,
 Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew!
 Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd [God!
 His canon 'gainst self-slaughter! O God! O
 How weary, stale, flat, and unprofitable
 Seem to me all the uses of this world!
 Fie on't! O fie! 'tis an unweeded garden,
 That grows to seed; things rank and gross in nature

Possess it merely. That it should come to this!
 But two months dead! nay, not so much, not two.

So excellent a king; that was, to this,
 Hyperion to a satyr: so loving to my mother,
 That he might not let e'en the winds of heaven
 Visit her face too roughly. Heaven and earth!
 Must I remember?—why, she would hang on
 As if increase of appetite had grown [him,
 By what it fed on: and yet within a month—
 Let me not think on't—frailty, thy name is woman!

A little month;—or ere those shoes were old,
 With which she follow'd my poor father's body,
 Like Niobe, all tears;—why she, even she—O Heaven! a beast that wants discourse of reason,

Would have mourn'd longer—married with mine uncle,
 My father's brother; but no more like my father,

Than I to Hercules: within a month,
Ere yet the salt of most unrighteous tears
Had left the flushing in her galled eyes,
She married: O most wicked speed, to post
With such dexterity to incestuous sheets!
It is not, nor it cannot come to good.

A complete Man.

He was a man, take him for all in all,
I shall not look upon his like again.

Cautions to young Ladies.

For Hamlet, and the trifling of his favor,
Hold it a fashion, and a toy in blood;
A violet in the youth of primy nature,
Forward, not permanent, sweet, not lasting,
The perfume and suppliance of a minute,
No more.

Then weigh what loss your honor may sustain,
If with too credent ear you list his songs;
Or lose your heart; or your chaste treasure open
To his unmaster'd importunity.
Bear it, Ophelia, fear it, my dear sister;
And keep you in the rear of your affection,
Out of the shot and danger of desire.
The chariest maid is prodigal enough,
If she unmask her beauty to the moon:
Virtue herself 'scapes not calumnious strokes:
The canker galls the infants of the spring
Too oft before their buttons be disclos'd:
And in the morn and liquid dew of youth
Contagious blastments are most imminent.

A Satire on ungracious Pastors.

I shall th' effects of this good lesson keep
As watchmen to my heart: but, good my bro-
Do not, as some ungracious pastors do, [ther,
Show me the steep and thorny way to heaven;
Whilst, like a puffed and reckless libertine,
Himself the primrose path of dalliance treads,
And recks not his own read.

A Father's Advice to his Son going to travel.

Give thy thoughts no tongue,
Nor any unproportion'd thought his act.
Be thou familiar, but by no means vulgar.
The friends thou hast, and their adoption tried,
Grapple them to thy soul with hooks of steel;
But do not dull thy palm with entertainment
Of each new-hatch'd, unfledg'd comrade. Be-
Of entrance to a quarrel; but, being in, [ware
Bear it that the opposer may beware of thee.
Give ev'ry man thine ear, but few thy voice:
Take each man's censure, but reserve thy judg-
Costly thy habit as thy purse can buy, [ment.
But not express'd in fancy; rich, not gaudy;
For the apparel oft proclaims the man.
Neither a borrower, nor a lender be:
For loan oft loses both itself and friend;
And borrowing dulls the edge of husbandry.
This above all, to thine own self be true;
And it must follow, as the night the day,
Thou canst not then be false to any man.

Hamlet on the Appearance of his Father's Ghost.

Angels and ministers of grace defend us!
Be thou a spirit of health, or goblin damn'd,
Bring with thee airs from heaven, or blasts
from hell,

Be thy intents wicked, or charitable,
Thou com'st in such a questionable shape,
That I will speak to thee; I'll call thee Hamlet,
King, father, royal Dane: O, answer me:
Let me not burst in ignorance! but tell,
Why thy canoniz'd bones, hearsed in death,
Have burst their cerements? why the sepulchre
Wherein we saw thee quietly inurn'd,
Hath op'd his ponderous and marble jaws,
To cast thee up again? What may this mean,
That thou, dead corse, again, in complete steel,
Revisit'st thus the glimpses of the moon,
Making night hideous; and we fools of nature,
So horribly to shake our disposition
With thoughts beyond the reaches of our souls?

The Mischief it might tempt him to.

What if it tempt you towards the flood, my
Or to the dreadful summit of the cliff, [lord,
That beetles o'er his base into the sea;
And there assume some other horrible form,
Which might deprive your sovereignty of reason,
And draw you into madness? Think of it:
The very place puts toys of desperation,
Without more motive, into ev'ry brain,
That looks so many fathoms to the sea,
And hears it roar beneath.

Enter Ghost and Hamlet.

Ham. Whither wilt thou lead me? speak,
I'll go no further.

Ghost. Mark me.

Ham. I will.

Ghost. My hour is almost come,
When I to sulphurous and tormenting flames
Must render up myself.

Ham. Alas, poor ghost!

Ghost. Pity me not, but lend thy serious
To what I shall unfold. [hearing

Ham. Speak, I am bound to hear.

Ghost. So art thou to revenge, when thou

Ham. What? [shalt hear.

Ghost. I am thy father's spirit;
Doom'd for a certain term to walk the night,
And, for the day, confin'd to fast in fires,
Till the foul crimes done in my days of nature
Are burnt and purg'd away. But that I am for-
To tell the secrets of my prison-house, [bid
I could a tale unfold, whose lightest word
Would harrow up thy soul; freeze thy young
blood;

Make thy two eyes, like stars, start from their spheres;

Thy knotted and combined locks to part,
And each particular hair to stand on end
Like quills upon the fretful porcupine:
But this eternal blazon must not be
To ears of flesh and blood: list, list, O list!
If thou didst ever thy dear father love—

Ham. O Heaven! [murder.

Ghost. Revenge his foul and most unnatural

Ham. Murder?

Ghost. Murder most foul, as in the best it is;
But this most foul, strange, and unnatural.

Ham. Haste me to know it; that I, with wings as swift

As meditation, or the thoughts of love,
May sweep to my revenge.

Ghost. I find thee apt;
And duller shouldst thou be than the fat weed
That roots itself in ease on Lethæ's wharf, Wouldst thou not stir in this? Now, Hamlet,
hear:

'Tis given out, that, sleeping in my orchard,
A serpent stung me; so the whole ear of Denmark

Is by a forged process of my death
Rankly abus'd; but know, thou noble youth,
The serpent that did sting thy father's life,
Now wears his crown.

Ham. O my prophetic soul! my uncle?

Ghost. Ay, that incestuous, that adulterate beast,

With witchcraft of his wit, with trait'rous gifts,
(O wicked wits and gifts, that have the pow'r
So to seduce!) won to his shameful lust
The will of my most seeming-virtuous queen:
O Hamlet, what a falling off was there!

From me, whose love was of that dignity,
That it went hand in hand even with the vow
I made to her in marriage; and to decline
Upon a wretch, whose natural gifts were poor
To those of mine!

But virtue, as it never will be mov'd,
Though lewdness court it in a shape of heaven:
So lust, though to a radiant angel link'd,
Will sate itself in a celestial bed,
And prey on garbage.

But, soft! methinks, I scent the morning air;—
Brief let me be: Sleeping within mine orchard,

My custom always of the afternoon,
Upon my secure hour thy uncle stole,
With juice of cursed hebenon in a vial,
And in the porches of mine ears did pour
The leperous distilment; whose effect
Holds such an enmity with blood of man,
That, swift as quicksilver, it courses through
The natural gates and alleys of the body;
And, with a sudden vigor, it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood: so did it mine;
And a most instant tetter bark'd about,
Most lazar-like, with vile and loathsome crust,
All my smooth body.

Thus was I, sleeping, by a brother's hand,
Of life, of crown, of queen, at once dispatch'd:
Cut off even in the blossoms of my sin,
Unhousel'd, disappointed; unanel'd;
No reckoning made, but sent to my account
With all my imperfections on my head:
O horrible! O horrible! most horrible!

If thou hast nature in thee, bear it not;
Let not the royal bed of Denmark be
A couch for luxury and damned incest.
But howsoever thou pursuest this act,
Taint not thy mind, nor let thy soul contrive
Against thy mother aught; leave her to Heaven,
And to those thorns that in her bosom lodge,
To prick and sting her. Fare thee well at once!
The glow-worm shows the matin to be near,
And 'gins to pale his ineffectual fire:

Adieu, adieu, adieu! remember me. Exit.

Ham. O, all you host of heaven! O earth!
what else?

And shall I couple hell? O fie! hold, hold,
my heart!

And you, my sinews, grow not instant old,
But bear me stiffly up! Remember thee?
Ay, thou poor ghost, while memory holds a seat

In this distracted globe. Remember thee?

Yea, from the table of my memory
I'll wipe away all trivial fond records,
All saws of books, all forms, all pressures past,
That youth and observation copied there;
And thy commandment all alone shall live
Within the book and volume of my brain,
Unmix'd with baser matter: yes, by Heaven.
O most pernicious woman!

O villain, villain, smiling, damned villain!
My tables,—meet it is I set it down,
That one may smile, and smile, and be a villain;

At least I am sure it may be so in Denmark.

[Writing.

So, uncle, there you are. Now to my word;
It is, "Adieu, adieu! Remember me."

Ophelia's Description of Hamlet's mad Address to her.

My lord, as I was sewing in my closet,
Lord Hamlet, with his doublet all unbrac'd;
No hat upon his head; his stockings foul'd,
Ungarter'd, and down-gyved to his ancle;
Pale as his shirt; his knees knocking each other;
And with a look so piteous in purport,
As if he had been loosed out of hell
To speak of horrors—he comes before me.

Pol. Mad for thy love?

Oph. My lord, I do not know;
But, truly, I do fear it.

Pol. What said he?

Oph. He took me by the wrist, and held me
hard;

Then goes he to the length of all his arm;
And with his other hand thus o'er his brow
He falls to such perusal of my face,
As he would draw it. Long staid he so;—
At last—a little shaking of mine arm,
And thrice his head thus waving up and down,
He rais'd a sigh so piteous and profound,
As it did seem to shatter all his bulk,
And end his being. That done, he let me go;
And, with his head over his shoulder turn'd,
He seem'd to find his way without his eyes;
For out of doors he went without their helps,
And, to the last, bended their light on me.

Old Age.

Beshrew my jealousy!

It seems, it is as proper to our age
To cast beyond ourselves in our opinions,
As it is common for the younger sort
To lack discretion.

Happiness consists in Opinion.

Why, then, 'tis none to you;
For there is nothing either good or bad,
But thinking makes it so:
To me it is a prison.

Hamlet's Reflections on the Player and himself.

O what a rogue and peasant slave am I!
Is it not monstrous, that this player here,

But in a fiction, in a dream of passion,
 Could force his soul so to his own conceit,
 That, from her working, all his visage wann'd?
 Tears in his eyes, distraction in 's aspect,
 A broken voice, and his whole function suiting
 With forms to his conceit; and all for nothing!
 For Hecuba!

What's Hecuba to him, or he to Hecuba,
 That he should weep for her? what would he do,
 Had he the motive and the cue for passion
 That I have? he would drown the stage with
 tears,

And cleave the gen'ral ear with horrid speech;
 Make mad the guilty and appal the free,
 Confound the ignorant; and amaze, indeed,
 The very faculties of eyes and ears.

Yet I—

A dull and muddy-mettled rascal, speak,
 Like John-a-dreams, unpregnant of my cause,
 And can say nothing; no, not for a king,
 Upon whose property and most dear life
 A damn'd defeat was made. Am I a coward?
 Who calls me villain? breaks my pate across?
 Plucks off my beard, and blows it in my face?
 Tweaks me by the nose, gives me the lie i' the throat,

As deep as to the lungs? Who does me this?
 Ha! why, I should take it:—for it cannot be
 But I am pigeon-liver'd, and lack gall
 To make oppression bitter; or, ere this,
 I should have fatted all the region kites
 With this slave's offal: bloody, bawdy villain!
 Remorseless, treacherous, lecherous, kindless villain!

Why, what an ass am I! This is most brave;
 That I, the son of a dear father murder'd,
 Prompted to my revenge by heaven and hell,
 Must, like a whore, unpack my heart with
 words,

And fall a cursing like a very drab,
 A scullion!

Fie upon 't! foh! About, my brains! Humph!
 I have heard,

That guilty creatures, sitting at a play,
 Have by the very cunning of the scene
 Been struck so to the soul, that presently
 They have proclaim'd their malefactions:
 For murder, though it have no tongue, will speak
 With most miraculous organ. I'll have these players

Play something like the murder of my father,
 Before mine uncle: I'll observe his looks;
 I'll tent him to the quick; if he do blench,
 I know my course. The spirit, that I have seen,
 May be a devil: and the devil hath pow'r
 To assume a pleasing shape; yea, and, perhaps,
 Out of my weakness and my melancholy,
 (As he is very potent with such spirits)
 Abuses me to damn me: I'll have grounds
 More relative than this; the play's the thing
 Wherein I'll catch the conscience of the king.

Hypocrisy.

We are to blame in this—

'Tis too much prov'd—that, with devotion's visage

And pious action, we do sugar o'er
 The devil himself.

King. O, 'tis too true! how smart
 A lash that speech does give my conscience!
 The harlot's cheek, beautied with plast'ring art,
 Is not more ugly to the thing that helps it,
 Than is my deed to my most painted word.

Life and Death weighed.

To be, or not to be, that is the question:
 Whether 'tis nobler in the mind, to suffer
 The slings and arrows of outrageous fortune;
 Or to take arms against a sea of troubles,
 And, by opposing, end them: To die—to sleep—
 No more; and by a sleep to say we end
 The heart-ache, and the thousand natural shocks
 That flesh is heir to;—'tis a consummation
 Devoutly to be wish'd. To die;—to sleep;
 To sleep! perchance to dream;—ay, there's the rub;

[come,
 For in that sleep of death what dreams may
 When we have shuffled off this mortal coil,
 Must give us pause:—there's the respect,
 That makes calamity of so long life; [time,
 For who would bear the whips and scorns of Th' oppressor's wrong, the proud man's contumely,

The pangs of despis'd love, the law's delay,
 The insolence of office, and the spurns
 That patient merit of th' unworthy takes,
 When he himself might his quietus make
 With a bare bodkin? Who would fardels bear,
 To grunt and sweat under a weary life;
 But that the dread of something after death—
 The undiscover'd country, from whose bourn
 No traveller returns—puzzles the will,
 And makes us rather bear those ills we have,
 Than fly to others that we know not of?
 Thus conscience does make cowards of us all;
 And thus the native hue of resolution
 Is sicklied o'er with the pale cast of thought;
 And enterprises of great pith and moment,
 With this regard, their currents turn awry,
 And lose the name of action.

Calumny.

Be thou as chaste as ice, as pure as snow,
 Thou shalt not escape calumny.

A noble Mind disordered.

O what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
 The courtier's, soldier's, scholar's eye, tongue,
 sword:

Th' expectancy and rose of the fair state,
 The glass of fashion, and the mould of form,
 Th' observ'd of all observers! quite, quite
 down!

And I, of ladies most deject and wretched,
 That suck'd the honey of his music-vows,
 Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
 Like sweet bells jangled, out of tune and harsh;
 That unmatched form and feature of blown
 youth,
 Blasted with ecstasy.

On Flattery, and an even-minded Man.

Nay, do not think I flatter:

For what advancement may I hope from thee,
 That no revenue hast, but thy good spirits,
 To feed and clothe thee? Why should the poor be flatter'd?

No, let the candied tongue lick absurd pomp;
And crook the pregnant hinges of the knee,
Where thrift may follow fawning. Dost thou hear?

Since my dear soul was mistress of her choice,
And could of men distinguish her election,
She hath seal'd thee for herself: for thou hast been

As one, in suffering all, that suffers nothing;
A man, that fortune's buffets and rewards
Hast ta'en with equal thanks: and blest are those, [mingled,

Whose blood and judgment are so well com-
That they are not a pipe for Fortune's finger
To sound what stop she please: Give me the man
That is not passion's slave, and I will wear him
In my heart's core—ay, in my heart of heart,
As I do thee.

Midnight.

'Tis now the very witching time of night;
When church-yards yawn, and hell itself
breathes out [hot blood,
Contagion to this world: Now could I drink
And do such business as the better day Would quake to look on. Soft; now to my mother.

O heart, lose not thy nature: let not ever
The soul of Nero enter this firm bosom:
Let me be cruel, not unnatural:
I will speak daggers to her, but use none.

The King's despairing Soliloquy, and Hamlet's Reflections on him.

O, my offence is rank, it smells to heav'n;
It hath the primal, eldest curse upon 't,
A brother's murder! Pray can I not,
Though inclination be as sharp as will;
My stronger guilt defeats my strong intent;
And, like a man to double business bound,
I stand in pause where I shall first begin,
And both neglect. What if this cursed hand
Were thicker than itself with brother's blood?
Is there not rain enough in the sweet heavens
To wash it white as snow? Whereto serves
But to confront the visage of offence? [mercy,
And what's in prayer, but this twofold force;
To be forestalled, ere we come to fall,
Or pardon'd, being down? Then I'll look up;
My fault is past. But O, what form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murder!
That cannot be; since I am still possess'd
Of those effects for which I did the murder,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
May one be pardon'd, and retain th' offence?
In the corrupted currents of this world,
Offence's gilded hand may shove by justice:
And oft 'tis seen, the wicked prize itself
Buys out the law: but 'tis not so above:
There is no shuffling, there the action lies
In its true nature; and we ourselves compell'd
Even to the teeth and forehead of our faults
To give in evidence. What then? what rests?
Try what repentance can: what can it not?
Yet what can it, when one cannot repent?
O wretched state! O bosom, black as death!
O limed soul! that, struggling to be free,
Art more engag'd! Help, angels, make assay!

Bow, stubborn knees! and, heart, with strings
of steel,
Be soft as sinews of the new-born babe;
All may be well! [The king kneels.

Enter Hamlet. [ing;

Ham. Now might I do it, pat, now he is pray-
And now I'll do 't; and so he goes to heav'n:
And so am I reveng'd? that would be scann'd:
A villain kills my father; and, for that,
I, his sole son, do this same villain send
To heaven!

Why this is hire and salary, not revenge.
He took my father grossly, full of bread;
With all his crimes broad-blown, as flush as May; [Heaven?

And, how his audit stands, who knows, save
But, in our circumstance and course of thought,
'Tis heavy with him: and am I then reveng'd
To take him in the purging of his soul,
When he is fit and seasoned for his passage?
No.

Up, sword; and know thou a more horrid hent:
When he is drunk, asleep, or in his rage;
Or in the incestuous pleasures of his bed;
At gaming, swearing; or about some act
That has no relish of salvation in 't: [ven;
Then trip him, that his heels may kick at hea-
And that his soul may be as damn'd and black,
As hell whereto it goes.

Hamlet and his Mother.

Queen. What have I done, that thou dar'st
In noise so rude against me? [wag thy tongue

Ham. Such an act,
That blurs the grace and blush of modesty;
Calls virtue hypocrite; takes off the rose
From the fair forehead of an innocent love,
And sets a blister there; makes marriage-vows
As false as dicers' oaths: O, such a deed,
As from the body of contraction plucks
The very soul! and sweet religion makes
A rhapsody of words.

Queen. Ah me, what act? [this,

Ham. Look here, upon this picture, and on
The counterfeit presentment of two brothers.
See what a grace was seated on this brow:
Hyperion's curls; the front of Jove himself;
An eye like Mars, to threaten and command;
A station like the herald Mercury,
New-lighted on a heaven-kissing hill;
A combination, and a form, indeed,
Where every god did seem to set his seal,
To give the world assurance of a man; [follows;
This was your husband.—Look you now, what
Here is your husband; like a mildew'd ear,
Blasting his wholesome brother. Have you eyes?
Could you on this fair mountain leave to feed,
And batten on this moor?

Queen. O Hamlet, speak no more;
Thou turn'st mine eyes into my very soul;
And there I see such black and grained spots,
As will not leave their tinct.

Enter Ghost.

Ham. Save me, and hover o'er me with your
wings,
You heavenly guards!—What would your gracious figure?

Queen. Alas! he's mad. [chide,

Ham. Do you not come your tardy son to
That, laps'd in time and passion, lets go by
Th' important acting of your dread command?
O, say—

Ghost. Do not forget: this visitation
Is but to whet thy almost blunted purpose.
But, look! amazement on thy mother sits:
O step between her and her fighting soul!
Conceit in weakest bodies strongest works;
Speak to her, Hamlet.

Ham. How is it with you, lady?

Queen. Alas! how is it with you,
That you do bend your eye on vacancy,
And with the incorporal air do hold discourse?
Forth at your eyes your spirits wildly peep;
And, as the sleeping soldiers in the alarm,
Your bedded hair, like life in excrements,
Starts up and stands on end. O, gentle son,
Upon the heat and flame of thy distemper
Sprinkle cool patience. Whereon do you look?

Ham. On him! on him! look you how pale
he glares! [stones,

His form and cause conjoin'd, preaching to
Would make them capable. Do not look on me,
Lest, with this piteous action, you convert
My stern effects: then, what I have to do
Will want true color; tears, perchance, for

Queen. To whom do you speak this? [blood.

Ham. Do you see nothing there?

Pointing to the Ghost.

Queen. Nothing at all; yet all, that is, I see.

Ham. Nor did you nothing hear?

Queen. No, nothing, but ourselves.

Ham. Why, look you there! look how it steals away!

My father, in his habit as he liv'd!
Look, where he goes, even now, out at the portal. Exit Ghost.

Queen. This is the very coinage of your brain:
This bodiless creation ecstasy
Is very cunning in.

Ham. Ecstasy!

My pulse, as yours, doth temperately keep time,
And makes as healthful music: it is not madness
That I have utter'd; bring me to the test,
And I the matter will re-word: which madness
Would gambol from. Mother, for love of grace,
Lay not that flattering unction to your soul,
That not your trespass, but my madness speaks:
It will but skin and film the ulcerous place;
Whiles rank corruption, mining all within,
Infects unseen.—Confess yourself to heaven;
Repent what's past; avoid what is to come.

Queen. O Hamlet! thou hast cleft my heart in twain.

Ham. O, throw away the worser part of it,
And live the purer with the other half.
Good night: but go not to my uncle's bed:
Assume a virtue, if you have it not.
That monster Custom, who all sense doth eat
Of habit's devil, is angel yet in this;
That to the use of actions fair and good
He likewise gives a frock, or livery,
That aptly is put on: refrain to-night;
And that shall lend a kind of easiness
To the next abstinence: the next more easy:

For use almost can change the stamp of nature;
And either curb the devil or throw him out
With wondrous potency. Once more, goodnight!

And when you are desirous to be blest,
I'll blessing beg of you.

Queen. What shall I do? [do:

Ham. Not this, by no means, that I bid you
Let the bloat king tempt you again to bed;
Pinch wanton on your cheek; call you his mouse;

And let him for a pair of reechy kisses,
Or paddling in your neck with his damn'd fin-
Make you to ravel all this matter out, [gers,
That I essentially am not in madness, [know.
But mad in craft. 'Twere good, you let him

Queen. Be thou assur'd, if words be made of breath,

And breath of life, I have no life to breathe
What thou hast said to me.

Ham. I must to England, you know that?

Queen. Alack, I had forgot;
'Tis so concluded on.

Ham. There's letters seal'd; and my two schoolfellows,
Whom I will trust as I will adders fang'd,
They bear the mandate; they must sweep my
way,

And marshal me to knavery: let it work;
For 'tis the sport, to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petard: and it shall go hard,
But I will delve one yard below their mines,
And blow them at the moon.

Hamlet's Reflections on his own Irresolution.

How all occasions do inform against me,
And spur my dull revenge! What is a man,
If his chief good and market of his time
Be but to sleep and feed? a beast, no more.
Sure, he, that made us with such large discourse,
Looking before and after, gave us not
That capability and god-like reason
To fust in us unus'd: now, whether it be Bestial oblivion, or some craven scruple
Of thinking too precisely on the event,
(A thought, which, quarter'd, hath but one part wisdom,

And ever three parts coward), I do not know
Why yet I live to say, 'This thing's to do;
Sith I have cause, and will, and strength, and
means,

To do't. Examples, gross as earth, exhort me;
Witness, this army, of such mass, and charge,
Led by a delicate and tender prince,
Whose spirit with divine ambition puffed,
Makes mouths at the invisible event;
Exposing what is mortal, and unsure,
To all that fortune, death, and danger dare,
Even for an egg-shell. Rightly to be great,
Is, not to stir without great argument;
But greatly to find quarrel in a straw,
When honor's at the stake. How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep? while to my shame I see
The imminent death of twenty thousand men,
That, for a phantasy, and trick of fame,
Go to their graves like beds; fight for a plot

Whereon the numbers cannot try the cause,
Which is not tomb enough and continent
To hide the slain!—O, from this time forth,
My thoughts be bloody, or be nothing worth!
Sorrows rarely single.

O Gertrude! Gertrude!

When sorrows come, they come not single spies,
But in battalions.

The Divinity of Kings.

Lethim go, Gertrude; do not fear our person:
There's such divinity doth hedge a king,
That treason can but peep to what it would,
Act little of his will.

Description of Ophelia's Drowning.

There is a willow grows ascaunt the brook,
That shows his hoar leaves in the glassy stream;
Therewith fantastic garlands did she make,
Of crow-flowers, nettles, daisies, and long purples,

That liberal shepherds give a grosser name,
But our cold maids do dead men's fingers call
them:

There on the pendant boughs her coronet weeds
Clambering to hang, an envious sliver broke;
When down her weedy trophies, and herself,
Fell in the weeping brook. Her clothes spread wide

And, mermaid-like, a while they bore her up:
Which time she chanted snatches of old tunes,
As one incapable of her own distress,
Or like a creature native and indued
Unto that element; but long it could not be,
Till that her garments, heavy with their drink,
Pull'd the poor wretch from her melodious lay
To muddy death.

A spotless Virgin buried.

Lay her i' the earth;

And from her fair and unpolluted flesh
May violets spring! I tell thee, churlish priest,
A minist'ring angel shall my sister be,
When thou liest howling.

Melancholy.

This is mere madness:

And thus a while the fit will work on him;
Anon, as patient as the female dove,
When first her golden couplets are disclos'd,
His silence will sit drooping.

Providence directs our Actions.

And that should teach us,

There's a Divinity that shapes our ends,
Rough-hew them how we will.

A Health.

Give me the cups;

And let the kettle to the trumpet speak,
The trumpet to the cannoneer without,
The cannons to the heavens, the heavens to “Now the King drinks to Hamlet.” [earth;

§ 19. THE FIRST PART OF HENRY IV.

SHAKSPEARE.

Peace after civil War.

So shaken as we are, so wan with care,
Find we a time for frightened peace to pant,
And breathe short-winded accents of new broils
To be commenc'd in stronds afar remote.
No more the thirsty Erinnys of this soil

Shall daub her lips with her own children's
blood;

No more shall trenching war channel her fields,
Nor bruise her flowrets with the armed hoofs
Of hostile paces: Those opposed eyes,
Which—like the meteors of a troubled heaven,
All of one nature, of one substance bred—
Did lately meet in the intestine shock
And furious close of civil butchery,
Shall now, in mutual, well-beseeming ranks,
March all one way: and be no more oppos'd
Against acquaintance, kindred, and allies:
The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master.

King Henry's Character of Percy, and of his Son Prince Henry.

Yea, there thou mak'st me sad, and mak'st me
In envy, that my lord Northumberland [sin
Should be the father of so blest a son:
A son, who is the theme of honor's tongue;
Amongst a grove the very straightest plant;
Who is sweet Fortune's minion, and her pride:
Whilst I, by looking on the praise of him,
See riot and dishonor stain the brow
Of my young Harry.

Prince Henry's Soliloquy.

I know you all, and will a while uphold
The unyok'd humor of your idleness:
Yet herein will I imitate the sun,
Who doth permit the base contagious clouds
To smother up his beauty from the world;
That, when he please again to be himself,
Being wanted, he may more be wonder'd at,
By breaking through the foul and ugly mists
Of vapours that did seem to strangle him.
If all the year were playing holidays,
To sport would be as tedious as to work;
But, when they seldom come, they wish'd-for
come,
And nothing pleaseth but rare accidents.
So, when this loose behaviour I throw off,
And pay the debt I never promised;
By how much better than my word I am,
By so much shall I falsify men's hopes;
And, like bright metal on a sullen ground,
My reformation, glitt'ring o'er my fault,
Shall show more goodly, and attract more eyes,
Than that which hath no foil to set it off.
I'll so offend, to make offence a skill;
Redeeming time, when men think least I will.

Hotspur's Description of a finical Courtier.

But, I remember, when the fight was done,
When I was dry with rage and extreme toil,
Breathless and faint, leaning upon my sword,
Came there a certain lord, neat, trimly drest,
Fresh as a bridegroom; and his chin, new-reap'd,
Show'd like a stubble land at harvest-home:
He was perfumed like a milliner;
And 'twixt his finger and his thumb he held
A pouncet box, which ever and anon
He gave his nose, and took't away again:—
Who, therewith angry, when it next came there, [talk'd,
Took it in snuff.—And still he smil'd and
And, as the soldiers bare dead bodies by,

He call'd them untaught knaves, unmannerly,
To bring a slovenly unhandsome corse
Betwixt the wind and his nobility.
With many holiday and lady terms
He question'd me; among the rest, demanded
My prisoners, in your majesty's behalf.
I then, all smarting with my wounds, being
To be so pester'd with a popinjay, [cold,
Out of my grief and my impatience
Answer'd neglectingly I know not what;
He should or he should not; for he made me mad,
To see him shine so brisk, and smell so sweet,
And talk so like a waiting gentlewoman,
Of guns, and drums, and wounds (God save the mark!)

And telling me the sovereign'st thing on earth
Was parmacity, for an inward bruise;
And that it was great pity, so it was,
That villanous saltpetre should be digg'd
Out of the bowels of the harmless earth,
Which many a good tall fellow had destroy'd
So cowardly; and, but for these vile guns,
He would himself have been a soldier.

Danger.

I'll read you matter deep and dangerous;
As full of peril and advent'rous spirit,
As to o'erwalk a current, roaring loud,
On the unsteadfast footing of a spear.

Honor.

By heaven, methinks it were an easy leap,
To pluck bright Honor from the pale-fac'd
Or dive into the bottom of the deep, [moon;
Where fathom-line could never touch the
ground,
And pluck up drowned Honor by the locks;
So he that doth redeem her thence, might wear
Without co-rival all her dignities.
But out upon this half-fac'd fellowship!

Lady Percy's pathetic Speech to her Husband.

O my good lord, why are you thus alone?
For what offence have I, this fortnight, been
A banish'd woman from my Harry's bed?
Tell me, sweet lord, what is it takes from thee
Thy stomach, pleasure, and thy golden sleep?
Why dost thou bend thine eyes upon the earth,
And start so often when thou sitt'st alone?
Why hast thou lost the fresh blood in thy cheeks:
And giv'n my treasures, and my rights of thee,
To thick-ey'd musing, and curs'd melancholy?
In thy faint slumbers I by thee have watch'd,
And heard thee murmur tales of iron wars;
Speak terms of manage to thy bounding steed;
Cry, "Courage! to the field!" and thou hast
Of sallies, and retires; of trenches, tents, [talk'd
Of palisadoes, frontiers, parapets;
Of basilisks, of cannon, culverin;
Of prisoners' ransom, and of soldiers slain,
And all the currents of a heady fight.
Thy spirit within thee hath been so at war,
And thus hath so bestirr'd thee in thy sleep,
That beads of sweat have stood upon thy brow,
Like bubbles in a late-disturbed stream:
And in thy face strange motions have appear'd,
Such as we see when men restrain their breath

On some great sudden haste. O, what portents are these?

Some heavy business hath my lord in hand,
And I must know it, else he loves me not.

Prodigies ridiculed.

I cannot blame him: at my nativity,
The front of heaven was full of fiery shapes,
Of burning cressets; and, at my birth,
The frame and huge foundation of the earth
Shak'd like a coward.

Hot. Why so it would have done
At the same season, if your mother's cat
Had kitten'd—tho' yourself had ne'er been born.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions: oft the teeming earth
Is with a kind of cholic pinch'd and vex'd,
By the imprisoning of unruly wind
Within her womb; which, for enlargement striving,
Shakes the old beldame Earth, and topples down
Steeple and moss-grown towers.

On miserable Rhymers.

I had rather be a kitten and cry—mew,
Than one of these same metre-ballad-mongers;
I had rather hear a brazen canstick turn'd,
Or a dry wheel grate on the axle-tree;
And that would set my teeth nothing on edge,
Nothing so much as mincing poetry;
'Tis like the forc'd gait of a shuffling nag.

Punctuality in Bargain.

I'll give thrice so much land
To any well-deserving friend;
But, in the way of bargain, mark ye me,
I'll cavil on the ninth part of a hair.

A Husband sung to Sleep by a fair Wife.

She bids you
Upon the wanton rushes lay you down,
And rest your gentle head upon her lap,
And she will sing the song that pleaseth you,
And on your eye-lids crown the god of sleep,
Charming your blood with pleasing heaviness:
Making such difference 'twixt wake and sleep,
As is the difference betwixt day and night,
The hour before the heavenly harness'd team
Begins his golden progress in the east.

King Henry the IVth to his Son.

Had I so lavish of my presence been,
So common hackney'd in the eyes of men,
So stale and cheap to vulgar company,
Opinion, that did help me to the crown,
Had still kept loyal to possession;
And left me in reputeless banishment,
A fellow of no mark nor likelihood.
By being seldom seen, I could not stir,
But, like a comet, I was wondered at: [he."
That men would tell their children; "This is Others would say, "Where? which is Bolinbroke?"
And then I stole all courtesy from heaven,
And dress'd myself in such humility,
That I did pluck allegiance from men's hearts,
Loud shouts and salutations from their mouths,
Even in the presence of the crowned king.
Thus did I keep my person fresh and new;
My presence, like a robe pontifical,

Ne'er seen but wondered at : and so my state,
Seldom, but sumptuous, showed like a feast ;
And won, by rareness, such solemnity.
The skipping king, he ambled up and down
With shallow jesters, and rash bavin wits,
Soon kindled, and soon burned : carded his state ;
Mingled his royalty with capering fools ;
Had his great name profaned with their scorns ;
And gave his countenance against his name,
To laugh at gibing boys, and stand the push
Of every beardless vain comparative :
Grew a companion to the common streets,
Enfeoffed himself to popularity :

That, being daily swallowed by men's eyes,
They surfeited with honey ; and began
To loathe the taste of sweetness, whereof a little More than a little is by much too much.
So, when he had occasion to be seen,
He was but as the cuckow is in June,
Heard, not regarded ; seen, but with such eyes,
As, sick and blunted with community,
Afford no extraordinary gaze,
Such as is bent on sun-like majesty
When it shines seldom in admiring eyes :
But rather drows'd, and hung their eye-lids
down,

Slept in his face, and rendered such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries ; [full.
Being with his presence glutted, gorg'd, and
Prince Henry's modest Defence of himself.

—God forgive them, that so much have sway'd

Your majesty's good thoughts away from me !
I will redeem all this on Percy's head,
And, in the closing of some glorious day,
Be bold to tell you that I am your son ;
When I will wear a garment all of blood,
And stain my favours in a bloody mask,
Which, wash'd away, shall scour my shame
with it.

And that shall be the day, whene'er it lights,
That this same child of honor and renown,
This gallant Hotspur, this all-praised knight,
And your unthought of Harry chance to meet :
For ev'ry honor sitting on his helm,
Would they were multitudes ; and on my head
My shames redoubled : for the time will come
That I shall make this northern youth exchange
His glorious deeds for my indignities.

Percy is but my factor, good my lord,
To engross up glorious deeds on my behalf ;
And I will call him to so strict account,
That he shall render every glory up,
Yea, even the slightest worship of his time,
Or I will tear the reckoning from his heart.
This, in the name of God, I promise here :
The which, if he be pleas'd I shall perform,
I do beseech your majesty may salve
The long grown wounds of my intemperance ;
If not, the end of life cancels all bonds ;
And I will die a hundred thousand deaths,
Ere break the smallest parcel of this vow.

A gallant Warrior.

I saw young Harry—with his beaver on,
His cuisses on his thighs, gallantly arm'd—
Rise from the ground, like feather'd Mercury,
And vaulted with such ease into his seat,

As if an angel dropp'd down from the clouds,
To turn and wind a fiery Pegasus,
And witch the world with noble horsemanship.
Hotspur's Impatience for the Battle.

—Let them come :

They come like sacrifices in their trim,
And to the fire-eyed maid of smoky war,
All hot and bleeding, will we offer them :
The mailed Mars shall on his altar sit,
Up to the ears in blood. I am on fire,
To hear this rich reprisal is so nigh,
And yet not ours : Come, let me take my horse,
Who is to bear me like a thunderbolt,
Against the bosom of the Prince of Wales :
Harry to Harry shall, hot horse to horse,
Meet, and ne'er part, till one drop down a corse.
O, that Glendower were come !

Prince Henry's modest Challenge.

—Tell your nephew,

The Prince of Wales doth join with all the world
In praise of Henry Percy ; by my hopes—
This present enterprise set off his head—
I do not think, a braver gentleman,
More active-valiant, or more valiant, young,
More daring, or more bold, is now alive,
To grace this latter age with noble deeds.
For my part, I may speak it to my shame,
I have a truant been to chivalry ;
And so I hear he doth account me too :
Yet this before my father's majesty—
I am content that he shall take the odds
Of his great name and estimation ;
And will, to save the blood on either side,
Try fortune with him in a single fight.

Prince Henry's pathetic Speech on the Death of Hotspur.

—Brave Percy—fare thee well, great heart !
Ill-weav'd ambition, how much art thou shrunk !

When that this body did contain a spirit,
A kingdom for it was too small a bound ;
But now, two paces of the vilest earth
Is room enough :—This earth that bears thee
Bears not alive, so stout a gentleman. [dead,
If thou wert sensible of courtesy,
I should not make so dear a show of zeal :—
But let my favors hide thy mangled face ;
And, even in thy behalf, I'll thank myself,
For doing these fair rites of tenderness.
Adieu, and take thy praise with thee to heaven !
Thy ignominy sleep with thee in the grave,
But not remember'd in thy epitaph !

Life demands Action.

O, gentlemen, the time of life is short ;
To spend that shortness basely, were too long,
If life did ride upon a dial's point,
Still ending at the arrival of an hour.

§ 20. THE 2d PART OF HENRY IV.

SHAKESPEARE.

Prologue.—Rumor.

I, FROM the orient to the drooping west,
Making the wind my posthorse, still unfold
The acts commenced on this ball of earth :
Upon my tongues continual slanders ride ;
The which in ev'ry language I pronounce ;

Stuffing the ears of men with false reports.
 I speak of peace, while covert enmity,
 Under the smile of safety, wounds the world :
 And who but Rumor, who but only I,
 Make fearful musters, and prepar'd defence,
 Whilst the big year, swoln with some other grief,
 Is thought with child by the stern tyrant war.
 And no such matter? Rumor is a pipe
 Blown by surmises, jealousies, conjectures ;
 And of so easy and so plain a stop,
 That the blunt monster with uncounted heads,
 The still discordant wavering multitude,
 Can play upon it.

Contention.

——Contention, like a horse
 Full of high feeding, madly hath broke loose,
 And bears down all before him.

Post-Messenger.

—After him, came, spurring hard,
 A gentlemen almost forespent with speed,
 That stopp'd by me to breathe his bloodied horse:
 He ask'd the way to Chester ; and of him
 I did demand what news from Shrewsbury.
 He told me, that rebellion had ill luck,
 And that young Harry Percy's spur was cold :
 With that, he gave his able horse the head,
 And, bending forward, struck his armed heels
 Against the panting sides of his poor jade
 Up to the rowel head ; and, starting so,
 He seem'd in running to devour the way,
 Staying no longer question.

Messenger with ill News.

Yea, this man's brow, like to a title-leaf,
 Foretels the nature of a tragic volume :
 So looks the strond whereon th' imperious flood
 Hath left a witness'd usurpation. [cheek
 Thou tremblest : and the whiteness in thy
 Is apter than thy tongue to tell thy errand.
 Even such a man, so faint, so spiritless,
 So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone,
 Drew Priam's curtain in the dead of night,
 And would have told him half his Troy was burn'd.
 I see a strange confession in thine eye :
 Thou shak'st thy head ; and hold'st it fear or sin,
 To speak a truth. If he be slain, say so :
 The tongue offends not that reports his death :
 And he doth sin, that doth belie the dead ;
 Not he, which says the dead is not alive.
 Yet the first bringer of unwelcome news
 Hath but a losing office ; and his tongue
 Sounds ever after as a sullen bell,
 Remember'd knolling a departing friend.

Greater griefs destroy the less.

As the wretch, whose fever-weaken'd joints,
 Like strengthless hinges, buckle under life,
 Impatient of his fit, breaks like a fire
 Out of his keeper's arms ; even so my limbs, Weaken'd with grief, being now enrag'd with grief, [nice crutch ;
 Are thrice themselves : Hence therefore, thou
 A scaly gauntlet now, with joints of steel,
 Must glove this hand : and hence, thou sickly quoif ;

Thou art a guard too wanton for the head,
 Which princes, flesh'd with conquest, aim to hit.

Now bind my brows with iron, and approach
 The rugged'st hour that time and spite dare bring
 To frown upon th' enrag'd Northumberland !
 Let heaven kiss earth ! now let not Nature's hand
 Keep the wild flood confin'd ! Let order die !
 And let this world no longer be a stage
 To feed contention in a ling'ring act ;
 But let one spirit of the first-born Cain
 Reign in all bosoms, that, each heart being set
 On bloody courses, the rude scene may end,
 And darkness be the burier of the dead.

The Fickleness of the Vulgar.

An habitation giddy and unsure
 Hath he that buildeth on the vulgar heart.
 O thou fond many ; with what loud applause
 Didst thou beat heaven with blessing Boling-
 broke,
 Before he was what thou wouldst have him be !
 And, being now trimm'd in thine own desires,
 Thou, beastly feeder, art so full of him,
 That thou provok'st thyself to cast him up.

On Sleep.

——O gentle sleep,
 Nature's soft nurse, how have I frighted thee,
 That thou no more wilt weigh my eye-lids
 And steep my senses in forgetfulness ! [down,
 Why rather, sleep, liest thou in smoky cribs,
 Upon uneasy pallets stretching thee, [slumber ;
 And hush'd with buzzing night-flies to thy
 Than in the perfum'd chambers of the great,
 Under the canopies of costly state,
 And lull'd with sounds of sweetest melody ?
 O thou dull god, why liest thou with the vile,
 In loathsome beds ; and leav'st the kingly couch,
 A watch-case, or a common larum-bell ?
 Wilt thou upon the high and giddy mast,
 Seal up the ship-boy's eyes, and rock his brains
 In cradle of the rude imperious surge ;
 And in the visitation of the winds,
 Who take the ruffian billows by the top,
 Curling their monstrous heads, and hanging
 them
 With deaf'ning clamors in the slippery clouds,
 That, with the hurly, death itself awakes ?
 Canst thou, O partial sleep ! give thy repose
 To the wet sea-boy in an hour so rude ;
 And, in the calmest and the stillest night,
 With all appliances and means to boot,
 Deny it to a king ?

The Character of King Henry V. by his Father.

He is gracious if he be observ'd ;
 He hath a tear for pity, and a hand
 Open as day for melting charity :
 Yet notwithstanding, being incens'd, he's flint ;
 As humorous as winter, and as sudden
 As flaws congealed in the spring of day.
 His temper, therefore, must be well observ'd :
 Chide him for faults, and do it reverently,
 When you perceive his blood inclin'd to mirth :
 But, being moody, give him line and scope :
 Till that his passions, like a whale on ground,
 Confound themselves with working.

On Fortune.

Will fortune never come with both hands full,
But write her fair words still in foulest letters?
She either gives a stomach, and no food—
Such are the poor in health; or else a feast,
And takes away the stomach—such the rich,
That have abundance, and enjoy it not.

Dialogue between Prince Henry and his Father.

—Come hither to me, Harry:—
Depart the chamber, leave us here alone.

[Exeunt Lords.]

P. H. I never thought to hear you speak again.

K. Hen. Thy wish was father, Harry, to that thought:

I stay too long by thee, I weary thee.
Dost thou so hunger for my empty chair,
That thou wilt needs invest thee with mine honors,
Before thy hour be ripe? O foolish youth!
Thou seek'st the greatness that will overwhelm thee.

Stay but a little: for my cloud of dignity
Is held from falling with so weak a wind,
That it will quickly drop; my day is dim.
Thou hast stolen that, which after some few hours

Were thine without offence; and, at my death
Thou hast seal'd up my expectation:

Thy life did manifest thou lov'dst me not,
And thou wilt have me die assur'd of it.

Thou hid'st a thousand daggers in thy thoughts,
Which thou hast whetted on thy stony heart,
To stab at half an hour of my life.

What! canst thou not forbear me half an hour?

Then get thee gone and dig my grave thyself;
And bid the merry bells ring to thine ear

That thou art crowned, not that I am dead.

Let all the tears that should bedew my hearse,
Be drops of balm, to sanctify thy head:

Only compound me with forgotten dust,
Give that which gave thee life unto the worms,

Pluck down my officers, break my decrees;

For now a time is come to mock at form,

Henry the Fifth is crown'd:—up, vanity!

Down, royal state! All you sage counsellors,
hence!

And to the English court assemble now,

From ev'ry region apes of idleness;

Now, neighbour-confines, purge you of your scum:

Have you a ruffian that will swear, drink, dance,

Revel the night; rob, murder, and commit

The oldest sins the newest kind of ways?

Be happy, he will trouble you no more:

England shall double gild his treble guilt:

England shall give him office, honor, might:

For the fifth Harry from curb'd licence plucks

The muzzle of restraint, and the wild dog

Shall flesh his tooth in ev'ry innocent.

O my poor kingdom, sick with civil blows!

When that my care could not withhold thy riots,

What wilt thou do when riot is thy care?

O, thou wilt be a wilderness again,

Peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants!

P. H. O pardon me, my liege! but for my tears,

[kneeling.]

The moist impedients unto my speech,

I had forestall'd this dear and deep rebuke,

Ere you with grief had spoke, and I had heard

The course of it so far. There is your crown;

And He that wears the crown immortally,

Long guard it yours! If I affect it more,

Than as your honor, and as your renown,

Let me no more from this obedience rise

(Which my most true and inward duteous spirit

Teacheth), this prostrate and exterior bending!

Heaven witness with me, when I here came in,

And found no course of breath within your

Majesty,

How cold it struck my heart! If I do feign,

O, let me in my present wildness die!

And never live to show the incredulous world

The noble change that I have purposed!

Coming to look on you, thinking you dead

(And dead almost, my liege, to think you were),

I spake unto the crown, as having sense,

And thus upbraided it: "The care on thee

depending,

Hath fed upon the body of my father;

Therefore, thou best of gold, art worst of gold:

Other, less fine in carat, is more precious,

Preserving life in medicine potable:

But thou most fine, most honor'd, most re-

noun'd, [liege,

Hast eat thy bearer up." Thus, my most royal

Accusing it, I put it on my head;

To try with it—as with an enemy

That had before my face murdered my father—

The quarrel of a true inheritor.

But if it did infect my blood with joy,

Or swell my thoughts to any strain of pride;

If any rebel or vain spirit of mine

Did, with the least affection of a welcome,

Give entertainment to the might of it,

Let God for ever keep it from my head:

And make me as the poorest vassal is,

That doth with awe and terror kneel to it!

K. Hen. O my son!

Heaven put it in thy mind, to take it hence,

That thou mightst win the more thy father's

Pleading so wisely in excuse of it. [love,

Come hither, Harry, sit thou by my bed;

And hear, I think, the very latest counsel [son,

That ever I shall breathe. Heaven knows, my

By what by-paths, and indirect crook'd ways,

I met this crown; and I myself know well,

How troublesome it sat upon my head:

To thee it shall descend with better quiet,

Better opinion, better confirmation;

For all the soil of the achievement goes

With me into the earth. It seem'd in me,

But as an honor snatch'd with boisterous

hand;

And I had many living, to upbraid

My gain of it by their assistances;

Which daily grew to quarrel and to bloodshed,

Wounding supposed peace: All these bold fears,

Thou seest, with peril I have answered:

For all my reign hath been but as a scene

Acting that argument; and now my death

Changes the mode: for what in me was pur-
Falls upon thee in a more fairer sort: [chas'd,
So thou the garland wear'st successively.
Yet tho' thou stand'st more sure than I could do,
Thou art not firm enough, since griefs are green;
And all thy friends, which thou must make thy
friends,

Have but their stings and teeth newly ta'en out,
By whose fell working I was first advanc'd,
And by whose pow'r I well might lodge a fear
To be again displac'd: which to avoid,
I cut them off; and had a purpose now
To lead out many to the Holy Land;
Lest rest, and lying still, might make them look Too near unto my state. Therefore, my Harry,
Be it thy course, to busy giddy minds [out,
With foreign quarrels; that action, hence borne
May waste the memory of the former days.
More would I, but my lungs are wasted so,
That strength of speech is utterly denied me.
How I came by the crown, O God, forgive!
And grant it may with thee in true peace live!

P. Hen. My gracious liege,
You won it, wore it, kept it, gave it me;
Then plain and right must my possession be:
Which I, with more than with a common pain,
'Gainst all the world will rightfully maintain.

Reflections on a Crown.

O polish'd perturbation! golden care!
That keeps the ports of slumber open wide
To many a watchful night—sleep with it now!
Yet not so sound, and half so deeply sweet,
As he, whose brow, with homely biggen bound,
Snores out the watch of night. O Majesty!
When thou dost pinch thy bearer, thou dost sit
Like a rich armor worn in heat of day,
That scalds with safety.

Gold.

How quickly nature falls into revolt,
When gold becomes her object!
For this the foolish, over-careful fathers
Have broke their sleep with thoughts, their brains with care,
Their bones with industry;
For this they have engrossed and pil'd up
The canker'd heaps of strange achieved gold;
For this they have been thoughtful to invest
Their sons with arts and martial exercises:
When, like the bee, culling from ev'ry flow'r
The virtuous sweets, [honey,
Our thighs packed with wax, our mouths with
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains.

The Chief Justice to King Henry V. whom he had imprisoned.

—If the deed were ill,
Be you contented, wearing now the garland,
To have a son set your decrees at nought;
To pluck down justice from your awful bench;
To trip the course of law, and blunt the sword
That guards the peace and safety of your person;
Nay, more, to spurn at your most royal image,
And mock your workings in a second body.
Question your royal thoughts, make the case
Be now the father, and propose a son: [yours,
Hear your own dignity so much profan'd,

See your most dreadful laws so loosely slighted,
Behold yourself so by a son disdain'd;
And then imagine me taking your part,
And, in your power, soft silencing your son.

§ 21. THE LIFE OF HENRY V.

SHAKSPEARE.

Prologue.

O, FOR a muse of fire, that would ascend,
The brightest heaven of invention!
A kingdom for a stage, princes to act,
And monarchs to behold the swelling scene!
Then should the warlike Harry, like himself,
Assume the port of Mars; and, at his heels,
Leasht in like hounds, should famine, sword,
Crouch for employment. [and fire,

Consideration.

Consideration like an angel, came,
And whipp'd th' offending Adam out of him,
Leaving his body as a paradise,
To envelope and contain celestial spirits.

King Henry V. his Perfections.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all-admiring, with an inward wish
You would desire the king were made a prelate:
Hear him debate of common-wealth affairs,
You would say, it hath been all-in-all his study:
List his discourse of war, and you shall hear
A fearful battle rendered you in music.
Turn him to any course of policy,
The gordian knot of it he will unloose,
Familiar as his garter;—that, when he speaks,
The air, a chartered libertine, is still,
And the mute wonder lurketh in men's ears,
To steal his sweet and honey'd sentences.

The Commonwealth of Bees.

So work the honey-bees:
Creatures that, by a rule in nature, teach
The act of order to a peopled kingdom.
They have a king, and officers of sorts:
Where some, like magistrates, correct at home;
Others, like merchants, venture trade abroad;
Others, like soldiers, armed in their stings,
Make boot upon the summer's velvet buds;
Which pillage they with merry march bring
To the tent-royal of their emperor: [home
Who, busied in his majesty, surveys
The singing masons building roofs of gold;
The civil citizens kneading up the honey;
The poor mechanic porters crowding in
Their heavy burthens at his narrow gate;
The sad-eyed justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone.

Warlike Spirit.

Now all the youth of England are on fire,
And silken dalliance in the wardrobe lies;
Now thrive the armorers, and honor's thought
Reigns solely in the breast of every man:
They sell the pasture now to buy the horse;
Following the mirror of all Christian kings,
With winged heels, as English Mercuries.
For now sits expectation in the air;

And hides a sword, from hilt unto the point,
With crowns imperial, crowns and coronets,
Promis'd to Harry and his followers.

England.

O England!—model to thy inward greatness,
Like little body with a mighty heart—
What mightst thou do, that honor would thee do,
Were all thy children kind and natural!
But see thy fault! France hath in thee found out
A nest of hollow bosoms, which he fills
With treach'rous crowns.

False Appearances.

O! how hast thou with jealousy infected
The sweetness of affiance! show men dutiful?
Why, so didst thou: seem they grave and learned? [mily?
Why, so didst thou: come they of noble fa-
Why, so didst thou: seem they religious?
Why, so didst thou: or are they spare in diet;
Free from gross passion, or of mirth, or anger;
Constant in spirit, not swerving with the blood;
Garnish'd and deck'd in modest compliment:
Not working with the eye, without the ear,
And, but in purged judgement, trusting neither?
Such, and so finely bolted, didst thou seem:
And thus thy fall hath left a kind of blot,
To mark the full-fraught man, and best endued,
With some suspicion.

King Henry's Character, by the Constable of France.

You are too much mistaken in this king:
Question your grace the late ambassadors—
With what great state he heard their embassy:
How well supplied with noble counsellors—
How modest in exception, and, withal,
How terrible in constant resolution—
And you shall find, his vanities fore-spent
Were but the out-side of the Roman Brutus,
Covering discretion with a coat of folly;
As gardeners do with ordure hide those roots
That shall first spring, and be most delicate.

Description of a Fleet setting Sail.

Suppose, that you have seen
The well-appointed king at Hampton-pier
Embark his royalty; and his brave fleet
With silken streamers the young Phœbus fanning.

Play with your fancies; and in them behold,
Upon the hempen tackle, ship-boys climbing:
Hear the shrill whistle, which doth order give
To sounds confus'd: behold the threaden sails,
Borne with the invisible and creeping wind,
Draw the huge bottoms through the furrow'd
Breasting the lofty surge. [sea,

Description of Night in a Camp.

From camp to camp, through the foul womb
of night,
The hum of either army stilly sounds,
That the fix'd sentinels almost receive
The secret whispers of each other's watch:
Fire answers fire; and through their paly flames
Each battle sees the other's umber'd face:
Steed threatens steed, in high and boastful
neighs [tents,
Piercing the night's dull ear; and from the
The armorers, accomplishing the knights,

With busy hammers closing rivets up,
Give dreadful note of preparation.
The country cocks do crow, the clocks do toll,
And the third hour of drowsy morning name.
Proud of their numbers, and secure in soul,
The confident and over-lusty French
Do the low-rated English play at dice;
And chide the cripple tardy-gaited night,
Who, like a foul and ugly witch, doth limp
So tediously away. The poor condemned Eng-
Like sacrifices, by their watchful fires [lish,
Sit patiently, and inly ruminate
The morning's danger; and their gesture sad,
Investing lank-lean cheeks, and war-worn coats,
Presenteth them unto the gazing moon
So many horrid ghosts. O, now, who will be-
The royal captain of this ruin'd band, [hold
Walking from watch to watch, from tent to tent,
Let him cry—praise and glory on his head!
For forth he goes, and visits all his host;
Bids them good morrow, with a modest smile;
And calls them—brothers, friends, and coun-
Upon his royal face there is no note [trymen.
How dread an army hath enrounded him;
Nor doth he dedicate one jot of color
Unto the weary and all-watched night:
But freshly looks, and overbears attaint,
With cheerful semblance, and sweet majesty;
That ev'ry wretch, pining and pale before,
Beholding him, plucks comfort from his looks;
A largess universal, like the sun,
His liberal eye doth give to ev'ry one,
Thawing cold fear.

The Miseries of Royalty.

O hard condition! twin-born with greatness,
Subjected to the breath of every fool, [ing!
Whose sense no more can feel but his own wring—
What infinite heart's-ease must kings neglect,
That private men enjoy!
And what have kings, that privates have not too,
Save ceremony, save general ceremony?
And what art thou, thou idol ceremony?
What kind of god art thou, that suffer'st more
Of mortal griefs, than do thy worshippers?
What are thy rents, what are thy comings-in?
O ceremony, show me but thy worth!
What is the soul of adoration?
Art thou aught else but place, degree, and form,
Creating awe and fear in other men,
Wherein thou art less happy, being fear'd,
Than they in fearing? [sweet,
What drink'st thou oft, instead of homage
But poison'd flattery? O, be sick, great great-
And bid thy ceremony give thee cure. [ness,
Think'st thou, the fiery fever will go out
With titles blown from adulation?
Will it give place to flexure and low-bending?
Canst thou, when thou command'st the beggar's knee, [dream,
Command the health of it? No, thou proud
That play'st so subtly with a king's repose;
I am a king, that find thee; and I know,
'Tis not the balm, the sceptre, and the ball,
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The inter-tissued robe of gold and pearl,
The farced title running 'fore the king,
The throne he sits on, nor the tide of pomp

That beats upon the high shore of this world—
 No, not all these, thrice gorgeous ceremony,
 Not all these, laid in bed majestical,
 Can sleep so soundly as the wretched slave;
 Who, with a body fill'd, and vacant mind,
 Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread;
 Never sees horrid night, the child of hell;
 But, like a lacquey, from the rise to set,
 Sweats in the eye of Phœbus, and all night
 Sleeps in Elysium; next day, after dawn,
 Doth rise, and help Hyperion to his horse:
 And follows so the ever-running year,
 With profitable labor, to his grave;
 And, but for ceremony, such a wretch, [sleep,
 Winding up days with toil, and nights with Hath the fore-hand and 'vantage of a king.

A Description of the miserable State of the English Army.

Yon island carrions, desp'rate of their bones,
 Ill-favor'dly become the morning field:
 Their ragged curtains poorly are let loose,
 And our air shakes them passing scornfully.
 Big Mars seems bankrupt in their beggar'd host,
 And faintly through a rusty beaver peeps.
 Their horsemen sit like fixed candlesticks,
 With torch-staves in their hands; and the poor
 jades

Lob down their heads, dropping the hides and hips; [eyes,

The gum down-roping from their pale dead
 And in their pale dull mouths the gimmel bit
 Lies foul with chew'd grass, still and motionless;

And their executors, the knavish crows,
 Fly o'er them all, impatient for their hour.

King Henry's Speech before the Battle of Agincourt.

He that outlives this day, and comes safe
 home,

Will stand a tip-toe when this day is nam'd,
 And rouse him at the name of Crispian.

He that shall live this day, and see old age,
 Will yearly on the vigil feast his friends,

And say, To-morrow is St. Crispian. [scars:

Then will he strip his sleeve, and show his Old men forget; yet shall not all forget,

But they'll remember, with advantages,
 What feats they did that day: then shall our names,

Familiar in their mouths as household words,

Harry the king, Bedford and Exeter,

Warwick and Talbot, Salisbury and Glo'ster,

Be in their flowing cups freshly remember'd.

Description of the Duke of York's Death.

He smil'd me in the face, gave me his hand,

And, with a feeble gripe, says, "Dear my lord,

"Commend my service to my sovereign."

So did he turn; and over Suffolk's neck

He threw his wounded arm, and kiss'd his lips;

And so, espous'd to death, with blood he seal'd

A testament of noble-ending love.

The pretty and sweet manner of it forc'd

Those waters from me which I would have stopp'd;

But I had not so much of man in me,

And all my mother came into mine eyes,

And gave me up to tears.

The Miseries of War.

Her vine, the merry cheerer of the heart,
 Unpruned dies: her hedges even-pleach'd,
 Like prisoners, widely over-grown with hair,
 Put forth disorder'd twigs: her fallow leas
 The darnel, hemlock, and rank fumitory,
 Doth root upon; while that the coulter rusts,
 That should deracinate such savagery:
 The even mead, that erst brought sweetly forth
 The freckled cowslip, burnet, and green clover,
 Wanting the sithe, all uncorrected, rank,
 Conceive by idleness; and nothing teems,
 But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
 Losing both beauty and utility.

§ 22. THE 1st PART OF HENRY VI.

SHAKSPEARE.

Glory.

GLORY is like a circle in the water;
 Which never ceaseth to enlarge itself,
 Till by broad spreading it disperse to nought.

Marriage.

For marriage is a matter of more worth,
 Than to be dealt in by attorneyship.

For what is wedlock forced but a hell,
 An age of discord and continual strife?
 Whereas the contrary bringeth forth bliss,
 And is a pattern of celestial peace.

§ 23. THE 2d PART OF HENRY VI.

SHAKSPEARE.

A resolved ambitious Woman.

FOLLOW I must, I cannot go before,
 While Glo'ster bears this base and humble
 mind.

Were I a man, a duke, and next of blood,
 I would remove these tedious stumbling-blocks,
 And smooth my way upon their headless necks,
 And, being a woman, I will not be slack
 To play my part in fortune's pageant.

The Lord ever to be remembered.

Let never day or night unhallow'd pass,
 But still remember what the Lord hath done.
Eleanor to the Duke of Glo'ster, while doing Penance.

For, whilst I think I am thy married wife,
 And thou a prince, protector of this land,
 Methinks I should not thus be led along,
 Mail'd up in shame, with papers on my back;
 And followed with a rabble, that rejoice
 To see my tears, and hear my deep-felt groans.
 The ruthless flint doth cut my tender feet;
 And, when I start, the envious people laugh,
 And bid me be advised how I tread.

Silent Resentment deepest.

Smooth runs the water where the brook is
 deep;

And in his simple show he harbours treason.

A guilty Countenance.

Upon the eye-balls murd'rous tyranny
 Sits, in grim majesty, to fright the world.

Description of a murdered Person.

See how the blood is settled in his face!
 Oft have I seen a timely-parted ghost,

Of ashy semblance, meagre, pale, and bloodless,
Being all descended to the laboring heart;
Who, in the conflict that it holds with death,
Attracts the same for aidance 'gainst the enemy;
Which with the heart there cools, and ne'er returneth

To blush and beautify the cheek again.
But, see, his face is black, and full of blood;
His eye-balls further out than when he liv'd,
Staring full ghastly, like a strangled man:
His hair uprear'd, his nostrils stretch'd with struggling;

His hands abroad display'd, as one that grasp'd
And tugg'd for life, and was by strength subdued.

Look on the sheets: his hair, you see, is stick-
His well-proportion'd beard made rough and rugged,

Like to the summer's corn by tempest lodg'd.
It cannot be but he was murder'd here;
The least of all these signs were probable.

A good Conscience.

What stronger breast-plate than a heart untainted?

Thrice is he arm'd, that hath his quarrel just:
And he but naked, though lock'd up in steel,
Whose conscience with injustice is corrupted.

Remorseless Hatred.

A plague upon 'em! wherefore should I curse
them?

Would curses kill, as doth the mandrake's
I would invent as bitter searching terms,
As curs'd, as harsh, as horrible to hear,
Deliver'd strongly through my fixed teeth,
With full as many signs of deadly hate,
As lean-fac'd envy in her loathsome cave:
My tongue should stumble in mine earnest
words,

Mine eyes should sparkle like the beaten flint;
Mine hair be fix'd on end like one distract;
Ay, ev'ry joint should seem to curse and ban:
And even now my burden'd heart would break,
Should I not curse them. Poison be their drink!
Gall, worse than gall, the daintiest that they taste;

Their sweetest shade, a grove of cypress trees!
Their chiefest prospect, murdering basilisks!
Their softest touch, as smart as lizards' stings;
Their music, frightful as the serpent's hiss;
And boding screech-owls make the concert full!
All the foul terrors in dark-seated hell—

Now, by the ground that I am banish'd from,
Well could I curse away a winter's night,
Though standing naked on a mountain top,
Where biting cold would never let grass grow.

Parting Lovers.

And banished I am, if but from thee.
Go, speak not to me, even now be gone—
O, go not yet!—Even thus two friends condemn'd
Embrace, and kiss, and take ten thousand
Loather a hundred times to part than die.—
Yet now farewell; and farewell life with thee!

Suff. Thus is poor Suffolk ten times banished,

Once by the king, and three times thrice by
thee!

'Tis not the land I care for, wert thou hence;
A wilderness is populous enough,
So Suffolk had thy heavenly company.
For where thou art, there is the world itself,
With every several pleasure in the world!
And where thou art not, desolation.

Dying with the Person beloved, preferable to Parting.

If I depart from thee, I cannot live:
And in thy sight to die, what were it else,
But like a pleasant slumber in thy lap!
Here could I breathe my soul into the air,
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dug between its lips.

The Death-bed Horrors of a guilty Conscience.

Bring me unto my trial when you will:
Died he not in his bed? Where should he die?
Can I make men live, whether they will or no?
O! torture me no more, I will confess—Alive again? Then show me where he is;
I'll give a thousand pounds to look upon him—
He hath no eyes, the dust hath blinded them.
Comb down his hair; look, look! it stands upright,

Like lime-twigs set to catch my winged soul!
Give me some drink; and bid the apothecary
Bring the strong poison that I bought of him.

Night.

The gaudy, blabbing, and remorseful day
Is crept into the bosom of the sea;
And now loud howling wolves arouse the jades
That drag the tragic melancholy night;
Who with their drowsy, slow, and flagging
wings,
Clip dead men's graves, and from their misty
Breathe foul contagious darkness in the air.

Kent.

Kent, in the commentaries Cæsar writ,
Is term'd the civil'st place of all this isle:
Sweet is the country, because full of riches;
The people liberal, valiant, active, wealthy.

Lord Say's Apology for himself.

Justice, with favor, have I always done;
Prayers and tears have mov'd me, gifts could never.

When have I aught exacted at your hands,
Kent to maintain, the king, the realm, and you?
Large gifts have I bestowed on learned clerks,
Because my book preferr'd me to the king:
And—seeing ignorance is the curse of God,
Knowledge the wing wherewith we fly to
heaven,

Unless you be possess'd with devilish spirit,
You cannot but forbear to murder me.

§ 24. THE 3d. PART OF HENRY VI.

SHAKSPEARE.

The Transports of a Crown.

—Do but think

How sweet a thing it is to wear a crown;
Within whose circuit is Elysium,
And all that poets feign of bliss and joy.

A hungry Lion.

So looks the pent-up lion o'er the wretch

That trembles under his devouring paws ;
And so he walks insulting o'er his prey ;
And so he comes to rend his limbs asunder.

The Duke of York on the gallant behaviour of his Sons.

My sons—God knows what hath bechanced them :
But this I know—they have demean'd them-
Like men born to renown, by life, or death.
Three times did Richard make a lane to me,
And thrice cried, " Courage, father! fight it out!"

And full as oft came Edward to my side,
With purple falchion painted to the hilt
In blood of those that had encounter'd him :
And when the hardest warriors did retire,
Richard cried, " Charge! and give no foot of ground!"

And cried, " A crown, or else a glorious tomb!
A sceptre, or an earthly sepulchre!"
With this we charg'd again; but out, alas!
We bodg'd again; as I have seen a swan
With bootless labor swim against the tide,
And spend her strength with over-matching waves.

A Father's Passion on the Murder of a favorite Child.

O tiger's heart, wrapp'd in a woman's hide!
How couldst thou drain the life-blood of the
To bid the father wipe his eyes withal, [child,
And yet be seen to bear a woman's face?
Women are soft, mild, pitiful, and flexible;
Thou stern, obdurate, flinty, rough, remorseless.

That face of his the hungry cannibals
Would not have touch'd, would not have stain'd with blood;

But you are more inhuman, more inexorable—
O, ten times more, than tigers of Hyrcania.
See, ruthless queen, a hapless father's tears:
This cloth thou dipp'dst in blood of my sweet boy,

And I with tears do wash the blood away.
Keep thou the napkin, and go boast of this;
And, if thou tell'st the heavy story right,
Upon my soul the hearers will shed tears;
Yea, even my foes will shed fast-falling tears,
And say, " Alas, it was a piteous deed!"

The Duke of York in Battle.

Methought, he bore him in the thickest troop,
As doth a lion in a herd of neat;
Or as a bear, encompass'd round with dogs,
Who having pinch'd a few, and made them cry,
The rest stand all aloof, and bark at him.

The Morning.

See how the morning opes her golden gates,
And takes her farewell of the glorious sun!
How well resembles it the prime of youth,
Trim'd like a youngling prancing to his love!

The Morning's Dawn.

The battle fares like to the morning's war,
When dying clouds contend with growing light;
What time the shepherd, blowing of his nails,
Can neither call it perfect day nor night.

The Blessings of a Shepherd's Life.

O God! methinks it were a happy life,
To be no better than a homely swain;
To sit upon a hill, as I do now,
To carve out dials quaintly, point by point,
Thereby to see the minutes how they run:
How many make the hour full complete,
How many hours bring about the day,
How many days will finish up the year,
How many years a mortal man may live:
When this is known, then to divide the times:
So many hours must I tend my flock;
So many hours must I take my rest;
So many hours must I contemplate;
So many hours must I sport myself;
So many days my ewes have been with young;
So many weeks ere the poor fools will yearn;
So many months ere I shall shear the fleece;
So minutes, hours, days, weeks, months, and years,

Pass'd over to the end they were created,
Would bring white hairs unto a quiet grave.
Ah, what a life were this! how sweet! how lovely!

Gives not the hawthorn bush a sweeter shade
To shepherds, looking on their silly sheep,
Than doth a rich embroider'd canopy
To kings, that fear their subjects' treachery?
O, yes, it doth; a thousand-fold it doth.
And to conclude,—the shepherd's homely curds,
His cold thin drink out of his leather bottle,
His wonted sleep under a fresh tree's shade,
All which secure and sweetly he enjoys,
Is far beyond a prince's delicacies,
His viands sparkling in a golden cup,
His body couched in a curious bed,
When care, mistrust, and treason wait on him.

Mob.

Look, as I blow this feather from my face,
And as the air blows it to me again,
Obeying with my wind when I do blow,
And yielding to another when it blows,
Commanded always by the greater gust;
Such is the lightness of you common men.

A Simile on ambitious Thoughts.

Why, then, I do but dream on sov'reignty;
Like one that stands upon a promontory,
And spies a far-off shore where he would tread,
Wishing his foot were equal with his eye!
And chides the sea that sunders him from thence,
Saying—he'll lade it dry to have his way.

Gloucester's Deformity.

Why, love forswore me in my mother's womb,
And, for I should not deal in her soft laws,
She did corrupt frail nature with some bribe
To shrink mine arm up like a wither'd shrub;
To make an envious mountain on my back,
Where sits deformity to mock my body;
To shape my legs of an unequal size:
To disproportion me in every part,
Like to a chaos, or an unlick'd bear-whelp,
That carries no impression like the dam.
And am I then a man to be lov'd?

Gloucester's Dissimulation.

Why, I can smile, and murder while I smile:
And cry, content, to that which grieves my
heart;

And wet my cheeks with artificial tears;
And frame my face to all occasions:
I'll drown more sailors than the mermaid shall;
I'll slay more gazers than the basilisk;
I'll play the orator as well as Nestor,
Deceive more slyly than Ulysses could,
And, like a Sinon, take another Troy:
I can add colors to theameleon;
Change shapes with Proteus, for advantages,
And set the murd'rous Machiavel to school.
Can I do this, and cannot get a crown?

Henry VI. on his own Lenity.

I have not stopp'd mine ears to their demands,
Nor posted off their suits with slow delays;
My pity hath been balm to heal their wounds,
My mildness hath allay'd their swelling griefs,
My mercy dried their water-flowing tears.
I have not been desirous of their wealth,
Nor much oppress'd them with great subsidies,
Nor forward of revenge, tho' they much err'd.

The Earl of Warwick's dying Speech.

Ah, who is nigh? Come to me, friend or foe,
And tell me who is victor, York or Warwick?
Why ask I that? My mangled body shows;
My blood, my want of strength, my sick heart
That I must yield my body to the earth, [shows
And, by my fall, the conquest to my foe.

Thus yields the cedar to the axe's edge,
Whose arms gave shelter to the princely eagle,
Under whose shade the ramping lion slept;
Whose top-branch overpeer'd Jove's spreading tree, [wind.
And kept low shrubs from winter's powerful
These eyes, that now are dimm'd with death's
black veil,

Have been as piercing as the mid-day sun,
To search the secret treasons of the world.
The wrinkles in my brows, now fill'd with
Were liken'd oft to kingly sepulchres; [blood,
For who liv'd king, but I could dig his grave?
And who durst smile when Warwick bent his
brow?

Lo, now my glory smear'd in dust and blood!
My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
E'en now forsake me; and, of all my lands,
Is nothing left me, but my body's length.

Queen Margaret's Speech before the Battle of Tewkesbury.

Lords, Knights, and Gentlemen, what I should say,
My tears gainsay; for every word I speak,
Ye see, I drink the water of my eyes. [reign,
Therefore, no more but this: Henry, your sove-
Is prisoner to the foe, his state usurp'd,
His realm a slaughter-house, his subjects slain,
His statutes cancell'd, and his treasure spent;
And yonder is the wolf that makes this spoil:
You fight in justice: then, in God's name, lords,
Be valiant, and give signal to the fight.

Omens on the Birth of Richard III.

The owl shriek'd at thy birth, an evil sign;
The night-crow cried, a boding luckless tune;

Dogs howl'd, and hideous tempests shook down
trees;

The raven rook'd her on the chimney's top,
And chattering pies in dismal discord sung:
Thy mother felt more than a mother's pain,
And yet brought forth less than a mother's
To wit—an indigest, deformed lump, [hope;
Not like the fruit of such a goodly tree. [born,
Teeth had'st thou in thy head when thou wast
To signify—thou cam'st to bite the world:
And, if the rest be true which I have heard,
Thou cam'st “into the world with thy legs forward.”

§ 25. THE LIFE OF HENRY VIII.

SHAKESPEARE.

Anger.

—To climb steep hills,
Requires slow pace at first. Anger is like
A full-hot horse; who, being allow'd his way,
Self-mettle tires him.

Action to be carried on with Resolution.

——If I am
Traduc'd by ignorant tongues, which neither
My faculties, nor person, yet will be [know
The chronicles of my doing—let me say,
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. We must not
Our necessary actions, in the fear [stint
To cope malicious censurers; which ever,
As rav'nous fishes, do a vessel follow
That is new-trimm'd; but benefit no further Than vainly longing. What we oft do best,
By sick interpreters, once weak ones, is
Not ours, or not allow'd; what worst, as oft
Hitting a grosser quality, is cried up
For our best act. If we shall stand still,
In fear our motion will be mock'd or carp'd at,
We should take root here where we sit, or sit
State-statues only.

New Customs.

——New customs,
Though they be never so ridiculous,
Nay, let 'em be unmanly, yet are follow'd.
The Duke of Buckingham's Prayer for the King.

——May he live
Longer than I have time to tell his years!
Ever beloved, and loving, may his rule be!
And, when old time shall lead him to his end,
Goodness and he fill up one monument!
Dependants not to be too much trusted by great Men.

This from a dying man receive as certain:
Where you are liberal of your loves and counsels, [friends,
Be sure you be not loose: for those you make
And give your hearts to, when they once perceive

The least rub in your fortunes, fall away
Like water from ye, never found again
But where they mean to sink ye.

A Good Wife.

——A loss of her,
That, like a jewel, has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre:
Of her, that loves him with that excellence
That angels love good men with; even of her,

That when the greatest stroke of fortune falls,
Will bless a king.

The Blessings of a low Station.

——'Tis better to be lowly born,
And range with humble livers in content,
Than to be perk'd up in a glist'ring grief,
And wear a golden sorrow.

Queen Catharine's Speech to her Husband.

———Alas, Sir,
In what have I offended you? What cause
Hath my behaviour given to your displeasure,
That thus you should proceed to put me off,
And take your good grace from me? Heaven
witness,

I have been to you a true and humble wife,
At all times to your will conformable:
Ever in fear to kindle your dislike,
Yea, subject to your count'nance; glad or sorry
As I saw it inclin'd. When was the hour,
I ever contradicted your desire, [friends
Or made it not mine too? Which of your
Have I not strove to love, although I knew
He were mine enemy? What friend of mine,
That had to him deriv'd your anger, did I
Continue in my liking? nay, gave notice,
He was from thence discharg'd? Sir, call to mind
That I have been your wife, in this obedience,
Upward of twenty years; and have been bless'd
With many children by you. If, in the course
And process of this time, you can report,
And prove it too, against mine honor aught,
My bond to wedlock, or my love and duty,
Against your sacred person, in God's name
Turn me away; and let the foul'st contempt
Shut door upon me, and so give me up
To the sharpest kind of justice.

Queen Catharine's Speech to Cardinal Wolsey.

——You are meek and humble mouth'd;
You sign your place and calling, in full seeming
With meekness and humility: but your heart
Is cramm'd with arrogancy, spleen, and pride.
You have, by fortune, and his highness' favours, [mounted,
Gone slightly o'er low steps; and now are Where pow'rs are your retainers: and your
words,
Domestics to you, serve your will, as't please
Yourself-pronounce their office. I must tell you,
You tender more your person's honor, than
Your high profession spiritual.

King Henry's Character of Queen Catharine.

That man i' the world who shall report he has
A better wife, let him in nought be trusted,
For speaking false in that: Thou art, alone,
(If thy rare qualities, sweet gentleness,
Thy meekness saint-like, wife-like government,
Obeying in commanding, and thy parts
Sovereign and pious else, could but speak thee
The queen of earthly queens. [out]

On her own Merit.

Have I liv'd thus long (let me speak myself,
Since virtue finds no friends) a wife, a true one?
A woman (I dare say without vain-glory)
Never yet branded with suspicion?
Have I with all my full affection

Still met the king? lov'd him next Heaven?
obey'd him?

Been, out of fondness, superstitious to him?
Almost forgot my prayers to content him?
And am I thus rewarded? 'Tis not well, lords.
Bring me a constant woman to her husband,
One that ne'er dream'd a joy beyond his pleasure;

And to that woman, when she has done most,
Yet I will add an honor—a great patience.

Queen Catharine compared to a Lily.

Like the lily, [rish'd,
That once was mistress of the field, and flou-
I'll hang my head, and perish.

Obedience to Princes.

The hearts of princes kiss obedience,
So much they love it: but to stubborn spirits
They swell and grow as terrible as storms.

Horror, its outward Effects.

——Some strange commotion
Is in his brain: he bites his lip, and starts;
Stops on a sudden, looks upon the ground,
Then lays his finger on his temple: straight
Springs out into fast gait; then stops again,
Strikes his breast hard; and anon he casts
His eye against the moon: in most strange pos-
We've seen him set himself. [tures

Firm Allegiance.

——Though perils did [and
Abound as thick as thought could make em,
Appear in forms more horrid; yet my duty,
As doth a rock against the chiding flood,
Should the approach of this wild river break,
And stand unshaken yours.

Anger, its external Effects.

What sudden anger's this? How have I reap'd
He parted frowning from me, as if ruin [it?
Leap'd from his eyes: so looks the chafed
lion [him;
Upon the daring huntsman that has gall'd
Then makes him nothing.

Falling Greatness.

——Nay, then farewell! [greatness;
I have touch'd the highest point of all my
And, from that full meridian of my glory,
I haste now to my setting. I shall fall,
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more.

The Vicissitudes of Life.

So farewell to the little good you bear me.
Farewell, a long farewell, to all my greatness!
This is the state of man: To-day he puts forth
The tender leaves of hope, to-morrow blossoms, [him;
And bears his blushing honors thick upon
The third day comes a frost, a killing frost;
And when he thinks, good easy man, full surely
His greatness is a ripening, nips his root,
And then he falls, as I do. I have ventur'd,
Like little wanton boys, that swim on bladders,
This many summers in a sea of glory;
But far beyond my depth: my high-blown pride [me,
At length broke under me; and now has left
Weary, and old with service, to the mercy
Of a rude stream, that must for ever hide me.

Vain pomp and glory of this world, I hate ye!
I feel my heart new open'd. 'O, how wretched
Is that poor man that hangs on princes' favors!
There is, betwixt that smile we would aspire to,
The sweet aspect of princes, and our ruin,
More pangs and fears than war or women have,
And, when he falls, he falls like Lucifer,
Never to hope again.

Cardinal Wolsey's Speech to Cromwell.

Cromwell, I did not think to shed a tear
In all my miseries; but thou hast forc'd me,
Out of thy honest truth, to play the woman.
Let's dry our eyes: and thus far hear me, Cromwell;

And, when I am forgotten, as I shall be,
And sleep in dull cold marble, where no mention

Of me must more be heard, say then, I taught
Say, Wolsey, that once rode the waves of glory,
And sounded all the depths and shoals of honor,

Found thee a way, out of his wreck, to rise in;
A sure and safe one, tho' thy master miss'd it.
Mark but my fall, and that which ruin'd me.
Cromwell, I charge thee, fling away ambition;
By that sin fell the angels; how can man then,
(Th' image of his Maker) hope to win by 't?
Love thyself last: cherish those hearts that hate
thee;

Corruption wins not more than honesty.
Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Be just, and fear not:
Let all the ends thou aim'st at, be thy country's,
Thy God's, and truth's; then if thou fall'st, O
Cromwell,

Thou fall'st a blessed martyr. Serve the king;
And pr'ythee, lead me in:—

There take an inventory of all I have,
To the last penny: 'tis the king's: My robe,
And my integrity to Heaven, is all [well,
I dare now call mine own. O Cromwell, Crom-
Had I but serv'd my God with half the zeal
I serv'd my king, he would not in mine age
Have left me naked to mine enemies!

Applause.

Such a noise arose

As the shrouds make at sea in a stiff tempest,
As loud, and to as many tunes: Hats, cloaks, (Doublets, I think) flew up; and had their faces

Been loose, this day they had been lost. Such
I never saw before. Great-bellied women,
That had not half a week to go, like rams
In the old time of war, would shake the press,
And make 'em reel before 'em. No man living
Could say, "this is my wife," there; all were
So strangely in one piece. [woven

Cardinal Wolsey's Death.

At last, with easy roads, he came to Leicester,
Lodg'd in the abbey; where the rev'rend abbot,
With all his convent, honorably receiv'd him;
To whom he gave these words: "O father abbot,
An old man, broken with the storms of state,
Is come to lay his weary bones among ye:
Give him a little earth for charity!"
So went to bed: where eagerly his sickness

Pursued him still; and three nights after this,
About the hour of eight (which he himself
Foretold should be his last), full of repentance,
Continual meditations, tears, and sorrows,
He gave his honors to the world again,
His blessed part to Heaven, and slept in peace.

His Vices and Virtues.

So may he rest; his faults lie gently on him!
Yet thus far, Griffith, give me leave to speak him,
And yet with charity—he was a man
Of an unbounded stomach, ever ranking
Himself with princes: one, that by suggestion
Tied all the kingdom: simony was fair play;
His own opinion was his law: I' the presence
He would say untruths; and be ever double,
Both in his words and meaning: He was never,
But where he meant to ruin, pitiful:
His promises were, as he then was, mighty!
But his performance, as he now is, nothing.
Of his own body he was ill, and gave
The clergy ill example.

Griff. Noble Madam,
Men's evil manners live in brass; their virtues
We write in water. - - - - -

- - - - - This cardinal,
Though from an humble stock, undoubtedly Was fashion'd to much honor. From his cradle

He was a scholar, and a ripe and good one;
Exceeding wise, fair spoken, and persuading:
Lofty and sour to them that lov'd him not;
But, to those men that sought him, sweet as summer.

And though he were unsatisfied in getting (Which was a sin), yet in bestowing, madam,
He was most princely; ever witness for him,
Those twins of learning that he rais'd in you,
Ipswich and Oxford! one of which fell with
him,

Unwilling to out-live the good he did it:
The other, though unfinish'd, yet so famous,
So excellent in art, and still so rising,
That Christendom shall ever speak his virtue.
His overthrow heap'd happiness upon him;
For then, and not till then, he felt himself,
And found the blessedness of being little.

And, to add greater honors to his age
Than man could give him, he died fearing God.

Malicious Men.

—Men that make
Envy and crooked malice nourishment,
Dare bite the best.—

A Church-Man.

—Love and meekness, Lord,
Become a churchman better than ambition,
Win straying souls with modesty again,
Cast none away.

Inhumanity.

—"Tis a cruelty,
To load a falling man.—

Archbishop Cranmer's Prophecy.

—Let me speak, Sir,
For Heav'n now bids me; and the words I utter Let none think flattery, for they'll find them truth. [her!]
This royal infant (Heaven still move about
Though in a cradle, yet now promises

Upon this land a thousand, thousand blessings,
Which timeshall bring to ripeness. She shall be (But few now living can behold that goodness)
A pattern to all princes living with her,
And all that shall succeed: Sheba was never
More covetous of wisdom, and fair virtue,
Than this pure soul shall be. All princely
graces,

That mould up such a mighty piece as this,
With all the virtues that attend the good, [her;
Shall still be doubled on her. Truth shall nurse
Holy and heavenly thoughts still counsel her;
She shall be lov'd and fear'd. Her own shall bless her;

Her foes shake like a field of beaten corn,
And hang their heads with sorrow. Good grows with her.

In her days every man shall eat in safety,
Under his own vine, what he plants; and sing
The merry songs of peace to all his neighbours.
God shall be truly known: and those about her
From her shall read the perfect ways of honor,
And by those claim their greatness, not by
blood.

Nor shall this peace sleep with her; but, as when
The bird of wonder dies, the maiden phoenix,
Her ashes new create another heir,
As great in admiration as herself;
So shall she leave her blessedness to one (When Heaven shall call her from this cloud of darkness)

Who, from the sacred ashes of her honor,
Shall star-like rise, as great in fame as she was,
And so stand fix'd: Peace, plenty, love, truth,
terror,

That were the servants to this chosen infant,
Shall then be his, and like a vine grow to him;
Wherever the bright sun of heaven shall shine,
His honor and the greatness of his name Shall be, and make new nations. He shall flourish,

And, like a mountain cedar, reach his branches
To all the plains about him: our children's Shall see this, and bless Heaven. [children

§ 26. THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING JOHN. SHAKSPEARE.

New Titles.

"GOOD-den, Sir Richard—God a' mercy fellow,"

And if his name be George, I'll call him Peter:
For new-made honor doth forget men's names;
'Tis too respective and too sociable
For your conversion. Now your traveller—
He and his tooth-pick at my worship's mess:
And when my knightly stomach is suffic'd,
Why then I suck my teeth, and catechise
My picked man of countries:—My dear Sir,
(Thus leaning on mine elbow, I begin)

"I shall beseech you"—that is question now;
And then comes answer like an A B C book;
"O Sir," says answer, "at your best command,
"At your employment, at your service, Sir:"—
"No, Sir," says question, "I, sweet Sir, at yours."

And so, ere answer knows what question would, (Saving in dialogue of compliment;

And talking of the Alps and Apennines,
The Pyrenean, and the river Po),
It draws towards supper in conclusion, so.
But this is worshipful society,
And fits the mounting spirit, like myself:
For he is but a bastard to the time,
That doth not smack of observation.

A Description of England.

That pale, that white-fac'd shore,
Whose foot spurns back the ocean's roaring
tides,

And coops from other lands her islanders;
Even till that England, hedg'd in with the main,
That water-walled bulwark, still secure
And confident from foreign purposes,
Even till that utmost corner of the west,
Salute thee for her king.

Description of an English Army.

His marches are expedient to this town,
His forces strong, his soldiers confident.
With him along is come the mother queen,
An Até, stirring him to blood and strife;
With her, her niece, the lady Blanch of Spain;
With them, a bastard of the king deceas'd;
And all the unsettled humors of the land—
Rash, inconsiderate, fiery voluntaries,
With ladies' faces, and fierce dragons' spleens—
Have sold their fortunes at their native homes,
Bearing their birthrights proudly on their backs,
To make a hazard of new fortunes here.
In brief, a braver choice of dauntless spirits,
Than now the English bottoms have waft o'er,
Did never float upon the swelling tide,
To do offence and scath in Christendom.
The interruption of their churlish drums
Cuts off more circumstance; they are at hand.

Courage.

By how much unexpected, by so much
We must awake endeavour for defence;
For courage mounteth with occasion.

A Boaster.

What cracker is this same, that deafs our ears
With this abundance of superfluous breath?

Description of Victory, by the French.

You men of Angiers, open wide your gates,
And let young Arthur, Duke of Bretagne, in;
Who, by the hand of France, this day hath made [ther,
Much work for tears in many an English mo-
Whose sons lie scatter'd on the bleeding ground;
Many a widow's husband grovelling lies,
Coldly embracing the discolored earth;
And victory, with little loss, doth play
Upon the dancing banners of the French;
Who are at hand, triumphantly display'd,
To enter conquerors.

By the English.

Rejoice, you men of Angiers, ring your bells;
King John, your king, and England's, doth approach,
Commander of this hot malicious day!
Their armors that march'd hence so silver
bright,
Hither return all gilt with Frenchmen's blood;
There stuck no plume in any English crest,

That is removed by a staff of France ;
Our colours do return in those same hands
That did display them when we first march'd
forth ;

And, like a jolly troop of huntsmen, come
Our lusty English, all with purpled hands,
Dyed in the dying slaughter of their foes.

A complete Lady.

If lusty love should go in quest of beauty,
Where should he find it fairer than in Blanch ?
If zealous love should go in search of virtue,
Where should he find it purer than in Blanch ?
If love, ambitious, sought a match of birth,
Whose veins bound richer blood than lady Blanch ?

On Commodity, or Self-Interest.

—Rounded in the ear

With that same purpose-changer, that sly devil ;
That broker, that still breaks the pate of faith ;
That daily break-vow ; he that wins of all,
Of kings, of beggars, old men, young men,
maids—

Who having no external thing to lose [that ;
But the word maid—cheats the poor maid of
That smooth-fac'd gentleman, tickling commodity—

Commodity, the bias of the world ;
The world, which of itself is poised well
Made to run even, upon even ground ;
Till this advantage, this vile-drawing bias,
This sway of motion, this commodity,
Makes it take head from all indifferency,
From all direction, purpose, course, intent ;
And this same bias, &c.

A Woman's Fears.

Thou shalt be punish'd for thus frightening
me,

For I am sick, and capable of fears ;
Oppress'd with wrongs, and therefore full of
fears ;

A widow, husbandless, subject to fears ;
A woman, naturally born to fears ;
And tho' thou now confess thou didst but jest,
With my vex'd spirits I cannot take a truce,
But they will quake and tremble all this day.

Tokens of Grief.

What dost thou mean by shaking of thy head ?
Why dost thou look so sadly on my son ?
What means that hand upon that breast of
thine ?

Why holds thine eye that lamentable rheum,
Like a proud river peering o'er its bounds ?
Be these sad signs confirmers of thy words ?
Then speak again ; not all thy former tale,
But this one word, whether thy tale be true.

A Mother's Fondness for a beautiful Child.

If thou, that bidd'st me be content, were
grim,
Ugly, and sland'rous to thy mother's womb,
Full of unpleasing blots, and sightless stains,
Lame, foolish, crooked, swart, prodigious,
Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending
marks,

I would not care, I would then be content ;
For then I should not love thee : no, nor thou
Become thy great birth, nor deserve a crown.

But thou art fair ; and at thy birth, dear boy !
Nature and fortune join'd to make thee great :
Of nature's gifts thou mayst with lilies boast,
And with the half-blown rose.

Grief.

I will instruct my sorrows to be proud :
For grief is proud, and makes his owner stout.

Constance to Austria.

O Lymoges ! O Austria ! thou dost shame
That bloody spoil : thou slave, thou wretch,
thou coward ;

Thou little valiant, great in villany !
Thou ever strong upon the stronger side !
Thou fortune's champion, that dost never fight,
But when her humorous ladyship is by,
To teach thee safety ! thou art perjur'd too,
And sooth'st up greatness. What a fool art
thou,

A ramping fool ! to brag, and stamp, and swear,
Upon my party ! thou cold-blooded slave,
Hast thou not spoke like thunder on my side ?
Been sworn my soldier ? bidding me depend
Upon thy stars, thy fortune, and thy strength ?
And dost thou now fall over to my foes ?
Thou wear a lion's hide ! doff it, for shame,
And hang a calf's skin on those recreant limbs.

The Horrors of a Conspiracy.

I had a thing to say—but let it go :
The sun is in the heaven ; and the proud day,
Attended with the pleasures of the world,
Is all too wanton, and too full of gaudes,
To give me audience. If the midnight-bell
Did, with his iron tongue and brazen mouth,
Sound one unto the drowsy race of night ;
If this same were a church-yard where we stand,

And thou possessed with a thousand wrongs :
Or if that surly spirit, melancholy,
Had bak'd thy blood, and made it heavy, thick, (Which else runs tickling up and down the
veins,

Making that idiot laughter keep men's eyes,
And strain their cheeks to idle merriment,
A passion hateful to my purposes) ;
Or if that thou couldst see me without eyes,
Hear me without thine ears, and make reply
Without a tongue, using conceit alone
Without eyes, ears, and harmful sound of
words ;

Then in despite of brooded watchful day,
I would into thy bosom pour my thoughts ;
But, ah ! I will not.

A Mother's Ravings.

I am not mad ; this hair I tear, is mine ;
My name is Constance ; I was Geoffrey's wife ;
Young Arthur is my son, and he is lost :
I am not mad—I would to Heaven I were !
For then 'tis like I should forget myself :
O, if I could, what grief should I forget !
Preach some philosophy to make me mad,
And thou shalt be canoniz'd, Cardinal ;
For, being not mad, but sensible of grief,
My reasonable part produces reason
How I may be deliver'd of these woes,
And teaches me to kill or hang myself.
If I were mad, I should forget my son,
Or madly think, a babe of clouts were he :

I am not mad: too well, too well I feel
The diff'rent plague of each calamity.

Apostrophe to Death.

O amiable, lovely death!
Thou odoriferous stench! sound rottenness!
Arise forth from the couch of lasting night,
Thou hate and terror to prosperity,
And I will kiss thy detestable bones;
And put my eye-balls in thy vaulty brows;
And ring these fingers with thy household
worms;
And stop this gap of breath with fulsome dust,
And be a carrion monster like thyself:
Come, grin on me; and I will think thou smil'st
And buss thee as thy wife! misery's love,
O, come to me!

A Mother's Grief.

Father Cardinal, I have heard you say,
That we shall see and know our friends in
heaven:
If that be true, I shall see my boy again;
For, since the birth of Cain, the first male-
To him that did but yesterday suspire, [child,
There was not such a gracious creature born.
But now will canker sorrow eat my bud,
And chase the native beauty from his cheek,
And he will look as hollow as a ghost,
As dim and meagre as an ague's fit;
And so he'll die; and, rising so again,
When I shall meet him in the court of heaven,
I shall not know him: therefore, never, never
Must I behold my pretty Arthur more.

Pand. You hold too heinous a respect of grief.

Const. He talks to me, that never had a son.

K. Phil. You are as fond of grief as of your child. [child,

Const. Grief fills the room up of my absent
Lies in his bed, walks up and down with me;
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words;
Remembers me of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form;
Then have I reason to be fond of grief.

Despondency.

There's nothing in this world can make me
joy:
Life is as tedious as a twice-told tale,
Vexing the dull ear of a drowsy man.

Departing Diseases.

Before the curing of a strong disease,
Even in the instant of repair and health,
The fit is strongest; evils that take leave,
On their departure most of all show evil.

Danger lays Hold of any Support.

He that stands upon a slipp'ry place,
Makes nice of no vile hold to stay him up.

Arthur's pathetic Speeches to Hubert.

Methinks, nobody should be sad but I:
Yet, I remember, when I was in France,
Young gentlemen would be as sad as night,
Only for wantonness. By my Christendom,
So I were out of prison, and kept sheep,
I should be merry as the day is long

Have you the heart? when your head did but ake,

I knit my handkerchief about your brows
(The best I had, a princess wrought it me),
And I did never ask it you again:
And with my hand at midnight held your
head;

And like the watchful minutes to the hour,
Still and anon cheer'd up the heavy time;
Saying, What lack you? and, Where lies your grief?

Or, What good love may I perform for you?
Many a poor man's son would have lain still,
And ne'er have spoke a loving word to you;
But you at your sick service had a prince.
Nay, you may think, my love was crafty love,
And call it cunning: do, an if you will;
If Heaven be pleas'd that you must use me ill,
Why then you must.—Will you put out mine
eyes?

These eyes that never did, nor never shall,
So much as frown on you?—

Alas! what need you be so boist'rous rough?
I will not struggle, I will stand stone-still.
For Heaven's sake, Hubert, let me not be bound!

Nay hear me, Hubert, drive these men away,
And I will sit as quiet as a lamb;
I will not stir, nor wince, nor speak a word,
Nor look upon the iron angerly: [you,
Thrust but these men away, and I'll forgive
Whatever torment you do put me to.—

Is there no remedy?

Hub. None, but to lose your eyes.

Arth. O Heaven! that there were but a mote
in yours,

A grain, a dust, a gnat, a wand'ring hair,
Any annoyance in that precious sense!
Then, feeling what small things are boist'rous
there,

Your vile intent must needs seem horrible.

To add to Perfection, superfluous and suspicious.

To gild refined gold, to paint the lily,
To throw a perfume on the violet,
To smooth the ice, or add another hue
Unto the rainbow, or with taper light
To seek the beauteous eye of heaven to garnish,
Is wasteful and ridiculous excess.

In this the antique and well-noted face
Of plain old form is much disfigured:
And, like a shifted wind unto a sail,
It makes the course of thoughts to fetch about;
Startles and frights consideration;
Makes sound opinions sick, and truth suspected,
For putting on so new a fashion'd robe.

Murderer's Look.

This is the man should do the bloody deed;
The image of a wicked heinous fault
Lives in his eye; that close aspect of his
Does show the mood of a much troubled breast.

Struggling Conscience.

The color of the king doth come and go
Between his purpose and his conscience,

Like heralds 'twixt two dreadful battles set:
His passion is so ripe, it needs must break.

News-tellers on the Death of Arthur.

Old men and beldams, in the streets,
Do prophesy upon it dangerously: [mouths;
Young Arthur's death is common in their
And, when they talk of him, they shake their heads,

And whisper one another in the ear;
And he that speaks doth gripe the hearer's wrist;

Whiles he that hears makes fearful action,
With wrinkled brows, with nods, with rolling
eyes.

I saw a smith stand with his hammer, thus,
The whilst his iron did on the anvil cool,
With open mouth, swallowing a tailor's news;
Who with his shears and measure in his hand,
Standing on slippers (which his nimble haste
Had falsely thrust upon contrary feet),
Told of a many thousand warlike French,
That were embattled and rank'd in Kent:
Another lean unwash'd artificer
Cuts off his tale, and talks of Arthur's death.

Kings' evil Purposes too servilely and hastily executed.

It is the curse of kings, to be attended
By slaves, that take their humors for a warrant
To break into the bloody house of life;
And, on the winking of authority,
To understand a law; to know a meaning
Of dangerous majesty, when, perchance, it
frowns
More upon humor than advis'd respect.

A Villain's Look, and wicked Zeal.

How oft the sight of means to do ill deeds
Makes deeds ill done! Hadst not thou been by,
A fellow by the hand of nature mark'd,
Quoted, and sign'd, to do a deed of shame,
This murder had not come into my mind:
Hadst thou but shook thy head, or made a
pause,

When I spake darkly what I purposed;
Or turn'd an eye of doubt upon my face,
Or bid me tell my tale in express words;
Deep shame had struck me dumb, made me
break off, [in me.
And those thy fears might have wrought fears

Hypocrisy.

Trust not those cunning waters of his eyes,
For villany is not without such rheum;
And he, long traded in it, makes it seem
Like rivers of remorse and innocency.

Despair.

If thou didst but consent
To this most cruel act, do but despair,
And, if thou want'st a cord, the smallest thread
That ever spider twisted from her womb
Will serve to strangle thee; a rush will be a beam [thyself,
To hang thee on: or, wouldst thou drown
Put but a little water in a spoon,
And it shall be as all the ocean,
Enough to stifle such a villain up.

A Man's Tears.

Let me wipe off this honorable dew,
That silverly doth progress on thy cheeks:
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This show'r blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd,
Than had I seen the vaulty top of heaven
Figur'd quite o'er with burning meteors.
Lift up thy brow, renowned Salisbury,
And with a great heart heave away this storm:
Commend these waters to those baby-eyes
That never saw the giant-world enrag'd;
Nor met with fortune other than at feasts,
Full warm of blood, of mirth, of gossiping.

Drums.

Strike up the drums, and let the tongue of war
Plead for our int'rest. - - - -
- - - - Do but start
An echo with the clamor of thy drum,
And even at hand a drum is ready brac'd,
That shall reverberate all as loud as thine:
Sound but another, and another shall,
As loud as thine, rattle the welkin's ear,
And mock the deep-mouth'd thunder.

The Approach of Death.

It is too late, the life of all his blood
Is touch'd corruptibly; and his pure brain (Which some suppose the soul's frail dwelling house)
Doth, by the idle comments that it makes,
Foretel the ending of mortality.

Madness occasioned by Poison.

Ay, marry, now my soul hath elbow-room;
It would not out at windows, nor at doors.
There is so hot a summer in my bosom,
That all my bowels crumble up to dust:
I am a scribbled form, drawn with a pen
Upon a parchment; and again this fire
Do I shrink up.

Poison'd—ill fare—dead, forsook, cast off:
And none of you will bid the winter come
To thrust his icy fingers in my maw;
Nor let my kingdom's rivers take their course
Thro' my burnt bosom; nor entreat the north
To make his bleak winds kiss my parch'd lips,
And comfort me with cold.

England invincible, if unanimous.

England never did (nor never shall)
Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
But when it first did help to wound itself.
Now these her princes are come home again,
Come the three corners of the world in arms,
And we shall shock them:—Nought shall make us rue,
If England to itself do rest but true.

§ 27. JULIUS CÆSAR. SHAKSPEARE.

Patriotism.

WHAT is it that you would impart to me?
If it be aught toward the general good,
Set honor in one eye, and death i' the other,

And I will look on both indifferently :
For, let the gods so speed me, as I love
The name of honor more than I fear death.

Cassius, in Contempt of Cæsar.

I was born free as Cæsar ; so were you :
We both have fed as well ; and we can both Endure the winter's cold as well as he.
For once, upon a raw and gusty day,
The troubled Tiber chafing with his shores,
Cæsar says to me, " Dar'st thou, Cassius, now
Leap in with me into this angry flood,
And swim to yonder point ?"—Upon the word,
Accoutred as I was, I plunged in,
And bade him follow : so, indeed, he did.
The torrent roar'd, and we did buffet it
With lusty sinews ; throwing it aside,
And stemming it with hearts of controversy.
But ere we could arrive the point propos'd,
Cæsar cried, " Help me, Cassius, or I sink."—
I, as Æneas, our great ancestor,
Did from the flames of Troy upon his shoulder
The old Anchises bear, so from the waves of Did I the tired Cæsar : and this man [Tiber
Is now become a god ; and Cassius is
A wretched creature, and must bend his body,
If Cæsar carelessly but nod on him.—
He had a fever when he was in Spain ;
And, when the fit was on him, I did mark
How he did shake : 'tis true, this god did shake ;
His coward lips did from their color fly ;
And that same eye, whose bend doth awe the
world,

Did lose his lustre ; I did hear him groan :
Ay, and that tongue of his, that bade the Romans
Mark him, and write his speeches in their books,
Alas ! it cried—" Give me some drink, Titinius"—

As a sick girl. Ye gods, it doth amaze me,
A man of such a feeble temper should
So get the start of this majestic world,
And bear the palm alone [Shout—Flourish.

Bru. Another general shout !

I do believe that these applauses are
For some new honors that are heap'd on Cæsar.

Cas. Why, man, he doth bestride the narrow
Like a Colossus ; and we petty men [world
Walk under his huge legs, and peep about
To find ourselves dishonorable graves.

Men at some time are masters of their fates :
The fault, dear Brutus, is not in our stars,
But in ourselves, that we are underlings.
Brutus, and Cæsar : what should be in that Cæsar ? [yours ?

Why should that name be sounded more than Write them together, yours is as fair a name ;
Sound them, it doth become the mouth as well ;
Weigh them, it is as heavy ; conjure with 'em,
Brutus will start a spirit as soon as Cæsar,
Now in the names of all the gods at once,
Upon what meat doth this our Cæsar feed,
That he is grown so great ? Age, thou art sham'd :
Rome, thou hast lost the breed of noble bloods !
When went there by an age, since the great flood,
But it was fam'd with more than with one man ?
When could they say till now, that talk'd of Rome,

That her wide walks encompass'd but one man ?

Cæsar's Dislike of Cassius.

Would he were fatter !—but I fear him not :
Yet if my name were liable to fear,
I do not know the man I should avoid
So soon as that spare Cassius. He reads much ;
He is a great observer, and he looks [plays,
Quite through the deeds of men ; he loves no
As thou dost, Antony ; he hears no music :
Seldom he smiles ; and smiles in such a sort,
As if he mock'd himself, and scorn'd his spirit
That could be mov'd to smile at any thing.
Such men as he be never at heart's ease,
Whiles they behold a greater than themselves ;
And therefore are they very dangerous.
I rather tell thee what is to be fear'd,
Than what I fear ; for always I am Cæsar.

Spirit of Liberty.

I know where I will wear this dagger then ;
Cassius from bondage will deliver Cassius :
Therein, ye gods, you make the weak most
strong ;

Therein, ye gods, you tyrants do defeat ;
Nor stony tower, nor walls of beaten brass,
Nor airless dungeon, nor strong links of iron,
Can be retentive to the strength of spirit ;
But life, being weary of these worldly bars,
Never lacks power to dismiss itself.
If I know this, know all the world besides,
That part of tyranny, that I do bear,
I can shake off at pleasure.

Ambition, covered with specious Humility.

But 'tis a common proof,
That lowliness is young ambition's ladder,
Whereto the climber upward turns his face ;
But when he once attains the upmost round,
He then unto the ladder turns his back,
Looks in the clouds, scorning the base degrees
By which he did ascend.

Conspiracy dreadful till executed.

Between the acting of a dreadful thing,
And the first motion, all the interim is Like a phantasma, or a hideous dream :
The genius and the mortal instruments
Are then in council ; and the state of man,
Like to a little kingdom, suffers then
The nature of an insurrection.

Conspiracy.

O, conspiracy ! [night,
Sham'st thou to show thy dangerous brow by
When evils are most free ? O, then, by day
Where wilt thou find a cavern dark enough
To mask thy monstrous visage ? Seek none,
Hide it in smiles and affability ; [conspiracy ;
For if thou path, thy native semblance on,
Not Erebus itself were dim enough
To hide thee from prevention.

Against Cruelty.

Gentle friends,
Let's kill him boldly, but not wrathfully ;
Let's carve him as a dish fit for the gods,
Not hew him as a carcase fit for hounds ;
And let our hearts, as subtle masters do,
Stir up their servants to an act of rage,
And after seem to chide them.

Sleep.

Enjoy the honey-heavy dew of slumber :

Thou hast no figures, nor no fantasies,
Which busy care draws in the brains of men,
Therefore thou sleep'st so sound.

Portia's Speech to Brutus.

You have ungently, Brutus,
Stole from my bed: and yesternight, at supper,
You suddenly arose and walk'd about,
Musing, and sighing, with your arms across:
And, when I ask'd you what the matter was,
You star'd upon me with ungentle looks:
I urg'd you further; then you scratch'd your head,
And too impatiently stamp'd with your foot:
Yet I insisted, yet you answer'd not;
But, with an angry wafture of your hand,
Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did;
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled; and, with-
Hoping it was but an effect of humor, [al,
Which sometime hath his hour with ev'ry man!
It will not let you eat, nor talk, nor sleep;
And, could it work so much upon your shape,
As it hath much prevail'd on your condition,
I should not know you, Brutus. Dear my lord,
Make me acquainted with your cause of grief.

Calphurnia to Cæsar, on the Prodigies seen the Night before his Death.

Cal. I never stood on ceremonies,
Yet now they fright me. There is one within,
Besides the things that we have heard and seen,
Recounts most horrid sights seen by the watch.
A lioness hath whelped in the streets; [dead:
And graves have yawn'd, and yielded up their
Fierce fiery warriors fight upon the clouds,
In ranks, and squadrons, and right form of war,
Which drizzled blood upon the Capitol:
The noise of battle hurtled in the air;
Horses did neigh, and dying men did groan:
And ghosts did shriek, and squeal about the streets.

O Cæsar! these things are beyond all use,
And I do fear them.

Cæsar. What can be avoided,
Whose end is purpos'd by the mighty gods?
Yet Cæsar shall go forth: for these predictions
Are to the world in general, as to Cæsar.

Cal. When beggars die, there are no comets seen: [princes.
The heavens themselves blaze forth the death of
Against the Fears of Death.

Cowards die many times before their death;
The valiant never taste of death but once.
Of all the wonders that I yet have heard,
It seems to me most stange, that men should
Seeing that death, a necessary end, [fear;
Will come, when it will come.

Danger.

Danger knows full well,
That Cæsar is more dangerous than he.
We are two lions litter'd in one day,
And I the elder and more terrible.

Envy.

My heart laments, that virtue cannot live
Out of the teeth of emulation.

Antony to the Corpse of Cæsar.

O mighty Cæsar! dost thou lie so low?
Are all thy conquests, glories, triumphs, spoils,
Shrunk to this little measure? Fare thee well!

His Address to the Conspirators.

I know not, gentlemen, what you intend,
Who else must be let blood, who else is rank:
If I myself, there is no hour so fit
As Cæsar's death's hour! nor no instrument
Of half that worth, as those your swords made rich
With the most noble blood of all this world.
I do beseech ye, if you bear me hard, [smoke,
Now, whilst your purpled hands do reek and Fulfil your pleasure. Live a thousand years,
I shall not find myself so apt to die;
No place will please me so, no mean of death,
As here by Cæsar, and by you cut off,
The choice and master spirits of this age.

Revenge.

Cæsar's spirit, ranging for revenge,
With Atë by his side, come hot from hell,
Shall in these confines, with a monarch's voice,
Cry, "Havoc!" and let slip the dogs of war.

Antony's Funeral Oration.

Friends, Romans, countrymen, lend me
your ears;
I come to bury Cæsar, not to praise him!
The evil that men do, lives after them;
The good is oft interred with their bones;
So let it be with Cæsar! The noble Brutus
Hath told you Cæsar was ambitious:
If it were so, it was a grievous fault;
And grievously hath Cæsar answer'd it.
Here, under leave of Brutus, and the rest,
(For Brutus is an honorable man;
So are they all, all honorable men)
Come I to speak in Cæsar's funeral.
He was my friend, faithful and just to me:
But Brutus says, he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honorable man.
He hath brought many captives home to Rome,
Whose ransoms did the general coffers fill:
Did this in Cæsar seem ambitious?
When that the poor have cried, Cæsar hath wept;
Ambition should be made of sterner stuff:
Yet Brutus says, he was ambitious;
And Brutus is an honourable man.
You all did see, that, on the Lupercal,
I thrice presented him a kingly crown, [tion?
Which he did thrice refuse. Was this ambi-
Yet Brutus says he was ambitious;
And, sure, he is an honourable man.
I speak not to disprove what Brutus spoke,
But here I am to speak what I do know.
You all did love him once, not without cause;
What cause withholds you then to mourn for
him?

O judgement, thou art fled to brutish beasts,
And men have lost their reason!—Bear with
me;

My heart is in the coffin there with Cæsar,
And I must pause till it come back to me.

But yesterday the word of Cæsar might
Have stood against the world: now lies he there,
And none so poor to do him reverence.
O masters! if I were dispos'd to stir
Your hearts and minds to mutiny and rage,
I should do Brutus wrong, and Cassius wrong,
Who, you all know, are honorable men:
I will not do them wrong; I rather choose

To wrong the dead, to wrong myself and you,
 Than I will wrong such honorable men.
 But here's a parchment with the seal of Cæsar;
 I found it in his closet, 'tis his will;
 Let but the commons hear this testament
 (Which, pardon me, I do not mean to read),
 And they would go and kiss dead Cæsar's
     wounds,
 And dip their napkins in his sacred blood;
 Yea, beg a hair of him for memory,
 And, dying, mention it within their wills,
 Bequeathing it, as a rich legacy,
 Unto their issue.

4 Pleb. We'll hear the will: read it, Mark Antony. [will.

All. The will, the will; we will hear Cæsar's

Ant. Have patience, gentle friends, I must not read it;

It is not meet you know how Cæsar lov'd you.
 You are not wood, you are not stones, but men;
 And, being men, hearing the will of Cæsar,
 It will inflame you, it will make you mad.

'Tis good you know not that you are his heirs;
 For if you should—O, what would come of it!

4 Pleb. Read the will; we will hear it Antony;
 You shall read us the will; Cæsar's will.

Ant. Will you be patient? will you stay
 I have o'ershot myself, to tell you of it. [a while?
 I fear, I wrong the honorable men

Whose daggers have stabb'd Cæsar—I do fear it.

4 Pleb. They were traitors:—honorable men!

All. The will! the testament! [will?

Ant. You will compel me then to read the Then make a ring about the corpse of Cæsar,
 And let me show you him that made the will.
 Shall I descend? and will you give me leave?

All. Come down.

2 Pleb. Descend.

[He comes down from the Pulpit.

Ant. If you have tears, prepare to shed them
     now.

You all do know this mantle: I remember
 The first time ever Cæsar put it on;
 'Twas on a summer's evening, in his tent,
 That day he overcame the Nervii:—
 Look! in this place ran Cassius' dagger through:
 See what a rent the envious Casca made;—
 Through this, the well-beloved Brutus stabb'd?
 And, as he pluck'd his cursed steel away,
 Mark how the blood of Cæsar follow'd it;
 As rushing out of doors, to be resolv'd
 If Brutus so unkindly knock'd, or no:
 For Brutus, as you know, was Cæsar's angel:
 Judge, O ye gods, how dearly Cæsar lov'd him!
 This was the most unkindest cut of all:
 For, when the noble Cæsar saw him stab,
 Ingratitude, more strong than traitor's arms,
 Quite vanquish'd him: then burst his mighty
     heart;

And, in his mantle muffling up his face,
 Even at the base of Pompey's statue,
 Which all the while ran blood, great Cæsar fell.
 O, what a fall was there, my countrymen!
 Then I, and you, and all of us fell down,
 Whilst bloody treason flourish'd over us.
 O, now you weep; and, I perceive, you feel
 The dint of pity; these are gracious drops.

Kind souls! what, weep you when you but behold
 Our Cæsar's vesture wounded? look you here!
 Here is himself, marr'd, as you see, with trait-

1 Pleb. O piteous spectacle! [tors.

2 Pleb. We will be reveng'd: revenge!

About—seek—burn—fire—kill—slay! let not a traitor live.

Ant. Good friends, sweet friends, let me not stir you up

To such a sudden flood of mutiny.
 They that have done this deed are honorable;
 What private griefs they have, alas! I know not,
 That made them do it: they are wise and honorable,

And will, no doubt, with reasons answer you.
 I come not, friends, to steal away your hearts;
 I am no orator, as Brutus is:

But, as you know me all, a plain blunt man,
 That love my friend; and that they know full
 That gave me public leave to speak of him. [well
 For I have neither wit, nor words, nor worth,
 Action, or utterance, nor the power of speech,
 To stir men's blood; I only speak right on;
 I tell you that which you yourselves do know;
 Show you sweet Cæsar's wounds, poor, poor dumb mouths!

And bid them speak for me: But were I Brutus,
 And Brutus Antony, there were an Antony
 Would ruffle up your spirits, and put a tongue
 In ev'ry wound of Cæsar, that should move
 The stones of Rome to rise and mutiny.

Ceremony insincere.

——Ever note, Lucilius,

When love begins to sicken and decay,
 It useth an enforced ceremony.
 There are no tricks in plain and simple faith;
 But hollow men, like horses hot at hand,
 Make gallant show and promise of their mettle;
 But when they should endure the bloody spur,
 They fall their crests, and, like deceitful jades,
 Sink in the trial.

Brutus and Cassius.

Cas. That you have wrong'd me, doth appear in this:

You have condemn'd and noted Lucius Pella,
 For taking bribes here of the Sardians;
 Wherein my letters praying on his side,
 Because I knew the man, were slighted of. [case.

Bru. You wrong'd yourself, to write in such a

Cas. In such a time as this, it is not meet
 That every nice offence should bear his comment.

Bru. Let me tell you, Cassius, you yourself
 Are much condemn'd to have an itching palm;
 To sell and mart your offices for gold
 To undeservers.

Cas. I an itching palm?

You know that you are Brutus that speak this,
 Or, by the gods, this speech were else your last.

Bru. The name of Cassius honors this corruption,

And chastisement doth therefore hide his head.

Cas. Chastisement!

Bru. Remember March, the ides of March remember!

Did not great Julius bleed for justice' sake?
 What villain touch'd his body, that did stab,
 And not for justice? What! shall one of us,

That struck the foremost man of all this world,
But for supporting robbers; shall we now
Contaminate our fingers with base bribes?
And sell the mighty space of our large honors,
For so much trash, as may be grasp'd thus?
I had rather be a dog, and bay the moon,
Than such a Roman!

Cas. Brutus, bay not me,
I'll not endure it: you forget yourself,
To hedge me in; I am a soldier, I,
Older in practice, abler than yourself
To make conditions.

Bru. Go to; you are not Cassius.

Cas. I am.

Bru. I say, you are not.

Cas. Urge me no more, I shall forget myself;
Have mind upon your health—tempt me no

Bru. Away, slight man! [further.

Cas. Is't possible?

Bru. Hear me, for I will speak.

Must I give way and room to your rash choler?
Shall I be frightened, when a madman stares?

Cas. O ye gods! ye gods! must I endure all this? [heart break;

Bru. All this! ay, more: fret, till your proud
Go, show your slaves how choleric you are,
And make your bondmen tremble. Must I budge?

Must I observe you? must I stand and crouch
Under your testy humor? By the gods,
You shall digest the venom of your spleen,
Tho' it do split you: for, from this day forth,
I'll use you for my mirth, yea, for my laughter,
When you are waspish.

Cas. Is it come to this?

Bru. You say you are a better soldier:
Let it appear so; make your vaunting true,
And it shall please me well: for mine own part,
I shall be glad to learn of noble men.

Cas. You wrong me ev'ry way—you wrong me, Brutus:

I said an elder soldier, not a better.

Did I say better?—

Bru. If you did, I care not. [mov'd me.

Cas. When Cæsar liv'd, he durst not thus have

Bru. Peace, peace; you durst not so have

Cas. I durst not? [tempted him.

Bru. No.

Cas. What! durst not tempt him?

Bru. For your life you durst not.

Cas. Do not presume too much upon my love,
I may do that I shall be sorry for. [for.

Bru. You have done that you should be sorry
There is no terror, Cassius, in your threats;
For I am arm'd so strong in honesty,
That they pass by me as the idle wind
Which I respect not. I did send to you
For certain sums of gold, which you denied me;
For I can raise no money by vile means:
By Heaven, I had rather coin my heart,
And drop my blood for drachmas, than to wring
From the hard hands of peasants their vile trash,
By any indirection. I did send

To you for gold to pay my legions, [Cassius?
Which you denied me: was that done like
Should I have answer'd Caius Cassius so?
When Marcus Brutus grows so covetous,

To lock such rascal counters from his friends,
Be ready, gods, with all your thunderbolts,
Dash him to pieces!

Cas. I denied you not.

Bru. You did.

Cas. I did not;—he was but a fool
That brought my answer back.—Brutus hath riv'd my heart:

A friend should bear a friend's infirmities,
But Brutus makes mine greater than they are.

Bru. I do not, till you practise them on me.

Cas. Come, Antony, and young Octavius,
Revenge yourselves alone on Cassius, [come,
For Cassius is a-weary of the world:

Hated by one he loves; brav'd by his brother;
Check'd like a bondman; all his faults observ'd,
Set in a note-book, learn'd, and conn'd by rote,
To cast into my teeth. O, I could weep

Myspirit from mine eyes!—There is my dagger,
And here my naked breast;—within, a heart
Dearer than Plutus' mine, richer than gold:

If that thou be'st a Roman, take it forth;
I, that denied thee gold, will give my heart:
Strike, as thou didst at Cæsar; for, I know,
When thou didst hate him worst, thou lov'dst
Than ever thou lov'dst Cassius. [him better

Bru. Sheath your dagger:

Be angry when you will, it shall have scope;
Do what you will, dishonor shall be humor.

O Cassius, you are yoked with a lamb,
That carries anger as the flint bears fire;
Who much enforced, shows a hasty spark,
And straight is cold again.

Cas. Hath Cassius liv'd

To be but mirth and laughter to his Brutus,
When grief, and blood ill-temper'd, vexeth him? [too.

Bru. When I spoke that, I was ill-temper'd

Cas. Do you confess so much? Give me your hand.

Bru. And my heart too. [Embracing.

Cas. O Brutus!

Bru. What is the matter? [me,

Cas. Hate you not love enough to bear with When that rash humor, which my mother gave me,

Makes me forgetful?

Bru. Yes, Cassius; and from henceforth,
When you are over-earnest with your Brutus,
He'll think your mother chides, and leave you so.

Bru. O, Cassius, I am sick of many griefs.

Cas. Of your philosophy you make no use,
If you give place to accidental evils.

Bru. No man bears sorrow better.—Portia

Cas. Ha! Portia? [is dead.

Bru. She is dead.

Cas. How 'scap'd I killing when I cross'd
O, insupportable and touching loss!—[you so?
Upon what sickness?

Bru. Impatient of my absence; [Antony
And grief, that young Octavius with Mark
Have made themselves so strong—for with her
death

That tidings came—with this she fell distract,
And, her attendant absent, swallow'd fire.

Cas. And died so?

Bru. Even so.

Cas. O ye immortal gods!

[Enter Boy with Wine and Tapers.]

Bru. Speak no more of her—Give me a bowl of wine:

In this I bury all unkindness, Cassius. [Drinks.]

Cas. My heart is thirsty for that noble pledge.—
Fill, Lucius, till the wine o'erswell the cup;
I cannot drink too much of Brutus' love.

Opportunity to be seized on all Affairs.

There is a tide in the affairs of men,
Which, taken at the flood, leads on to fortune;
Omitted, all the voyage of their life
Is bound in shallows and in miseries.
On such a full sea are we now afloat;
And we must take the current when it serves,
Or lose our ventures.

The Parting of Brutus and Cassius.

Bru. No, Cassius, no; think not, thou noble Roman,

That ever Brutus will go bound to Rome;
He bears too great a mind. But this same day
Must end that work the ides of March began:
And whether we shall meet again, I know not.
Therefore our everlasting farewell take:—
For ever, and for ever, farewell, Cassius!
If we do meet again, why, we shall smile;
If not, why then this parting was well made.

Cas. For ever, and for ever, farewell, Brutus!
If we do meet again, we'll smile indeed;
If not, 'tis true, this parting was well made.

Bru. Why then, lead on.—O, that a man might know

The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth, that the day will end,
And then the end is known.

Melancholy the Parent of Error.

O, hateful error, melancholy's child!
Why dost thou show to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? O error, soon conceiv'd,
Thou never com'st unto a happy birth,
But kill'st the mother that engender'd thee.

Antony's Character of Brutus.

This was the noblest Roman of them all:
All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did, in envy of great Cæsar;
He, only, in a general honest thought,
And common good to all, made one of them.
His life was gentle; and the elements
So mixt in him, that nature might stand up,
And say to all the world, "This was a man!"

§ 28. KING LEAR. SHAKSPEARE.

An alienated Child.

LET it be so—thy truth then be thy dower:
For, by the sacred radiance of the sun;
The mysteries of Hecate, and the night;
By all the operations of the orbs,
From whom we do exist, and cease to be:
Here I disclaim all my paternal care,
Propinquity and property of blood,
And as a stranger to my heart and me
Hold thee, from this, for ever. The barb'rous Scythian,
Or he that makes his generation messes
To gorge his appetite, shall to my bosom

Be as well neighbour'd, pitied, and reliev'd,
As thou, my sometime daughter.

Bastardy.

Thou, Nature, art my goddess; to thy law
My services are bound; wherefore should I
Stand in the plague of custom; and permit
The curiosity of nations to deprive me, [shines
For that I am some twelve or fourteen moon-Lag of a brother? Why bastard! Wherefore base?

When my dimensions are as well compact,
My mind as gen'rous, and my shape as true,
As honest madam's issue? Why brand they us
With base? with baseness? bastardy? base, base?
Who, in the lusty stealth of nature, take
More composition and fierce quality,
Than doth, within a dull, stale, tired bed
Go to the creating a whole tribe of fops,
Got 'tween asleep and wake?

A Father cursing his Child.

Hear, Nature, hear;

Dear goddess, hear! Suspend thy purpose, if Thou didst intend to make this creature fruitful!
Into her womb convey sterility!
Dry up in her the organs of increase;
And from her derogate body never spring
A babe to honor her! If she must teem,
Create her child of spleen; that it may live,
And be a thwart disnatur'd torment to her!
Let it stamp wrinkles in her brow of youth;
With cadent tears fret channels in her cheeks;
Turn all her mother's pains and benefits
To laughter and contempt; that she may feel How sharper than a serpent's tooth it is
To have a thankless child!

Ingratitude in a Child.

Ingratitude! thou marble-hearted fiend,
More hideous, when thou show'st thee in a child,
Than the sea-monster!

Flattering Sycophants.

That such a slave as this should wear a sword,
Who wears no honesty. Such smiling rogues as these,
Like rats, oft bite the holy cords in twain
Which are too intrinse t'unloose: smooth ev'ry passion,
That in the nature of their lords rebels:
Bring oil to fire, snow to their colder moods.
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters;
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.

Plain, blunt Men.

———This is some fellow, [affect
Who, having been prais'd for bluntness, doth
A saucy roughness; and constrains the garb
Quite from his nature: He cannot flatter, he!—
An honest mind and plain—he must speak truth:
An they will take it, so: if not, he's plain.
These kind of knaves I know, which in this plainness

Harbor more craft, and more corrupter ends,
Than twenty silly ducking observants,
That stretch their duties nicely.

Description of Bedlam Beggars.

While I may scape,
I will reserve myself: and am bethought
To take the basest and most poorest shape,

That ever penury, in contempt of man, [filth;
Brought near to beast: my face I'll grime with Blanket my loins; elf all my hair in knots;
And with presented nakedness out-face
The winds and persecutions of the sky.
The country gives me proof and precedent
Of Bedlam beggars, who, with roaring voices,
Strike in their numb'd and mortified bare arms,
Pins, wooden pricks, nails, sprigs of rosemary,
And with this horrible object, from low farms,
Poor pelting villages, sheep-cotes and mills,
Sometime with lunatic bans, sometime with Enforce their charity. [pray'rs,

The Fault of Infirmary pardonable.

Fiery? the fiery duke? tell the hot duke, that—
No, but not yet:—may be, he is not well:
Infirmary doth still neglect all office, [selves
Whereto our health is bound; we are not our-
When nature, being opprest, commands the
To suffer with the body: I'll forbear; [mind
And am fall'n out with my more headier will,
To take the indispos'd and sickly fit
For the sound man.

Unkindness.

Thy sister's naught: O Regan, she hath tied Sharp-tooth'd unkindness like a vulture, here.
[Points to his Heart.

Offences mistaken.

All's not offence, that indiscretion finds,
And dotage terms so.

Rising Passion.

I pr'ythee, daughter, do not make me mad;
I will not trouble thee, my child; farewell:
We'll no more meet, no more see one another.
But yet thou art my flesh, my blood, my daugh-
Or, rather, a disease that's in my flesh, [ter,
Which I must needs call mine; thou art a bile,
A plague-sore, an imbossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood; but I'll not chide thee;
Let shame come when it will, I do not call it;
I do not bid the thunder-bearer shoot,
Nor tell tales of thee to high-judging Jove.

The Necessaries of Life few.

O, reason not the need: our basest beggars
Are in the poorest thing superfluous:
Allow not nature more than nature needs,
Man's life is cheap as beast's.

Lear on the Ingratitude of his Daughters.

You see me here, you gods, a poor old man,
As full of grief as age; wretched in both!
If it be you that stir these daughters' hearts
Against their father, fool me not so much
To bear it tamely; touch me with noble anger!
O let not women's weapons, water-drops,
Stain my man's cheeks! No, you unnat'ral hags,
I will have such revenges on you both,
That all the world shall—I will do such things—
What they are, yet I know not: but they shall be
The terrors of the earth. You think I'll weep;
No, I'll not weep:
I have full cause of weeping; but this heart
Shall break into a hundred thousand flaws,
Or e'er I weep. O fool, I shall go mad.

Wilful Men.

O, Sir, to wilful men,
The injuries that they themselves procure,
Must be their schoolmasters.

Description of Lear's Distress amidst the Storm.

Kent. Where's the king?

Gent. Contending with the fretful element;
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters 'bove the main,
That things might change, or cease: tears his white hair,

Which the impetuous blasts, with eyeless rage,
Catch in their fury, and make nothing of:
Strive in his little world of man to out-scorn
The to-and-fro conflicting wind and rain.
This night, wherein the cub-drawn bear would
The lion, and the belly-pinched wolf [couch,
Keep their fur dry, unbbonneted he runs,
And bids what will take all.

Lear's passionate Exclamation amidst the Tempest.

Blow, wind! and crack your cheeks! rage!
You cataracts, and hurricanoes, spout [blow!
Till you have drench'd our steeples, drown'd the cocks!

You sulphurous and thought-executing fires,
Vaunt-couriers to oak-cleaving thunderbolts, Singe my white head! And thou, all-shaking thunder,

Strike flat the thick rotundity o' the world!
Crack nature's moulds, all germens spill at once
That make ingrateful man!
Rumble thy belly-full! spit, fire! spout, rain!
Nor rain, wind, thunder, fire, are my daughters:
I tax not you, you elements, with unkindness,
I never gave you kingdom, call'd you children,
You owe me no subscription. Why then let fall
Your horrible pleasure; here I stand, your slave,
A poor, infirm, weak, and despis'd old man:—
But yet I call you servile ministers,
That have with two pernicious daughters join'd
Your high-engender'd battles, 'gainst a head
So old and white as this. O! O! 'tis foul!

Kent. Alas, Sir! are you here? Things that love night,

Love not such nights as these; the wrathful skies
Gallow the very wanderers of the dark, [man,
And make them keep their caves: since I was Such sheets of fire, such bursts of horrid thunder,
Such groans of roaring wind and rain, I never Remember to have heard: man's nature can-
The affliction nor the fear. [not carry

Lear. Let the great gods,
That keep this dreadful pother o'er our heads,
Find out their enemies now. Tremble, thou
wretch,

That hast within thee undivulged crimes,
Unwhipp'd-of justice: hide thee, thou bloody
hand;

Thou perjur'd, and thou simular man of virtue,
That art incestuous: caitiff, to pieces shake,
That under covert and convenient seeming Hast practis'd on man's life! Close pent-up guilts,
Rive your concealing continents, and cry

These dreadful summoners grace. I am a man
More sinn'd against than sinning.

Kent. Alack, bare-headed!
Gracious my lord, hard by here is a hovel;
Some friendship will it lend you 'gainst the tempest,

Lear. Thou think'st 'tis much, that this contentious storm
Invades us to the skin: so 'tis to thee;
But where the greater malady is fix'd,
The lesser is scarce felt. Thou'dst shun a bear;
But if thy flight lay toward the raging sea, Thou'dst meet the bear i' the mouth. When the mind's free,
The body's delicate; the tempest in my mind
Doth from my senses take all feeling else,
Save what beats there.—Filial ingratitude!
Is it not as this mouth should tear this hand,
For lifting food to 't?—But I'll punish home.
No, I will weep no more.—In such a night
To shut me out!—Pour on; I will endure:
In such a night as this!—O Regan, Goneril!
Your old kind father, whose frank heart gave
all——

O, that way madness lies; let me shun that;
No more of that——

Kent. Good my lord, enter here.

Lear. Pr'ythee, go in thyself; seek thine own ease;
This tempest will not give me leave to ponder
On things would hurt me more—but I'll go in:
In, boy; go first. You houseless poverty—
Nay, get thee in. I'll pray, and then I'll sleep—
Poor naked wretches, wheresoe'er you are,
That bide the pelting of this pitiless storm,
How shall your houseless heads, and unfed sides, [you
Your loop'd and window'd raggedness, defend
From seasons such as these?—O, I have ta'en
Too little care of this!—Take physic, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel!
That thou mayst shake the superflux to them,
And show the heavens more just.

Enter Edgar disguised like a Madman.

Lear. Hast thou given all to thy two daugh-
And art thou come to this? [ters?

— Didst thou give them all?
Now, all the plagues that in the pendulous air Hang fated o'er men's faults, light on thy daughters!

Kent. He hath no daughters, Sir,

Lear. Death, traitor! nothing could have subdued nature
To such a lowness, but his unkind daughters.
Is it the fashion, that discarded fathers
Should have thus little mercy on their flesh?
Judicious punishment! 'twas this flesh begot
Those pelican daughters.

The Justice of Providence.

That I am wretched, [still;
Makes thee the happier:—heavens, deal so
Let the superfluous and lust-dieted man,
That slaves your ordinance, that will not see
Because he does not feel, feel your pow'r quickly;

So distribution should undo excess,
And each man have enough.

Patience and Sorrow.

Patience and sorrow strove
Which should express her goodliest. You have seen

Sun-shine and rain at once; her smiles and tears
Were like a better day: those happy smiles,
That play'd on her ripe lip, seem'd not to know
What guests were in her eyes; which parted
thence,

As pearls from diamonds dropp'd.—In brief,
Sorrow would be a rarity most belov'd, if all
Could so become it.

Description of Lear distracted.

Alack, 'tis he! why, he was met even now
As mad as the vex'd sea; singing aloud;
Crown'd with rank fumiter, and furrow weeds,
With harlocks, hemlock, nettles, cuckoo-flowers:

Darnel, and all the idle weeds that grow
In our sustaining corn.

Description of Dover Cliff.

Come on, Sir; here's the place:—stand still:—how fearful

And dizzy 'tis, to cast one's eyes so low! [air,
The crows and choughs, that wing the midway
Show scarce so gross as beetles: half-way down
Hangs one that gathers samphire; dreadful trade!
Methinks he seems no bigger than his head:
The fishermen, that walk upon the beach,
Appear like mice; and yon tall anchoring bark
Diminish'd to her cock; her cock, a buoy
Almost too small for sight: the murmuring surge,

That on th' unnumber'd idle pebbles chafes,
Cannot be heard so high: I'll look no more,
Lest my brain turn, and the deficient sight
Topple down headlong.

Glo'ster's Farewell to the World.

O you mighty gods!
This world I do renounce; and in your sights,
Shake patiently my great affliction off:
If I could bear it longer, and not fall
To quarrel with your great opposeless wills,
My snuff, and loathed part of nature, should
Burn itself out. If Edgar live, O bless him!

On the Abuse of Power.

Thou rascal beadle, hold thy bloody hand:
Why dost thou lash that whore? strip thine
own back;

Thou hotly lust'st to use her in that kind
For which thou whipp'st her. The usurer hangs the cozeners.

Through tatter'd clothes small vices do appear;
Robes and furr'd gowns hide all. Plate sin with gold,

And the strong lance of justice hurtless breaks:
Arm it in rags, a pigmy's straw doth pierce it.
None does offend, none, I say, none; I'll able
'em:

Take that of me, my friend, who have the
pow'r

To seal th' accuser's lips. Get thee glass eyes;
And, like a scurvy politician, seem
To see the things thou dost not.

Cordelia on the Ingratitude of her Sisters.

O, my dear father! Restoration, hang
Thy medicine on my lips; and let this kiss
Repair those violent harms, that my two sisters
Have in thy reverence made!

Had you not been their father, these white flakes
Had challeng'd pity of them. Was this a face
To be expos'd against the warring winds?
To stand against the deep, dread-bolted thunder?
In the most terrible and nimble stroke
Of quick cross lightning? to watch (poor perdu!)
Within this thin helm? Mine enemy's dog
Though he had bit me, should have stood that
night

Against my fire; and wast thou fain, poor father,
To hovel thee with swine, and rogues forlorn,
In short and musty straw? Alack! alack!
'Tis wonder that thy life and wits at once
Had not concluded all.

Scene between Lear and Cordelia.

Cord. How does my royal lord? how fares your majesty?

Lear. You do me wrong to take me out o'
the grave.

Thou art a soul in bliss; but I am bound
Upon a wheel of fire, that mine own tears
Do scald like molten lead.

Cord. Sir, do you know me?

Lear. You are a spirit, I know; when did you die?

Cord. Still, still far wide! [a while.

Phys. He's scarce awake, let him alone

Lear. Where have I been? where am I?—

Fair day-light! [pity

I am mightily abus'd.—I should even die with
To see another thus.—I will not swear
These are my hands.

Cord. O look upon me, Sir,
And hold your hands in benediction o'er me:
No, Sir, you must not kneel.

Lear. Pray, do not mock me:
I am a very foolish fond old man,
Fourscore and upward: and, to deal plainly,
I fear I am not in my perfect mind.
Methinks I should know you, and know this
man;

Yet I am doubtful, for I am mainly ignorant
What place this is; and all the skill I have Remembers not these garments; nor I know not [me,
Where I did lodge last night. Do not laugh at
For, as I am a man, I think this lady
To be my child Cordelia.

Cord. And so I am, I am.

Lear. Be your tears wet? Yes, faith. I pray weep not:

If you have poison for me, I will drink it.
I know you do not love me; for your sisters
Have, as I do remember, done me wrong:
You have some cause, they have not.

Cord. No cause, no cause.

Lear. Am I in France?

Kent. In your own kingdom, Sir,

Lear. Do not abuse me.

Phys. Be comforted, good madam: the great rage,

You see, is cur'd in him: and yet it is danger
To make him even o'er the time he has lost.
Desire him to go in; trouble him no more
Till further settling.

Cord. Will't please your highness walk?

Lear. You must bear with me.

Pray you now, forget and forgive: I am old and foolish.

Lear to Cordelia, when taken Prisoners.

No, no, no, no! come, let's away to prison:
We two alone will sing like birds i' the cage:
When thou dost ask me blessing, I'll kneel
down,

And ask of thee forgiveness: so we'll live,
And pray, and sing, and tell old tales, and laugh

At gilded butterflies, and hear poor rogues
Talk of court news; and we'll talk with them too— [out—

Who loses, and who wins; who's in, who's
And take upon us the mystery of things,
As if we were God's spies; and we'll wear out,
In a wall'd prison, packs and sects of great ones,
That ebb and flow by the moon.

Edm. Take them away.

Lear. Upon such sacrifices, my Cordelia,
The gods themselves throw incense.

The Justice of the Gods.

The gods are just, and of our pleasant vices
Make instruments to scourge us.

Edgar's Account of his discovering himself to his Father, &c.

List a brief tale:—

And, when 'tis told, O that my heart would burst!

The bloody proclamation to escape,
That follow'd me so near (O our lives' sweet-
ness!

That with the pain of death we'd hourly die,
Rather than die at once!), taught me to shift
Into a madman's rags; to assume a semblance
That very dogs disdain'd: and in this habit
Met I my father, with his bleeding rings,
Their precious stones new lost; became his guide, [spair;

Led him, begg'd for him, sav'd him from de-
Never (O fault!) reveal'd myself unto him,
Until some half-hour past, when I was arm'd,
Not sure, though hoping, of this good success,
I ask'd his blessing, and from first to last
Told him my pilgrimage: but his flaw'd heart
(Alack, too weak the conflict to support!)
'Twixt two extremes of passion, joy and grief,
Burst smilingly.

Bast. This speech of yours hath mov'd me,
And shall, perchance, do good: but speak you
on;

You look as you had something more to say.

Alb. If there be more, more woful, hold
For I am almost ready to dissolve, [it in;
Hearing of this.

Edg. This would have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow: but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more
And top extremity.

Whilst I was big in clamor, came there a
man,
Who having seen me in my worst estate,
Shunn'd my abhorr'd society; but, then, finding
Who 'twas that so endur'd, with his strong
arms

He fasten'd on my neck, and bellow'd out
As he'd burst heaven; threw him on my father:
Told the most piteous tale of Lear and him,
That ever ear receiv'd; which, in recounting,
His grief grew puissant, and the strings of life
Began to crack:—twice then the trumpet sounded,
And there I left him tranc'd.

Lear on the Death of Cordelia.

Howl, howl, howl, howl! O you are men of stones!

Had I your tongues and eyes, I'd use them so That heaven's vault should crack.—O, she is gone for ever!

I know when one is dead, and when one lives;
She's dead as earth: lend me a looking-glass;
If that her breath will mist or stain the stone,
Why, then she lives.

This feather stirs; she lives! If it be so,
It is a chance which does redeem all sorrows,
That ever I have felt.

Kent. O, my good master!

Lear. Pr'ythee away—

A plague upon you, murderers, traitors all!
I might have sav'd her; now she's gone for ever!—

Cordelia! Cordelia! stay a little. Ha!
What is't thou say'st!—Her voice was ever soft,
Gentle, and low.

Lear dying.

And my poor fool is hang'd! No, no, no life.
Why should a dog, a horse, a rat have life,
And thou no breath at all? O thou wilt come
no more,

Never, never, never, never, never.

§ 29. MACBETH. SHAKSPEARE.

Witches described.

—WHAT are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire;
That look not like the inhabitants o' the earth,
And yet are on 't?—Live you, or are you aught
That man may question? You seem to understand me,

By each at once her choppy finger laying
Upon her skinny lips:—You should be women;
And yet your beards forbid me to interpret
That you are so.

Macbeth's Temper.

Yet do I fear thy nature:
It is too full o' the milk of human kindness,
'To catch the nearest way: thou wouldst be great;
Art not without ambition, but without The illness should attend it. What thou wouldst highly, [false,
That wouldst thou holily; wouldst not play
And yet wouldst wrongly win.

Lady Macbeth, on the News of Duncan's Approach.

The raven himself is hoarse,
That croaks the fatal entrance of Duncan
Under my battlements. Come, come you spirits
That tend on mortal thoughts, unsex me here,
And fill me from the crown to the toe, top-full
Of direst cruelty! make thick my blood,
Stop up th' access and passage to remorse;
That no compunctious visitings of nature
Shake my fell purpose, nor keep pace between
The effect and it! Come to my woman's breasts,
And take my milk for gall, you murd'ring ministers,

Wherever in your sightless substances [night,
You wait on nature's mischief! Come, thick
And pall thee in the dunest smoke of hell,
That my keen knife see not the wound it makes;
Nor heaven peep through the blanket of the
To cry, "Hold! hold!"—— [dark,

Macbeth's Irresolution.

If it were done when 'tis done, then 'twere
It were done quickly: if the assassination [well
Could trammel up the consequence, and catch,
With his surcease, success; that but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here,
But here upon this bank and shoal of time, We'd jump the life to come. But, in these cases, [teach

We still have judgement here; that we but Bloody instructions, which being taught, return
To plague the inventor: this even-handed justice [chalice

Commends the ingredients of our poison'd
To our own lips. He's here in double trust:
First, as I am his kinsman and his subject,
Strong both against the deed; then as his host,
Who should against his murderer shut the door,
Not bear the knife myself. Besides, this Duncan Hath borne his faculties so meek, hath been
So clear in his great office, that his virtues
Will plead like angels, trumpet-tongued, against
The deep damnation of his taking-off:
And pity, like a naked new-born babe,
Striding the blast, or heaven's cherubin, hors'd
Upon the sightless couriers of the air,
Shall blow the horrid deed in ev'ry eye, [spur
That tears shall drown the wind.—I have no
To prick the sides of my intent, but only
Vaulting ambition, which o'erleaps itself,
And falls on the other.

True Fortitude.

I dare do all that may become a man!
Who dares do more, is none.

The murdering Scene. Macbeth alone.

Is this a dagger, which I see before me,
The handle tow'rd my hand? Come, let me clutch thee—

I have thee not; and yet I see thee still.
Art thou not, fatal vision, sensible
To feeling, as to sight? or art thou but
A dagger of the mind; a false creation,
Proceeding from the heat-oppressed brain?
I see thee yet, in form as palpable
As this which I now draw——

Thou marshall'st me the way that I was going ;
And such an instrument I was to use. [senses,
Mine eyes are made the fools o' the other
Or else worth all the rest :—I see thee still ;
And on thy blade, and dudgeon, gouts of blood,
Which was not so before—There's no such thing :

It is the bloody business, which informs
Thus to mine eyes.—Now o'er the one half
world

Nature seems dead, and wicked dreams abuse
The curtain'd sleep ; now witchcraft celebrates
Pale Hecate's offerings ; and wither'd murder,
Alarum'd by his sentinel, the wolf, [pace,
Whose howl's his watch, thus with his stealthy
With Tarquin's ravishing strides, tow'rd's his design [earth,

Moves like a ghost—Thou sure and firm-set Hear not my steps, which way they walk, for Thy very stones prate of my where-about, [fear
And take the present horror from the time,
Which now suits with it—Whiles I threat,
he lives— [A bell rings.

I go, and it is done ; the bell invites me.
Hear it not, Duncan ; for it is a knell
That summons thee to heaven or to hell. [Exit.

Enter Lady.

Lady. That which hath made them drunk, hath made me bold : [Hark ! peace !
What hath quench'd them, hath given me fire :
It was the owl that shriek'd, the fatal bell-man,
Which gives the stern'st good night.—He is about it :—

The doors are open ; and the surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores ; I have drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them,
Whether they live or die.

Macb. [Within] Who's there ?—what, ho !

Lady. Alack ! I am afraid they have awak'd,
And 'tis not done :—the attempt, and not the deed, [ready,

Confounds us !—hark !—I laid their daggers
He could not miss 'em.—Had he not resembled My father as he slept, I had don't.—My husband ?

Enter Macbeth.

Macb. I have done the deed :—didst thou not hear a noise ?

Lady. I heard the owls scream and the
Did not you speak ? [crickets cry.

Macb. When ?

Lady. Now.

Macb. As I descended ?

Lady. Ay.

Macb. Hark ! who lies i' the second cham-

Lady. Donalbain. [ber ?

Macb. This is a sorry sight !

[Looks on his hands.

Lady. A foolish thought ! to say a sorry sight.
Macb. There's one did laugh in his sleep,
and one cried, " murder !"

That they did wake each other ! I stood and heard them :

But they did say their prayers, and address'd
Again to sleep. [them

Lady. There are two lodg'd together.

Macb. One cried, " God bless us !" and
" Amen !" the other ; [hands,

As they had seen me, with these hangman's
Listening their fear. I could not say, Amen,
When they did say, God bless us.

Lady. Consider it not so deeply. [Amen ?

Macb. But wherefore could not I pronounce
I had most need of blessing, and Amen
Stuck in my throat.

Lady. These deeds must not be thought
After these ways ; so it will make us mad.

Macb. Methought I heard a voice cry,
" Sleep no more !

Macbeth doth murder sleep, the innocent sleep,
Sleep, that knits up the ravell'd sleeve of care,
The death of each day's life, sore labor's bath,
Balm of hurt minds, great nature's second
Chief nourisher in life's feast." [course,

Lady. What do you mean ? [the house :

Macb. Still it cried, " Sleep no more !" to all
" Glamis hath murder'd sleep ; and therefore Cawdor [more !"

Shall sleep no more, Macbeth shall sleep no
Lady. Who was it that thus cried ? Why, worthy Thane,

You do unbend your noble strength, to think
So brain-sickly of things : go, get some water,
And wash this filthy witness from your hand.
Why did you bring these daggers from the
place ?

They must lie there : go, carry them ; and smear
The sleepy grooms with blood.

Macb. I'll go no more :

I am afraid to think what I have done ;
Look on't again I dare not.

Lady. Infirm of purpose !

Give me the daggers : the sleeping, and the dead,

Are but as pictures : 'tis the eye of childhood
That fears a painted devil. If he do bleed,
I'll gild the faces of the grooms withal,
For it must seem their guilt. [Exit.

Knocking within.

Macb. Whence is that knocking ? [Starting.
How is't with me, when ev'ry noise appals me ?
What hands are here ? Ha ! they pluck out mine eyes !

Will all great Neptune's ocean wash this blood
Clean from my hand ? No ; this my hand will
The multitudinous seas incarnadine [rather
Making the green one red.

Re-enter Lady.

Lady. My hands are of your color ; but I shame [Knock.

To wear a heart so white. I hear a knocking
At the south entry. Retire we to our chamber ;
A little water clears us of this deed :

How easy is it then ! Your constancy
Hath left you unattended—hark ! more knocking : [Knock.

Get on your night-gown, lest occasion call us,
And show us to be watchers : be not lost
So poorly in your thoughts.

Macb. To know my deed—'twere best not know myself.

Wake, Duncan, with this knocking ! I would thou couldst !

Macbeth's guilty Conscience, and Fears of Banquo.

Enter Macbeth to his Lady.

Lady. How now, my lord? why do you keep alone,
Of sorriest fancies your companions making?
Using those thoughts which should indeed have died

With them they think on? Things without all remedy [done.

Should be without regard: what's done, is

Macb. We have scotch'd the snake, not kill'd it; [malice

She'll close and be herself, whilst our poor Remains in danger of her former tooth.

But let the frame of things disjoint, both the worlds suffer,

Ere we will eat our meal in fear, and sleep In the affliction of these terrible dreams,

That shake us nightly. Better be with the dead Whom we, to gain our place, have sent to peace,

Than on the torture of the mind to lie

In restless ecstasy.—Duncan is in his grave;

After life's fitful fever, he sleeps well;

Treason has done his worst: nor steel, nor poi-

Malice domestic, foreign levy; nothing [son,
Can touch him farther!

O, full of scorpions is my mind, dear wife!
Thou know'st that Banquo and his Fleance lives.

Lady. But in them nature's copy's not eterne.

Macb. There's comfort yet, they are assailable;
Then be thou jocund: ere the bat hath flown His cloister'd flight; ere, to black Hecate's summons,

The shard-borne beetle, with his drowsy hums, Hath rung night's yawning peal, there shall be A deed of dreadful note. [done

Lady. What's to be done?

Macb. Be innocent of the knowledge, dearest chuck, [night,

Till thou applaud the deed. Come, seeling Scarf up the tender eye of pitiful day;

And, with thy bloody and invisible hand, Cancel, and tear to pieces, that great bond

Which keeps me pale! Light thickens: and Makes wing to the rooky wood: [the crow

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse; While night's black agents to their prey do rouse.

Scene, a Room of State. Banquet prepared.

Macbeth, Lady, Rosse, Lenox, Lords, and Attendants.

Lady. My royal lord,

You do not give the cheer: the feast is sold,
That is not often vouch'd, while 'tis a making,

'Tis given with welcome: to feed were best at home;

From thence, the sauce to meat is ceremony:
Meeting were bare without it.

[The Ghost of Banquo rises, and sits in Macbeth's Place.

Macb. Sweet remembrancer!—

Now, good digestion wait on appetite,
And health on both!

Len. May't please your highness sit?

Macb. Here had we now our country's honor roof'd,

Were the grac'd person of our Banquo present;
Whom I may rather challenge for unkindness,
Than pity for mischance.

Rosse. His absence, Sir, [highness Lays blame upon his promise. Please it your
To grace us with your royal company?

Macb. The table's full! [Starting.

Len. Here is a place reserv'd, Sir.

Macb. Where?

Len. Here, my good lord.

What is't that moves your highness?

Macb. Which of you have done this?

Lords. What, my good lord?

Macb. Thou canst not say, I did it: never Thy gory locks at me. [shake

Rosse. Gentlemen, rise; his highness is not well. [thus,

Lady. Sit, worthy friends:—my lord is often And hath been from his youth: pray you, keep

The fit is momentary; upon a thought [seat;
He will again be well: if much you note him,

You shall offend him, and extend his passion!
Feed, and regard him not.—Are you a man?

[To Macb. aside.

Macb. Ay, and a bold one, that dare look on Which might appal the devil. [that

Lady. O proper stuff!

This is the very painting of your fear: [Aside.
This is the air-drawn dagger, which, you said,

Led you to Duncan. O these flaws and starts (Impostors to true fear) would well become

A woman's story at a winter's fire,
Authoriz'd by her grandam. Shame itself!

Why do you make such faces? when all's done,
You look but on a stool.

Macb. Pr'ythee, see there!

Behold! look! lo! how say you?

[Pointing to the Ghost.

Why, what care I? if thou canst nod, speak too.

If charnel-houses and our graves must send Those, that we bury, back—our monuments

Shall be the maws of kites. [The Ghost vanishes.

Lady. What! quite unmann'd in folly?

Macb. If I stand here, I saw him.

Lady. Fie, for shame! [olden time,

Macb. Blood hath been shed ere now, i' the Ere human statute purg'd the gen'ral weal;

Ay, and since too, murders have been perform'd Too terrible for the ear: the times have been,

That, when the brains were out, the man would die;

And there an end: but now they rise again,
With twenty mortal murders on their crowns,

And push us from our stools: this is more Than such a murder is. [strange

Lady. My worthy lord,

Your noble friends do lack you.

Macb. I do forget:—

Do not muse at me, my most worthy friends; I have a strange infirmity, which is nothing

To those that know me. Come, love and health to all; [full;

Then I'll sit down: give me some wine, fill

I drink to the general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss:
Would he were here! to all, and him, we
And all to all. [thirst,

Lords. Our duties, and the pledge.

[The Ghost rises again.

Macb. Avaunt! and quit my sight! Let the earth hide thee!

Thy bones are marrowless, thy blood is cold;
Thou hast no speculation in those eyes,
Which thou dost glare with!

Lady. Think of this, good peers,
But as a thing of custom: 'tis no other;
Only it spoils the pleasure of the time.

Macb. What man dare, I dare:
Approach thou like the rugged Russian bear,
The arm'd rhinoceros, or the Hyrcan tiger;
Take any shape but that, and my firm nerves
Shall never tremble; or, be alive again,
And dare me to the desert with thy sword;
If trembling I inhibit thee, protest me
The baby of a girl. Hence, horrible shadow!
Unreal mockery, hence! Why, so—being gone, [The Ghost vanishes.

I am a man again.—Pray you, sit still.

[The Lords rise.

Lady. You have displac'd the mirth, broke the good meeting.

With most admir'd disorder.

Macb. Can such things be,
And overcome us like a summer's cloud,
Without our special wonder? You make me
Even to the disposition that I owe, [strange,
When now I think you can behold such sights,
And keep the natural ruby of your cheeks,
When mine are blanch'd with fear.

Rosse. What sights, my lord?

Lady. I pray you, speak not; he grows
worse and worse;
Question enrages him: at once, good night:
Stand not upon the order of your going:
But go at once.

Len. Good night, and better health
Attend his majesty.

Lady. A kind good night to all.

[Exeunt Lords.

Macb. It will have blood, they say; blood
will have blood: [speak;
Stones have been known to move, and trees to Augurs, and understood relations, have
By magot-pies, and choughs, and rooks, brought
The secret'st man of blood. [forth,

Witches: their Power.

I conjure you, by that which you profess
(Howe'er you come to know it), answer me;
Though you untie the winds, and let them fight
Against the churches; though the yesty waves
Confound and swallow navigation up: [down;
Though bladed corn be lodg'd, and trees blown
Though castles topple on their warders' heads;
Though palaces, and pyramids, do slope
Their heads to their foundations; though the treasure

Of nature's germins tumble altogether,
Even till destruction sickens, answer me
To what I ask you.

Malcolm's Character of himself.

Mal. But I have none: the king-becoming
graces,

As justice, verity, temperance, stableness,
Bounty, perseverance, mercy, lowliness,
Devotion, patience, courage, fortitude,
I have no relish of them; but abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting it many ways. Nay, had I pow'r I should

Pour the sweet milk of concord into hell,
Uproar the universal peace, confound
All unity on earth.

Macd. O Scotland, Scotland!

Mal. If such a one be fit to govern, speak;
I am as I have spoken.

Macd. Fit to govern!

No, not to live.—O nation miserable,
With an untitled tyrant, bloody-sceptred,
When shalt thou see thy wholesome days again?
Since that the truest issue of thy throne
By his own interdiction stands accurst,
And does blaspheme his breed? Thy royal father [thee,

Was a most sainted king; the queen that bore
Oft'ner upon her knees than on her feet,
Died ev'ry day she liv'd. Fare thee well!
These evils thou repeat'st upon thyself,
Have banish'd me from Scotland. O my breast,
Thy hope ends here!

Mal. Macduff, this noble passion,
Child of integrity, hath from my soul
Wip'd the black scruples, reconcil'd my thoughts [beth
To thy good truth and honor. Devilish Mac-
By many of these trains hath sought to win me
Into his pow'r; and modest wisdom plucks me
From over-credulous haste: but God above
Deal between thee and me! for even now
I put myself to thy direction, and Unspeak mine own detraction; here abjure
The taints and blames I laid upon myself,
For strangers to my nature. I am yet
Unknown to woman; never was forsworn;
Scarcely have coveted what was mine own;
At no time broke my faith; would not betray
The devil to his fellow; and delight [ing
No less in truth than life; my first false speak-
Was this upon myself. What I am truly,
Is thine, and my poor country's, to command.

An oppressed Country.

Alas! poor country;
Almost afraid to know itself! It cannot Be call'd our mother, but our grave; where
nothing,
But who knows nothing, is once seen to smile:
Where sighs, and groans, and shrieks that rent
the air, [seems
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow
A modern ecstasy; the dead man's knell
Is there scarce ask'd, for who; and good men's Expire before the flowers in their caps, [lives
Dying, or ere they sicken.

Macduff on the Murder of his Wife and Children.

Rosse. Would I could answer
This comfort with the like! but I have words,

That would be howl'd out in the desert air,
Where hearing should not latch them.

Macd. What concern they?

The general canse? or is it a fee-grief,
Due to some single breast?

Rosse. No mind that's honest
But in it shares some woe; tho' the main part
Pertains to you alone.

Macd. If it be mine,
Keep it not from me, quickly let me have it.

Rosse. Let not your ears despise my tongue for ever,
Which shall possess them with the heaviest
That ever yet they heard. [sound

Macd. Humph! I guess at it. [babes

Rosse. Your castle is surpris'd; your wife and Savagely slaughter'd; to relate the manner,
Were, on the quarry of these murder'd deer,
To add the death of you.

Mal. Merciful Heaven!—
What, man! ne'er pull your hat upon your brows; [speak,

Give sorrow words: the grief that does not
Whispers the o'er-fraught heart, and bids it

Macd. My children too? [break.

Rosse. Wife, children, servants, all that could be found.

Macd. And I must be from thence! my

Rosse. I have said. [wife kill'd too?

Mal. Be comforted:

Let's make us medicines of our great revenge,
To cure this deadly grief.

Macd. He has no children!—All my pretty ones?

Did you say all? what, all? O hell-kite! all?
What, all my pretty chickens, and their dam,
At one fell swoop?

Mal. Dispute it like a man.

Macd. I shall do so;

But I must also feel it as a man:
I cannot but remember such things were,
That were most precious to me. Did Heaven
look on, [duff,
And would not take their part? Sinful Mac—
They were all struck for thee! Naught that I am,

Not for their own demerits, but for mine,
Fell slaughter on their souls; Heaven rest them
now!

Mal. Be this the whetstone of your sword;
let grief

Convert to anger; blunt not the heart, enrage it.

Macd. O, I could play the woman with mine eyes, [Heaven,

And braggart with my tongue! But, gentle
Cut short all intermission: front to front
Bring thou this fiend of Scotland, and myself;
Within my sword's length set him; if he'scape,
Heaven forgive him too!

Mal. This tune goes manly.

Come, go we to the king; our pow'r is ready;
Our lack is nothing but our leave; Macbeth
Is ripe for shaking, and the powers above
Put on their instruments. Receive what cheer you may;

The night is long that never finds the day.

[Exeunt.

Despised Old Age.

I have liv'd long enough: my way of life
Is fall'n into the sear, the yellow leaf:
And that which should accompany old age,
As honor, love, obedience, troops of friends,
I must not look to have: but in their stead,
Curses, not loud, but deep, mouth-honor, breath,
Which the poor heart would fain deny, but dare not.

Diseases of the Mind incurable.

Canst thou not minister to a mind diseas'd;
Pluck from the memory a rooted sorrow;
Raze out the written troubles of the brain;
And, with some sweet oblivious antidote,
Cleanse the stuff'd bosom of that perilous stuff
Which weighs upon the heart?

Reflections on Life.

To-morrow, and to-morrow, and to-morrow,
Creeps in this petty pace from day to day,
To the last syllable of recorded time;
And all our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Out, out, brief candle!

Life's but a walking shadow; a poor player,
That struts and frets his hour upon the stage;
And then is heard no more: it is a tale,
Told by an idiot, full of sound and fury,
Signifying nothing.

§ 30. OTHELLO. SHAKESPEARE.

Preferment.

'Tis the curse of service;
Preferment goes by letter and affection,
Not by the old gradation, where each second
Stood heir to the first.

In Dispraise of Honesty.

We cannot all be masters, nor all masters
Cannot be truly follow'd. You shall mark
Many a duteous and knee-crooking knave,
That, doting on his own obsequious bondage,
Wears out his time, much like his master's ass,
For nought but provender; and, when he is old, cashier'd:

Whip me such honest knaves. Others there are,
Who, trimm'd in forms and visages of duty,
Keep yet their hearts attending on themselves:
And throwing but shows of service on their
lords,

Do well thrive by them; and when they have
lin'd their coats,

Do themselves homage: these fellows have
some soul,

And such a one do I profess myself.

For, sir,

It is as sure as you are Roderigo,

Were I the Moor, I would not be Iago:

In following him, I follow but myself;

Heaven is my judge, not I for love and duty,

But seeming so, for my peculiar end:

For when my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart

In compliment extern, 'tis not long after

But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve,

For doves to peck at: I am not what I seem.

Love the sole Motive of Othello's marrying.

For know, Iago,
But that I love the gentle Desdemona,
I would not my unhoused free condition
Put into circumscription and confine,
For the sea's worth.

Othello's Relation of his Courtship to the Senate.

Most potent, grave, and reverend signiors,
My very noble and approved good masters—
That I have ta'en away this old man's daughter,
It is most true; true, I have married her;
The very head and front of my offending Hath this extent, no more. Rude am I in my speech,

And little blest with the set phrase of peace;
Forsince these arms of mine had seven years' pith,
Till now some nine moons wasted, they have us'd

Their dearest action in the tented field;
And little of this great world can I speak,
More than pertains to feats of broil and battle;
And therefore little shall I grace my cause,
In speaking for myself: Yet, by your gracious
patience,

I will a round unvarnish'd tale deliver,
Of my whole course of love; what drugs,
what charms,

What conjuration, and what mighty magic
(For such proceeding I am charg'd withal),
I won his daughter with. - - -

Her father

Lov'd me; oft invited me; still question'd me
The story of my life, from year to year;
The battles, sieges, fortunes, that I have pass'd.
I ran it through, even from my boyish days,
To the very moment that he bade me tell it,
Wherein I spake of most disastrous chances,
Of moving accidents by flood and field;
Of hair-breadth 'scapes i' the imminent deadly breach;

Of being taken by the insolent foe,
And sold to slavery; of my redemption thence;
And portance in my travel's history.

- - - - -
These things to hear
Would Desdemona seriously incline;
But still the house affairs would draw her
thence;

Which ever as she could with haste dispatch,
She'd come again, and with a greedy ear
Devour up my discourse: which, I observing,
Took once a pliant hour; and found good means
To draw from her a prayer of earnest heart,
That I would all my pilgrimage dilate,
Whereof by parcels she had something heard,
But not intentively: I did consent;
And often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke,
That my youth suffer'd. My story being done,
She gave me for my pains a world of sighs:
She swore, in faith, 'twas strange, 'twas passing strange;

'Twas pitiful, 'twas wondrous pitiful—
She wish'd she had not heard it; yet she wish'd
That Heaven had made her such a man:—she thank'd me;

And bade me, if I had a friend that lov'd her,
I should but teach him how to tell my story,
And that would woo her. Upon this hint I
spake:

She lov'd me for the dangers I had pass'd;
And I lov'd her, that she did pity them.

Perfect Content.

O my soul's joy!

If after ev'ry tempest come such calms,
May the winds blow till they have waken'd
death,

And let the laboring bark climb hills of seas,
Olympus high: and duck again as low
As hell's from heaven! If I were now to die,
'Twere now to be most happy; for, I fear,
My soul hath her content so absolute,
That not another comfort like to this
Succeeds in unknown fate.

A Lover's Exclamation.

Excellent wretch! perdition catch my soul,
But I do love thee! and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again.

Othello's first Suspicion.

Think, my lord! by Heaven he echoes me,
As if there were some monster in his thought Too hideous to be shown.—Thou dost mean something:

I heard thee say but now—thou lik'd'st not that—
When Cassio left my wife; what didst not like?
And when I told thee—he was of my counsel,
In my whole course of wooing: thou cried'st
“Indeed!”

And didst contract and purse thy brow together,
As if thou then hadst shut up in thy brain
Some horrible conceit: if thou dost love me,
Show me thy thought.

Iago. My lord, you know I love you.

Oth. I think thou dost;

And for I know thou'rt full of love and honesty,
And weigh'st thy words before thou giv'st them
breath— [more:

Therefore, these stops of thine fright me the
For such things in a false, disloyal knave
Are tricks of custom; but in a man that's just,
They are close denotements working from the
That passion cannot rule. [heart,

Reputation.

Good name, in man and woman, dear my lord,
Is the immediate jewel of their souls:
Who steals my purse steals trash; 'tis something,
nothing;

'Twas mine, 'tis his, and has been slave to thousands:

But he that filches from me my good name,
Robs me of that which not enriches him,
And makes me poor indeed.

Othello's Soliloquy after having been worked up to Jealousy by Iago.

This fellow's of exceeding honesty,
And knows all qualities, with a learned spirit,
Of human dealings: If I prove her haggard,
Though that her jesses were my dear heart-
strings,

I'd whistle her off, and let her down the wind
To prey at fortune. Haply, for I am black;

And have not those soft parts of conversation
That chamberers have : or, for I am declin'd
Into the vale of years : yet that's not much—
She's gone ; I am abus'd ; and my relief
Must be—to loath her. O curse of marriage !
That we can call these delicate creatures ours,
And not their appetites ! I had rather be a toad,
And live upon the vapor of a dungeon,
Than keep a corner in the thing I love
For others' uses.

Jealousy.

Trifles light as air
Are, to the jealous, confirmation strong
As proofs of holy writ.

The Tortures of Jealousy.

Enter Othello.

Iago. Look where he comes ! not poppy,
nor mandragora,
Nor all the drowsy syrups of the world,
Shall ever medicine thee to that sweet sleep
Which thou ow'dst yesterday.

Oth. Ha ! ha ! false to me ? to me ? [that.

Iago. Why, how now, general ? no more of

Oth. Avaunt ! begone ! thou hast set me on the rack :

I swear, 'tis better to be much abus'd,
Than but to know't a little.

Iago. How now, my lord ? [lust ?

Oth. What sense had I of her stolen hours of
I saw it not, thought it not, it harm'd not me :
I slept the next night well, was free and merry ;
I found not Cassio's kisses on her lips :
He that is robb'd, not wanting what is stolen,
Let him not know it, and he's not robb'd at all.

Iago. I am sorry to hear this.

Oth. I had been happy, if the general camp,
Pioneers and all, had tasted her sweet body,
So I had nothing known : O now, for ever,
Farewell the tranquil mind ! Farewell content !
Farewell the plumed troop, and the big wars,
That make ambition virtue ! O farewell !
Farewell the neighing steed, and the shrill
trump,

The spirit-stirring drum, the ear-piercing fife,
The royal banner ; and all quality,
Pride, pomp, and circumstance of glorious war !
And, O you mortal engines, whose rude throats
Th' immortal Jove's dread clamors counterfeit,
Farewell ! Othello's occupation's gone !

Iago. Is't possible, my lord ?

Oth. Villain, be sure thou prove my love a whore ;

Be sure of it ; give me the ocular proof ;

[Catching hold on him.

Or by the worth of mine eternal soul,
Thou hadst better have been born a dog,
Than answer my wak'd wrath.

Iago. Is it come to this ? [prove it,

Oth. Make me to see it ; or, at the least, so
That the probation bear no hinge, nor loop,
To hang a doubt on : or, woe upon thy life !

Iago. My noble lord—

Oth. If thou dost slander her, and torture
me,
Never pray more : abandon all remorse :

On horror's head horrors accumulate :
Do deeds to make heaven weep, all earth amaz'd ;
For nothing canst thou to damnation add,
Greater than that.

Iago. O grace ! O Heaven defend me !
Are you a man ? have you a soul, or sense ?
God bewi' you : take mine office.—O wretched
That liv'st to make thine honesty a vice ! [fool,
O monstrous world ! take note, take note, O
world,

To be direct and honest, is not safe !
I thank you for this profit ; and, from hence,
I'll love no friend, since love breeds such offence.

Oth. Nay, stay :—thou shouldst be honest.

Iago. I should be wise : for honesty's a fool,
And loses that it works for.

Oth. By the world,
I think my wife be honest, and think she is not ;
I think that thou art just, and think thou art not :
I'll have some proof. Her name, that was as fresh

As Dian's visage, is now begrim'd and black
As mine own face. If there be cords, or knives,
Poison, or fire, or suffocating streams,
I'll not endure it !—Would I were satisfied !

Othello's Story of the Handkerchief.

That handkerchief

Did an Egyptian to my mother give ;
She was a charmer, and could almost read
The thoughts of people ; she told her, while she kept it,

'Twould make her amiable, and subdue my fa-
Entirely to her love ; but if she lost it, [ther
Or made a gift of it, my father's eye [hunt
Should hold her loathly, and his spirits should
After new fancies. She, dying, gave it me ;
And bid me, when my fate would have me wiv'd,
To give it her. I did so ; and take heed of't,
Make it a darling, like your precious eye ;
To lose't or give't away, where such perdition,
As nothing else could match.—

—There's magic in the web of it :
A sibyl, that had number'd in the world
The sun to make two hundred compasses,
In her prophetic fury sew'd the work :
The worms were hallow'd that did breed the silk ;

And it was dyed in mummy, which the skilful
Conserv'd of maidens' hearts.

A Lover's Computation of Time.

What ! keep a week away ? seven days and nights ? [hours,
Eight-score eight hours ? and lovers' absent
More tedious than the dial eight-score times ?
O weary reckoning !

Othello's Speech, after having received the Mandate when confirmed in his Suspicions.

Ay, you did wish that I would make her turn :
Sir, she can turn, and turn, and yet go on,
And turn again ; and she can weep, Sir, weep :
And she's obedient, as you say—obedient—
Very obedient—Proceed you in your tears.
Concerning this, Sir—O well-painted passion !
I am commanded home :—get you away ;
I'll send for you anon.—Sir, I obey the mandate,
And will return to Venice—hence, avaunt !

[Ex. Des.

Cassio shall have my place. And—Sir, to—
I do entreat that we may sup together. [night,
You are welcome, Sir, to Cyprus—
Goats and monkeys! Exit Othello.

His pathetic Upbraiding of his Wife.

Des. Upon my knees, what doth your speech
I understand a fury in your words, [import?
But not your words.

Oth. Why, what art thou?

Des. Your wife, my lord; your true and loyal wife.

Oth. Come, swear it; damn thyself;
Lest, being like one of heaven, the devils
themselves
Should fear to seize thee: therefore, be double
Swear thou art honest. [damn'd;

Des. Heaven doth truly know it.

Oth. Heaven truly knows, that thou art false as hell.

Des. To whom, my lord? With whom?
How am I false?

Oth. O, Desdemona, away! away! away!

Des. Alas, the heavy day! who do you weep?
Am I the occasion of these tears, my lord?
If, haply, you my father do suspect
An instrument of this your calling back, [him,
Lay not your blame on me; if you have lost
Why, I have lost him too.

Oth. Had it pleased Heaven
To try me with affliction; had he rain'd
All kinds of sores, and shames, on my bare head;
Steep'd me in poverty to the very lips;
Given to captivity me and my utmost hopes;
I should have found in some part of my soul
A drop of patience. But, alas! to make me
A fixed figure, for the time of scorn
To point his slow, unmoving figure at—
O! O!

Yet could I bear that too; well, very well:
But there, where I have garner'd up my heart;
Where either I must live, or bear no life:
The fountain from the which my current runs,
Or else dries up; to be discarded thence!
Or keep it as a cistern, for foul toads
To knot and gender in! Turn thy complexion
there!

Patience, thou young and rose-lipp'd cherubim;
Ay, there, look grim as hell! [nest.

Des. I hope, my noble lord esteems me ho-

Oth. O, ay; as summer-flies are in the shambles,

That quicken even with blowing. O thou weed,
Who art so lovely fair, and smell'st so sweet,
That the sense aches at thee, 'would thou hadst
ne'er been born! [mitted?

Des. Alas! what ignorant sin have I com-

Oth. Was this fair paper, this most goodly book,

Made to write whore upon! what, committed!
Committed! O thou public commoner!
I should make very forges of my cheeks
That would to cinders burn up modesty, [ted!
Did I but speak thy deeds.—What, commit-Heaven stops the nose at it, and the moon
winks:

The bawdy wind, that kisses all it meets,
Is hush'd within the hollow mine of earth,

And will not hear it: what committed!
Impudent strumpet!

Des. By Heaven, you do me wrong!

Oth. Are you not a strumpet?

Des. No, as I am a Christian.

If to preserve this vessel for my lord,
From any other foul, unlawful touch,
Be not to be a strumpet, I am none.

Oth. What, not a whore?

Des. No, as I shall be saved.

Oth. Is it possible?

Des. O Heaven forgive us!

Oth. I cry you mercy, then;
I took you for that cunning whore of Venice,
That married with Othello.

Desdemona's Faithfulness.

O good Iago,

What shall I do to win my lord again?

Good friend, go to him; for, by this light of
heaven,

I know not how I lost him. Here I kneel—
[Kneeling.

If e'er my will did trespass 'gainst his love,
Either in discourse of thought, or actual deed:
Or that mine eyes, mine ears, or any sense,
Delighted them in any other form;
Or that I do not yet, and ever did,
And ever will—though he do shake me off
To beggarly divorcement—love him dearly,
Comfort forswear me! Unkindness may do
much,

And his unkindness may defeat my life,
But never taint my love.

A Bed-chamber: Desdemona is discovered asleep in her Bed.

Enter Othello, with a Light and Sword.

Oth. It is the cause, it is the cause, my soul—
Let me not name it to you, you chaste stars!
It is the cause.—Yet I'll not shed her blood,
Nor scar that whiter skin of hers than snow,
And smooth as monumental alabaster.

[Lays down the Sword.

Yet she must die, else she'll betray more men.
Put out the light, and then put out the light!
If I quench thee, thou flaming minister,
I can again thy former light restore,
Should I repent me; but once put out thy light,
Thou cunning'st pattern of excelling nature,
I know not where is that Promethean heat
That can thy light relume.

[Sets down the Taper.

When I have pluck'd thy rose,
I cannot give it vital growth again;
It needs must wither: I'll smell it on the tree.
[Kissing her.

O balmy breath, that dost almost persuade Justice herself to break her sword! One more.
Be thus when thou art dead, and I will kill thee,
And love thee after: one more, and this the last:
So sweet was ne'er so fatal. I must weep,
But they are cruel tears; this sorrow's heavenly;
It strikes where it doth love.

Othello's Confusion after having murdered his Wife.

Yes 'tis Æmilia:—by and by—she's dead,
'Tis like, she comes to speak of Cassio's death:

The noise was high. Ha! no more moving?
Still as the grave. Shall she come in? wer't
good?

I think she stirs again:—no.—What's the best?
If she comes in, she'll sure speak to my wife:—
My wife! my wife! what wife? I have no wife.
O insupportable! O heavy hour!
Methinks it should be now a huge eclipse
Of sun and moon; and that the affrighted globe
Should yawn at alteration.

His Love for her.

Had she been true,
If Heaven would make me such another world,
Of one entire and perfect chrysolite,
I'd not have sold her for it.

His bitter Remorse.

Behold! I have a weapon:
A better never did itself sustain
Upon a soldier's thigh: I've seen the day,
That, with this little arm, and this good sword,
I have made my way through more impediments
Than twenty times your stop.—But, O vain
Who can control his fate? it is not so now.
Be not afraid, though you do see me weapon'd.
Here is my journey's end, here is my butt,
And very sea-mark of my utmost sail.
Do you go back dismay'd? 'tis a lost fear;
Man but a rush against Othello's breast,
And he retires: where should Othello go?
Now—how dost thou look now? O ill-starr'd wench!

Pale as thy smock! when we shall meet at compt,
This look of thine will hurl my soul from hea-
And fiends will snatch at it. Cold, cold, my E'en like thy chastity—
O cursed, cursed slave!—Whip me, ye devils,
From the possession of this heavenly sight!
Blow me about in winds! roast me in sulphur!
Wash me in steep-down gulfs of liquid fire!
O Desdemona! Desdemona! dead?
Dead? O! O! O!

His last Speech.

Soft you; a word or two before you go.
I have done the state some service, and they know it;
No more of that.—I pray you, in your letters,
When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice: then must you
speak
Of one that lov'd not wisely, but too well:
Of one not easily jealous, but, being wrought,
Perplex'd in the extreme; of one whose hand,
Like the base Judean, threw a pearl away
Richer than all his tribe; of one whose subdued eyes,
Albeit unused to the melting mood,
Drop tears as fast as the Arabian trees
Their medicinal gum. Set you down this:
And say, besides, that in Aleppo once,
Where a malignant and a turban'd Turk
Beat a Venetian, and traduc'd the state,
I took by the throat the circumcised dog,
And smote him—thus, [Stabs himself.

§31. THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING
RICHARD II. SHAKESPEARE.

Reputation.

THE purest treasure mortal times afford,
Is spotless reputation; that away,
Men are but gilded loam, or painted clay.

Cowardice.

That which in mean men we entitle patience,
Is pale cold cowardice in noble breasts.

Banishment; Consolation under it.

All places that the eye of Heaven visits,
Are to a wise man ports and happy havens:
Teach thy necessity to reason thus;
There is no virtue like necessity.
Think not the king did banish thee;
But thou the king: woe doth the heavier sit
Where it perceives it is but faintly borne.
Go, say, I sent thee forth to purchase honor,
And not the king exil'd thee:—Or suppose,
Devouring pestilence hangs in our air,
And thou art flying to a fresher clime.
Look, what thy soul holds dear, imagine it
To lie that way thou go'st, not whence thou
Suppose the singing-birds, musicians; [com'st:
The grass whereon thou tread'st, the presence
strew'd;
The flow'rs, fair ladies; and thy steps, no more
Than a delightful measure or a dance:
For gnarling sorrow hath less power to bite
The man that mocks at it, and sets it light.

Thoughts ineffectual to moderate Affliction.

O, who can hold a fire in his hand,
By thinking on the frosty Caucasus?
Or cloy the hungry edge of appetite,
By bare imagination of a feast?
Or wallow naked in December snow,
By thinking on fantastic summer's heat?
O, no! the apprehension of the good
Gives but the greater feeling to the worse:
Fell sorrow's tooth doth never rankle more
Than when it bites, but lanceth not the sore.

Popularity.

Ourself, and Bushy, Bagot here, and Green,
Observ'd his courtship to the common people:
How he did seem to dive into their hearts
With humble and familiar courtesy;
What reverence he did throw away on slaves;
Wooing poor craftsmen, with the craft of smiles,
And patient under-bearing of his fortune,
As 'twere to banish their affects with him.
Off goes his bonnet to an oyster wench;
A brace of draymen bid—God speed him well,
And had the tribute of his supple knee:
With—"Thanks, my countrymen, my loving
friends;"
As were our England in reversion his,
And he our subjects' next degree in hope.

England.

This royal throne of kings, this sceptred isle,
This earth of majesty, this seat of Mars,
This other Eden, demi-paradise;
This fortress, built by nature for herself,
Against infection, and the hand of war;

This happy breed of men, this little world ;
This precious stone set in the silver sea,
Which serves it in the office of a wall,
Or as a moat defensive to a house,
Against the envy of less happier lands.

England, bound in with the triumphant sea,
Whose rocky shore beats back the envious siege
Of wat'ry Neptune, is now bound in with shame,
With inky blots, and rotten parchment-bonds ;
That England, that was wont to conquer others,
Hath made a shameful conquest of itself.

Grief.

Each substance of a grief hath twenty shadows,
Which show like grief itself, but are not so :
For sorrow's eye, glazed with blinding tears,
Divides one thing entire to many objects ;
Like perspectives, which, rightly gaz'd upon,
Show nothing but confusion ; eyed awry,
Distinguish form.

Hope deceitful.

I will despair, and be at enmity
With cozening hope ; he is a flatterer,
A parasite, a keeper back of death,
Who gently would dissolve the bands of life,
Which false hope lingers in extremity.

The Prognostics of War.

The bay-trees in our country all are wither'd,
And meteors fright the fixed stars of heaven ;
The pale-fac'd moon looks bloody on the earth ;
And lean-look'd prophets whisper fearful change :
Rich men look sad, and ruffians dance and leap.

Richard to England, on his Arrival.

As a long-parted mother with her child
Plays fondly with her tears, and smiles in meeting ;
So weeping, smiling, greet I thee, my earth,
And do thee favor with my royal hands.
Feed not thy sovereign's foe, my gentle earth,
Nor with thy sweets comfort his ravenous sense :
But let thy spiders that suck up thy venom,
And heavy gaited toads, lie in their way,
Doing annoyance to the treacherous feet
Which with usurping steps do trample thee.
Yield stinging nettles to mine enemies :
And when they from thy bosom pluck a flow'r,
Guard it, I pray thee, with a lurking adder ;
Whose double tongue may with a mortal touch
Throw death upon thy sov'reign's enemies.
Mock not my senseless conjuration, lords ;
This earth shall have a feeling, and these stones
Prove armed soldiers, ere her native king
Shall falter under foul rebellious arms.

The Sun rising after a dark Night.

—Know'st thou not,
That when the searching eye of heaven is hid
Behind the globe, and lights the lower world,
Then thieves and robbers range abroad unseen,
In murders, and in outrage, bloody here ;
But when from under this terrestrial ball
He fires the proud tops of the eastern pines,
And darts his light through every guilty hole,
Then murders, treasons, and detested sins,

The cloak of night being pluck'd from off their backs,
Stand bare and naked, trembling at themselves ?

On the Vanity of Power, and Misery of Kings.

No matter where ; of comfort no man speak ;
Let's talk of graves, of worms, and epitaphs ;
Make dust our paper, and with rainy eyes
Write sorrow on the bosom of the earth.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills ;
And not yet so—for what can we bequeath,
Save our deposed bodies to the ground ?
Our lands, our lives, and all, are Bolingbroke's,
And nothing can we call our own, but death ;
And that small model of the barren earth,
Which serves as paste and covering to our bones.
For Heav'n's sake, let us sit upon the ground,
And tell sad stories of the death of kings :
How some have been depos'd, some slain in war,
Some haunted by the ghosts they have depos'd ;
Some poison'd by their wives ; some sleeping
kill'd ;

All murder'd :—For within the hollow crown
That rounds the mortal temples of a king,
Keeps Death his court : and there the antic sits,
Scoffing his state, and grinning at his pomp ;
Allowing him a breath, a little scene
To monarchize, be fear'd, and kill with looks ;
Infusing him with self and vain conceit ;
As if this flesh, which walls about our life,
Were brass impregnable : and humor'd thus,
Comes at the last, and with a little pin
Bores thro' his castle walls, and, farewell king !
Cover your heads, and mock not flesh and blood
With solemn reverence ; throw away respect,
Tradition, form, and ceremonious duty ;
For you have but mistook me all this while :
I live with bread like you, feel want, taste grief,
Need friends : subjected thus,
How can you say to me—I am a king ?

Melancholy Stories.

In winter's tedious nights, sit by the fire,
With good old folks, and let them tell thee tales
Of woful ages long ago betid :
And, ere thou bid good night, to quit their grief,
Tell thou the lamentable fall of me,
And send the hearers weeping to their beds.

A Description of Bolingbroke's and Richard's Entry into London.

Then, as I said, the duke, great Bolingbroke,
Mounted upon a hot and fiery steed,
Which his aspiring rider seemed to know—
With slow, but stately pace, kept on his course ;
While all tongues cried, God save thee, Bolingbroke !
[spake,
You would have thought the very windows
So many greedy looks of young and old
Through casements darted their desiring eyes
Upon his visage ; and that all the walls,
With painted imagery, had said at once,
Jesu preserve thee ! welcome, Bolingbroke !
Whilst he, from one side to the other turning
Bare-headed, lower than his proud steed's neck,
Bespoke them thus—I thank you, countrymen :
And thus still doing, thus he pass'd along.

Duch. Alas, poor Richard! where rides he the while?

York. As in a theatre the eyes of men,
After a well-grac'd actor leaves the stage,
Are idly bent on him that enters next,
Thinking his prattle to be tedious: [eyes
Even so, or with much more contempt, men's Did scowl on Richard; no man cried, God save him!

No joyful tongue gave him his welcome home;
But dust was thrown upon his sacred head;
Which with such gentle sorrow he shook off,
His face still combating with tears and smiles,
The badges of his grief and patience—
That had not God, for some strong purpose, steel'd

The hearts of men, they must perforce have melted,
And barbarism itself have pitied him.

Violets.

Who are the violets now
That strew the green lap of the new-comespring?

King Richard's Soliloquy in Prison.

I have been studying how I may compare
This prison, where I live, unto the world:
And, for because the world is populous,
And here is not a creature but myself,
I cannot do it—yet I'll hammer it out.
My brain I'll prove the female to my soul;
My soul, the father; and these two beget
A generation of still-breeding thoughts,
And these same thoughts people this little world;
In humors, like the people of this world,
For no thought is contented—

Thoughts tending to content, flatter themselves
That they are not the first of fortune's slaves,
Nor shall not be the last; like silly beggars,
Who, sitting in the stocks, refuge their shame—
That many have, and others must sit there:
And in this thought they find a kind of ease,
Bearing their own misfortune on the back
Of such as have before endur'd the like.
Thus play I, in one prison, many people,
And none contented. Sometimes am I a king;
Then treason makes me wish myself a beggar;
And so I am: then crushing penury
Persuades me I was better when a king;
Then am I king'd again: and, by and by,
Think that I am unking'd by Bolingbroke,
And straight am nothing.—But, whate'er I am,
Nor I, nor any man, that but man is,
With nothing shall be pleas'd, till he be eas'd
With being nothing.

§ 32. THE LIFE AND DEATH OF KING RICHARD III. SHAKSPEARE.

Richard, on his own Deformity.

Now are our brows bound with victorious wreaths;
Our bruised arms hung up for monuments;
Our stern alarums chang'd to merry meetings:
Our dreadful marches to delightful measures.
Grim-visag'd war hath smooth'd his wrinkled front;

And now—instead of mounting barbed steeds
To fright the souls of fearful adversaries—
He capers nimbly in a lady's chamber,
To the lascivious pleasing of a lute.
But I, that am not shap'd for sportive tricks,
Nor made to court an am'rous looking-glass;
I, that am rudely stamp'd, and want love's
majesty;

To strut before a wanton, ambling nymph;
I, that am curtail'd of this fair proportion,
Cheated of feature by dissembling nature,
Deform'd, unfinish'd, sent before my time
Into this breathing world, scarce half made up,
And that so lamely and unfashionable,
That dogs bark at me, as I halt by them—
Why I, in this weak piping time of peace,
Have no delight to pass away the time,
Unless to spy my shadow in the sun,
And descant on my own deformity:
And therefore—since I cannot prove a lover,
To entertain these fair, well-spoken days—
I am determined to prove a villain,
And hate the idle pleasures of these days.

Richard's Love for Lady Anne.

Those eyes of thine from mine have drawn salt tears, [drops;
Sham'd their aspects with store of childish
These eyes, which never shed remorseful tear—
Not, when my father York and Edward wept,
To hear the piteous moan that Rutland made,
When black-fac'd Clifford shook his sword at
him;
Nor when thy warlike father, like a child,
Told the sad story of my father's death;
And twenty times made pause to sob and weep,
That all the standers-by had wet their cheeks,
Like trees bedash'd with rain: in that sad time,
My manly eyes did scorn an humble tear;
And what these sorrows could not thence exhale,
Thy beauty hath, and made them blind with weeping.
I never sued to friend, nor enemy;
My tongue could never learn sweet soothing
words;
But now thy beauty is propos'd my fee,
My proud heart sues, and prompts my tongue
to speak.

On his own Person, after his successful Addresses.

My dukedom to a beggarly denier,
I do mistake my person all this while:
Upon my life, she finds, although I cannot,
Myself to be a marvellous proper man.
I'll be at charges for a looking-glass;
And entertain a score or two of tailors,
To study fashions to adorn my body:
Since I have crept in favor with myself,
I will maintain it with some little cost.

Queen Margaret's Execration.

The worm of conscience still begnaw thy soul.
Thy friends suspect for traitors while thou liv'st.
And take deep traitors for thy dearest friends!
No sleep close up that deadly eye of thine,
Unless it be when some tormenting dream
Affrights thee with a hell of ugly devils!

Thou elvish-mark'd, abortive, rooting hog!
Thou that wast seal'd in thy nativity
The slave of nature, and the son of hell!
Thou slander of thy mother's heavy womb!
Thou loathed issue of thy father's loins!
Thou rag of honor, thou detested—

High Birth.

I was born so high,
Our aerie buildeth in the cedar's top,
And dallies with the wind, and scorns the sun.

Richard's Hypocrisy.

But then I sigh, and, with a piece of Scripture,
Tell them that God bids us do good for evil:
And thus I clothe my naked villany
With old odd ends, stolen forth of holy writ,
And seem a saint, when most I play the devil.

Clarence's Dream.

Brak. What was your dream, my lord? I pray
you tell me. [Tower,

Clar. Methought, that I had broken from the
And was embark'd to cross to Burgundy,
And, in my company, my brother Glo'ster;
Who from my cabin tempted me to walk
Upon the hatches; thence we look'd toward England,

And cited up a thousand heavy times,
During the wars of York and Lancaster,
That had befall'n us. As we pac'd along
Upon the giddy footing of the hatches, [ing
Methought that Glo'ster stumbled; and in fall-
Struck me, that thought to stay him, overboard,
Into the tumbling billows of the main.

O Lord! methought, what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of water in my ears!
What sights of ugly death within mine eyes!
Methought I saw a thousand fearful wrecks;
A thousand men that fishes gnaw'd upon;
Wedges of gold, great anchors, heaps of pearl,
Inestimable stones, unvalued jewels,
All scatter'd in the bottom of the sea, [holes,
Some lay in dead men's skulls; and, in those
Where eyes did once inhabit, there were crept
(As 'twere in scorn of eyes) reflecting gems,
That woo'd the slimy bottom of the deep,
And mock'd the dead bones that lay scatter'd by.

Brak. Had you such leisure in the time of
To gaze upon these secrets of the deep? [death,

Clar. Methought I had; and often did I strive
To yield the ghost; but still the envious flood
Kept in my soul, and would not let it forth
To seek the empty, vast, and wand'ring air;
But smother'd it within my panting bulk,
Which almost burst to belch it in the sea.

Brak. Awak'd you not with this sore agony?

Clar. O no, my dream was lengthen'd after
O, then began the tempest of my soul! [life:
I pass'd, methought, the melancholy flood,
With that grim ferryman which poets write of,
Unto the kingdom of perpetual night.

The first that there did greet my stranger soul,
Was my great father-in-law, renowned Warwick;

Who cried aloud—"What scourge for perjury
Can this dark monarchy afford false Clarence?"
And so he vanish'd. Then came wand'ring by

A shadow like an angel, with bright hair
Dabbled in blood; and he shriek'd out aloud—
"Clarence is come, false, fleeting, perjur'd
Clarence—

That stabb'd me in the field by Tewkesbury;
Seize on him, furies, take him to your tor-
ments!"

With that, methought, a legion of foul fiends
Inviron'd me, and howled in mine ears
Such hideous cries, that, with the very noise,
I trembling wak'd; and, for a season after,
Could not believe but that I was in hell:
Such terrible impression made my dream.

Brak. No marvel, lord, that it affrighted you;
I am afraid, methinks, to hear you tell it.

Clar. O, Brakenbury, I have done those things
That now give evidence against my soul,
For Edward's sake; and see how he requites me!
O God! if my deep prayers cannot appease thee,
But thou wilt be aveng'd on my misdeeds,
Yet execute thy wrath on me alone:
O spare my guiltless wife, and my poor children!

Sorrow.

Sorrow breaks seasons and reposing hours,
Makes the night morning, and the noontide
Greatness, its Cares. [night.

Princes have but their titles for their glories,
An outward honor for an inward toil;
And, for unfelt imaginations,
They often feel a world of restless cares;
So that, between their titles and low name,
There's nothing differs but the outward fame.

Duchess of York on the Misfortunes of her Family.

Accursed and unquiet wrangling days!
How many of you have mine eyes beheld!
My husband lost his life to get the crown,
And often up and down my sons were toss'd,
For me to joy and weep their gain and loss:
And being seated, and domestic broils
Clean overblown, themselves, the conquerors,
Make war upon themselves; brother to brother,
Blood to blood, self against self:—O preposterous
And frantic outrage! end thy damned spleen;
Or let me die to look on death no more.

Deceit.

Ah! that deceit should steal such gentle shapes,
And with a virtuous vizard hide deep vice!

Submission to Heaven, our Duty.

In common worldly things, 'tis call'd ungrateful,
With dull unwillingness to pay a debt,
Which with a bounteous hand was kindly lent;
Much more, to be thus opposite with Heaven,
For it requires the royal debt it lent you.

The Vanity of Trust in Man.

O momentary grace of mortal men,
Which we more hunt for than the grace of God!
Who builds his hope in air of your fair looks,
Lives like a drunken sailor on a mast;
Ready, with every nod, to tumble down
Into the fatal bowels of the deep.

Contemplation.

When holy and devout religious men
Are at their beads, 'tis hard to draw them thence,
So sweet is zealous contemplation.

Description of the Murder of the two young Princes in the Tower.

The tyrannous and bloody act is done ;
The most arch-deed of piteous massacre,
That ever yet this land was guilty of.
Dighton and Forrest, whom I did suborn
To do this piece of ruthless butchery,
Albeit they were flesh'd villains, bloody dogs,
Melting with tenderness and mild compassion,
Wept like two children, in their death's sad story. [babes!"]

"O thus," quoth Dighton, "lay the gentle
"Thus, thus," quoth Forrest, "girdling one
another

Within their alabaster innocent arms ;
Their lips were four red roses on a stalk,
Which in their summer beauty kiss'd each other.

A book of prayers on their pillow lay ;
Which once," quoth Forrest, "almost chang'd
my mind ;

But, O the devil!"—there the villain stopp'd ;
When Dighton thus told on—"We smothered
The most replenished sweet work of nature,
That from the prime creation e'er she fram'd."
Hence both are gone with conscience and remorse :

They could not speak ; and so I left them both
To bear these tidings to the bloody king.

Expedition.

Come, I have learn'd that fearful comment-
Is leaden servitor to dull delay ; [ing
Delay leads impotent and snail-pac'd beggary :
Then fiery expedition be my wing,
Jove's Mercury, and herald for a king !

Queen Margaret's Exprobration.

I call'd thee then, poor shadow, painted queen ;
One heav'd a-high to be hurl'd down below :
A mother only mock'd with two fair babes ;
A dream of what thou wast ; a garish flag,
To be the aim of ev'ry dang'rous shot ;
A sign of dignity, a breath, a bubble ;
A queen in jest, only to fill the scene. [thers?
Where is thy husband now? where be thy bro-
Where be thy two sons? wherein dost thou joy?
Who sues, and kneels, and says, God save the queen?

Where be the bending peers that flatter'd thee?
Where be the thronging troops that follow'd
thee?

Decline all this, and see what now thou art :
For happy wife, a most distressed widow ;
For joyful mother, one that wails the name ;
For one being sued to, one that humbly sues ;
For queen, a very caitiff crown'd with care ;
For one that scorn'd at me, now scorn'd of me ;
For one being fear'd of all, now fearing one ;
For one commanding all, obey'd of none.

Thus hath the course of justice wheel'd about,
And left thee but a very prey to time :

Having no more but thought of what thou wert,
To torture thee the more, being what thou art.

His Mother's Character of King Richard.

Tetchy and wayward was thy infancy :
Thy school-days frightful, desp'rate, wild, and furious ; [turous ;
Thy prime of manhood, daring, bold, and ven-

Thy age confirm'd, proud, subtle, sly, and bloody.

Hope.

True hope is swift, and flies with swallow's wings : [kings.

Kings it makes gods, and meaner creatures

A fine Evening.

The weary sun hath made a golden set ;
And by the bright track of his fiery car,
Gives token of a goodly day to-morrow.

Day-break.

The silent hours steal on,
And flaky darkness breaks within the east.

Richmond's Prayer.

O thou ! whose captain I account myself,
Look on my forces with a gracious eye :
Put in their hands thy bruising irons of wrath,
That they may crush down with a heavy fall
Th' usurping helmets of our adversaries !
Make us thy mistress of chastisement,
That we may praise thee in thy victory !
To thee do I commend my watchful soul,
Ere I let fall the windows of mine eyes ;
Sleeping, and waking, O defend me still !

Richard starting out of his Dream.

Give me another horse—bind up my wounds :
Have mercy, Jesu !—Soft, I did but dream.
O coward conscience, how dost thou afflict
me !

The lights burn blue—is it not dead midnight ?
Cold fearful drops stand on my trembling flesh,
What do I fear? myself? there's none else by.

Conscience.

Conscience is but a word that cowards use,
Devis'd at first to keep the strong in awe.

Richard before the Battle.

A thousand hearts are great within my bosom.

Advance our standards, set upon our foes ;
Our ancient word of courage, fair St. George,
Inspire us with the spleen of fiery dragons !
Upon them ! victory sits on our helms.

Alarum. Enter King Richard.

K. Richard. A horse ! a horse ! my kingdom for a horse !

Catesb. Withdraw, my lord, I'll help you to a horse. [a cast,

K. Richard. Slave, I have set my life upon
And I will stand the hazard of the die :
I think there be six Richmonds in the field ;
Five have I slain to-day, instead of him.
A horse ! a horse ! my kingdom for a horse !

[Exeunt.

§ 33. ROMEO AND JULIET.

SHAKSPEARE.

Love.

Love is a smoke rais'd with the fume of sighs ;
Being purg'd, a fire sparkling in lovers' eyes ;
Being vex'd, a sea nourish'd with lovers' tears :
What is it else? a madness most discreet,
A choking gall, and a preserving sweet.

On Dreams.

O then, I see, queen Mab hath been with
She is the fairies' midwife, and she comes,

In shape no bigger than an agate stone
 On the fore-finger of an alderman,
 Drawn with a team of little atomies,
 Athwart men's noses as they lie asleep:
 Her waggon-spokes made of long spinners' legs;
 The cover, of the wings of grasshoppers;
 The traces, of the smallest spider's web;
 The collars, of the moonshine's wat'ry beams:
 Her whip, of cricket's bone; the lash, of film;
 Her waggoner, a small grey-coated gnat,
 Not half so big as a round little worm,
 Prick'd from the lazy finger of a maid:
 Her chariot is an empty hazel nut,
 Made by the joiner squirrel, or old grub,
 Time out of mind the fairies' coach-makers.
 And in this state she gallops night by night,
 Through lovers' brains, and then they dream of love; [straight;
 On courtiers' knees, that dream on courtesies
 O'er lawyers' fingers, who straight dream on fees;
 O'er ladies' lips, who straight on kisses dream,
 Which oft the angry Mab with blisters plagues,
 Because their breaths with sweetmeats tainted are.
 Sometimes she gallops o'er a lawyer's nose,
 And then dreams he of smelling out a suit:
 And sometimes comes she with a tithe-pig's tail,
 Tickling a parson's nose as he lies asleep,
 Then dreams he of another benefice:
 Sometimes she driveth o'er a soldier's neck,
 And then he dreams of cutting foreign throats,
 Of breaches, ambuscadoes, Spanish blades,
 Of healths five fathom deep; and then anon
 Drums in his ear, at which he starts and wakes,
 And, being thus frighted, swears a prayer or two,
 And sleeps again. This is that very Mab
 That plats the manes of horses in the night,
 And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
 Which, once entangled, much misfortune
 bodes. [backs,
 This is the hag, when maids lie on their
 That presses them, and learns them first to bear,
 Making them women of good carriage.
 This is she—

Rom. Peace, peace, Mercutio, peace;
 Thou talk'st of nothing.

Mer. True, I talk of dreams:
 Which are the children of an idle brain,
 Begot of nothing but vain phantasy;
 Which is as thin of substance as the air;
 And more inconstant than the wind, who woos
 E'en now the frozen bosom of the north,
 And, being anger'd, puffs away from thence,
 Turning his face to the dew-dropping south.

A Beauty described.

O, she doth teach the torches to burn bright!
 Her beauty hangs upon the cheek of night,
 Like a rich jewel in an Æthiop's ear:
 Beauty too rich for use, for earth too dear!
 So shows a snowy dove trooping with crows,
 As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows.

The Courtship between Romeo and Juliet in the Garden.

Enter Romeo.

Rom. He jests at scars, that never felt a wound— [breaks?
 But, soft! what light thro' yonder window

It is the east, and Juliet is the sun!

[Juliet appears above at the Window.

Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,
 Who is already sick and pale with grief,
 That thou her maid art far more fair than she.
 Be not her maid, since she is envious;
 Her vestal livery is but sick and green,
 And none but fools do wear it; cast it off—
 She speaks, yet she says nothing; what of that?
 Her eye discourses, I will answer it.

I am too bold, 'tis not to me she speaks:
 Two of the fairest stars in all the heaven,
 Having some business, do entreat her eyes
 To twinkle in their spheres till they return.
 What if her eyes were there, they in her head?
 The brightness of her cheek would shame those stars,

As day-light doth a lamp; her eye in heaven,
 Would thro' the airy region stream so bright,
 That birds would sing, and think it were not
 night.

See, how she leans her cheek upon her hand!
 O, that I were a glove upon that hand,
 That I might touch that cheek!

Jul. Ah me!

Rom. She speaks—

O speak again, bright angel! for thou art
 As glorious to this night, being o'er my head,
 As is a winged messenger of heaven
 Unto the white upturned wond'ring eyes
 Of mortals, that fall back to gaze on him,
 When he bestrides the lazy-pacing clouds,
 And sails upon the bosom of the air.

Jul. O Romeo, Romeo!—wherefore art thou Romeo?

Deny thy father, and refuse thy name:
 Or, if thou wilt not, be but sworn my love,
 And I'll no longer be a Capulet.

Rom. Shall I hear more, or shall I speak at this? [Aside.

Jul. 'Tis but thy name that is my enemy—
 - - - - -

What's in a name? that which we call a rose,
 By any other name would smell as sweet:
 So Romeo would, were he not Romeo call'd,
 Retain that dear perfection which he owes,
 Without that title. Romeo, doff thy name;
 And for that name which is no part of thee,
 Take all myself.

Rom. I take thee at thy word:
 Call me but love, and I'll be new baptiz'd;
 Henceforth I never will be Romeo.

Jul. What man art thou, that, thus bescreen'd in night,

So stumblest on my counsel?

Rom. By a name
 I know not how to tell thee who I am:
 My name, dear saint, is hateful to myself,
 Because it is an enemy to thee;
 Had I it written, I would tear the word.

Jul. My ears have not yet drunk a hundred words [sound;

Of that tongue's utterance, yet I know the Art thou not Romeo, and a Montague? [like.

Rom. Neither, fair saint, if either thee dis-

Jul. How cam'st thou hither? tell me, and wherefore?

The orchard walls are high, and hard to climb,
And the place death, considering who thou art,
If any of my kinsmen find thee here.

Rom. With love's light wings did I o'er-perch these walls;
For stony limits cannot hold love out:

And what love can do, that dares love attempt:
Therefore thy kinsmen are no let to me.

Jul. If they do see thee, they will murder
thee. [eye,

Rom. Alack! there lies more peril in thine
Than twenty of their swords; look thou but
And I am proof against their enmity. [sweet,

Jul. I would not for the world they saw thee
here. [their sight;

Rom. I have night's cloak to hide me from
And, but thou love me, let them find me here;
My life were better ended by their hate,
Than death prorogued, wanting of thy love.

Jul. By whose direction found'st thou out
this place? [inquire;

Rom. By love, who first did prompt me to
He lent me counsel, and I lent him eyes.

I am no pilot; yet wert thou as far
As that vast shore wash'd with the farthest sea,
I would adventure for such merchandise.

Jul. Thou know'st, the mask of night is on my face;
Else would a maiden blush bepaint my cheek,
For that which thou hast heard me speak tonight.

Fain would I dwell on form; fain, fain deny
What I have spoke; but farewell, compliment!
Dost thou love me? I know thou wilt say—Ay,
And I will take thy word:—yet, if thou
swear'st,

Thou mayst prove false; at lovers' perjuries,
They say Jove laughs. O gentle Romeo,
If thou dost love, pronounce it faithfully:
Or, if thou think'st I am too quickly won,
I'll frown, and be perverse, and say thee nay,
So thou wilt woo; but, else, not for the world.
In truth, fair Montague, I am too fond;
And therefore thou mayst think my 'haviour
light:

But trust me, gentleman, I'll prove more true
Than those that have more cunning to be strange. [fess,

I should have been more strange, I must con-
But that thou overheard'st, ere I was 'ware,
My true love's passion; therefore pardon me;
And not impute this yielding to light love,
Which the dark night hath so discovered.

Rom. Lady, by yonder blessed moon I vow,
That tips with silver all these fruit-tree tops—

Jul. O swear not by the moon, th' inconstant
moon,
That monthly changes in her circled orb,
Lest that thy love prove likewise variable.

Rom. What shall I swear by?

Jul. Do not swear at all—
Or, if thou wilt, swear by thy gracious self,
Which is the god of my idolatry,
And I'll believe thee.

Rom. If my heart's dear love—

Jul. Well, do not swear: altho' I joy in thee,
I have no joy of this contract to-night;

It is too rash, too unadvis'd, too sudden;
Too like the lightning, which doth cease to be,
Ere one can say, it lightens. Sweet, good night!
This bud of love, by summer's ripening breath,
May prove a beauteous flow'r when next we meet. [rest

Good-night, good-night!—a sweet repose and
Come to thy heart, as that within my breast!

Rom. O, wilt thou leave me so unsatisfied?

Jul. What satisfaction canst thou have tonight?

Rom. The exchange of thy love's faithful vow for mine. [quest it:

Jul. I gave thee mine before thou didst re-
And yet I would it were to give again.

Rom. Wouldst thou withdraw it? For what purpose, love?

Jul. But to be frank, and give it thee again.
And yet I wish but for the thing I have:
My bounty is as boundless as the sea,
My love as deep; the more I give to thee
The more I have, for both are infinite.
I hear some noise within: dear love, adieu!

[Nurse calls within.
Anon, good nurse!—Sweet Montague, be true.
Stay but a little, I will come again. [Exit.

Rom. O blessed, blessed night! I am afeard,
All this is but a dream I hear and see;
Too flattering sweet to be substantial.

Re-enter Juliet above.

Jul. Three words, dear Romeo, and goodnight indeed.

If that thy bent of love be honorable, [row,
Thy purpose marriage, send me word to-mor-
By one that I'll procure to come to thee,
Where, and what time, thou wilt perform the rite;

And all my fortunes at thy foot I'll lay,
And follow thee, my lord, throughout the world.
[Within: Madam!]

I come anon—but if thou mean'st not well,
I do beseech thee—[Within: Madam!] By and by, I come—

To cease thy suit, and leave me to my grief:
To-morrow will I send.

Rom. So thrive my soul.

Jul. A thousand times good-night! [Exit.

Rom. A thousand times the worse to want thy light.

Enter Juliet again.

Jul. Hist! Romeo! hist! O, for a falconer's voice,

To lure this tassel-gentle back again!
Bondage is hoarse, and may not speak aloud;
Else would I tear the cave where Echo lies,
And make her airy tongue more hoarse than
With repetition of my Romeo's name. [mine,

Rom. It is my soul that calls upon my name:
How silver-sweet sound lovers' tongues by night,
Like softest music to attending ears!

Jul. Romeo!

Rom. My sweet!—

Jul. At what o'clock to-morrow
Shall I send to thee?

Rom. At the hour of nine. [then.

Jul. I will not fail; 'tis twenty years till
I have forgot why I did call thee back.

Rom. Let me stand here till thou remember it. [there,

Jul. I shall forget, to have thee still stand Rememb'ring how I love thy company.

Rom. And I'll still stay, to have thee still forget,

Forgetting any other home but this. [gone:

Jul. 'Tis almost morning, I would have thee And yet no further than a wanton's bird; Who lets it hop a little from her hand, Like a poor prisoner in his twisted gyves, And with a silk thread plucks it back again, So loving-jealous of his liberty.

Rom. I would I were thy bird.

Jul. Sweet, so would I;

Yet I should kill thee with much cherishing. Good-night, good-night! Parting is such sweet sorrow,

That I shall say good-night, till it be morrow. [Exit.

Love's Heralds.

Love's heralds should be thoughts,
Which ten times faster glide than the sun-beams
Driving back shadows over lowering hills:
Therefore do nimble-pinion'd doves draw Love,
And therefore hath the wind-swift Cupid wings.

Violent Delights not lasting.

These violent delights have violent ends,
And in their triumph die; like fire and powder,
Which, as they kiss, consume.

Lovers light of Foot.

O, so light a foot
Will ne'er wear out the everlasting flint:
A lover may bestride the gossamers,
That idle in the wanton summer air,
And yet not fall; so light is vanity.

A Lover's Impatience.

Gallop apace; you fiery-footed steeds,
To Phœbus' mansion, such a waggoner
As Phaeton would whip you to the west,
And bring in cloudy night immediately.
Spread thy close curtain, love-peforming night!
That run-away's eyes may wink; and Romeo
Leap to these arms, untalk'd of, and unseen!
Lovers can see to do their am'rous rites
By their own beauties: or, if love be blind,
It best agrees with night.

Romeo, on his Banishment. [death:

Rom. Ha! banishment? be merciful, say
For exile hath more terror in his look [ment.
Much more than death: do not say banish-

Fri. Hence from Verona art thou banished:
Be patient, for the world is broad and wide.

Rom. There is no world without Verona's
walls,

But purgatory, torture, hell itself.
Hence banished, is banished from the world,
And world's exile is death; then banishment
Is death misterm'd: calling death banishment,
Thou cutt'st my head off with a golden axe,
And smil'st upon the stroke that murders me.

Fri. O deadly sin! O rude unthankfulness!
Thy fault our law calls death; but the kind prince,

Taking thy part, hath rush'd aside the law,
And turn'd that black word death to banishment:
This is dear mercy, and thou seest it not.

Rom. 'Tis torture, and not mercy: heaven is here

Where Juliet lives; and every cat, and dog,
And little mouse, every unworthy thing,
Live here in heaven, and may look on her,
But Romeo may not. More validity,
More honorable state, more courtship lives
In carrion flies, than Romeo: they may seize
On the white wonder of dear Juliet's hand,
And steal immortal blessing from her lips;
But Romeo may not, he is banished! knife,
Hadst thou no poison mix'd, no sharp-ground
Nosudden mean of death, though ne'er so mean,
But—banished—to kill me; banished?

O friar, the damned use that word in hell;
Howlings attend it: how hast thou the heart,
Being a divine, a ghostly confessor,
A sin-absolver, and my friend profest,
To mangle me with that word—banishment?

Fri. Thou fond mad man, hear me but speak
a word. [ment!

Rom. O, thou wilt speak again of banish-

Fri. I'll give thee armor to keep off that word;
Adversity's sweet milk, philosophy,
To comfort thee, though thou art banished.

Rom. Yet banished? Hang up philosophy!
Unless philosophy can make a Juliet,
Displant a town, reverse a prince's doom,
It helps not, it prevails not; talk no more.

Fri. O then I see that madmen have no ears.

Rom. How should they, when that wise men have no eyes?

Fri. Let me dispute with thee of thy estate.

Rom. Thou canst not speak of what thou dost not feel:

Wert thou as young as I, Juliet thy love,
An hour but married, Tybalt murdered,
Doting like me, and like me banished,
Then mightst thou speak, then mightst thou tear thy hair,

And fall upon the ground, as I now,
Taking the measure of an unmade grave.

Juliet's Chamber, looking to the Garden.

*Enter Romeo and Juliet above at a Window;
a Ladder of Ropes set.*

Jul. Wilt thou begone? it is not yet near day:
It was the nightingale, and not the lark,
That pierc'd the fearful hollow of thine ear;
Nightly she sings on yon pomegranate-tree:
Believe me, love, it was the nightingale.

Rom. It was the lark, the herald of the morn,
No nightingale: look, love, what envious streaks

Do lace the severing clouds in yonder east:
Night's candles are burnt out, and jocund day
Stands tiptoe on the misty mountain tops;
I must be gone and live, or stay and die.

Jul. Yon light is not day-light, I know it, I;
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer,
And light thee on thy way to Mantua:
Therefore stay yet, thou need'st not to be gone.

Rom. Let me be ta'en, let me be put to
death;

I am content, so thou wilt have it so.
I'll say yon grey is not the morning's eye,
'Tis but the pale reflex of Cynthia's brow;

Nor that is not the lark, whose notes do beat
The vaulty heaven so high above our heads.
I have more care to stay, than will to go.
Come death, and welcome! Juliet wills it so.—
How is't, my soul? let's talk, it is not day.

Juliet's Resolution.

O bid me leap, rather than marry Paris,
From off the battlements of yonder tower;
Or walk in thievish ways; or bid me lurk
Where serpents are; chain me with roaring
Or shut me nightly in a charnel house; [bears;
O'ercover'd quit with dead men's rattling bones,
With reeky shanks and yellow chapless skulls;
Or bid me go into a new-made grave,
And hide me with a dead man in his shroud—
Things that to hear them told have made me
tremble;

And I will do it without fear or doubt,
To live an unstain'd wife to my sweet love.

Juliet's Soliloquy on drinking the Potion.

Farewell—God knows when we shall meet
again!

I have a faint cold fear thrills thro' my veins,
That almost freezes up the heat of life:
I'll call them back again to comfort me.—
Nurse!—what should she do here?
My dismal scene I needs must act alone:
Come, phial.—What if this mixture do not work at all?

Must I of force be married to the county?
No, no! this shall forbid it—lie thou there.

[Pointing to a dagger.]

What if it be a poison, which the friar
Subtly hath minister'd, to have me dead;
Lest in this marriage he should be dishonor'd,
Because he married me before to Romeo?
I fear it is: and yet, methinks, it should not,
For he hath still been tried a holy man:
I will not entertain so bad a thought.—
How if, when I am laid into the tomb,
I wake before the time that Romeo
Come to redeem me? there's a fearful point!
Shall I not then be stifled in the vault, [in,
To whose foul mouth no healthsome air breathes
And there die strangled ere my Romeo comes?
Or, if I live, is it not very like
The horrible conceit of death and night,
Together with the terror of the place—
As in a vault, an ancient receptacle,
Where, for these many hundred years, the bones
Of all my buried ancestors are pack'd;
Where bloody Tybalt, yet but green in earth,
Lies fest'ring in his shroud; where, as they say,
At some hours in the night spirits resort—
Alack! alack! is it not like that I
So early waking—what with loathsome smells;
And shrieks like mandrakes torn out of the earth,
That living mortals, hearing them, run mad—
O! if I wake, shall I not be distraught,
Invironed with all these hideous fears?
And madly play with my forefathers' joints?
And pluck the mangled Tybalt from his shroud?
And in this rage, with some great kinsman's bone,
As with a club, dash out my desp'rate brains?
O look! methinks I see my cousin's ghost
Seeking out Romeo, that did spit his body

Upon a rapier's point!—Stay, Tybalt, stay!
Romeo, I come! this do I drink to thee.

[She throws herself on the Bed.]

Joy and Mirth turned to their contraries.

All things that we ordained festival,
Turn from their office to black funeral:
Our instruments, to melancholy bells;
Our wedding cheer, to a sad burial feast;
Our solemn hymns to sullen dirges change:
Our bridal flow'rs serve for a buried corse,
And all things change them to the contrary.
*Romeo's Description of, and Discourse with,
the Apothecary.*

Well, Juliet, I will lie with thee to-night.
Let's see for means:—O mischief! thou art
swift

To enter in the thoughts of desperate men.
I do remember an apothecary—
And hereabouts he dwells—whom late I noted
In tatter'd weeds, with overwhelming brows,
Culling of simples; meagre were his looks,
Sharp misery had worn him to the bones;
And in his needy shop a tortoise hung,
An alligator stuff'd, and other skins,
Of ill-shap'd fishes; and about his shelves
A beggarly account of empty boxes,
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds,
Remnants of packthread, and old cakes of roses,
Were thinly scatter'd to make up a show.
Noting this penury, to myself I said—
An if a man did need a poison now,
Whose sale is present death in Mantua,
Here lives a caitiff wretch would sell it him.
O, this same thought did but fore-run my need;
And this same needy man must sell it me.
As I remember, this should be the house:
Being holiday, the beggar's shop is shut.
What, ho! apothecary!

Enter Apothecary.

Ap. Who calls so loud?

Rom. Come hither, man—I see that thou art poor;

Hold, there is forty ducats: let me have
A dram of poison; such soon-speeding geer,
As will disperse itself through all the veins,
That the life-weary taker may fall dead;
And that the trunk may be discharg'd of breath
As violently, as hasty powder fir'd
Doth hurry from the fatal cannon's womb.

Ap. Such mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law

Is death to any he that utters them.

Rom. Art thou so bare, and full of wretchedness,

And fear'st to die? famine is in thy cheeks;
Need and oppression starveth in thy eyes;
Upon thy back hangs ragged misery;
The world is not thy friend, nor the world's law:
The world affords no law to make thee rich;
Then be not poor, but break it, and take this.

Ap. My poverty, but not my will, consents.

Rom. I pay thy poverty, and not thy will.

Ap. Put this in any liquid thing you will,
And drink it off; and, if you had the strength
Of twenty men, it would dispatch you straight.

Rom. There is thy gold, worse poison to men's souls,

Doing more murders in this loathsome world
Than these poor compounds that thou mayst
not sell:

I sell thee poison, thou hast sold me none—
Farewell; buy food, and get thyself in flesh.

Romeo and Paris.

Par. Stop thy unhallow'd toil, vile Montague;

Can vengeance be pursu'd further than death?
Condemned villain! I do apprehend thee:
Obey, and go with me, for thou must die.

Rom. I must indeed; and therefore came I hither.

Good gentle youth, tempt not a desp'rate man;
Fly hence and leave me—think upon these gone;
Let them affright thee. I beseech thee, youth,
Heap not another sin upon my head,
By urging me to fury. O, be gone!
By Heaven, I love thee better than myself;
For I come hither arm'd against myself.

Par. I do defy thy conjurations,
And do attach thee as a felon here.

Rom. Wilt thou provoke me? then have at thee, boy. [They fight, Paris falls.]

Par. O, I am slain! if thou be merciful,
Open the tomb, lay me with Juliet. [Dies.]

Rom. In faith, I will:—let me peruse this
face;

Mercutio's kinsman, noble County Paris.
What said my man, when my betossed soul
Did not attend him as we rode? I think
He told me, Paris should have married Juliet:
Said he not so? or did I dream it so?

Or am I mad, hearing him talk of Juliet,
To think it was so?—O, give me thy hand,
One writ with me in sour misfortune's book!

Romeo's last Speech over Juliet in the Vault.

O my love! my wife!

Death, that hath suck'd the honey of thy
breath,

Hath had no power yet upon thy beauty:
Thou art not conquer'd; beauty's ensign yet
Is crimson in thy lips and in thy cheeks,
And death's pale flag is not advanced there.—

Tybalt, liest thou there in thy bloody sheet?
O, what more favor can I do to thee,
Than with that hand that cut thy youth in twain,
To sunder his that was thine enemy?

Forgive me, cousin!—Ah, dear Juliet!

Why art thou yet so fair? shall I believe

That unsubstantial death is amorous;

And that the lean, abhorred monster keeps

Thee here in dark to be his paramour?

For fear of that, I will still stay with thee;

And never from this palace of dim night

Depart again; here, here, will I remain, [here

With worms that are thy chambermaids—O,
Will I set up my everlasting rest;

And shake the yoke of inauspicious stars

From this world-wearied flesh. Eyes, look your last!

Arms, take your last embrace! and lips, O you
The doors of breath, seal with a righteous kiss
A dateless bargain to engrossing death!—

Come, bitter conduct! come, unsav'ry guide!
Thou desp'rate pilot, now at once run on

The dashing rocks thy sea-sick, weary bark!

Here's to my love! O true apothecary!

[Drinks the Poison.]

Thy drugs are quick.—Thus with a kiss I die.

[Dies.]

§ 34. TIMON OF ATHENS.

SHAKSPEARE.

Painting.

THE painting is almost the natural man;
For since dishonor traffics with man's nature,
He is but outside: these pencil'd figures are Even such as they give out.

The Grace of a Cynic Philosopher.

Immortal gods! I crave no pelf;
I pray for no man but myself:
Grant I may never prove so fond
To trust man on his oath or bond;
Or a harlot, for her weeping;
Or a dog, that seems a-sleeping;
Or a keeper, with my freedom;
Or my friends, if I should need 'em.

Amen! Amen! so fall to't,
Rich men sin, and I eat root.

A faithful Steward.

So the gods bless me,
When all our offices have been oppress'd
With riotous feeders; when our vaults have wept

With drunken spilt of wine, when every room
Hath blaz'd with lights, and bray'd with minstrelsy;

I have retir'd me to a wasteful cock,
And set mine eyes at flow.

The Ingratitude of Timon's Friends.

They answer, in a joint and corporate voice,
That now they are at fall, want treasure, cannot

Do what they would; are sorry—you are honorable—

But yet they could have wish'd—they know not—but

Something hath been amiss—a noble nature
May catch a wrench—would all were well—
'tis pity—

And, so, intending other serious matters,
After distasteful looks, and these hard fractions,
With certain half-caps, and cold moving nods,
They froze me into silence.

Tim. You gods reward them!—

Pr'ythee, man, look cheerly: these old fellows
Have their ingratitude in them hereditary:

Their blood is cak'd, 'tis cold, it seldom flows;

'Tis lack of kindly warmth, they are not kind;

And nature, as it grows again towards earth,

Is fashion'd for the journey, dull and heavy.

Against Duelling.

Your words have took such pains, as if they labor'd

To bring manslaughter into form, set quarrelling

Upon the head of valor; which, indeed,

Is valor misbegot, and came into the world,

When sects and factions were but newly born.

He's truly valiant, that can wisely suffer

The worst that man can breathe, and make his wrongs [carelessly;

His outsides; wear them, like his raiment,

And ne'er prefer his injuries to his heart,
To bring it into danger.

Without the Walls of Athens.

Timon's Execrations on the Athenians.

Let me look back upon thee, O thou wall,
That girdlest in those wolves! Dive in the earth,
And fence not Athens! Matrons, turn incontinent!

Obedience fail in children! slaves and fools,
Pluck the grave wrinkled senate from the bench,
And minister in their steads! to general filths
Convert o' the instant, green virginity!
Do't in your parents' eyes! Bankrupts, hold fast;
Rather than render back, out with your knives,
And cut your trusters' throats! Bound servants, steal!

Large-handed robbers your grave masters are,
And pill by law! Maid, to thy master's bed;
Thy mistress is o' the brothel! Son of sixteen,
Pluck the lin'd crutch from thy old limping sire,
With it beat out his brains! Piety and fear,
Religion to the gods, peace, justice, truth,
Domestic awe, night-rest, and neighbourhood,
Instruction, manners, mysteries, and trades,
Degrees, observances, customs, and laws,
Decline to your confounding contraries, [men,
And yet confusion live!—Plagues incident to
Your potent and infectious fevers heap
On Athens, ripe for stroke!—Thou cold sciatica,
Cripple our senators, that their limbs may halt
As lamely as their manners. Lust and liberty
Creep in the minds and marrows of our youth;
That 'gainst the stream of virtue they may strive,
And drown themselves in riot! Itches, blains,
Sow all the Athenian bosoms; and their crop
Be general leprosy! breath infect breath;
That their society, as their friendship, may
Be merely poison! Nothing I'll bear from thee,
But nakedness, thou detestable town!

A Friend forsaken.

As we do turn our backs
From our companion thrown into his grave,
So his familiars to his buried fortunes
Slink all away; leave their false vows with
him,
Like empty purses pick'd: and his poor self,
A dedicated beggar to the air,
With his disease of all-shunn'd poverty,
Walks, like contempt, alone.

On Gold.

What is here? [gods:
Gold? yellow, glittering, precious gold! No,
I am no idle votarist. Roots, you clear heavens!
Thus much of this will make black, white;
foul, fair;
Wrong, right; base, noble; old, young;
coward, valiant.
Ha, you gods! why this? what this, you gods? why this
Will lug your priests and servants from your
sides;
Pluck stout men's pillows from below their heads:
This yellow slave
Will knit and break religions; bless the accurs'd;
Make the hoar leprosy ador'd; place thieves,

And give them title, knee, and approbation,
With senators on the bench: this is it
That makes the wappen'd widow wed again;
She, whom the spital-house and ulcerous sores
Would cast the gorge at, this embalms and spices
To the April day again. Come, damned earth,
Thou common whore of mankind, that putt'st odds

Among the rout of nations, I will make thee
Do thy right nature.

Timon to Alcibiades.

Go on—here's gold—go on;
Be as a planetary plague, when Jove
Will o'er some high-vic'd city hang his poison
In the sick air: let not thy sword skip one:
Pity not honor'd age for his white beard;
He is an usurer. Strike me the counterfeit matron;

It is her habit only that is honest,
Herself's a bawd. Let not the virgin's cheek
Make soft thy trenchant sword; for those milk
paps,

That thro' the window-bars bore at men's eyes,
Are not within the leaf of pity writ;
But set them down horrible traitors. Spare not the babe, [mercy.

Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their
Think it a bastard, whom the oracle
Hath doubtfully pronounc'd thy throat shall cut,
And mince it sans remorse. Swear against objects;

Put armor on thine ears and on thine eyes,
Whose proof, nor yells of mothers, maids, nor babes,

Nor sight of priests in holy vestments bleeding,
Shall pierce a jot. There's gold to pay thy soldiers:

Make large confusion; and, thy fury spent,
Confounded be thyself! speak not, begone.

To the Courtezans.

Consumptions sow

In hollow bones of man; strike their sharpshins,
And mar men's spurring. Crack the lawyer's
That he may never more false title plead, [voice,
Nor sound his quilllets shrilly: hoar the flamen,
That scolds against the quality of flesh,
And not believes himself: down with the nose,
Down with it flat; take the bridge quite away
Of him that, his particular to foresee,
Smells from the gen'ral weal: make curld-
pate ruffians bald,
And let the unscarr'd braggarts of the war
Derive some pain from you.

Timon's Reflections on the Earth.

That nature, being sick of man's unkindness,
Should yet be hungry! Common mother, thou,
Whose womb unmeasurable, and infinite breast
Teems, and feeds all; whose self-same mettle
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is puff'd,
Engenders the black toad, and adder blue,
The gilded newt, and eyeless venom'd worm,
With all the abhorred births below crisp heaven,
Whereon Hyperion's quickening fire doth shine;
Yield him, who all thy human sons doth hate,
From forth thy plenteous bosom, one poor root:
Ensear thy fertile and conceptionous womb!
Let it no more bring out ingrateful man!

Go great with tigers, dragons, wolves, and bears,
Teem with new monsters, whom thy upward
face

Hath to the marble mansion all above
Never presented!—O, a root—dear thanks!
Dry up thy marrows, vines, and plough-torn leas, [draughts,
Whereof ingrateful man, with liquorish
And morsels unctuous, greases his pure mind,
That from it all consideration slips!

Timon's Discourse with Apemantus.

Apem. This is in thee a nature but affected:
A poor unmanly melancholy, sprung
From change of fortune. Why this spade? this place?

This slave-like habit? and these looks of care?
Thy flatt'ers yet wear silk, drink wine, lie soft;
Hug their diseas'd perfumes, and have forgot
That ever Timon was. Shame not these woods,
By putting on the cunning of a carper.
Be thou a flatt'rer now, and seek to thrive
By that which hath undone thee: hinge thy
knee,

And let his very breath, whom thou'lt observe,
Blow off thy cap; praise his most vicious strain,
And call it excellent. Thou wast told thus;
Thou gav'st thine ears, like tapsters, that bid welcome

To knaves, and all approachers: 'tis most just
That thou turn rascal; hadst thou wealth again, Rascals should have't. Do not assume my likeness. [self.

Tim. Were I like thee, I'd throw away my-
Apem. Thou hast cast away thyself, being like thyself,

A madman so long, now a fool: what, think'st
That the bleak air, thy boisterous chamberlain,
Will put thy shirt on warm? will these moss'd
trees,

That have outliv'd the eagle, page thy heels,
And skip when thou point'st out?—will the cold brook,

Candied with ice, cawdle thy morning taste,
To cure thy o'er-night's surfeit? Call the creatures

Whose naked natures live in all the spite
Of wreakful heaven; whose bare unhoused trunks,

To the conflicting elements expos'd,
Answer mere nature—bid them flatter thee;
O! thou shalt find—

Tim. Thou art a slave, whom fortune's tender arm

With favor never clasp'd; but bred a dog.
Hadst thou, like us, from our first swath, proceeded

The sweet degrees that this brief world affords
To such as may the passive drugs of it Freely command, thou wouldst have plung'd
thyself

In general riot; melted down thy youth
In different beds of lust; and never learn'd
The icy precepts of respect, but follow'd
The sugar'd game before thee. But myself,
Who had the world as my confectionary,
The mouths, the tongues, the eyes, and hearts
of men

At duty, more than I could frame employment;
That numberless upon me stuck, as leaves
Do on the oak—have with one winter's brush
Fell from their boughs, and left me open, bare,
For every storm that blows:—I, to bear this,
That never knew but better, is some burthen.
Thy nature did commence in sufferance; time
Hath made thee hard in't. Why shouldst thou hate men? [given?

They never flatter'd thee. What hast thou
If thou wilt curse,—thy father, that poor rag,
Must be thy subject, who in spite put stuff
To some she-beggar, and compounded thee
Poor rogue hereditary. Hence! begone.
If thou hadst not been born the worst of men,
Thou hadst been a knave and flatterer.

On Gold.

O thou sweet king-killer, and dear divorce
[Looking on the gold.
'Twixt natural son and sire! thou bright defiler
Of Hymen's purest bed! thou valiant Mars!
Thou ever young, fresh, lov'd, and delicate wooer,

Whose blush doth thaw the consecrated snow
That lies on Dian's lap! thou visible god,
That solder'st close impossibilities,
And mak'st them kiss! that speak'st with every
tongue,

To every purpose! O thou touch of hearts!
Think, thy slave man rebels: and by thy virtue
Set them into confounding odds, that beasts
May have the world in empire.

Timon to the Thieves.

Why should you want? behold, the earth
hath roots! [springs;
Within this mile break forth an hundred
The oaks bear masts, the briers scarlet hips;
The bounteous housewife, nature, on each bush
Lays her full mess before you. Want! why want?

1 Thief. We cannot live on grass, on berries, water,
As beasts, and birds, and fishes.

Tim. Nor on the beasts themselves, the birds, and fishes; [con,
You must eat men. Yet thanks I must you
That you are thieves profest; that you work not
In holier shapes: for there is boundless theft
In limited professions. Rascal thieves,
Here's gold: go, suck the subtle blood o' the grape,

Till the high fever seeth your blood to froth,
And so scape hanging: trust not the physician;
His antidotes are poison, and he slays
More than you rob: take wealth and lives together;

Do villany, do, since you profess to do't,
Like workmen. I'll example you with thievery:
The sun's a thief, and with his great attraction
Robs the vast sea; the moon's an arrant thief,
And her pale fire she snatches from the sun;
The sea's a thief, whose liquid surge resolves
The moon into salt tears; the earth's a thief,
That feeds and breeds by a composture stolen
From gen'ral excrement: each thing's a thief;
The laws, your curb and whip, in their rough
pow'r

Have uncheck'd theft. Love not yourselves :
away ; [throats ;
Rob one another. There's more gold : cut
All that you meet are thieves : to Athens, go,
Break open shops ; nothing can you steal,
But thieves do lose it.

On his honest Steward.

Forgive my gen'ral and exceptless rashness,
Perpetual-sober gods ! I do proclaim
One honest man—mistake me not—but one ;
No more, I pray—and he is a steward.
How fain would I have hated all mankind,
And thou redeem'st thyself : but all, save thee,
I fell with curses.
Methinks, thou art more honest now than wise ;
For, by oppressing and betraying me,
Thou mightst have sooner got another service :
For many so arrive at second masters,
Upon their first lord's neck.

Wrong and Insolence.

No breathless wrong
Shall sit and pant in your great chairs of ease ;
And pury insolence shall break his wind
With fear, and horrid flight.

§ 35. TITUS ANDRONICUS.

SHAKSPEARE.

Mercy.

WILT thou draw near the nature of the gods ?
Draw near them then in being merciful :
Sweet mercy is nobility's true badge.

Thanks.

Thanks, to men
Of noble mind, is honorable meed.

An Invitation to Love.

The birds chant melody on every bush ;
The snake lies rolled in the cheerful sun ;
The green leaves quiver with the cooling wind,
And make a chequer'd shadow on the ground :
Under their sweet shade, Aaron, let us sit ;
And—whilst the babbling echo mocks the
hounds,

Replying shrilly to the well-tun'd horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once—
Let us sit down, and mark their yelling noise :
And after conflict—such as was suppos'd
The wand'ring prince and Dido once enjoy'd,
When with a happy storm they were surpris'd,
And curtain'd with a counsel-keeping cave—
We may, each wreathed in the other's arms,
Our pastimes done, possess a golden slumber !
Whiles hounds, and horns, and sweet melodi-
Be unto us as is a nurse's song [ous birds,
Of lullaby, to bring her babe asleep.

Vale, a dark and melancholy one described.

A barren detested vale, you see, it is :
The trees, tho' summer, yet forlorn and lean,
O'ercome with moss, and baleful misseltoe.
Here never shines the sun ; here nothing breeds,
Unless the nightly owl, or fatal raven.
And when they show'd me this abhorred pit,
They told me, here, at dead time of the night,
A thousand fiends, a thousand hissing snakes,
Ten thousand swelling toads, as many urchins,
Would make such fearful and confused cries,

As any mortal body, hearing it,
Should straight fall mad, or else die suddenly.

A Ring in a dark Pit.

Upon his bloody finger he doth wear
A precious ring, that lightens all the hole ;
Which, like a taper in some monument,
Doth shine upon the dead man's earthy cheeks,
And shows the ragged entrails of this pit.

Young Lady playing on a Lute and singing.

Fair Philomela, she but lost her tongue,
And in a tedious sampler sew'd her mind :
But, lovely niece, that mean is cut from thee ;
A craftier Tereus hast thou met withal,
And he hath cut those pretty fingers off,
That could have better sew'd than Philomel.
O, had the monster seen those lily hands
Tremble, like aspen leaves, upon a lute,
And make the silken strings delight to kiss
them ;

[life :
He would not then have touch'd them for his
Or had he heard the heavenly harmony,
Which that sweet tongue hath made,
He would have dropt his knife, and fell asleep,
As Cerberus at the Thracian poet's feet.

A Lady's Tongue cut out.

O, that delightful engine of her thoughts,
That blabb'd them with such pleasing eloquence,

Is torn from forth that pretty hollow cage ;
Where, like a sweet melodious bird, it sung
Sweet varied notes, enchanting every ear !
A person in Despair compared to one on a Rock,
&c.

For now I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea ; [wave,
Who marks the waxing tide grow wave by Expecting ever when some envious surge
Will in his brinish bowels swallow him.

Tears compared to Dew on a Lily.

When I did name her brothers, then fresh
tears
Stood on her cheeks ; as doth the honey-dew
Upon a gather'd lily almost wither'd.

Reflections on killing a Fly.

Mar. Alas, my lord, I have but kill'd a fly !
Tit. But how, if that fly had a father and mother !

How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buz lamenting doings in the air !
Poor harmless fly !

That with his pretty buzzing melody,
Came here to make us merry ; and thou hast kill'd him !

Revenge.

Lo, by thy side, where rape and murder stands ;
Now give some surance that thou art revenge,
Stab them, or tear them on thy chariot wheels ;
And then I'll come, and be thy waggoner,
And whirl along with thee about the globe.
Provide thee two proper palfries, black as jet,
To hale thy vengeful waggon swift away,
And find out murderers in their guilty caves ;
And, when thy car is loaden with their heads,
I will dismount, and by the waggon wheel
Trot, like a servile footman, all day long ;
Even from Hyperion's rising in the east,
Until his very downfall in the sea.

§ 36. TROILUS AND CRESSIDA.

SHAKSPEARE.

Love in a brave young Soldier.

CALL here my varlet, I'll unarm again :
 Why should I war without the walls of Troy,
 That find such cruel battle here within?
 Each Trojan, that is master of his heart,
 Let him to field; Troilus, alas! hath none.

The Greeks are strong and skilful to their
 strength,
 Fierce to their skill and to their fierceness valiant;

But I am weaker than a woman's tear,
 Tamer than sleep, fonder than ignorance;
 Less valiant than the virgin in the night,
 And skill-less as unpractis'd infancy.

O Pandarus! I tell thee, Pandarus—
 When I do tell thee, there my hopes lie drown'd,
 Reply not in how many fathoms deep
 They lie indrench'd. I tell thee, I am mad
 In Cressid's love: Thou answer'st, she is fair,
 Pour'st in the open ulcer of my heart
 Her eyes, her hair, her cheek, her gait, her
 voice:

Handlest in thy discourse—O, that her hand,
 In whose comparison all whites are ink,
 Writing their own reproach; to whose soft seizure

The cygnet's down is harsh, and spirit of sense
 Hard as the palm of ploughmen! This thou tell'st me,

As true thou tell'st me, when I say I love her;
 But, saying thus, instead of oil and balm,
 Thou lay'st in every gash that love hath given
 The knife that made it. [me]

Success not equal to our Hopes.

The ample proposition that hope makes
 In all designs begun on earth below,
 Fails in the promis'd largeness: checks and disasters

Grow in the veins of actions highest rear'd;
 As knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
 Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain
 Tortive and errant from his course of growth.

On Degree.

Take but degree away, untune that string,
 And, hark, what discord follows! each thing
 meets

In mere oppugnancy. The bounded waters
 Should lift their bosoms higher than the shores,
 And make a sop of all this solid globe:
 Strength should be lord of imbecility,
 And the rude son should strike his father dead:
 Force should be right; or, rather, right and wrong

(Between whose endless jar justice resides)
 Should lose their names, and so should justice too.

Then every thing includes itself in power,
 Power into will; will into appetite;
 And appetite, a universal wolf,
 So doubly seconded with will and power,
 Must make perforce a universal prey,
 And last eat up itself.

Conduct in War superior to Action.

The still and mental parts,
 That do contrive how many hands shall strike
 When fitness calls them on; and know, by measure

Of their observant toil, the enemies' weight—
 Why, this hath not a finger's dignity;
 They call this bed-work, mapp'ry, closet war:
 So that the ram, that batters down the wall,
 For the great swing and rudeness of his poize,
 They place before his hand that made the engine;
 Or those, that with the fineness of their souls
 By reason guide his execution.

Adversity the Trial of Man.

—Why then, you princes,
 Do you with cheeks abash'd behold our works,
 And think them shames, which are indeed
 nought else

But the protractive trials of great Jove,
 To find persistive constancy in men?
 The fineness of which metal is not found
 In fortune's love; for then, the bold and coward,
 The wise and fool, the artist and unread,
 The hard and soft, seem all affin'd and kin:
 But in the wind and tempest of her frown,
 Distinction, with a broad and pow'rful fan,
 Puffing at all, winnows the light away;
 And what hath mass, or matter, by itself,
 Lies rich in virtue, and unmingled.

Achilles described by Ulysses.

The great Achilles—whom opinion crowns
 The sinew and the fore-hand of our host—
 Having his ear full of his airy fame,
 Grows dainty of his worth, and in his tent
 Lies mocking our designs: with him Patro-
 Upon a lazy bed, the live-long day [clus,
 Breaks scurril jests;
 And with ridiculous and awkward action
 (Which, slanderer! he imitation calls)
 He pageants us. Sometime, great Agamemnon,
 Thy topless deputation he puts on;
 And, like a strutting player—whose conceit
 Lies in his hamstring, and doth think it rich
 To hear the wooden dialogue and sound
 'Twixt his stretch'd footing and the scaffoldage,
 Such to be pitied and o'erwrested seeming
 He acts thy greatness in: and when he speaks,
 'Tis like a chime a-mending: with terms un-squar'd,

Which, from the tongue of roaring Typhon
 dropt,

Would seem hyperboles. At this fusty stuff,
 The large Achilles, on his prest bed lolling,
 From his deep chest laughs out a loud applause;
 Cries—"Excellent! 'tis Agamemnon just!
 Now play me Nestor—hem, and stroke thy beard,

As he, being drest to some oration."
 That's done—as near as the extremest ends
 Of parallels; as like as Vulcan and his wife:
 Yet good Achilles still cries—"Excellent!
 'Tis Nestor right! Now play him me, Patro-
 Arming to answer in a night-alarm." [clus,
 And then, forsooth, the faint defects of age
 Must be the scene of mirth; to cough and spit,
 And, with a palsy fumbling on his gorget,
 Shake in and out the rivet:—and at this sport

Sir Valor dies; cries—"O! enough, Patroclus,
Or give me ribs of steel! I shall split all
In pleasure of my spleen." And, in this fashion
All our abilities, gifts, natures, shapes,
Severals and generals of grace exact,
Achievements, plots, orders, preventions,
Excitements to the field, or speech for truce,
Success or loss, what is or is not, serves
As stuff for these two to make paradoxes.

Respect.

I ask, that I might weaken reverence,
And bid the cheek be ready with a blush
Modest as morning, when she coldly eyes
The youthful Phœbus.

Doubt.

The wound of peace is surety,
Surety secure; but modest doubt is call'd
The beacon of the wise, the tent that searches
To the bottom of the worst.

Pleasure and Revenge.

Pleasure, and revenge,
Have ears more deaf than adders to the voice
Of any true decision.

The Subtlety of Ulysses, and Stupidity of Ajax.

Ajax. I do hate a proud man, as I hate the engendering of toads.

Nest. Yet he loves himself: is it not strange?
[Aside.

Ulys. Achilles will not to the field to-mor-

Aga. What's his excuse? [row.

Ulys. He doth rely on none;
But carries on the stream of his dispose,
Without observance or respect of any,
In will peculiar, and in self-admission.

Aga. Why will he not, upon our fair request,
Untent his person, and share the air with us?

Ulys. Things small as nothing, for request's sake only, [ness;
He makes important: possess he is with great-
And speaks not to himself, but with a pride
That quarrels at self-breath: imagin'd worth
Holds in his blood such swoln and hot discourse,
That 'twixt his mental and his active parts,
Kingdom'd Achilles in commotion rages,
And batters down himself: what should I say?
He is so plaguy proud, that the death tokens
of it

Cry, "No recovery."

Aga. Let Ajax go to him.—

Dear lord, go you, and greet him in his tent:
'Tis said, he holds you well; and will be led,
At your request, a little from himself.

Ulys. O Agamemnon, let it not be so!
We'll consecrate the steps that Ajax makes,
When they go from Achilles: shall the proud
lord

That bastes his arrogance with his own seam,
And never suffers matter of the world
Enter his thoughts, save such as do revolve
And ruminate himself—shall he be worshipp'd
Of that we hold an idol more than he?
No, this thrice worthy and right valiant lord
Must not so stale his palm, nobly acquir'd;
Nor, by my will, assubjugate his merit,
As amply titled as Achilles is,
By going to Achilles:

That were to enlard his fat-already pride,
And add more coals to Cancer, when he burns
With entertaining great Hyperion.

This lord go to him! Jupiter forbid!

And say in thunder "Achilles go to him."

Nest. O, this is well; he rubs the vein of him. [Aside.

Dio. And how his silence drinks up this applause! [Aside.

Ajax. If I go to him with my armed fist
I'll pash him o'er the face.

Aga. O no, you shall not go.

Ajax. An he be proud with me, I'll pheese his pride: let me go to him.

Ulys. Not for the worth that hangs upon our quarrel.

Ajax. A paltry, insolent fellow!

Nest. How he describes himself! [Aside.

Ajax. Can he not be sociable?

Ulys. The raven chides blackness. [Aside.

Ajax. I'll let his humors blood.

Aga. He'll be the physician that should be the patient. [Aside.

Ajax. An all men were o' my mind—

Ulys. Wit would be out of fashion. [Aside.

Ajax. He should not bear it so;

He should eat swords first: shall pride carry it?

Nest. An 'twould, you'd carry half. [Aside.

Ulys. He would have ten shares. [Aside.

Ajax. I will knead him, I'll make him
supple. [him

Nest. He is not yet thorough warm; force
With praises; pour in; his ambition's dry.

[Aside.

Ulys. My lord, you feed too much on this dislike,

Nest. O noble general, do not do so.

Dio. You must prepare to fight without Achilles. [him harm.

Ulys. Why, 'tis this naming of him does
Here is a man—but 'tis before his face—
I will be silent.

Nest. Wherefore should you so?

He is not emulous, as Achilles is. [liant.

Ulys. Know the whole world, he is as va-

Ajax. A whoreson dog! that shall palter thus with us!

Would he were a Trojan.

Nest. What a vice were it in Ajax now—

Ulys. If he were proud?

Dio. Or covetous of praise?

Ulys. Ay, or surly borne?

Dio. Or strange, or self-affected?

Ulys. Thank the heavens, lord, thou art of sweet composure: [suck:

Praise him that got thee, she that gave thee
Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature
Thrice fam'd beyond all erudition;
But he that disciplin'd thy arms to fight,
Let Mars divide eternity in twain,
And give him half: and for thy vigor,
Bull-bearing Milo his addition yield
To sinewy Ajax. I will not praise thy wisdom,
Which, like a bourn, a pale, a shore, confines
Thy spacious and dilated parts: here's Nestor,
Instructed by the antiquary times—
He must, he is, he cannot but be wise;

But pardon, father Nestor; were your days,
As green as Ajax, and your brain so temper'd,
You should not have the eminence of him,
But be as Ajax.

Ajax. Shall I call you father?

Ulys. Ay, my good son.

Dio. Be rul'd by him, lord Ajax.

Ulys. There is no tarrying here; the hart
Achilles

Keeps thicket: please it our great general
To call together all his state of war;
Fresh kings are come to Troy; to-morrow,
friends,

We must with all our main of pow'r stand fast,
And here's a lord; come knights from east to west,

And cull their flow'r, Ajax shall cope the best.

Aga. Go we to council. Let Achilles sleep:
Light boats sail swift, though greater hulks
draw deep. [Exeunt.

An expecting Lover.

No, Pandarus: I stalk about her door,
Like a strange soul upon the Stygian banks
Staying for waftage. O, be thou my Charon,
And give me swift transportance to those fields,
Where I may wallow in the lily beds
Propos'd for the deserver! O gentle Pandarus,
From Cupid's shoulders pluck his painted
And fly with me to Cressid! [wings,
I am giddy; expectation whirls me round.
The imaginary relish is so sweet
That it enchants my sense; what will it be,
When that the wat'ry palate tastes indeed
Love's thrice-reputed nectar? Death, I fear me;
Swooning destruction; or some joy too fine,
Too subtle-potent, and too sharp in sweetness,
For the capacity of my ruder powers;
I fear it much; and I do fear besides
That I shall lose distinction in my joys;
As doth a battle, when they charge on heaps
The enemy flying. - - -
My heart beats thicker than a feverous pulse;
And all my powers do their bestowing lose,
Like vassalage at unawares encount'ring
The eye of majesty.

Constancy in love protested.

Troilus. True swains in love shall in the world to come [rhymes,
Approve their truths by Troilus; when their Full of protest, of oath, and big compare,
Want similes; truth tir'd with iteration—
As true as steel, as plantage to the moon,
As sun to day, as turtle to her mate,
As iron to adamant, as earth to the centre—
Yet, after all comparisons of truth,
As truth's authentic author to be cited,
As true as Troilus, shall crown up the verse,
And sanctify the numbers.

Cres. Prophet may you be!
If I be false, or swerve a hair from truth,
When time is old and hath forgot itself,
When water-drops have worn the stones of Troy,
And blind oblivion swallow'd cities up,
And mighty states characterless are grated
To dusty nothing; yet let memory,
From false to false, among false maids in love,

Upbraid my falsehood! when they have said—
as false

As air, as water, wind, or sandy earth,
As fox to lamb, as wolf to heifer's calf,
Pard to the hind, or step-dame to her son—
Yea, let them say, to stick the heart of falsehood,
As false as Cressid.

Pride cures Pride.

Pride hath no other glass
To show itself, but pride: for supple knees
Feed arrogance, and are the proud man's fees.
Greatness contemptible when it declines.
'Tis certain, greatness, once fallen out with fortune, [is,
Must fall out with men too: what the declin'd
He shall as soon read in the eyes of others,
As feel in his own fall; for men, like butterflies,
Show not their mealy wings but to the summer:
And not a man, for being simply man,
Hath any honor; but honor for those honors
That are without him, as place, riches, favor,
Prizes of accident as oft as merit;
Which when they fall, as beings slippery standers,
The love that lean'd on them is slippery too,
Do one pluck down another, and together
Die in the fall.

Honor: continued Acts necessary to preserve its Lustre.

Time hath, my lord, a wallet at his back,
Wherein he puts alms for oblivion,
A great-siz'd monster of ingratitude:
Those scraps are good deeds past; which are devour'd
As fast as they are made, forgot as soon
As done: perseverance, dear my lord,
Keeps honor bright: to have done, is to hang
Quite out of fashion, like a rusty mail,
In monumental mockery. Take the instant
way,

For honor travels in a strait so narrow,
Where one but goes abreast: keep then the
For emulation hath a thousand sons, path;
That one by one pursue; if you give way,
Or hedge aside from the direct forthright,
Like to an enter'd tide they all rush by,
And leave you hindmost—
Or, like a gallant horse fall'n in first rank,
Lie there for pavement to the abject rear,
O'er-run and trampled on; then what they do
in present, [yours:
Though less than yours in past, must o'er-top
For time is like a fashionable host, [hand;
That slightly shakes his parting guest by the
And with his arms outstretch'd, as he would fly,
Grasps in the comer: welcome ever smiles,
And farewell goes out sighing. O, let not virtue seek [wit,
Remuneration for the thing it was; for beauty,
High birth, vigor of bone, desert in service,
Love, friendship, charity, are subjects all
To envious and calumniating time.
One touch of nature makes the whole world
kin— [gauds,
That all with one consent praise new-born
Though they are made and moulded of things
And give to dust, that is a little gilt, [past;

More laud than gilt o'er-dusted.
The present eye praises the present object.

Love shook off by a Soldier.

Sweet, rouse yourself; and the weak, wanton Cupid
Shall from your neck unloose his am'rous fold,
And, like a dew-drop from the lion's mane,
Be shook to air.

Lovers parting in the Morning.

Troil. O Cressida! but that the busy day,
Wak'd by the lark, has rous'd the ribald crows,
And dreaming night will hide our joys no
I would not from thee. [longer,

Cres. Night hath been too brief.

Troil. Beshrew the witch! with venomous
wights she stays,
As tediously as hell; but flies the grasps of love
With wings more momentary swift than thought.

Lovers' Farewell.

Injurious time now, with a robber's haste,
Crams his rich thievery up, he knows not how:
As many farewells as be stars in heaven,
With distinct breath and consign'd kisses to
them,
He fumbles up into a loose adieu;
And scants us with a single famish'd kiss,
Distasted with the salt of broken tears.

Troilus's Character of the Grecian Youths.

The Grecian youths are full of quality,
They're loving, well compos'd, with gifts of nature flowing,
And swelling o'er with arts and exercise;
How novelty may move, and parts with person,
Alas! a kind of godly jealousy
(Which, I beseech you, call a virtuous sin),
Makes me afraid.

A Trumpeter.

Now crack thy lungs, and split thy brazen
Blow villain, till thy spher'd bias cheek [pipe:
Outswell the cholic of puffed Aquilon:
Come, stretch thy chest, and let thy eyes pour
blood;

Thou blow'st for Hector.

Diomedes' Manner of Walking.

'Tis he, I ken the manner of his gait;
He rises on the toe: that spirit of his
In aspiration lifts him from the earth.

Description of Cressida.

There's language in her eye, her cheek, her lip, [out
Nay, her foot speaks; her wanton spirits look
At every joint and motive of her body.
O these encounterers, so glib of tongue,
That give a coasting welcome ere it comes,
And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts

To every ticklish reader! set them down
For sluttish spoils of opportunity,
And daughters of the game.

The Character of Troilus.

The youngest son of Priam, a true knight.
Not yet mature, yet matchless: firm of word;
Speaking in deeds, and deedless in his tongue;
Not soon provok'd, nor, being provok'd, soon
calm'd:
His heart and hand both open, and both free;
For what he has, he gives; what thinks, he
shows;
Yet gives he not till judgment guide his bounty,
Nor dignifies an impair thought with breath:
Manly as Hector, but more dangerous;
For Hector, in his blaze of wrath, subscribes
To tender objects; but he, in heat of action,
Is more vindictive than jealous love.

Hector in Battle.

I have, thou gallant Trojan, seen thee oft,
Laboring for destiny, make cruel way Through ranks of Greekish youths: and I have seen thee,
As hot as Perseus, spur thy Phrygian steed,
Despising many forfeits and subduements,
When thou hast hung thy advanced sword
i' the air,
Not letting it decline on the declin'd;
That I have said to some my standers-by,
"Lo, Jupiter is yonder, dealing life!"
And I have seen thee pause, and take thy breath, [thee in,
When that a ring of Greeks have hemm'd
Like an Olympian wrestling.

Achilles surveying Hector.

Tell me, you heavens, in which part of his body [there;
Shall I destroy him? whether there, there,
That I may give the local wound a name;
And make distinct the very breach, whereout Hector's great spirit flew. Answer me, heavens!

Honor more dear than Life.

Mine honor keeps the weather of my fate;
Life every man holds dear; but the brave man
Holds honor far more precious dear than life.

Pity to be discarded in War.

For the love of all the gods
Let's leave the hermit Pity with our mother;
And when we have our armors buckled on,
The venom'd vengeance ride upon our swords!

Rash Vows.

The gods are deaf to hot and peevish vows;
They are polluted offerings more abhorr'd
Than spotted livers in the sacrifice.

PATHETIC PIECES.

§ 37. Sebastian and Dorax.

DRYDEN.

Re-enter Dorax, having taken off his Turban, and put on an European Habit.

Dor. Now do you know me?

Seb. Thou shouldst be Alonzo.

Dor. So you should be Sebastian;
But when Sebastian ceas'd to be himself
I ceas'd to be Alonzo.

Seb. As in a dream

I see thee here, and scarce believe mine eyes.

Dor. Is it so strange to find me where my * wrongs,

And your inhuman tyranny, have sent me?
Think not you dream: or, if you did, my injuries
Shall call so loud, that lethargy should wake;
And death should give you back to answer me.
A thousand nights have brush'd their balmy
wings

Over these eyes; but ever, when they clos'd,
Your tyrant image forc'd them ope again,
And dried the dew they brought.

The long expected hour is come at length,
By manly vengeance to redeem my fame:
And, that once clear'd, eternal sleep is welcome.

Seb. I have not yet forgot I am a king,
Whose royal office is redress of wrongs:
If I have wrong'd thee, charge me face to face;
I have not yet forgot I am a soldier. [me;

Dor. 'Tis the first justice thou hast ever done
Then, tho' I loathe this woman's war of tongue,
Yet shall my cause of vengeance first be clear:
And, honor, be thou judge.

Seb. Honor befriend us both.

Beware! I warn thee yet to tell thy griefs
In terms becoming majesty to hear:
I warn thee thus, because I know thy temper
Is insolent and haughty to superiors:
How often hast thou brav'd my peaceful court,
Fill'd it with noisy brawls, and windy boasts;
And with past service, nauseously repeated,
Reproach'd even me, thy prince! [ward,

Dor. And well I might, when you forgot re-
The part of Heaven in kings: for punishment
Is hangman's work, and drudgery for devils.
I must and will reproach thee with my service,
Tyrant!—it irks me so to call my prince,
But just resentment and hard usage coin'd
Th' unwilling word; and grating as it is,
Take it, for 'tis thy due.

Seb. How, tyrant!

Dor. Tyrant! [back;

Seb. Traitor! that name thou canst not echo
That robe of infamy, that circumcision
Ill hid beneath that robe, proclaim thee traitor:
And, if a name

More foul than traitor be, 'tis renegade. [tyrant,

Dor. If I'm a traitor, think and blush, thou Whose injuries betray'd me into treason,
Effac'd my loyalty, unhing'd my faith,

And hurried me from hopes of heaven to hell.
All these, and all my yet unfinish'd crimes,
When I shall rise to plead before the saints,
I charge on thee to make thy damning sure.

Seb. Thy old presumptuous arrogance again,
That bred my first dislike, and then my loathing,
Once more be warn'd, and know me for thy king.

Dor. Too well I know thee, but for king no
This is not Lisbon, nor the circle this, [more:
Where, like a statue, thou hast stood besieg'd
By sycophants and fools, the growth of courts;
Where thy gull'd eyes in all the gaudy round
Met nothing but a lie in every face;

And the gross flattery of a gaping crowd,
Envious who first should catch and first applaud
The stuff of royal nonsense: when I spoke,
My honest homely words were carp'd and cen-
For want of courtly style: related actions, [sur'd
Though modestly reported, pass'd for boasts:
Secure of merit, if I ask'd reward, [vaded,
Thy hungry minions thought their rights in-
And the bread snatch'd from pimps and para-
Henriquez answer'd, with a ready lie, [sites.
To save his king's, the boon was begg'd before.

Seb. What say'st thou of Henriquez? Now,
by Heaven,
Thou mov'st me more by barely naming him,
Than all thy foul, unmanner'd, scurril taunts.

Dor. And therefore 'twas to gall thee that I nam'd him,

That thing, that nothing but a cringe and smile;
That woman, but more daub'd; or, if a man,
Corrupted to a woman; thy man-mistress.

Seb. All false as hell, or thou.

Dor. Yes; full as false

As that I serv'd thee fifteen hard campaigns,
And pitch'd thy standard in those foreign fields:
By me thy greatness grew, thy years grew with it,
But thy ingratitude outgrew them both. [first,

Seb. I see to what thou tend'st; but tell me
If those great acts were done alone for me;
If love produc'd not some, and pride the rest?

Dor. Why, love does all that's noble here below.

But all th' advantage of that love was thine:
For, coming fraughted back, in either hand
With palm and olive, victory and peace,
I was indeed prepar'd to ask my own
(For Violante's vows were mine before):
Thy malice had prevention, ere I spoke;
And ask'd me Violante for Henriquez.

Seb. I meant thee a reward of greater worth.

Dor. Where justice wanted, could reward be hop'd?

Could the robb'd passenger expect a bounty
From those rapacious hands who stripp'd him first? [love.

Seb. He had my promise ere I knew thy

Dor. My services deserv'd, thou shouldst revoke it.

Seb. Thy insolence hath cancell'd all thy ser-
To violate my laws, even in my court, [vice ;
Sacred to peace, and safe from all affronts ;
Even to my face, and done in my despite,
Under the wing of awful majesty,
To strike the man I lov'd !

Dor. Ev'n in the face of Heaven, a place
more sacred,

Would I have struck the man who, prompt
by pow'r,

Would seize my right, and rob me of my love.
But, for a blow provok'd by thy injustice,
The hasty product of a just despair,

When he refus'd to meet me in the field, [own !
That thou shouldst make a coward's cause thy

Seb. He durst : nay, more, desir'd and begg'd with tears

To meet thy challenge fairly ; 'twas thy fault

To make it public : but my duty then

To interpose, on pain of my displeasure,

Betwixt your swords.

Dor. On pain of infamy

He should have disobey'd. [me :

Seb. The indignity thou didst was meant to

Thy gloomy eyes were cast on me with scorn,

As who should say, the blow was there intended ;

But that thou didst not dare to lift thy hands

Against anointed power : so was I forc'd

To do a sovereign justice to myself,

And spurn thee from my presence.

Dor. Thou hast dar'd

To tell me what I durst not tell myself :

I durst not think that I was spurn'd, and live ;

And live to hear it boasted to my face ;

All my long avarice of honor lost,

Heap'd up in youth, and hoarded up for age ;

Has honor's fountain then suck'd back the
stream ?

He has ; and hooting boys may dryshod pass,

And gather pebbles from the naked ford.

Give me my love, my honor ; give them back :

Give me revenge while I have breath to ask it.

Seb. Now by this honor'd order which I wear, [it :

More gladly would I give than thou dar'st ask

Nor shall the sacred character of king

Be urg'd to shield me from thy bold appeal.

If I have injur'd thee, that makes us equal :

The wrong, if done, debas'd me down to thee.

But thou hast charg'd me with ingratitude ;

Has thou not charg'd me ? Speak.

Dor. Thou know'st I have :

If thou disown'st that imputation, draw,

And prove my charge a lie.

Seb. No ; to disprove that lie I must not draw :

Be conscious to thy worth, and tell thy soul

What thou hast done this day in my defence :

To fight thee after this, what were it else

Than owning that ingratitude thou urg'st ?

That isthmus stands between two rushing seas ;

Which mounting view each other from afar,

And strive in vain to meet.

Dor. I'll cut that isthmus :

Thou know'st I meant not to preserve thy life,

But to retrieve it, for my own revenge.

I sav'd thee out of honorable malice.

Now draw ; I should be loath to think thou
Beware of such another vile excuse. [dar'st not :

Seb. O, patience, Heaven !

Dor. Beware of patience too ;

That's a suspicious word : it had been proper,

Before thy foot had spurn'd me ; now 'tis base ;

Yet, to disarm thee of thy last defence,

I have thy oath for my security :

The only boon I begg'd was this fair combat :

Fight, or be perjur'd now ; that's all thy choice.

Seb. Now can I thank thee as thou wouldst be thank'd : [Drawing.

Never was vow of honor better paid,

If my true sword but hold, than this shall be.

The sprightly bridegroom on his wedding-night

More gladly enters not the lists of love.

Why, 'tis enjoyment to be summon'd thus.

Go ; bear my message to Henriquez' ghost,

And say his master and his friend reveng'd him.

Dor. His ghost ! then is my hated rival dead ?

Seb. The question is beside our present pur-
Thou seest me ready ; we delay too long. [pose.

Dor. A minute is not much in either's life,

When there's but one betwixt us ; throw it in

And give it him of us who is to fall.

Seb. He's dead : make haste, and thou mayst yet o'ertake him.

Dor. When I was hasty, thou delay'dst me longer.

I pr'ythee let me hedge one moment more

Into thy promise : for thy life preserv'd,

Be kind : and tell me how that rival died,

Whose death next thine, I wish'd.

Seb. If it would please thee, thou shouldst never know,

But thou, like jealousy, inquir'st a truth,

Which found, will torture thee. He died in fight :

Fought next my person, as in concert fought ;

Kept pace for pace, and blow for every blow ;

Save when he heav'd his shield in my defence,

And on his naked side receiv'd my wound :

Then, when he could no more, he fell at once,

But roll'd his falling body cross their way,

And made a bulwark of it for his prince.

Dor. I never can forgive him such a death !

Seb. I prophesied thy proud soul could not bear it.

Now judge thyself who best deserv'd my love.

I knew you both ; and (durst I say) as Heaven

Foreknew among the shining angel host

Who should stand firm, who fall. [fall'n ;

Dor. Had he been tempted so, so had he

And so, had I been favor'd, had I stood.

Seb. What had been, is unknown ; what is,
Confess he justly was prefer'd to thee. [appears :

Dor. Had I been born with his indulgent stars,

My fortune had been his, and his been mine.

O, worse than hell ! what glory have I lost,

And what has he acquir'd by such a death !

I should have fallen by Sebastian's side,

My corpse had been the bulwark of my king :

His glorious end was a patch'd work of fate,

Ill sorted with a soft effeminate life :

It suited better with my life than his

So to have died : mine had been of a piece,

Spent in your service, dying at your feet.

Seb. The more effeminate and soft his life,
The more his fame, to struggle to the field,
And meet his glorious fate: confess, proud spirit
(For I will have it from thy very mouth),
That better he deserv'd my love than thou.

Dor. O, whither wouldst thou drive me? I must grant,
Yes, I must grant, but with a swelling soul,
Henriquez had your love with more desert:
For you he fought and died: I fought against you:
Through all the mazes of the bloody field
Hunted your sacred life; which that I miss'd
Was the propitious error of my fate,
Not of my soul; my soul's a regicide.

Seb. Thou might'st have given it a more gentle name:
Thou meant'st to kill a tyrant, not a king.
Speak, didst thou not, Alonzo?

Dor. Can I speak?
Alas! I cannot answer to Alonzo:
No, Dorax cannot answer to Alonzo:
Alonzo was too kind a name for me. [arms,
Then, when I fought and conquer'd with your
In that blest age I was the man you nam'd:
Till rage and pride debas'd me into Dorax;
And lost, like Lucifer, my name above. [rax.

Seb. Yet twice this day I ow'd my life to Do-
Dor. I sav'd you but to kill you: there's my grief. [repent:

Seb. Nay, if thou canst be griev'd, thou canst
Thou couldst not be a villain, though thou wouldst: [err'd:
Thou own'st too much in owning thou hast
And I too little, who provok'd thy crime.

Dor. O, stop this headlong torrent of your
It comes too fast upon a feeble soul, [goodness;
Half drown'd in tears before; spare my confusion,

For pity spare, and say not, first you err'd.
For yet I have not dar'd, thro' guilt and shame,
To throw myself beneath your royal feet.
Now spurn this rebel, this proud renegade;
'Tis just you should, nor will I more complain.

Seb. Indeed thou shouldst not ask forgiveness first,
But thou prevent'st me still in all that's noble.
Yes, I will raise thee up with better news:
Thy Violante's heart was ever thine;
Compell'd to wed, because she was my ward,
Her soul was absent when she gave her hand:
Nor could my threats, or his pursuing court-
ship,

Effect the consummation of his love:
So still indulging tears, she pines for thee,
A widow and a maid.

Dor. Have I been cursing Heaven, while Heaven bless'd me!

I shall run mad with ecstasy of joy:
What, in one moment to be reconcil'd
To Heaven, and to my king, and to my love:
But pity is my friend, and stops me short,
For my unhappy rival. Poor Henriquez!

Seb. Art thou so generous too, to pity him?
Nay, then I was unjust to love him better.
Here let me ever hold thee in my arms;
And all our quarrels be but such as these,

Who shall love best and closest shall embrace:
Be what Henriquez was—be my Alonzo.

Dor. What, My Alonzo, said you? my Alonzo!
Let my tears thank you, for I cannot speak;
And if I could, [as mine.
Words were not made to vent such thoughts

Seb. Thou canst not speak, and I can ne'er be silent.

Some strange reverse of fate must sure attend
This vast profusion, this extravagance
Of Heaven to bless me thus. 'Tis gold so pure,
It cannot bear the stamp without allay.
Be kind, ye pow'rs, and take but half away:
With ease the gifts of fortune I resign:
But let my love and friend be ever mine.

§ 38. Antony and Ventidius.

DRYDEN.

Ant. THEY tell me 'tis my birth-day; and I'll keep it

With double pomp of sadness. [breath.
'Tis what the day deserves which gave me
Why was I rais'd the meteor of the world,
Hung in the skies, and blazing as I travell'd,
Till all my fires were spent, and then cast downwards

To be trod out by Cæsar?

Vent. [Aside.] On my soul
'Tis mournful, wondrous mournful!

Ant. Count thy gains;
Now, Antony, wouldst thou be born for this?
Glutton of fortune, thy devouring youth
Hast starv'd thy wanting age.

Vent. [Aside.] How sorrow shakes him!
So now the tempest tears him up by th' roots,
And on the ground extends the noble ruin.

Ant. [Having thrown himself down.]
Lie there, thou shadow of an emperor;
The place thou pressest on thy mother earth
Is all thy empire now: now it contains thee;
Some few days hence and then 'twill be too large,

When thou 'rt contracted in thy narrow urn,
Shrunk to a few cold ashes: then Octavia
(For Cleopatra will not live to see it),

Octavia then will have thee all her own,
And bear thee in her widow'd hand to Cæsar.
Cæsar will weep, the crocodile will weep,
To see his rival of the universe [on't.

Lie still and peaceful there. I'll think no more
Give me some music; look that it be sad;
I'll soothe my melancholy till I swell
And burst myself with sighing—

'Tis somewhat to my humor. Stay, I fancy
I'm now turn'd wild, a commoner of nature
Of all forsaken, and forsaking all;

Live in a shady forest's sylvan scene; [oak,
Stretch'd at my length beneath some blasted
I lean my head upon the mossy bark,
And look just of a piece as I grew from it:
My uncomb'd locks, matted like mistletoe,
Hang o'er my hoary face; a murm'ring brook
Runs at my foot—

Vent. Methinks, I fancy
Myself there too.

Ant. The herd come jumping by me,
And fearless quench their thirst while I look on,

And take me for their fellow-citizen.

More of this image, more; it lulls my thoughts.

Vent. I must disturb him: I can hold no longer. [Stands before him.]

Ant. [Starting up.] Art thou Ventidius?

Vent. Are you Antony?

I'm liker what I was, than you to him
When that I left you last.

Ant. I'm angry.

Vent. So am I.

Ant. I would be private: leave me.

Vent. Sir, I love you,
And therefore will not leave you.

Ant. Will not leave me? [am I?]

Where have you learnt that answer! Who

Vent. My emperor: the man I love next Heaven.

If I said more, I think 'twere scarce a sin:

You're all that's good and godlike.

Ant. All that's wretched.

You will not leave me then?

Vent. 'Twas too presuming

To say I would not: but I dare not leave you;
And 'tis unkind in you to chide me hence
So soon, when I so far have come to see you.

Ant. Now thou hast seen me, art thou satisfied?

For, if a friend, thou hast beheld enough;
And, if a foe, too much.

Vent. Look, emperor, this is no common dew,
I have not wept these forty years; but now
My mother comes afresh into my eyes;
I cannot help her softness. [man! he weeps!]

Ant. By Heaven he weeps, poor good old
The big round drops course one another down
The furrows of his cheeks. Stop 'em, Ventidius,
Or I shall blush to death; they set my shame,
That caus'd 'em, full before me.

Vent. I'll do my best. [friends;]

Ant. Sure there's contagion in the tears of See, I have caught it too. Believe me, 'tis not
For my own griefs, but thine,—nay, father—

Vent. Emperor! [tory.]

Ant. Emperor! why that's the style of vic-
The conqu'ring soldier, red with unfelt wounds,
Salutes his general so: but never more
Shall that sound reach my ears.

Vent. I warrant you.

Ant. Actium, Actium! O——

Vent. It sits too near you. [day;]

Ant. Here, here it lies; a lump of lead by
And in my short, distracted, nightly slumbers,
The hag that rides my dreams.

Vent. Out with it: give it vent.

Ant. Urge not my shame—
I lost a battle.

Vent. So has Julius done. [thou think'st;]

Ant. Thou favor'st me, and speak'st not half
For Julius fought it out, and lost it fairly:
But Antony——

Vent. Nay, stop not.

Ant. Antony——

(Well, thou wilt have it)——like a coward fled, Fled while his soldiers fought; fled first, Ven-tidius.

Thou long'st to curse me, and I give thee leave.
I know thou can'st prepar'd to rail.

Vent. I did.

Ant. I'll help thee—I have been a man, Ven-tidius.

Vent. Yes, and a brave one: but——

Ant. I know thy meaning.

But I have lost my reason, have disgrac'd
The name of soldier with inglorious ease.
In the full vintage of my flowing honors
Sat still, and saw it prest by other hands. *[it,
Fortune came smiling to my youth, and woo'd
And purple greatness met my ripen'd years.
When first I came to empire, I was borne
On tides of people, crowding to my triumphs;
The wish of nations, and the willing world
Receiv'd me as its pledge of future peace.
I was so great, so happy, so belov'd,
Fate could not ruin me; till I took pains,
And work'd against my fortune, chid her from
me,*

And turn'd her loose: yet still she came again.
My careless days and my luxurious nights
At length have wearied her, and now she's gone;
Gone, gone, divorc'd for ever! Help me, soldier,
To curse this madman, this industrious fool,
Who labor'd to be wretched. Pr'ythee curse

Vent. No. [me.]

Ant. Why?

Vent. You are too sensible already [ings,
Of what you've done, too conscious of your fail-
And like a scorpion, whipt by others first
To fury, sting yourself in mad revenge.

I would bring balm, and pour it in your wounds,
Cure your distemper'd mind, and heal your

Ant. I know thou wouldst. [fortunes.]

Vent. I will.

Ant. Ha, ha, ha, ha!

Vent. You laugh.

Ant. I do, to see officious love
Give cordials to the dead.

Vent. You would be lost then!

Ant. I am.

Vent. I say you are not. Try your fortune.

Ant. I have to th' utmost. Dost thou think me desperate

Without just cause? No, when I found all lost
Beyond repair, I hid me from the world,
And learnt to scorn it here; which now I do
So heartily, I think it is not worth
The cost of keeping.

Vent. Cæsar thinks not so:

He'll thank you for the gift he could not take.
You would be kill'd like Tully, would you? Do;
Hold out your throat to Cæsar, and die tamely.

Ant. No, I can kill myself; and so resolve.

Vent. I can die with you too, when time shall serve:

But fortune calls upon us now to live,
To fight, to conquer.

Ant. Sure thou dream'st, Ventidius. [hours]

Vent. No, 'tis you dream; you sleep away your
In desperate sloth, miscall'd philosophy. *[you,
Up, up, for honor's sake; twelve legions wait
And long to call you chief. By painful journeys
I led 'em, patient both of heat and hunger,
Down from the Parthian marches to the Nile.
'Twill do you good to see their sun-burnt faces,
Their scarr'd cheeks, and chopt hands; there's virtue in 'em:]*

They'll sell those mangled limbs at dearer rates
Than yon trim bands can buy.

Ant. Where left you them?

Vent. I say, in Lower Syria.

Ant. Bring 'em hither;
There may be life in these.

Vent. They will not come.

Ant. Why didst thou mock my hopes with promis'd aids,
To double my despair? They're mutinous.

Vent. Most firm and loyal.

Ant. Yet they will not march
To succour me. O trifler!

Vent. They petition
You would make haste to head 'em.

Ant. I am besieg'd.

Vent. There's but one way shut up—how came I hither?

Ant. I will not stir.

Vent. They would perhaps desire
A better reason.

Ant. I have never us'd
My soldiers to demand a reason of My actions. Why did they refuse to march?

Vent. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra.

Ant. What was't they said?

Vent. They said they would not fight for Cleopatra.

Why should they fight, indeed, to make her conquer, [doms,

And make you more a slave? to gain you king—
Which for a kiss, at your next midnight feast, You'll sell to her?—Then she new names her jewels,

And calls this diamond such or such a tax;
Each pendant in her ear shall be a province.

Ant. Ventidius, I allow your tongue free licence
On all my other faults; but, on your life,
No word of Cleopatra: she deserves
More worlds than I can lose.

Vent. Behold, you pow'rs,
To whom you have intrusted human kind;
See Europe, Afric, Asia put in balance;
And all weigh'd down by one light worthless
woman!

I think the gods are Antonies, and give,
Like prodigals, this nether world away
To none but wasteful hands.

Ant. You grow presumptuous.

Vent. I take the privilege of plain love to speak.

Ant. Plain love! plain arrogance, plain insolence!

Thy men are cowards; thou, an envious traitor;
Who, under seeming honesty, hast vented
The burden of thy rank o'erflowing gall.

O that thou wert my equal, great in arms
As the first Cæsar was, that I might kill thee
Without stain to my honor!

Vent. You may kill me.

You have done more already; call'd me traitor.

Ant. Art thou not one?

Vent. For showing you yourself,
Which none else durst have done. But had I been
That name, which I disdain to speak again,
I need not have sought your abject fortunes,
Come to partake your fate, to die with you.

What hinder'd me t'have led my conqu'ring eagles
To fill Octavius' band? I could have been A traitor then, a glorious, happy traitor,
And not have been so call'd.

Ant. Forgive me, soldier;
I've been too passionate.

Vent. You thought me false; [Sir;
Thought my old age betray'd you. Kill me,
Pray kill me; yet you need not, your unkind-
ness

Has left your sword no work.

Ant. I did not think so;
I said it in my rage: pr'ythee forgive me.
Why didst thou tempt my anger, by discovery
Of what I would not hear?

Vent. No prince but you
Could merit that sincerity I us'd,
Nor durst another man have ventur'd it:
But you, ere love misled your wand'ring eyes,
Were sure the chief and best of human race,
Fram'd in the very pride and boast of nature.

Ant. But Cleopatra—
Go on; for I can bear it now.

Vent. No more.

Ant. Thou dar'st not trust my passion; but thou mayst:

Thou only lov'st; the rest have flatter'd me.

Vent. Heaven's blessing on your heart, for that kind word.

May I believe you love me? Speak again.

Ant. Indeed I do. Speak this, and this, and this.

Thy praises were unjust; but I'll deserve 'em,
And yet mend all. Do with me what thou wilt;
Lead me to victory, thou know'st the way.

Vent. And, will you leave this—

Ant. Pr'ythee do not curse her, [love
And I will leave her; though Heaven knows I
Beyond life, conquest, empire, all but honor;
But I will leave her.

Vent. That's my royal master.
And shall we fight?

Ant. I warrant thee, old soldier:
Thou shalt behold me once again in iron;
And, at the head of our old troops, that beat
The Parthians, cry aloud, Come, follow me!

Vent. O, now I hear my emperor! In that word

Octavius fell. Gods, let me see that day;
And, if I have ten years behind, take all;
I'll thank you for the exchange.

Ant. O, Cleopatra!

Vent. Again!

Ant. I've done. In that last sigh she went;
Cæsar shall know what 'tis to force a lover
From all he holds most dear.

Vent. Methinks you breathe
Another soul; your looks are more divine;
You speak a hero, and you move a god.

Ant. O, thou hast fir'd me! My soul's up in arms,

And man's each part about me. Once again
The noble eagerness of fight hath seiz'd me;
That eagerness, with which I darted upward
To Cassius' camp. In vain the steepy hill
Oppos'd my way; in vain a war of spears
Sung round my head, and planted all my shield;

I won the trenches, while my foremost men
Lagg'd on the plain below.

Vent. Ye gods, ye gods,
For such another honor!

Ant. Come on, my soldier;
Our hearts and arms are still the same. I long
Once more to meet our foes; that thou and I,
Like Time and Death, marching before our troops,
May taste fate to 'em; mow 'em out a passage,
And, ent'ring where the utmost squadrons yield,
Begin the noble harvest of the field.

§ 39. Theodosius and Marcian.

LEE.

Theo. HA! what rash thing art thou, who sett'st so small
A value on thy life, thus to presume
Against the fatal orders I have given,
Thus to entrench on Cæsar's solitude,
And urge thy ruin?

Mar. Mighty Cæsar,
I have transgress'd; and for my pardon bow
To thee, as to the gods, when I offend:
Nor can I doubt your mercy, when you know
The nature of my crime. I am commission'd
From all the earth to give thee thanks and praises,
Thou darling of mankind! whose conqu'ring
Already drown the glory of great Julius; [arms
Whose deeper reach in laws and policy
Makes wise Augustus envy thee in heaven!
What mean the Fates by such prodigious virtue?
When scarce the manly down yet shades thy face,
With conquest thus to overrun the world,
And make barbarians tremble. O ye gods!
Should Destiny now end thee in the bloom,
Methinks I see thee mourn'd above the loss
Of lov'd Germanicus; thy funerals,
Like his, are solemniz'd with tears of blood.

Theo. How, Marcian!

Mar. Yes, the raging multitude,
Like torrents, set no bound to their mad grief;
Shave their wives' heads, and tear off their own
hair;
With wild despair they bring their infants out,
To brawl their parents' sorrow in the streets:
Trade is no more; all courts of justice stopt;
With stones they dash the windows of their temples, [gods,
Pull down their altars, break their household
And still the universal groan is this—

“Constantinople's lost, our empire's ruin'd;
Since he is gone, that father of his country;
Since he is dead, O life, where is thy pleasure?
O Rome, O conquer'd world, where is thy glory?”

Theo. I know thee well, thy custom and thy manners:

Thou didst upbraid me; but no more of this,
Not for thy life—

Mar. What's life without my honor?
Could you transform yourself into a Gorgon,
Or make that beardless face like Jupiter's,
I would be heard in spite of all your thunder:
O pow'r of guilt! you fear to stand the test
Which virtue brings: like sores your vices shake
Before this Roman healer. But, by the gods,

Before I go, I'll rip the malady,
And let the venom flow before your eyes.
This is a debt to the great Theodosius,
The grandfather of your illustrious blood:
And then farewell for ever.

Theo. Presuming Marcian!

What canst thou urge against my innocence?
Through the whole course of all my harmless
Ev'n to this hour, I cannot call to mind [youth,
One wicked act which I have done to shame
me.

Mar. This may be true: yet if you give the
sway

To other hands, and your poor subjects suffer,
Your negligence to them is as the cause.
O Theodosius, credit me, who know
The world, and hear how soldiers censure kings;
In after times, if thus you should go on,
Your memory by warriors will be scorn'd,
As much as Nero or Caligula loath'd:
They will despise your sloth, and backward ease,
More than they hate the others' cruelty.
And what a thing, ye gods, is scorn or pity!
Heap on me, Heaven, the hate of all mankind;
Load me with malice, envy, detestation;
Let me be horrid to all apprehension,
And the world shun me, so I 'scape but scorn.

Theo. Pr'ythee no more.

Mar. Nay, when the legions make comparisons,

And say, Thus cruel Nero once resolv'd,
On Galba's insurrection, for revenge
To give all France as plunder to the army;
To poison the whole senate at a feast;
To burn the city, turn the wild beasts out,
Bears, lions, tigers, on the multitude;
That, so obstructing those that quench'd the fire,
He might at once destroy rebellious Rome—

Theo. O cruelty! why tell'st thou me of this?
Am I of such a barb'rous bloody temper?

Mar. Yet some will say, This show'd he had a spirit,

However fierce, avenging, and pernicious,
That savor'd of a Roman: but for you,
What can your partial sycophants invent,
To make you room among the emperors?
Whose utmost is the smallest part of Nero;
A pretty player, one that can act a hero,
And never be one. O ye immortal gods!
Is this the old Cæsarean majesty?
Now in the name of our great Romulus,
Why sing you not, and fiddle too, as he did?
Why have you not, like Nero, a Phonascus,
One to take care of your celestial voice?
Lie on your back, my lord, and on your stomach
Lay a thin plate of lead; abstain from fruits;
And when the business of the stage is done,
Retire with your loose friends to costly banquets,

While the lean army groans upon the ground.

Theo. Leave me, I say, lest I chastise thee;
Hence, begone, I say—

Mar. Not till you have heard me out.
Build too, like him, a palace lin'd with gold,
As long and large as that of th' Esquiline:
Enclose a pool too in it, like the sea,
And at the empire's cost let navies meet;

Adorn your starry chambers too with gems;
 Contrive the plated ceilings to turn round,
 With pipes to cast ambrosian oils upon you:
 Consume with this prodigious vanity,
 In mere perfumes and odorous distillations,
 Of sesterces at once four hundred millions;
 Let naked virgins wait you at your table,
 And wanton Cupids dance and clap their wings.
 No matter what becomes of the poor soldiers,
 So they perform the drudgery they are fit for;
 Why, let 'em starve for want of their arrears,
 Drop as they go, and lie like dogs in ditches.

Theo. Come, you are a traitor!

Mar. Go to, you are a boy—
 Or by the gods—

Theo. If arrogance like this,
 And to the emperor's face should 'scape unpunished,
 I'll write myself a coward; die, then, villain,
 A death too glorious for so bad a man,
 By Theodosius' hand.

Marcian disarms him, but is wounded.

Mar. Now, sir, where are you?
 What, in the name of all our Roman spirits,
 Now charms my hand from giving thee thy fate?
 Has he not cut me off from all my honors?
 Torn my commissions, sham'd me to the earth,
 Banish'd the court, a vagabond for ever?
 Do not the soldiers hourly ask it from me?
 Sigh their own wrongs, and beg me to revenge 'em?

What hinders now, but that I mount the throne,
 And make, besides, this purple youth my footstool?

The armies court me: and my country's cause,
 The injuries of Rome and Greece, persuade me,
 Show but this Roman blood which he has drawn,
 They'll make me emperor whether I will or no:
 Did not, for less than this, the latter Brutus,
 Because he thought Rome wrong'd, in person head

Against his friend a black conspiracy,
 And stab the majesty of all the world? [pow'r.

Theo. Act as you please: I am within your

Mar. Did not the former Brutus, for the crime
 Of Sextus, drive old Tarquin from his kingdom?
 And shall this prince too, by permitting others
 To act their wicked wills, and lawless pleasures,
 Ravish from the empire its dear health,
 Well-being, happiness, and ancient glory?

Go on in this dishonorable rest? [troops
 Shall he, I say, dream on, while the starv'd
 Lie cold and waking in the winter camp;
 And like pin'd birds, for want of sustenance,
 Feed on the haws and berries of the fields?

O temper, temper me, ye gracious gods!
 Give to my hand forbearance, to my heart
 Its constant loyalty! I would but shake him,
 Rouse him a little from this death of honor,
 And show him what he should be.

Theo. You accuse me,
 As if I were some monster most unheard of!
 First, as the ruin of the army; then
 Of taking your commission: but by Heaven
 I swear, O Marcian! this I never did,
 Nor ne'er intended it; nor say I this
 To alter thy stern usage; for with what

Thou'st said, and done, and brought to my remembrance,

I grow already weary of my life.

Mar. My lord, I take your word: you do not know

The wounds which rage within your country's bowels;

The horrid usage of the suffering soldier:

But why will not our Theodosius know?

If you intrust the government to others

That act these crimes, who but yourself's to blame!

Be witness, O ye gods! of my plain dealings,

Of Marcian's honesty, howe'er degraded.

I thank you for my banishment: but alas!

My loss is little to what soon will follow!

Reflect but on yourself and your own joys;

Let not this lethargy for ever hold you.

'Twas rumor'd through the city, that you lov'd;

That your espousals should be solemniz'd;

When on a sudden here you send your orders

That this bright favorite, the lov'd Eudisia,

Should lose her head.

Theo. O heaven and earth! What say'st thou
 That I have seal'd the death of my Eudisia!

Mar. 'Tis your own hand and signet: yet I swear, [sway,

Though you have given to female hands your

And therefore I, as well as the whole army,

For ever ought to curse all womankind;

Yet when the virgin came, as she was doom'd,

And on the scaffold, for that purpose rais'd

Without the walls, appear'd before the army—

Theo. What, on a scaffold! ha! before the army?

Mar. How quickly was the tide of fury turn'd
 To soft compassion, and relenting tears!

But when the axe

Sever'd the brightest beauty of the earth

From that fair body—had you heard the groan,

Which, like a peal of distant thunder, ran

Through all the armed host, you would have thought,

By the immediate darkness that fell round us,

Whole nature was concern'd at such a suffering,

And all the gods were angry.

Theo. O Pulcheria!

Cruel, ambitious sister! this must be

Thy doing. O, support me, noble Marcian!

Now, now's the time, if thou dar'st strike: behold,

I offer thee my breast; with my last breath,

I'll thank thee too, if now thou draw'st my blood.

Were I to live, thy counsel should direct me;

But 'tis too late—

Mar. He faints! What, ho, there! Lucius!

My lord the emperor! Eudisia lives;

She's here, or will be in a minute, moment!

Quick as the thought, she calls you to the temple.

O, Lucius, help!—I've gone too far; but see,

He breathes again.—Eudisia has awak'd him.

Theo. Did not you name Eudisia?

Mar. Yes, she lives:

I did but feign the story of her death,

To find how near you plac'd her to your heart:

And may the gods rain all their plagues upon me,

If ever I rebuke you thus again!

Yet 'tis most certain that you sign'd her death,
Not knowing what the wise Pulcheria offer'd,
Who left it in my hand to startle you:
But, by my life and fame, I did not think
It would have touch'd your life. O pardon me,
Dear prince, my lord, my emperor, royal master:
Droop not because I utter'd some rash words,
And was a madman. By the immortal gods
I love you as my soul: whate'er I said,
My thoughts were otherwise; believe these tears,
Which do not use to flow: all shall be well.
I swear that there are seeds in that sweet temper,
To atone for all the crimes in this bad age.

Theo. I thank thee first for my Eudisia's life.
What but my love could have call'd back that life

Which thou hast made me hate? But, O, me-
thought

'Twas hard, dear Marcian, very hard, from thee,
From him I ever reverenc'd as my father,
To hear so harsh a message! But no more;
We're friends: thy hand. Nay, if thou wilt not rise,

And let me fold my arms about thy neck,
I'll not believe thy love: in this forgive me.
First let me wed Eudisia, and we'll out;
We will, my general, and make amends
For all that's past: glory and arms, ye call,
And Marcian leads me on!

Mar. Let her not rest, then;
Espouse her straight: I'll strike you at a heat.
May this great humor get large growth within
you;

And be encourag'd by the embold'ning gods:
O what a sight will this be to the soldier,
To see me bring you dress'd in shining armour,
To head the shouting squadrons! O ye gods!
Methinks I hear the echoing cries of joy,
The sounds of trumpets, and the beat of drums;
I see each starving soldier bound from earth,
As if a god by miracle had rais'd him;
And with beholding you, grow fat again!
Nothing but gazing eyes, and opening mouths,
Cheeks red with joy, and lifted hands about you;
Some wiping the glad tears that trickle down
With broken Io's, and with sobbing raptures;
Crying, To arms! he's come; our emperor's come
To win the world! Why, is not this far better
Than lolling in a lady's lap, and sleeping, Fasting or praying? Come, come, you shall be merry:

And for Eudisia, she is yours already!
Marcian has said it, Sir; she shall be yours.

Theo. O Marcian! O my brother, father, all!
Thou best of friends! most faithful counsellor!
I'll find a match for thee too, ere I rest,
To make thee love me. For, when thou art
with me,

I'm strong and well; but when thou'rt gone,
I'm nothing.

§ 40. Gloster and Hastings.

ROWE.

Glost. My lord, y'are well encounter'd; here has been
A fair petitioner this morning with us;

Believe me, she has won me much to pity her:
Alas, her gentle nature was not made
To buffet with adversity. I told her
How worthily her cause you had befriended;
How much for your good sake we meant to do;
That you had spoke, and all things should be well.

Hast. Your highness binds me ever to your service.

Glost. You know your friendship is most potent with us,
And shares our power. But of this enough,
For we have other matter for your ear:
The state is out of tune; distracting fears,
And jealous doubts, jar in our public counsels;
Amidst the wealthy city murmurs rise,
Lewd railings, and reproach on those that rule,
With open scorn of government; hence credit,
And public trust 'twixt man and man are broke,
The golden streams of commerce are withheld,
Which fed the wants of needy hinds and artisans,
Who therefore curse the great, and threat rebellion.

Hast. The resty knaves are overrun with ease,
As plenty ever is the nurse of faction:
If in good days, like these, the headstrong herd
Grow madly wanton, and repine, it is Because the reins of pow'r are held too slack,
And reverend authority of late
Has worn a face of mercy more than justice.

Glost. Beshrew my heart! but you have well divin'd

The source of these disorders. Who can wonder
If riot and misrule o'erturn the realm,
When the crown sits upon a baby brow?
Plainly to speak—hence comes the gen'ral cry,
And sum of all complaint: 'Twill ne'er be well
With England (thus they talk) while children govern. [of that?

Hast. 'Tis true the king is young; but what
We feel no want of Edward's riper years,
While Glo'ster's valor and most princely wisdom
So well supply our infant sovereign's place,
His youth's support, and guardian to his throne.

Glost. The council (much I'm bound to thank 'em for't)

Have plac'd a pageant sceptre in my hand,
Barren of pow'r, and subject to control;
Scorn'd by my foes, and useless to my friends.
O worthy lord! were mine the rule indeed,
I think I should not suffer rank offence
At large to lord it in the commonweal;
Nor would the realm be rent by discord thus,
Thus fear and doubt, betwixt disputed titles.

Hast. Of this I am to learn; as not supposing
A doubt like this——

Glost. Ay, marry, but there is;
And that of much concern. Have you not heard
How, on a late occasion, Doctor Shaw
Has mov'd the people much about the lawfulness

Of Edward's issue? by right grave authority
Of learning and religion plainly proving,
A bastard scion never should be grafted
Upon a royal stock; from thence, at full
Discoursing on my brother's former contract
To Lady Elizabeth Lucy, long before

His jolly match with that same buxom widow,
The queen he left behind him——

Hast. Ill befall

Such meddling priests, who kindle up confusion,
And vex the quiet world with their vain scruples!
By Heaven, 'tis done in perfect spite to peace.
Did not the king,

Our royal master, Edward, in concurrence
With his estates assembled, well determine What course the sovereign rule should take henceforward?

When shall the deadly hate of faction cease,
When shall our long-divided land have rest,
If every peevish, moody malcontent
Shall set the senseless rabble in an uproar, Fright them with dangers, and perplex their brains,

Each day, with some fantastic giddy change?

Glost. What if some patriot, for the public
good,
Should vary from your scheme, new-mould the state? [it!

Hast. Curse on the innovating hand attempts
Remember him, the villain, righteous Heaven,
In thy great day of vengeance! Blast the traitor,
And his pernicious counsels, who for wealth,
For pow'r, the pride of greatness, or revenge,
Would plunge his native land in civil wars!

Glost. You go too far, my lord.

Hast. Your highness' pardon——

Have we so soon forgot those days of ruin,
When York and Lancaster drew forth the battles?
When, like a matron butcher'd by her sons,
And cast beside some common way, a spectacle
Of horror and affright to passers by,
Our groaning country bled at ev'ry vein;
When murders, rapes, and massacres prevail'd;
When churches, palaces, and cities blaz'd;
When insolence and barbarism triumph'd,
And swept away distinction; peasants trod
Upon the necks of nobles; low were laid
The reverend crosier and the holy mitre,
And desolation cover'd all the land;
Who can remember this, and not, like me,
Here vow to sheath a dagger in his heart
Whose damn'd ambition would renew those horrors,

And set once more that scene of blood before us?

Glost. How now! so hot!

Hast. So brave, and so resolv'd.

Glost. Is then our friendship of so little moment,

That you could arm your hand against my life?

Hast. I hope your highness does not think I meant it; [person

No, Heaven forefend that e'er your princely
Should come within the scope of my resentment.

Glost. O noble Hastings! Nay, I must embrace you;

By holy Paul, y'are a right honest man.
The time is full of danger and distrust,
And warns us to be wary: hold me not
Too apt for jealousy and light surmise,
If, when I mean to lodge you next my heart,
I put your truth to trial. Keep your loyalty,
And live your king and country's best support.

For me, I ask no more than honor gives,
To think me yours, and rank me with your friends. [should pay.

Hast. Accept what thanks a grateful heart
O princely Gloster! judge me not ungentle,
Of manners rude, and insolent of speech,
If, when the public safety is in question,
My zeal flows warm and eager from my tongue.

Glost. Enough of this; to deal in wordy compliment

Is much against the plainness of my nature;
I judge you by myself, a clear true spirit;
And, as such, once more join you to my bosom.
Farewell, and be my friend. [Exit.

Hast. I am not read,
Nor skill'd and practis'd in the arts of greatness,
To kindle thus, and give a scope to passion.
The duke is surely noble; but he touch'd me
E'en on the tend'rest point, the master-string
That makes most harmony or discord to me.
I own the glorious subject fires my breast,
And my soul's darling passion stands confess'd.
Beyond or love's or friendship's sacred band,
Beyond myself, I prize my native land:
On this foundation would I build my fame,
And emulate the Greek and Roman name;
Think England's peace bought cheaply with my
blood,
And die with pleasure for my country's good.

§ 41. Gustavus and Dalecarlians.

BROOKE.

1st Dale. LET us all see him!

2d Dale. Yes, and hear him too.

3d Dale. Let us be sure 'tis he himself.

4th Dale. Our general.

5th Dale. And we will fight while weapons can be found.

6th Dale. Or hands to wield them.

7th Dale. Get on the bank, Gustavus.

Anderson. Do, my lord.

Gus. My countrymen!——

1st Dale. Ho! hear him!

2d Dale. Peace!

3d Dale. Peace!

4th Dale. Peace! [hearts,

Gus. Amazement, I perceive, hath fill'd your
And joy for that your lost Gustavus, 'scap'd Thro' wounds, imprisonments, and chains, and deaths, [ye.

Thus sudden, thus unlook'd for, stands before
As one escap'd from cruel hands I come,
From hearts that ne'er knew pity, dark and vengeful;

Who quaff the tears of orphans, bathe in blood,
And know no music but the groans of Sweden.
Yet, not for that my sister's early innocence,
And mother's age, now grind beneath captivity;

Nor that one bloody, one remorseless hour
Swept my great sire and kindred from my side,
For them Gustavus weeps not; tho' my eyes
Were far less dear, for them I will not weep.
But, O great parent, when I think on thee!
Thy numberless, thy nameless, shameful infamies,

My widow'd country! Sweden! when I think
Upon thy desolation, spite of rage—
And vengeance that would choke them—tears will flow.

And. O, they are villains, ev'ry Dane of them,
Practis'd to stab and smile, to stab the babe
That smiles upon them.

Arn. What accursed hours
Roll o'er these wretches who to fiends like
these,

In their dear liberty, have barter'd more
Than worlds will rate for!

Gus. O Liberty, Heaven's choice prerogative!
True bond of law, thou social soul of property,
Thou breath of reason, life of life itself!

For thee the valiant bleed. O sacred Liberty!
Wing'd from the summer's snare, from flatt'ring ruin,

Like the bold stork you seek the wintry shore,
Leave courts, and pomps, and palaces to slaves,
Cleave to the cold and rest upon the storm.

Upborne by thee, my soul disdain'd the terms
Of empire offer'd at the hands of tyrants.

With thee I sought this fav'rite soil; with thee
These fav'rite sons I sought: thy sons, O Liberty!

For e'en amid the wilds of life you lead them,
Lift their low-rafterd cottage to the clouds,
Smile o'er their heaths, and from their mountain tops

Beam glory to the nations.

All. Liberty! Liberty!

Gus. Are ye not mark'd, ye men of Dalecarlia,
Are ye not mark'd by all the circling world
As the great stake, the last effort for liberty?

Say, is it not your wealth, the thirst, the food,
The scope and bright ambition of your souls?

Why else have you, and your renown'd forefathers, [thrones

From the proud summit of their glitt'ring
Cast down the mightiest of your lawful kings,

That dar'd the bold infringement? What but liberty, [years,

Thro' the fam'd course of thirteen hundred
Aloof hath held invasion from your hills,

And sanctified their shade?—And will ye, will ye
Shrink from the hopes of the expecting world;

Bid your high honors stoop to foreign insult;
And in one hour give up to infamy

The harvest of a thousand years of glory?

1st Dale. No.

2d Dale. Never, never.

3d Dale. Perish all first.

4th Dale. Die all!

Gus. Yes, die by piece-meal! [umph!

Leave not a limb o'er which a Dane may tri-
Now from my soul I joy, I joy, my friends,

To see ye fear'd; to see that e'en your foes
Do justice to your valors! There they be,

The pow'rs of kingdoms, summ'd in yonder
host,

Yet kept aloof, yet trembling to assail ye.

And, O, when I look round and see you here,
Of number short, but prevalent in virtue,

My heart swells high, and burns for the encounter.

True courage but from opposition grows;

And what are fifty, what a thousand slaves,
Match'd to the sinew of a single arm

That strikes for liberty—that strikes to save
His fields from fire, his infants from the sword,
His couch from lust, his daughters from pollution,

And his large honors from eternal infamy?

What doubt we then? Shall we, shall we stand here,

Till motives that might warm an ague's frost,
And nerve the coward's arm, shall poorly serve

To wake us to resistance?—Let us on?

O, yes, I read your lovely fierce impatience;
You shall not be withheld; we will rush on
them——

This is indeed to triumph, where we hold
Three kingdoms in our toil! is it not glorious,

Thus to appal the bold, meet force with fury,
And push yon torrent back, till every wave

Flee to its fountain? [more

3d Dale. On, lead us on, Gustavus; one word
Is but delay of conquest.

Gus. Take your wish.

He who wants arms may grapple with the foe,
And so be furnish'd. You, most noble Anderson,

Divide our pow'rs, and with the fam'd Olaus
Take the left route—You, Eric, great in arms!

With the renown'd Nederbi, hold the right,
And skirt the forest down: then wheel at once,

Confess'd to view, and close up all the vale:
Myself, and my most valiant cousin here,

Th' invincible Arvida, gallant Sivard,
Arnoldus, and these hundred hardy vet'rans,

Will pour directly on, and lead the onset.
Joy, joy, I see confess'd from ev'ry eye,

Your limbs tread vig'rous, and your breasts beat high!

Thin tho' our ranks, tho' scanty be our bands,
Bold are our hearts, and nervous are our hands.

With us, truth, justice, fame, and freedom close,
Each singly equal to an host of foes:

I feel, I feel them fill me out for fight!
They lift my limbs as feather'd Hermes light!

Or like the bird of glory, tow'ring high [eye!
Thunder within his grasp, and lightning in his

§ 42. Gustavus and Cristiern

BROOKE.

Crist. TELL me, Gustavus, tell me why is
this,

That, as a stream diverted from the banks
Of smooth obedience, thou hast drawn those
men

Upon a dry unchannell'd enterprise
To turn their inundation? Are the lives

Of my misguided people held so light, [buke
That thus thou'dst push them on the keen re-

Of guarded majesty; where justice waits,
All awful and resistless, to assert

Th' impervious rights, the sanctitude of kings,
And blast rebellion!

Gus. Justice, sanctitude,
And rights! O, patience! Rights! what rights, thou tyrant?

Yes, if perdition be the rule of pow'r, [chief,

If wrongs give right, O then, supreme in mis-
Thou wert the lord, the monarch of the world,

Too narrow for thy claim. But if thou think'st
That crowns are vilely propertyed, like coin,
To be the means, the speciality of lust,
And sensual attribution; if thou think'st
That empire is of titled birth or blood;
That nature, in the proud behalf of one,
Shall disenfranchise all her lordly race,
And bow her gen'ral issue to the yoke
Of private domination; then, thou proud one,
Here know me for thy king. Howe'er, be told,
Not claim hereditary, not the trust
Of frank election,
Not even the high anointing hand of Heaven,
Can authorize oppression, give a law
For lawless pow'r, wed faith to violation,
On reason build misrule, or justly bind
Allegiance to injustice. Tyranny
Absolves all faith; and who invades our rights,
Howe'er his own commence, can never be
But an usurper. But for thee, for thee
There is no name. Thou hast abjur'd mankind,
Dash'd safety from thy bleak, unsocial side,
And wag'd wild war with universal nature.

Crist. Licentious traitor! thou canst talk it largely.

Who made thee umpire of the rights of kings,
And pow'r, prime attribute—as on thy tongue
The poise of battle lay, and arms of force,
To throw defiance in the front of duty?
Look round, unruly boy! thy battle comes
Like raw, disjointed must'ring, feeble wrath,
A war of waters, borne against the rock
Of our firm continent, to fume, and chafe,
And shiver in the toil.

Gus. Mistaken man!
I come impower'd and strengthen'd in thy weakness;

For tho' the structure of a tyrant's throne
Rise on the necks of half the suff'ring world,
Fear trembles in the cement; pray'rs, and tears,
And secret curses, sap its mould'ring base,
And steal the pillars of allegiance from it:
Then let a single arm but dare the sway,
Headlong it turns, and drives upon destruction. [ven!

Trol. Profane, and alien to the love of Hea-
Art thou still harden'd to the wrath divine,
That hangs o'er thy rebellion? Know'st thou
not

Thou art at enmity with grace, cast out,
Made an anathema, a curse enroll'd
Among the faithful, thou and thy adherents
Shorn from our holy church, and offer'd up
As sacred to damnation?

Gus. Yes, I know,
When such as thou, with sacrilegious hand,
Seize on the apostolic key of heaven,
It then becomes a tool for crafty knaves
To shut out virtue, and unfold those gates
That heaven itself had barr'd against the lusts
Of avarice and ambition. Soft and sweet
As looks of charity, or voice of lambs
That bleat upon the mountain, are the words
Of Christian meekness! mission all divine!
The law of love sole mandate. But your gall,
Ye Swedish prelacy, your gall hath turn'd
The words of sweet, but indigested peace,

To wrath and bitterness. Ye hallow'd men,
In whom vice sanctifies, whose precepts teach
Zeal without truth, religion without virtue;
Who ne'er preach heaven but with a downward eye, [loose

That turns your souls to dross! who, shouting,
The dogs of hell upon us. Thefts and rapes, Sack'd towns, and midnight howlings thro' the realm,

Receive your sanction. O, 'tis glorious mischief!

When vice turns holy, puts religion on,
Assumes the robe pontifical, the eye
Of saintly elevation, blesseth sin,
And makes the seal of sweet offended Heaven
A sign of blood, a label for decrees
That hell would shrink to own.

Crist. No more of this.
Gustavus, wouldst thou yet return to grace,
And hold thy motions in the sphere of duty,
Acceptance might be found.

Gus. Imperial spoiler!
Give me my father, give me back my kindred!
Give me the fathers of ten thousand orphans,
Give me the sons in whom thy ruthless sword
Has left our widows childless. Mine they were,
Both mine and ev'ry Swede's, whose patriot
breast

Bleeds in his country's woundings. O, thou canst not! [then

Thou hast outsin'd all reck'ning! Give me
My all that's left, my gentle mother there,
And spare yon little trembler.

Crist. Yes, on terms
Of compact and submission.

Gus. Ha! with thee? [country,
Compact with thee? and mean'st thou for my
For Sweden? No, so hold my heart but firm,
Altho' it wring for't, tho' blood drop for tears,
And at the sight my straining eyes start forth—
They both shall perish first.

§ 43. Brutus and Titus. LEE.

Bru. WELL, Titus, speak; how is it with thee now?

I would attend a while this mighty motion,
Wait till the tempest were quite overblown,
That I may take thee in the calm of nature,
With all thy gentler virtues brooding on thee;
So hush'd a stillness, as if all the gods [ing;
Look'd down, and listen'd to what we were say-
Speak then, and tell me, O my best lov'd,
My son, my Titus, is all well again? [thing:

Tit. So well, that saying how must make it no-
So well, that I could wish to die this moment,
For so my heart with powerful throbs persuades
me;

That were indeed to make you reparation,
That were, my lord, to thank you home, to die;
And that for Titus too would be most happy.

Bru. How's that, my son? Would death for thee be happy?

Tit. Most certain, Sir; for in my grave I'scape
All those affronts which I in life must look for,
All those reproaches which the eyes, and fingers,
And tongues of Rome will daily cast upon me;

From whom, to a soul so sensible as mine,
Each single scorn would be far worse than dying:
Besides, I 'scape the stings of my own conscience,
Which will for ever rack me with remembrance,
Haunt me by day, and torture me by night,
Casting my blotted honor in the way
Where'er my melancholy thoughts shall guide
me.

Brut. But is not death a very dreadful thing?

Tit. Not to a mind resolv'd. No, sir, to me
It seems as natural as to be born:

Groans, and convulsions, and discolor'd faces,
Friends weeping round us, blacks and obsequies,
Make it a dreadful thing; the pomp of death
Is far more terrible than death itself.

Yes, Sir, I call the pow'rs of heav'n to witness,
Titus dares die, if so you have decreed;

Nay, he shall die with joy to honor Brutus,
To make your justice famous thro' the world,
And fix the liberty of Rome for ever.

Not but I must confess my weakness too;

Yet it is great thus to resolve against it,

To have the frailty of a mortal man,

But the security of the immortal gods.

Brut. O Titus! O thou absolute young man!

Thou flatt'ring mirror of thy father's image,

Where I behold myself at such advantage!

Thou perfect glory of the Junian race!

Let me endear thee once more to my bosom,

Groan an eternal farewell to thy soul;

Instead of tears, weep blood, if possible,

Blood, the heart-blood of Brutus on his child:

For thou must die, my Titus, die, my son;

I swear the gods have doom'd thee to the grave:

The violated genius of thy country

Rears his sad head, and passes sentence on thee:

This morning sun, that lights my sorrows on

To the tribunal of this horrid vengeance,

Shall never see thee more.

Tit. Alas, my lord!

Why are you mov'd thus? Why am I worth your sorrow?

Why should the god-like Brutus shake to doom
me?

Why all these trappings for a traitor's hearse?

The gods will have it so.

Brut. They will, my Titus:

Nor heaven nor earth can have it otherwise.

Nay, Titus, mark: the deeper that I search,

My harass'd soul returns the more confirm'd;

Methinks I see the very hand of Jove

Moving the dreadful wheels of this affair,

That whirl thee, like a machine, to thy fate.

It seems as if the gods had pre-ordain'd it,

To fix the reeling spirits of the people,

And settle the loose liberty of Rome.

'Tis fix'd; O therefore let not fancy fond thee:

So fix'd thy death, that it is not in the pow'r

Of gods or men to save thee from the axe.

Tit. The axe! O Heaven! then must I fall so basely?

What, shall I perish by the common hangman?

Brut. If thou deny me this, thou giv'st me
nothing.

Yes, Titus, since the gods have so decreed

That I must lose thee, I will take the advantage

Of thy important fate, cement Rome's flaws,

And heal her wounded freedom with thy blood:

I will ascend myself the sad tribunal,

And sit upon my sons; on thee, my Titus;

Behold thee suffer all the shame of death,

The lictor's lashes, bleed before the people;

Then with thy hopes, and all thy youth upon
thee,

See thy head taken by the common axe,

Without a groan, without one pitying tear,

If that the gods can hold me to my purpose,

To make my justice quite transcend example.

Tit. Scourg'd like a bondman! ah! a beaten slave!

But I deserve it all; yet here I fail!

The image of this suff'ring quite unmans me;

Nor can I longer stop the gushing tears.

O, Sir! O, Brutus! must I call you father,

Yet have no token of your tenderness?

No sign of mercy? What, not bate me that!

Can you resolve, O all th' extremity

Of cruel rigor! to behold me too?

To sit unmov'd, and see me whipt to death!

Where are your bowels now? Is this a father?

Ah, Sir, why should you make my heart suspect

That all your late compassion was dissembled?

How can I think that you did ever love me?

Brut. Think that I love thee by my present
passion,

By these unmanly tears, these earthquakes here,

These sighs, that twitch the very strings of life:

Think that no other cause on earth can move me

To tremble thus, to sob, or shed a tear,

Nor shake my solid virtue from her point,

But Titus' death: O do not call it shameful,

That thus shall fix the glory of the world.

I own thy suff'rings ought t' unman me thus,

To make me throw my body on the ground,

To bellow like a beast, to gnaw the earth,

To tear my hair, to curse the cruel fates,

That force a father thus to drag his bowels.

Tit. O rise, thou violated majesty!

Rise from the earth, or I shall beg those fates

Which you would curse, to bolt me to the centre.

I now submit to all your threaten'd vengeance:

Come forth, you executioners of justice,

Nay, all your lictors, slaves, and common hang-
men,

Come, strip me bare, unrobe me in his sight,

And lash me till I bleed, whip me like furies!

And when you've scourg'd me till I foam and
fall,

For want of spirits, grovelling in the dust,

Then take my head, and give it his revenge;

By all the gods, I greedily resign it!

Brut. No more—farewell, eternally farewell!

If there be gods, they will reserve a room,

A throne for thee in heaven. One last embrace!

What is it makes thy eyes thus swim again?

Tit. I had forgot: be good to Teraminta
When I am in ashes.

Brut. Leave her to my care.

See her thou must not, for thou canst not bear it.

O for one more, this pull, this tug of heartstrings!

Farewell for ever!

Tit. O Brutus! O my father!

Brut. Canst thou not say farewell?

Tit. Farewell for ever!

Brut. Forever then! but O, my tears run o'er;
Groans choak my words, and I can speak no more.

§ 44. Lady Randolph, Lord Randolph, and young Norval, not known at the time to be Lady Randolph's Son. HOME.

Lady Ran. How fares my lord?

Lord Ran. That it fares well, thanks to this gallant youth,
Whose valor sav'd me from a wretched death.
As down the winding dale I walk'd alone,
At the cross way four armed men attacked me,
Rovers I judge from the licentious camp,
Who would have quickly laid Lord Randolph low,

Had not this brave and generous stranger come,
Like my good angel, in the hour of fate,
And, mocking danger, made my foes his own.
They turn'd upon him: but his active arm
Struck to the ground, from whence they rose no more,

The fiercest two: the others fled amain,
And left him master of the bloody field.
Speak, Lady Randolph; upon beauty's tongue
Dwell accents pleasing to the brave and bold.
Speak, noble dame, and thank him for thy lord.

Lady Ran. My lord, I cannot speak what now I feel.

My heart o'erflows with gratitude to Heaven,
And to this noble youth, who, all unknown
To you and yours, deliberated not,
Nor paus'd at peril—but, humanely brave,
Fought on your side against such fearful odds.
Have you yet learnt of him whom we should thank,

Whom call the saviour of Lord Randolph's life?

Lord Ran. I ask'd that question, and he answer'd not;

But I must know who my deliverer is.

[To the Stranger.]

Norv. A low-born man, of parentage obscure,
Who nought can boast but his desire to be
A soldier, and to gain a name in arms.

Lord Ran. Whoe'er thou art, thy spirit is ennobled

By the great King of kings: thou art ordain'd
And stamp'd a hero by the sovereign hand
Of nature! Blush not, flow'r of modesty
As well as valor, to declare thy birth.

Norv. My name is Norval: on the Grampian Hills

My father feeds his flocks; a frugal swain,
Whose constant cares were to increase his store,
And keep is only son, myself, at home.
For I had heard of battles: and I long'd
To follow to the field some warlike lord;
And Heaven soon granted what my sire denied.
This moon, which rose last night round as my shield,

Had not yet fill'd her horns, when, by her light,
A band of fierce barbarians from the hills
Rush'd like a torrent down upon the vale,
Sweeping our flocks and herds. The shepherds fled

For safety, and for succour. I alone,
With bended bow, and quiver full of arrows,
Hover'd about the enemy, and mark'd
The road he took: then hasted to my friends;
Whom, with a troop of fifty chosen men,
I met advancing. The pursuit I led,
Till we o'ertook the spoil-encumber'd foe.
We fought and conquer'd. Ere a sword was drawn,

An arrow from my bow had pierc'd their chief,
Who wore that day the arms which now I wear.
Returning home in triumph, I disdain'd
The shepherd's slothful life: and having heard
That our good king had summon'd his bold peers
To lead their warriors to the Carron side,
I left my father's house, and took with me
A chosen servant to conduct my steps:
Yon trembling coward, who forsook his master.
Journeying with this intent, I pass'd these tow'rs;
And, heaven-directed, came this day to do
The happy deed that gilds my humble name.

Lord Ran. He is as wise as brave: was ever tale

With such a gallant modesty rehears'd?
My brave deliverer! thou shalt enter now
A nobler list; and, in a monarch's sight,
Contend with princes for the prize of fame.
I will present thee to our Scottish king,
Whose valiant spirit ever valor lov'd.

Ha! my Matilda! wherefore starts that tear?

Lady Ran. I cannot say; for various affections,

And strangely mingled, in my bosom swell:
Yet each of them may well command a tear.
I joy that thou art safe; and I admire
Him, and his fortunes, who hath wrought thy safety;

Yea, as my mind predicts, with thine his own.
Obscure and friendless, he the army sought;
Bent upon peril, in the range of death
Resolv'd to hunt for fame, and with his sword
To gain distinction which his birth denied.
In this attempt unknown he might have perish'd,

And gain'd with all his valor but oblivion.
Now grac'd by thee, his virtue serves no more
Beneath despair. The soldier now of hope,
He stands conspicuous: fame and great renown
Are brought within the compass of his sword.
On this my mind reflected, whilst you spoke,
And bless'd the wonder-working hand of Heaven.

Lord Ran. Pious and grateful ever are thy thoughts!

My deeds shall follow where thou point'st the way.

Next to myself, and equal to Glenalvon,
In honor and command shall Norval be.

Norv. I know not how to thank you: rude I am

In speech and manners: never till this hour
Stood I in such a presence: yet, my lord,
There's something in my breast which makes me bold

To say, that Norval ne'er will shame thy favor.

Lady Ran. I will be sworn thou wilt not.
Thou shalt be

My knight; and ever, as thou didst to-day,
With happy valor guard the life of Randolph.

Lord Ran. Well hast thou spoke. Let me forbid reply. [To Norval.]

We are thy debtors still; thy high desert
O'ertops our gratitude. I must proceed,
As was at first intended, to the camp;
Some of my train, I see, are speeding hither,
Impatient doubtless of their lord's delay.
Go with me, Norval; and thine eyes shall see
The chosen warriors of thy native land,
Who languish for the fight, and beat the air
With brandish'd swords.

Norv. Let us begone, my lord.

§ 45. Young Norval informs Lord Randolph by what Means he acquired a Knowledge in the Art of War. HOME.

BENEATH a mountain's brow, the most remote

And inaccessible by shepherds trod,
In a deep cave dug by no mortal hand,
A hermit liv'd; a melancholy man,
Who was the wonder of our wand'ring swains.
Austere and lonely, cruel to himself,
Did they report him; the cold earth his bed,
Water his drink, his food the shepherds' alms.
I went to see him; and my heart was touch'd
With reverence and with pity. Mild he spake,
And ent'ring on discourse, such stories told,
As made me oft revisit his sad cell.
For he had been a soldier in his youth;
And fought in famous battles, when the peers
Of Europe, by the bold Godfredo led,
Against the usurping infidel display'd
The cross of Christ, and won the Holy Land.
Pleas'd with my admiration, and the fire
His speech struck from me, the old man would shake

His years away, and act his young encounters:
Then, having show'd his wounds, he'd sit him
down,

And all the live-long day discourse of war.
To help my fancy, in the smooth green turf
He cut the figures of the marshall'd hosts;
Describ'd the motions, and explain'd the use
Of the deep column, and the lengthen'd line,
The square, the crescent, and phalanx firm;
For all that Saracen or Christian knew
Of war's vast art, was to this hermit known.

——— Unhappy man!

Returning homewards by Messina's port,
Loaded with wealth and honors bravely won,
A rude and boist'rous captain of the sea
Fasten'd a quarrel on him. Fierce they fought;
The stranger fell; and with his dying breath,
Declar'd his name and lineage. Mighty God!
The soldier cried, my brother! O my brother!
——— They exchang'd forgiveness:

And happy, in my mind, was he that died;
For many deaths has the survivor suffer'd.
In the wild desert on a rock he sits,
Upon some nameless stream's untrodden banks,
And ruminates all day his dreadful fate.
At times, alas! nor in his perfect mind,
Holds dialogues with his lov'd brother's ghost;

And oft each night forsakes his sullen couch,
To make sad orisons for him he slew.

§ 46. Douglas's Soliloquy in the Wood, waiting for Lady Randolph, after he was known to be her Son. HOME.

THIS is the place, the centre of the grove.
Here stands the oak, the monarch of the wood!
How sweet and solemn is this midnight scene!
The silver moon, unclouded, holds her way
Thro' skies, where I could count each little star.
The fanning west-wind scarcely stirs the leaves;
The river, rushing o'er its pebbled bed,
Imposes silence with a stilly sound.
In such a place as this, at such an hour,
If ancestry can be in aught believ'd,
Descending spirits have convers'd with man,
And told the secrets of the world unknown.

Eventful day! how hast thou chang'd my state!
Once on the cold and winter-shaded side
Of a bleak hill mischance had rooted me,
Never to thrive, child of another soil;
Transplanted now to the gay sunny vale,
Like the green thorn of May, my fortune flow'rs.
Ye glorious stars! high heaven's resplendent host!
To whom I oft have of my lot complain'd,
Hear, and record my soul's unalter'd wish!
Dead or alive, let me but be renown'd!
May Heav'n inspire some fierce gigantic Dane
To give a bold defiance to our host!
Before he speaks it out, I will accept:
Like DOUGLAS conquer, or like DOUGLAS die.

§ 47. CATO. ADDISON.

ACT I.

Enter Portius and Marcus.

Por. THE dawn is overcast, the morning
low'rs,

And heavily in clouds brings on the day;
The great, th' important day, big with the fate
Of Cato and of Rome—our father's death
Would fill up all the guilt of civil war,
And close the scene of blood—Already Cæsar
Has ravag'd more than half the globe, and sees
Mankind grown thin by his destructive sword:
Should he go farther, numbers would be wanting

To form new battles and support his crimes.
Ye gods, what havoc does ambition make
Among your works!

Marc. Thy steady temper, Portius,
Can look on guilt, rebellion, fraud, and Cæsar,
In the calm lights of mild philosophy;
I'm tortur'd e'en to madness, when I think
On the proud victor: ev'ry time he's nam'd
Pharsalia rises to my view!—I see
Th' insulting tyrant prancing o'er the field, Strew'd with Rome's citizens, and drench'd in
slaughter,
His horse's hoofs wet with patrician blood!
O Portius! is there not some chosen curse,

Some hidden thunder in the stores of Heaven,
Red with uncommon wrath, to blast the man
Who owes his greatness to his country's ruin?

Por. Believe me, Marcus, 'tis an impious
greatness,
And mix'd with too much horror to be envied.
How does the lustre of our father's actions,
Through the dark cloud of ills that cover him,
Break out, and burn with more triumphant brightness!

His suff'rings shine, and spread a glory round
him:

Greatly unfortunate, he fights the cause
Of honor, virtue, liberty, and Rome.
His sword ne'er fell but on the guilty head;
Oppression, tyranny, and pow'r usurp'd,
Drew all the vengeance of his arm upon 'em.

Marc. Who knows not this? But what can Cato do

Against a world, a base, degenerate world,
That courts the yoke, and bows the neck to Cæsar?

Pent up in Utica, he vainly forms
A poor epitome of Roman greatness;
And, cover'd with Numidian guards, directs
A feeble army, and an empty senate,
Remnants of mighty battles fought in vain.
By Heav'n, such virtues, join'd with such success,
Distract my very soul: our father's fortune
Would almost tempt us to renounce his precepts.

Por. Remember what our father oft has told us.

The ways of Heaven are dark and intricate:
Puzzled in mazes and perplex'd with errors;
Our understanding traces them in vain,
Lost and bewilder'd in the fruitless search;
Nor sees with how much art the windings run,
Nor where the regular confusion ends. [ease;

Marc. These are suggestions of a mind at O Portius, didst thou taste but half the griefs
That wring my soul, thou couldst not talk thus coldly.

Passion unpitied, and successful love,
Plant daggers in my heart, and aggravate
My other griefs. Were but my Lucia kind—

Por. Thou see'st not that thy brother is thy rival; [Aside.

But I must hide it, for I know thy temper.
Now Marcus, now thy virtue's on the proof:
Put forth thy utmost strength, work ev'ry nerve,
And call up all thy father in thy soul.

To quell the tyrant love, and guard thy heart
On this weak side, where most our nature fails,
Would be a conquest worthy Cato's son. [take,

Marc. Portius, the counsel which I cannot
Instead of healing, but upbraids my weakness.
Bid me for honor plunge into a war
Of thickest foes, and rush on certain death,
Then shalt thou see that Marcus is not slow
To follow glory, and confess his father.

Love is not to be reason'd down, or lost
In high ambition, or a thirst of greatness:
'Tis second life, it grows into the soul,
Warms ev'ry vein, and beats in ev'ry pulse:
I feel it here: my resolution melts. [prince,

Por. Behold young Juba, the Numidian
With how much care he forms himself to glory.

And breaks the fierceness of his native temper,
To copy out our father's bright example.

He loves our sister Marcia, greatly loves her:
His eyes, his looks, his actions, all betray it:
But still the mother's fondness burns within him:
When most it swells, and labors for a vent,
The sense of honor and desire of fame
Drive the big passion back into his heart.
What! shall an African, shall Juba's heir,
Reproach great Cato's son, and show the world
A virtue wanting in a Roman soul?

Marc. Portius, no more! your words leave stings behind 'em.

Whene'er did Juba, or did Portius show
A virtue that has cast me at a distance,
And thrown me out in the pursuits of honor?

Por. Marcus, I know thy gen'rous temper
well.

Fling but th' appearance of dishonor on it,
It straight takes fire, and mounts into a blaze.

Marc. A brother's suff'rings claim a brother's pity. [eyes

Por. Heaven knows I pity thee. Behold my E'en whilst I speak—do they not swim in tears?
Were but my heart as naked to thy view,
Marcus would see it bleed in his behalf.

Marc. Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead

Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow?

Por. O Marcus! did I know the way to ease
Thy troubled heart, and mitigate thy pains,
Marcus, believe me, I could die to do it.

Marc. Thou best of brothers, and thou best of friends!

Pardon a weak, distemper'd soul, that swells
With sudden gusts, and sinks as soon in calms,
The sport of passions. But Sempronius comes:
He must not find this softness hanging on me.

[Ex. Marc.

Enter Sempronius.

Sem. Conspiracies no sooner should be form'd
Than executed. What means Portius here?
I like not that cold youth. I must dissemble,
And speak a language foreign to my heart.

[Aside.
Good-morrow, Portius; let us once embrace,
Once more embrace, while yet we both are free.
To-morrow, should we thus express our friend-
Each might receive a slave into his arms. [ship,
This sun, perhaps, this morning's sun's the last
That e'er shall rise on Roman liberty.

Por. My father has this morning call'd toge-
To this poor hall his little Roman senate, [ther
The leavings of Pharsalia, to consult
If yet he can oppose the mighty torrent
That bears down Rome and all her gods before it,
Or must at length give up the world to Cæsar.

Sem. Not all the pomp and majesty of Rome
Can raise her senate more than Cato's presence.
His virtues render our assembly awful,
They strike with something like religious fear,
And make e'en Cæsar tremble at the head
Of armies flush'd with conquest. O my Portius,
Could I but call that wondrous man my father,
Would but thy sister Marcia be propitious
To thy friend's vows, I might be blest indeed!

Por. Alas, Sempronius! wouldst thou talk of love
To Marcia, whilst her father's life's in danger?
Thou mightst as well court the pale trembling
vestal,
When she beholds the holy flame expiring.

Sem. The more I see the wonders of thy race,
The more I'm charm'd. Thou must take heed,
my Portius;

The world has all its eyes on Cato's son;
Thy father's merits set thee up to view,
And show thee in the fairest point of light,
To make thy virtues or thy faults conspicuous.

Por. Well dost thou seem to check my ling-
'ring here

On this important hour—I'll straight away;
And while the fathers of the senate meet
In close debate, to weigh the events of war,
I'll animate the soldiers' drooping courage
With love of freedom, and contempt of life;
I'll thunder in their ears their country's cause,
And try to rouse up all that's Roman in 'em.
'Tis not in mortals to command success,
But we'll do more, Sempronius, we'll deserve it.

[Exit.

Sem. Curse on the stripling! how he apes
his sire,

Ambitiously sententious!—But I wonder
Old Syphax comes not: his Numidian genius
Is well disposed to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spurr'd,
And ev'ry moment quicken'd to the course.
Cato has us'd me ill: he has refus'd
His daughter Marcia to my ardent vows.
Besides, his baffled arms, and ruin'd cause,
Are bars to my ambition. Cæsar's favor,
That show'rs down greatness on his friends, will raise me

To Rome's first honors. If I give up Cato,
I claim in my reward, his captive daughter.
But Syphax comes——

Enter Syphax.

Sy. Sempronius, all is ready.
I've sounded my Numidians, man by man,
And find them ripe for a revolt: they all
Complain aloud of Cato's discipline,
And wait but the command to change their master.

Sem. Believe me, Syphax, there's no time to waste;
E'en whilst we speak, our conqueror comes on,
And gathers ground upon us ev'ry moment.
Alas! thou know'st not Cæsar's active soul,
With what a dreadful course he rushes on
From war to war. In vain has nature form'd
Mountains and oceans to oppose his passage;
He bounds o'er all, victorious in his march:
The Alps and Pyreneans sink before him;
'Thro' winds and waves, and storms, he works
his way,
Impatient for the battle; one day more
Will set the victor thund'ring at our gates.
But tell me, has thou yet drawn o'er young
Juba?

That still would recommend thee more to Cæsar,
And challenge better terms.

Sy. Alas, he's lost!

He's lost, Sempronius! all his thoughts are full
Of Cato's virtues.—But I'll try once more
(For ev'ry instant I expect him here)
If yet I can subdue those stubborn principles.
Of faith and honor, and I know not what,
That have corrupted his Numidian temper,
And struck the infection into all his soul.

Sem. Be sure to press upon him ev'ry motive
Juba's surrender, since his father's death,
Would give up Afric into Cæsar's hands,
And make him lord of half the burning zone.

Sy. But is it true, Sempronius, that your senate

Is call'd together? Gods! thou must be cautious;
Cato has piercing eyes, and will discern
Our frauds, unless they're cover'd thick with art.

Sem. Let me alone, good Syphax; I'll conceal
My thoughts in passion ('tis the surest way);
I'll bellow out for Rome and for my country,
And mouth at Cæsar, till I shake the senate.
Your cold hypocrisy's a stale device,
A worn-out trick: wouldst thou be thought in earnest,

Clothe thy feign'd zeal in rage, in fire, and fury!

Sy. In troth, thou'rt able to instruct gray
heirs,

And teach the wily African deceit.

Sem. Once more be sure to try thy skill on Juba:

Meanwhile I'll hasten to my Roman soldiers,
Inflame the mutiny, and underhand
Blow up their discontents, till they break out
Unlook'd for, and discharge themselves on Cato.
Remember, Syphax, we must work in haste:
O think what anxious moments pass between
The birth of plots and their last fatal periods:
O, 'tis a dreadful interval of time,
Fill'd up with horror all, and big with death!
Destruction hangs on ev'ry word we speak,
On ev'ry thought; till the concluding stroke
Determines all, and closes our design.

[Exit.

Sy. I'll try if I can yet reduce to reason
This headstrong youth, and make him spurn at Cato.

The time is short; Cæsar comes rushing on us—
But hold! young Juba sees me, and approaches

Enter Juba.

Jub. Syphax, I joy to meet thee thus alone:
I have observ'd of late thy looks are fall'n,
O'ercast with gloomy cares and discontent.
Then tell me, Syphax, I conjure thee tell me,
What are the thoughts that knit thy brow in
frowns,

And turn thine eye thus coldly on thy prince?

Sy. 'Tis not my talent to conceal my thoughts,
Or carry smiles and sunshine in my face,
When discontent sits heavy at my heart;
I have not yet so much the Roman in me.

Jub. Why dost thou cast out such ungen'rous terms

Against the lords and sovereigns of the world!
Dost thou not see mankind fall down before
them,

And own the force of their superior virtue?
Is there a nation in the wilds of Afric,

Amidst our barren rocks, and burning sands,
That does not tremble at the Roman name?

Sy. Gods! where's the worth that sets these people up

Above her own Numidia's tawny sons?
Do they with tougher sinews bend the bow?
Or flies the jav'lin swifter to its mark,
Launch'd from the vigor of a Roman arm?
Who like our active African instructs
The fiery steed, and trains him to his hand?
Or guides in troops th' embattl'd elephant, Laden with war? These, these are arts, my prince,

In which your Zama does not stoop to Rome.

Jub. These are all virtues of a meaner rank,
Perfections that are plac'd in bones and nerves.
A Roman soul is bent on higher views:
To civilize the rude unpolish'd world,
And lay it under the restraint of laws;
To make man mild, and sociable to man;
To cultivate the wild licentious savage,
With wisdom, discipline, and lib'ral arts,
Th' embellishments of life: virtues like these
Make human nature shine, reform the soul,
And break our fierce barbarians into men.

Sy. Patience, kind Heavens! excuse an old man's warmth.

What are these wondrous civilizing arts,
This Roman polish, and this smooth behaviour,
That render man thus tractable and tame?
Are they not only to disguise our passions,
To set our looks at variance with our thoughts,
To check the starts and sallies of the soul,
And break off all its commerce with the tongue:
In short, to change us into other creatures
Than what our nature and the gods design'd us?

Jub. To strike thee dumb—turn up thy eyes to Cato;

There mayst thou see to what a godlike height
The Roman virtues lift up mortal man.
While good and just, and anxious for his friends,
He's still severely bent against himself;
Renouncing sleep, and rest, and food, and ease,
He strives with thirst and hunger, toil and heat;

And when his fortune sets before him all
The pomps and pleasures that his soul can wish,
His rigid virtue will accept of none.

Sy. Believe me, prince, there's not an African

That traverses our vast Numidian deserts
In quest of prey, and lives upon his bow,
But better practises these boasted virtues.
Coarse are his meals, the fortune of the chase;
Amidst the running stream he slakes his thirst;
Toils all the day, and at the approach of night
On the first friendly bank he throws him down,
Or rests his head upon a rock till morn;
Then rises fresh, pursues his wonted game;
And if the following day he chance to find
A new repast, or an untasted spring,
Blesses his stars, and thinks it luxury.

Jub. Thy prejudices, Syphax, won't discern
What virtues grow from ignorance and choice,
Nor how the hero differs from the brute.
But grant that others could with equal glory
Look down on pleasures, and the baits of sense,

Where shall we find the man that bears afflic-
tion,

Great and majestic in his griefs, like Cato?
Heavens! with what strength, what steadiness of mind,

He triumphs in the midst of all his suff'rings!
How does he rise against a load of woes,
And thank the gods that throw the weight upon him! [soul;

Sy. 'Tis pride, rank pride, and haughtiness of
I think the Romans call it Stoicism.

Had not your royal father thought so highly
Of Roman virtue and of Cato's cause,
He had not fall'n by a slave's hand inglorious;
Nor would his slaughter'd army now have lain
On Afric's sands, disfigur'd with their wounds,
To gorge the wolves and vultures of Numidia.

Jub. Why dost thou call my sorrows up afresh?
My father's name brings tears into my eyes.

Sy. O that you'd profit by your father's ills!

Jub. What wouldst thou have me do?

Sy. Abandon Cato.

Jub. Syphax, I should be more than twice an orphan
By such a loss.

Sy. Ay, there's the tie that binds you!
You long to call him father. Marcia's charms
Work in your heart unseen, and plead for Cato.
No wonder you are deaf to all I say.

Jub. Syphax, your zeal becomes importunate;
I've hitherto permitted it to rave,
And talk at large; but learn to keep it in,
Lest it should take more freedom than I'll give it.

Sy. Sir, your great father never us'd me thus.
Alas, he's dead! but can you e'er forget
The tender sorrows, and the pangs of nature,
The fond embraces, and repeated blessings,
Which you drew from him in your last farewell?
Still must I cherish the dear sad remembrance,
At once to torture and to please my soul.
The good old king at parting wrung my hand
(His eyes brimful of tears); then sighing, cried,

Pr'ythee be careful of my son!—His grief
Swell'd up so high, he could not utter more.

Jub. Alas, thy story melts away my soul!
That best of fathers! how shall I discharge
The gratitude and duty which I owe him?

Sy. By laying up his counsels in your heart.

Jub. His counsels bade me yield to thy directions:

Then, Syphax, chide me in severest terms;
Vent all thy passion, and I'll stand its shock,
Calm and unruffled, as a summer sea,
When not a breath of wind flies o'er its surface.

Sy. Alas, my prince! I'd guide you to your safety. [how.

Jub. I do believe thou wouldst; but tell me

Sy. Fly from the fate that follows Caesar's

Jub. My father scorn'd to do it. [foes.

Sy. And therefore died.

Jub. Better to die ten thousand deaths,
Than wound my honor.

Sy. Rather say, your love. [temper.

Jub. Syphax I've promised to preserve my
Why wilt thou urge me to confess a flame
I long have stifled, and would fain conceal?

Sy. Believe me, prince, tho' hard to conquer love,

'Tis easier to divert and break its force.

Absence might cure it; or a second mistress
Light up another flame, and put out this.

The glowing dames of Zama's royal court
Have faces flush'd with more exalted charms:
The sun, that rolls his chariot o'er their heads,
Works up more fire and color in their cheeks;
Were you with these, my prince, you'd soon forget

The pale, unripen'd beauties of the North.

Jub. 'Tis not a set of features or complexion,
The tincture of a skin that I admire:

Beauty soon grows familiar to the lover,
Fades in his eye, and palls upon the sense.

The virtuous Marcia towers above her sex:
True, she is fair—O how divinely fair!

But still the lovely maid improves her charms
With inward greatness, unaffected wisdom,
And sanctity of manners; Cato's soul
Shines out in every thing she acts or speaks,
While winning mildness and attractive smiles
Dwell in her looks, and with becoming grace
Softens the rigor of her father's virtue.

Sy. How does your tongue grow wanton in her praise!

But on my knees I beg you would consider—

Jub. Hah! Syphax, is't not she?—She moves this way:

And with her Lucia, Lucius's fair daughter.

My heart beats thick—I pr'ythee, Syphax,
leave me.

Sy. Ten thousand curses fasten on 'em both!
Now will this woman, with a single glance,
Undo what I've been lab'ring all this while.

[Exit Syphax.]

Enter Marcia and Lucia.

Jub. Hail, charming maid! how does thy beauty smooth

The face of war, and make even horror smile!
At sight of thee my heart shakes off its sorrows;
I feel a dawn of joy break in upon me,
And for a while forget the approach of Cæsar.

Mar. I should be griev'd, young prince, to think my presence [arms,

Unbent your thoughts, and slacken'd 'em to
While, warm with slaughter, our victorious foe
Threatens aloud, and calls you to the field.

Jub. O Marcia, let me hope thy kind concern
And gentle wishes follow me to battle!

The thought will give new vigor to my arm,
Add strength and weight to my descending
sword,

And drive it in a tempest on the foe.

Mar. My prayers and wishes always shall attend [virtue,

The friends of Rome, the glorious cause of
The men approv'd of by the gods and Cato.

Jub. That Juba may deserve thy pious cares,
I'll gaze for ever on thy godlike father,
Transplanting, one by one, into my life
His bright perfections, till I shine like him.

Mar. My father never at a time like this
Would lay out his great soul in words, and waste
Such precious moments.

Jub. Thy reproofs are just,
Thou virtuous maid! I'll hasten to my troops,
And fire their languid souls with Cato's virtue.
If e'er I lead them to the field, when all
The war shall stand rang'd in its just array,
And dreadful pomp; then will I think on thee,
O lovely maid! then will I think on thee;
And in the shock of charging hosts, remember What glorious deeds should grace the man who hopes

For Marcia's love. [Exit Juba.]

Luc. Marcia, you're too severe:
How could you chide the young good-natur'd
prince,

And drive him from you with so stern an air,
A prince that loves and dotes on you to death?

Mar. 'Tis therefore, Lucia, that I chide him from me.

His air, his voice, his looks, and honest soul,
Speak all so movingly in his behalf,
I dare not trust myself to hear him talk.

Luc. Why will you fight against so sweet a
passion,

And steel your heart to such a world of charms?

Mar. How, Lucia! wouldst thou have me sink away

In pleasing dreams, and lose myself in love,
When ev'ry moment Cato's life's at stake!

Cæsar comes arm'd with terror and revenge,
And aims his thunder at my father's head.

Should not the sad occasion swallow up
My other cares, and draw them all into it?

Luc. Why have not I this constancy of mind,
Who have so many griefs to try its force?

Sure, nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,

And sunk me even below my own weak sex:
Pity and love, by turns, oppress my heart.

Mar. Lucia, disburthen all thy cares on me,
And let me share thy most retir'd distress.

Tell me who raises up this conflict in thee.

Luc. I need not blush to name them, when I tell thee

They're Marcia's brothers, and the sons of Cato.

Mar. They both behold thee with their sister's
eyes,

And often have reveal'd their passion to me.

But tell me whose address thou favor'st most:

I long to know, and yet I dread to hear it.

Luc. Which is it Marcia wishes for?

Mar. For neither,

And yet for both—The youths have equal
share

In Marcia's wishes, and divide their sister:

But tell me which of them is Lucia's choice?

Luc. Marcia, they both are high in my esteem:
But in my love—why wilt thou make me name
him?

Thou know'st it is a blind and foolish passion,
Pleas'd and disgusted with it knows not what.

Mar. O Lucia, I'm perplex'd; O tell me which I must hereafter call my happy brother?

Luc. Suppose 't were Portius, could you blame my choice?

O Portius! thou hast stol'n away my soul!

With what a graceful tenderness he loves,

And breathes the softest, the sincerest vows!
Complacency, and truth, and manly sweetness,
Dwell ever on his tongue and smooth his
thoughts.

Marcus is over warm: his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper.

Mar. Alas, poor youth! how canst thou throw him from thee?

Lucia, thou know'st not half the love he bears
thee:

Whene'er he speaks of thee, his heart's in flames,
He sends out all his soul in ev'ry word,
And thinks, and talks, and looks like one transported.

Unhappy youth! How will thy coldness raise
Tempests and storms in his afflicted bosom!
I dread the consequence.

Luc. You seem to plead
Against your brother Portius.

Mar. Heaven forbid!
Had Portius been the unsuccessful lover,
The same compassion would have fall'n on him.

Luc. Was ever virgin love distress like mine!
Portius himself oft falls in tears before me,
As if he mourn'd his rival's ill success;
Then bids me hide the motions of my heart,
Nor show which way it turns: so much he fears
The sad effects that it will have on Marcus.

Mar. He knows too well how easily he's fir'd,
And would not plunge his brother in despair,
But waits for happier times and kinder moments.

Luc. Alas! too late I find myself involv'd
In endless griefs and labyrinths of woe;
Born to afflict my Marcia's family,
And sow dissension in the hearts of brothers.
Tormenting thought! it cuts into my soul.

Mar. Let us not, Lucia, aggravate our sorrows,

But to the gods submit the event of things.
Our lives discolor'd with our present woes,
May still grow bright, and smile with happier
hours.

So the pure limpid stream, when foul with stains
Of rushing torrents, and descending rains,
Works itself clear, and, as it runs, refines;
Till, by degrees, the floating mirror shines,
Reflects each flow'r that on the border grows;
And a new heaven in its fair bosom flows.

[Exeunt.]

ACT II.

SCENE, the Senate. Lucius, Sempronius, and Senators.

Sem. ROME still survives in this assembled senate!

Let us remember we are Cato's friends,
And act like men who claim that glorious title.

Luc. Cato will soon be here, and open to us
Th' occasion of our meeting. Hark, he comes!

[A sound of trumpets.]
May all the guardian gods of Rome direct him!

Enter Cato.

Cato. Fathers, we once again are met in council;

Cæsar's approach has summon'd us together,
And Rome attends her fate from our resolves.
How shall we treat this bold aspiring man?
Success still follows him, and backs his crimes;
Pharsalia gave him Rome, Egypt has since
Receiv'd his yoke, and the whole Nile is Cæsar's.
Why should I mention Juba's overthrow,
And Scipio's death? Numidia's burning sands Still smoke with blood. 'Tis time we should decree

What course to take. Our foe advances on us,
And envies us even Libya's sultry deserts.

Fathers, pronounce your thoughts: are they still fix'd

To hold it out, and fight it to the last?

Or are your hearts subdu'd at length, and wrought
By time, and ill success, to a submission?

Sempronius, speak.

Sem. My voice is still for war.
Gods! can a Roman senate long debate
Which of the two to choose—slav'ry or death?
No, let us rise at once, gird on our swords,
And, at the head of our remaining troops,
Attack the foe, break through the thick array
Of his throng'd legions, and charge home upon
him.

Perhaps some arm, more lucky than the rest,
May reach his heart, and free the world from bondage. [help;

Rise, fathers, rise! 'tis Rome demands your
Rise, and revenge her slaughter'd citizens,
Or share their fate! The corps of half her senate Manure the fields of Thessaly; while we Sit here delib'rating in cold debates,

If we should sacrifice our lives to honor,
Or wear them out in servitude and chains.

Rouse up, for shame! our brothers of Pharsalia
Point at their wounds, and cry aloud—To battle!

Great Pompey's shade complains that we are slow,

And Scipio's ghost walks unreveng'd amongst
us.

Cato. Let not a torrent of impetuous zeal
Transport thee thus beyond the bounds of rea-
True fortitude is seen in great exploits [son;
That justice warrants, and that wisdom guides;
All else is tow'ring phrensy and distraction.

Are not the lives of those who draw the sword
In Rome's defence intrusted to our care?

Should we thus lead them to a field of slaughter,
Might not th' impartial world with reason say,

We lavish'd at our deaths the blood of thousands,
To grace our fall, and make our ruin glorious?

Lucius we next would know what's your opinion. [on peace.

Luc. My thoughts, I must confess, are turn'd
Already have our quarrels fill'd the world

With widows and with orphans; Scythia mourns
Our guilty wars, and earth's remotest regions

Lie half unpeopled by the feuds of Rome:
'Tis time to sheathe the sword and spare man-

It is not Cæsar, but the gods, my fathers, [kind.
The gods declare against us, and repel

Our vain attempts. To urge the foe to battle

(Prompted by blind revenge and wild despair)
 Were to refuse th' awards of Providence,
 And not to rest in Heaven's determination.
 Already have we shown our love to Rome,
 Now let us show submission to the gods.
 We took up arms, not to revenge ourselves,
 But free the commonwealth; when this end fails,

Arms have no farther use. Our country's cause,
 That drew our swords, now wrests them from
 our hands,

And bids us not delight in Roman blood
 Unprofitably shed. What men could do,
 Is done already: heaven and earth will witness,

If Rome must fall, that we are innocent.

Sem. This smooth discourse, and mild behaviour, oft

Conceal a traitor. Something whispers me
 All is not right—Cato, beware of Lucius.

[Aside to Cato.

Cato. Let us appear nor rash nor diffident;
 Immod'rate valor swells into a fault;
 And fear admitted into public councils,
 Betrays like treason. Let us shun them both.
 Fathers, I cannot see that our affairs
 Are grown thus desp'rate; we have bulwarks round us;

Within our walls are troops inur'd to toil
 In Afric's heat, and season'd to the sun;
 Numidia's spacious kingdom lies behind us,
 Ready to rise at its young prince's call.
 While there is hope, do not distrust the gods;
 But wait at least till Cæsar's near approach
 Force us to yield. 'Twill never be too late
 To sue for chains, and own a conqueror.
 Why should Rome fall a moment ere her time?
 No: let us draw her term of freedom out
 In its full length, and spin it to the last,
 So shall we gain still one day's liberty:
 And let me perish, but in Cato's judgement,
 A day, an hour, of virtuous liberty
 Is worth a whole eternity in bondage.

Enter Marcus.

Mar. Fathers, this moment, as I watch'd the
 gate,
 Lodg'd in my post, a herald is arriv'd
 From Cæsar's camp, and with him comes old Decius,

The Roman knight; he carries in his looks
 Impatience, and demands to speak with Cato.

Cato. By your permission, fathers—bid him enter. [Exit Marcus.

Decius was once my friend; but other prospects

Have loos'd those ties, and bound him fast to Cæsar.

His message may determine our resolves.

Enter Decius.

Dec. Cæsar sends health to Cato—

Cato. Could he send it
 To Cato's slaughter'd friends, it would be welcome.
 Are not your orders to address the senate?

Dec. My business is with Cato; Cæsar sees
 The straits to which you're driven; and, as he knows

Cato's high worth, is anxious for your life.

Cato. My life is grafted on the fate of Rome.
 Would he save Cato, bid him spare his country.

Tell your dictator this; and tell him, Cato
 Disdains a life which he has power to offer.

Dec. Rome and her senators submit to
 Cæsar;

Her gen'als and her consuls are no more,
 Who check'd his conquests, and denied his triumphs:

Why will not Cato be this Cæsar's friend?

Cato. Those very reasons thou hast urg'd, forbid it.

Dec. Cato, I've orders to expostulate,
 And reason with you, as from friend to friend:
 Think on the storm that gathers o'er your head,
 And threatens ev'ry hour to burst upon it.
 Still may you stand high in your country's honors;

Do but comply, and make your peace with
 Cæsar,

Rome will rejoice, and cast its eyes on Cato,
 As on the second of mankind.

Cato. No more:

I must not think on life on such conditions.

Dec. Cæsar is well acquainted with your virtues,

And therefore sets this value on your life.

Let him but know the price of Cato's friendship,

And name your terms.

Cato. Bid him disband his legions,
 Restore the commonwealth to liberty,
 Submit his actions to the public censure,
 And stand the judgement of a Roman senate.
 Bid him do this, and Cato is his friend.

Dec. Cato, the world talks loudly of your wisdom—

Cato. Nay more—tho' Cato's voice was ne'er employ'd

To clear the guilty, and to varnish crimes,
 Myself will mount the rostrum in his favor,
 And strive to gain his pardon from the people.

Dec. A style like this becomes a conqueror.

Cato. Decius, a style like this becomes a Roman.

Dec. What is a Roman that is Cæsar's foe?

Cato. Greater than Cæsar: he's a friend to virtue.

Dec. Consider, Cato, you're in Utica,
 And at the head of your own little senate;
 You don't now thunder in the capitol,
 With all the mouths of Rome to second you.

Cato. Let him consider that, who drives us
 hither;

'Tis Cæsar's sword has made Rome's senate little,

And thinn'd its ranks. Alas! thy dazzled eye
 Beholds this man in a false glaring light,

Which conquest and success have thrown upon
 him;

Didst thou but view him right, thou'dst see him black

With murder, treason, sacrilege, and crimes
That strike my soul with horror but to name
them.

I know thou look'st on me, as on a wretch
Beset with ills, and cover'd with misfortunes;
But, by the gods I swear, millions of worlds
Should never buy me to be like that Cæsar.

Dec. Does Cato send this answer back to
Cæsar
For all his gen'rous cares and proffer'd friendship?

Cato. His cares for me are insolent and vain:
Presumptuous man! the gods take care of Cato.
Would Cæsar show the greatness of his soul,
Bid him employ his care for these my friends,
And make good use of his ill-gotten pow'r,
By shelt'ring men much better than himself.

Dec. Your high unconquer'd heart makes you forget

You are a man; you rush on your destruction.
But I have done. When I relate hereafter
The tale of this unhappy embassy,
All Rome will be in tears. [Exit Decius.

Sem. Cato, we thank thee.
The mighty genius of immortal Rome
Speaks in thy voice; thy soul breathes liberty.
Cæsar will shrink to hear the words thou utter'st,

And shudder in the midst of all his conquests.

Luc. The senate owns its gratitude to Cato,
Who with so great a soul consults its safety,
And guards our lives while he neglects his
own.

Sem. Sempronius gives no thanks on this account.

Lucius seems fond of life; but what is life?
'Tis not to stalk about, and draw fresh air
From time to time, or gaze upon the sun:
'Tis to be free. When liberty is gone,
Life grows insipid, and has lost its relish.
O, could my dying hand but lodge a sword
In Cæsar's bosom, and revenge my country!
By heavens, I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony.

Luc. Others, perhaps,
May serve their country with as warm a zeal,
Though 'tis not kindled into such a rage.

Sem. This sober conduct is a mighty virtue
In lukewarm patriots.

Cato. Come; no more, Sempronius:
All here are friends to Rome, and to each other.
Let us not weaken still the weaker side
By our divisions.

Sem. Cato, my resentments
Are sacrific'd to Rome—I stand reprov'd.

Cato. Fathers, 'tis time you come to a resolve.

Luc. Cato, we all go into your opinion:
Cæsar's behaviour has convinc'd the senate
We ought to hold it out till terms arrive.

Sem. We ought to hold it out till death; but,
Cato,

My private voice is drown'd amidst the senate's.

Cato. Then let us rise, my friends, and strive to fill

This little interval, this pause of life,
(While yet our liberty and fates are doubtful)
With resolution, friendship, Roman bravery,

And all the virtues we can crowd into it;
That Heaven may say it ought to be prolong'd.
Fathers, farewell!—The young Numidian prince Comes forward, and expects to know our counsels. [Exeunt Senators.

Enter Juba.

Juba, the Roman senate has resolv'd,
Till time gives better prospects, still to keep
The sword unsheath'd, and turn its edge on Cæsar.

Jub. The resolution fits a Roman senate.
But, Cato, lend me for a while thy patience,
And condescend to hear a young man speak.
My father, when some days before his death
He order'd me to march for Utica,
(Alas, I thought not then his death so near!)
Wept o'er me, press'd me in his aged arms;
And, as his griefs gave way, My son, said he,
Whatever fortune shall befall thy father,
Be Cato's friend; he'll train thee up to great
And virtuous deeds; do but observe him well, Thou'lt shun misfortunes, or thou'lt learn to bear them.

Cato. Juba, thy father was a worthy prince,
And merited, alas! a better fate;
But Heaven thought otherwise.

Jub. My father's fate,
In spite of all the fortitude that shines
Before my face in Cato's great example,
Subdues my soul, and fills my eyes with tears.

Cato. It is an honest sorrow, and becomes
thee.

Jub. My father drew respect from foreign climes:

The kings of Afric sought him for their friend
Kings far remote, that rule, as fame reports,
Behind the hidden sources of the Nile,
In distant worlds, on t' other side the sun;
Oft have their black ambassadors appear'd,
Loaden with gifts, and fill'd the courts of Zama.

Cato. I am no stranger to thy father's greatness.

Jub. I would not boast the greatness of my father,

But point out new alliances to Cato.
Have we not better leave this Utica,
To arm Numidia in our cause, and court
Th' assistance of my father's powerful friends?
Did they know Cato, our remotest kings
Would pour embattled multitudes about him:
Their swarthy hosts would darken all our
plains,

Doubling the native horror of the war,
And making death more grim.

Cato. And canst thou think
Cato will fly before the sword of Cæsar?
Reduc'd, like Hannibal, to seek relief
From court to court, and wander up and down
A vagabond in Afric?

Jub. Cato, perhaps
I'm too officious; but my forward cares
Would fain preserve a life of so much value:
My heart is wounded, when I see such virtue
Afflicted by the weight of such misfortunes.

Cato. Thy nobleness of soul obliges me.
But know, young prince, that valor soars above

What the world calls misfortune and affliction.
These are not ills; else would they never fall
On Heaven's first fav'rites, and the best of men.
The gods, in bounty, work up storms about us,
That give mankind occasion to exert
Their hidden strength, and throw out into practice

Virtues which shun the day, and lie conceal'd
In the smooth seasons and the calms of life.

Jub. I'm charm'd whene'er thou talk'st; I pant for virtue;
And all my soul endeavours at perfection.

Cato. Dost thou love watching, abstinence,
and toil,
Laborious virtues all? Learn them from Cato:
Success and fortune must thou learn from Cæsar.

Jub. The best good fortune that can fall on Juba,
The whole success at which my heart aspires,
Depends on Cato.

Cato. What does Juba say?
Thy words confound me.

Jub. I would fain retract them.
Give 'em me back again: they aim'd at nothing.

Cato. Tell me thy wish, young prince; make not my ear
A stranger to thy thoughts.

Jub. O, they're extravagant;
Still let me hide them.

Cato. What can Juba ask
That Cato will refuse?

Jub. I fear to name it:
Marcia—inherits all her father's virtues.

Cato. What wouldst thou say?

Jub. Cato, thou hast a daughter.

Cato. Adieu, young prince. I would not hear a word
Should lessen thee in my esteem. Remember
The hand of fate is over us, and Heaven
Exacts severity from all our thoughts.
It is not now a time to talk of aught
But chains, or conquest; liberty, or death.

[Exit.]

Enter Syphax.

Sy. How's this, my prince? What, cover'd with confusion?
You look as if yon stern philosopher
Had just now chid you.

Jub. Syphax, I'm undone.

Sy. I know it well.

Jub. Cato thinks meanly of me.

Sy. And so will all mankind.

Jub. I've open'd to him
The weakness of my soul, my love for Marcia.

Sy. Cato's a proper person to intrust
A love-tale with!

Jub. O, I could pierce my heart,
My foolish heart. Was ever wretch like Juba?

Sy. Alas, my prince, how are you chang'd of late!

I've known young Juba rise before the sun,
To beat the thicket where the tiger slept,
Or seek the lion in his dreadful haunts:
How did the color mount into your cheeks,
When first you rous'd him to the chase! I've seen you,

E'en in the Libyan dog-days, hunt him down,
Then charge him close, provoke him to the rage

Of fangs and claws, and, stooping from your horse,

Rivet the panting savage to the ground.

Jub. Pr'ythee, no more.

Sy. How would the old king smile
To see you weigh the paws when tipp'd with
gold,

And throw the shaggy spoils about your shoulders!

Jub. Syphax, this old man's talk, though honey flow'd

In ev'ry word, would now lose all its sweetness.
Cato's displeas'd, and Marcia lost for ever.

Sy. Young prince, I yet could give you good advice,

Marcia might still be yours.

Jub. What say'st thou, Syphax?
By heavens, thou turn'st me all into attention.

Sy. Marcia might still be yours.

Jub. As how, dear Syphax?

Sy. Juba commands Numidia's hardy troops,
Mounted on steeds unus'd to the restraint
Of curbs or bits, and fleetier than the winds.
Give but the word, we'll snatch this damsel up,
And bear her off.

Jub. Can such dishonest thoughts Rise up in man? Wouldst thou seduce my youth

To do an act that would destroy my honor?

Sy. Gods, I could tear my hair to hear you talk!

Honor's a fine imaginary notion
That draws in raw and unexperienc'd men
To real mischiefs, while they hunt a shadow.

Jub. Wouldst thou degrade thy prince into a ruffian?

Sy. The boasted ancestors of these great men, Whose virtues you admire, were all such ruffians.

This dread of nations, this almighty Rome,
That comprehends in her wide empire's bounds
All under heaven, was founded on a rape;
Your Scipios, Cæsars, Pompeys, and your Catos
(The gods on earth), are all the spurious brood
Of violated maids, of ravish'd Sabines.

Jub. Syphax, I fear that hoary head of thine
Abounds too much in our Numidian wiles.

Sy. Indeed, my prince, you want to know
the world.

You have not read mankind; your youth admires

The throes and swellings of a Roman soul,
Cato's bold flights, th' extravagance of virtue.

Jub. If knowledge of the world makes man
perfidious,

May Juba ever live in ignorance!

Sy. Go, go; you're young.

Jub. Gods, must I tamely bear
This arrogance unanswer'd? Thou'rt a traitor,
A false old traitor.

Sy. I have gone too far.

[Aside.]

Jub. Cato shall know the baseness of thy soul.

Sy. I must appease this storm, or perish in it.

[Aside.]

Young prince, behold these locks, that are grown white

Beneath a helmet in your father's battles.

Jub. Those locks shall ne'er protect thy insolence.

Sy. Must one rash word, th' infirmity of age,

Throw down the merit of my better years?

This the reward of a whole life of service!

—Curse on the boy, how steadily he hears me!

[Aside.

Jub. Is it because the throne of my forefathers

Still stands unfill'd, and that Numidja's crown

Hangs doubtful yet whose head it shall enclose,

Thou thus presum'st to treat thy prince with scorn?

Sy. Why will you rive my heart with such expressions?

Does not old Syphax follow you to war?

What are his aims? Why does he load with darts

His trembling hand, and crush beneath a casque

His wrinkled brows? What is it he aspires to?

Is it not this: to shed the slow remains,

His last poor ebb of blood in your defence?

Jub. Syphax, no more: I would not hear you talk.

Sy. Not hear me talk! what, when my faith to Juba,

My royal master's son, is call'd in question?

My prince may strike me dead, and I'll be dumb;

But whilst I live I must not hold my tongue,

And languish out old age in his displeasure.

Jub. Thou know'st the way too well into my heart.

I do believe thee loyal to thy prince.

Sy. What greater instance can I give? I've offer'd

To do an action which my soul abhors,

And gain you whom you love at any price.

Jub. Was this thy motive? I've been too hasty.

Sy. And 'tis for this my prince has call'd me traitor.

Jub. Sure thou mistak'st: I did not call thee so.

Sy. You did indeed, my prince, you call'd me traitor;

Nay, further, threaten'd you'd complain to Cato.

Of what, my prince, would you complain to Cato?

That Syphax loves you, and would sacrifice His life, nay more, his honor, in your service?

Jub. Syphax, I know thou lov'st me but indeed

Thy zeal for Juba carried thee too far.

Honor's a sacred tie, the law of kings,

The noble mind's distinguishing perfection,

That aids and strengthens virtue where it meets her,

And imitates her actions where she is not:

It ought not to be sported with.

Sy. By heavens,

I'm ravish'd when you talk thus, though you chide me!

Alas! I've hitherto been us'd to think

A blind officious zeal to serve my king

The ruling principle, that ought to burn

And quench all others in a subject's heart.

Happy the people who preserve their honor

By the same duties that oblige their prince!

Jub. Syphax, thou now beginn'st to speak thyself.

Numidia's grown a scorn among the nations,

For breach of public vows. Our Punic faith

Is infamous, and branded to a proverb.

Syphax, we'll join our cares, to purge away

Our country's crimes, and clear her reputation.

Sy. Believe me, prince, you make old Syphax weep

To hear you talk—but 'tis with tears of joy.

If e'er your father's crown adorn your brows,

Numidia will be blest by Cato's lectures.

Jub. Syphax, thy hand; we'll mutually forget

The warmth of youth, and frowardness of age:

Thy prince esteems thy worth, and loves thy person.

If e'er the sceptre comes into my hand,

Syphax shall stand the second in my kingdom.

Sy. Why will you overwhelm my age with kindness?

My joy grows burthensome, I shan't support it.

Jub. Syphax, farewell. I'll hence, and try to find

Some blest occasion that may set me right

In Cato's thoughts. I'd rather have that man

Approve my deeds, than worlds for my admirers. [Exit.

Sy. Young men soon give, and soon forget affronts:

Old age is slow in both—A false old traitor!—

These words, rash boy, may chance to cost thee dear.

My heart had still some foolish fondness for thee:

But hence! 'tis gone: I give it to the winds:

Cæsar, I am wholly thine.

Enter Sempronius.

All hail, Sempronius!

Well, Cato's senate is resolv'd to wait

The fury of a siege before it yields.

Sem. Syphax, we both were on the verge of fate!

Lucius declar'd for peace, and terms were offer'd

To Cato, by a messenger from Cæsar.

Should they submit ere our designs are ripe,

We both must perish in the common wreck,

Lost in the gen'ral undistinguish'd ruin.

Sy. But how stands Cato?

Sem. Thou hast seen mount Atlas:

While storms and tempests thunder on its brows,

And oceans break their billows at its feet,

It stands unmov'd, and glories in its height:

Such is that haughty man; his tow'ring soul,

'Midst all the shocks and injuries of fortune,

Rises superior, and looks down on Cæsar.

Sy. But what's this messenger?

Sem. I've practis'd with him,

And found a means to let the victor know

That Syphax and Sempronius are his friends:

But let me now examine in my turn :
Is Juba fix'd ?

Sy. Yes—but it is to Cato :

I've tried the force of every reason on him,
Sooth'd and caress'd ; been angry, sooth'd again ;
Laid safety, life, and int'rest in his sight.
But all are vain, he scorns them all for Cato.

Sem. Come, 'tis no matter ; we shall do without him.

He'll make a pretty figure in a triumph,
And serve to trip before the victor's chariot.
Syphax, I now may hope thou hast forsook
Thy Juba's cause, and wishest Marcia mine.

Sy. May she be thine as fast as thou wouldst have her !

Sem. Syphax, I love that woman ; though I curse

Her and myself, yet, spite of me, I love her.

Sy. Make Cato sure, and give up Utica,
Cæsar will ne'er refuse thee such a trifle.
But are thy troops prepar'd for a revolt ?
Does the sedition catch from man to man,
And run among their ranks ?

Sem. All, all is ready.

The factious leaders are our friends, that spread
Murmurs and discontents among the soldiers ;
They count their toilsome marches, long fatigue,

Unusual fastings, and will bear no more
This medley of philosophy and war.

Within an hour they'll storm the senate-house.

Sy. Meanwhile I'll draw up my Numidian
troops

Within the square, to exercise their arms,
And, as I see occasion, favor thee.

I laugh to think how your unshaken Cato
Will look aghast, while unforeseen destruction
Pours in upon him thus from every side.

So where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden, th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains
away.

The helpless traveller, with wild surprise,
Sees the dry desert all around him rise,
And, smother'd in the dusty whirlwind, dies.

[Exeunt.]

ACT III.

Enter Marcus and Portius.

Marc. THANKS to my stars, I have not rang'd about

The wilds of life, ere I could find a friend :
Nature first pointed out my Portius to me,
And early taught me, by her sacred force,
To love thy person ere I knew thy merit,
Till what was instinct grew up into friendship.

Por. Marcus, the friendships of the world are oft

Confed'racies in vice, or leagues of pleasure ;
Ours has severest virtue for its basis,
And such a friendship ends not but with life.

Marc. Portius, thou know'st my soul in all its weakness,
Then pry'three spare me on its tender side.

Indulge me but in love, my other passions
Shall rise and fall by virtue's nicest rules.

Por. When love's well-tim'd, 'tis not a fault to love.

The strong, the brave, the virtuous, and the wise,

Sink in the soft captivity together.

I would not urge thee to dismiss thy passion,
(I know 'twere vain), but to suppress its force,
Till better times may make it look more graceful.

Marc. Alas ! thou talk'st like one who never felt

Th' impatient throbs and longings of a soul
That pants and reaches after distant good.

A lover does not live by vulgar time :

Believe me, Portius, in my Lucia's absence
Life hangs upon me, and becomes a burden ;
And yet, when I behold the charming maid,
I'm ten times more undone ; while hope and
fear,

And grief, and rage, and love, rise up at once,
And with variety of pain distract me.

Por. What can thy Portius do to give thee
help ?

Marc. Portius, thou oft enjoy'st the fair one's presence ;

Then undertake my cause, and plead it to her
With all the strength and heat of eloquence
Fraternal love and friendship can inspire.

Tell her thy brother languishes to death,
And fades away, and withers in his bloom ;
That he forgets his sleep, and loathes his food ;
That youth, and health, and war, are joyless to
him :

Describe his anxious days and restless nights,
And all the torments that thou seest me suffer.

Por. Marcus, I beg thee, give me not an office

That suits with me so ill. Thou know'st my temper.

Marc. Wilt thou behold me sinking in my
woes,

And wilt thou not reach out a friendly arm,
To raise me from amidst this plunge of sorrows ?

Por. Marcus, thou canst not ask what I'd refuse.

But here, believe me, I've a thousand reasons—

Marc. I know thou'lt say my passion's out of season,

That Cato's great example and misfortunes
Should both conspire to drive it from my thoughts.

But what's all this to one that loves like me ?

O Portius, Portius, from my soul I wish
Thou didst but know thyself, what 'tis to love !
Then wouldst thou pity and assist thy brother.

Por. What should I do ? If I disclose my passion,

Our friendship's at an end ; if I conceal it,
The world will call me false to a friend and brother. [Aside.]

Marc. But see where Lucia, at her wonted
hour,

Amid the cool of yon high marble arch,

Enjoys the noon-day breeze! Observe her, Portius;
That face, that shape, those eyes, that heaven
of beauty!

Observe her well and blame me if thou canst.

Por. She sees us, and advances——

Marc. I'll withdraw.

And leave you for a while. Remember, Portius,
Thy brother's life depends upon thy tongue.

Enter Lucia. [Exit.

Luc. Did not I see your brother Marcus here?
Why did he fly the place and shun my presence?

Por. O Lucia! language is too faint to show
His rage of love; it preys upon his life;
He pines, he sickens, he despairs, he dies:
His passions and his virtues lie confus'd,
And mixt together in so wild a tumult,
That the whole man is quite disfigured in him.
Heavens! would one think 'twere possible for
love

To make such ravages in a noble soul?

O Lucia! I'm distrest; my heart bleeds for
him:

[sence,
Ev'n now, while thus I stand blest in thy pre-
A secret damp of grief comes o'er my thoughts,
And I'm unhappy, tho' thou smil'st upon me.

Luc. How wilt thou guard thy honor in the shock

[Portius,
Of love and friendship? Think betimes, my Think how the nuptial tie, that might ensure
Our mutual bliss, would raise to such a height
Thy brother's griefs, as might perhaps destroy
him.

Por. Alas, poor youth! what dost thou think, my Lucia?

His gen'rous, open, undesigning heart
Has begg'd his rival to solicit for him:
Then do not strike him dead with a denial;
But hold him up in life, and cheer his soul
With the faint glimm'ring of a doubtful hope:
Perhaps when we have passed those gloomy
hours

And weather'd out the storm that beats about
us——

Luc. No, Portius, no: I see thy sister's tears,
Thy father's anguish, and thy brother's death,
In the pursuit of our ill-fated loves:
And, Portius, here I swear, to heaven I swear,
To heaven and all the powers that judge man-
kind,

Never to mix my plighted hands with thine,
While such a cloud of mischiefs hang about us,
But to forget our loves, and drive thee out
From all my thoughts as far—as I am able.

Por. What hast thou said? I'm thunderstruck—recall

Those hasty words, or I am lost for ever.

Luc. Has not the vow already pass'd my lips?
The gods have heard it and 'tis seal'd in heaven.
May all the vengeance that was ever pour'd
On perjur'd heads o'erwhelm me if I break it!

Por. Fix'd in astonishment, I gaze upon thee,
Like one just blasted by a stroke from heaven,
Who pants for breath, and stiffens, yet alive,
In dreadful looks; a monument of wrath!

Luc. At length I've acted my severest part:

I feel the woman breaking in upon me,
And melt about my heart; my tears will flow.
But O! I'll think no more! the hand of fate
Has torn thee from me, and I must forget thee.

Por. Hard-hearted, cruel maid!

Luc. O stop those sounds, [upon me?
Those killing sounds! Why dost thou frown
My blood runs cold, my heart forgets to heave,
And life itself goes out at thy displeasure.
The gods forbid us to indulge our loves;
But O! I cannot bear thy hate and live.

Por. Talk not of love, thou never knew'st
I've been deluded, led into a dream [its force.
Of fancied bliss. O Lucia, cruel maid! [sounds
Thy dreadful vow, loaden with death, still
In my stunn'd ears. What shall I say or do?
Quick let us part! Perdition's in thy presence,
And horror dwells about thee!—Ha! she faints!
Wretch that I am, what has my rashness done!
Lucia, thou injur'd innocence! thou best
And loveliest of thy sex! awake, my Lucia,
Or Portius rushes on his sword to join thee.

—Her imprecations reach not to the tomb,
They shut not out society in death—

But, ah! she moves, life wanders up and down
Through all her face, and lights up ev'ry charm.

Luc. O Portius, was this well—to frown on her

That lives upon thy smiles? to call in doubt
The faith of one expiring at thy feet,
That loves thee more than ever woman lov'd?
—What do I say? My half-recover'd sense
Forgets the vow in which my soul is bound.
Destruction stands betwixt us; we must part.

Por. Name not the word; my frightened thoughts run back,

And startle into madness at the sound.

Luc. What wouldst thou have me do? Consider well

The train of ills our love would draw behind it.
Think, Portius, think thou seest thy dying brother [blood,
Stabb'd at his heart, and all besmeard with Storming at heaven and thee! Thy awful sire
Sternly demands the cause, th' accursed cause,
That robs him of his son: poor Marcia trembles,

Then tears her hair, and, frantic in her griefs,
Calls out on Lucia. What could Lucia answer,
Or how stand up in such a scene of sorrow?

Por. To my confusion, and eternal grief,
I must approve the sentence that destroys me.
The mist that hung about my mind clears up;
And now, athwart the terrors that thy vow
Has planted round thee, thou appear'st more
More amiable, and risest in thy charms. [fair,
Loveliest of women! Heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Brightening each other! Thou art all divine.

Luc. Portius, no more; thy words shoot through my heart,

Melt my resolves, and turn me all to love.
Why are those tears of fondness in thy eyes?
Why heaves thy heart? why swells thy soul
with sorrow?

It softens me too much—farewell, my Portius;
Farewell, though death is in the word—forever!

Por. Stay, Lucia, stay! What dost thou say?
For ever? [success]

Luc. Have I not sworn? If, Portius, thy Must throw thy brother on his fate, farewell—
O, how shall I repeat the word, for ever!

Por. Thus o'er the dying lamp th' unsteady
flame
Hangs quivering on the point, leaps off by fits,
And falls again, as loath to quit its hold. [thee,
—Thou must not go? my soul still hovers o'er
And can't let loose.

Luc. If the firm Portius shakes
To hear of parting, think what Lucia suffers!

Por. 'Tis true, unruffled and serene I've met
The common accidents of life; but here
Such an unlook'd-for storm of ills falls on me,
It beats down all my strength. I cannot bear it.
We must not part.

Luc. What dost thou say? not part!
Hast thou forgot the vow that I have made?
Are there not heavens, and gods, that thunder o'er us?

—But see, thy brother Marcus bends this way;
I sicken at the sight. Once more farewell;
Farewell, and know thou wrong'st me if thou think'st

Ever was love, or ever grief, like mine!

[Exit Lucia.]

Enter Marcus.

Marc. Portius, what hopes? How stands
she? Am I doom'd
To life or death?

Por. What wouldst thou have me say?

Marc. What means this pensive posture?
Thou appear'st
Like one amaz'd and terrified.

Por. I've reason. [ordered thoughts]

Marc. Thy down-cast looks and thy dis-
Tell me my fate. I ask not the success
My cause has found.

Por. I'm griev'd I undertook it. [my heart,

Marc. What! does the barbarous maid insult
My aching heart, and triumph in my pains?
That I could cast her from my thoughts for ever! [griefs;

Por. Away, you're too suspicious in your
Lucia, though sworn never to think of love,
Compassionates your pains, and pities you.

Marc. Compassionates my pains, and pities
me!

What is compassion, when 'tis void of love?
Fool that I was to choose so cold a friend
To urge my cause!—Compassionates my pains!
Pr'ythee, what art, what rhet'ric didst thou use
To gain this mighty boon?—She pities me!
To one that asks the warm return of love,
Compassion's cruelty, 'tis scorn, 'tis death—

Por. Marcus, no more; have I deserv'd this treatment?

Marc. What have I said? O Portius, O forgive me!

A soul exasperate in ills falls out
With ev'ry thing, its friend, itself—but ha!
What means that shout, big with the sounds
What new alarms? [of war?

Por. A second, louder yet, [us.
Swells in the winds, and comes more full upon

Marc. O, for some glorious cause to fall in battle!

Lucia, thou hast undone me; thy disdain [ease.
Has broke my heart: 'tis death must give me

Por. Quick, let us hence. Who knows if Cato's life [heart

Stands sure? O Marcus, I am warm'd, my Leaps at the trumpet's voice, and burns for glory. [Exeunt.

Enter Sempronius with the Leaders of the Mutiny.

Sem. At length the winds are rais'd, the storm blows high:

Be it your care, my friends, to keep it up
In its full fury and direct it right,
Till it has spent itself on Cato's head.
Meanwhile I'll herd among his friends, and seem

One of the number, that whate'er arrive,
My friends and fellow-soldiers may be safe.

[Exit.

1st Leader. We are all safe, Sempronius is our friend.

Sempronius is as brave a man as Cato.
But hark! he enters. Bear up boldly to him;
Be sure you beat him down and bind him fast.
This day will end our toils and give us rest;
Fear nothing, for Sempronius is our friend.

Re-enter Sempronius, with Cato, Lucius, Por-tius, and Marcus. [war

Cato. Where are these bold intrepid sons of
That greatly turn their backs upon the foe,
And to their general send a brave defiance?

Sem. Curse on their dastard souls, they stand astonish'd. [Aside.

Cato. Perfidious men! And will you thus dishonor

Your past exploits, and sully all your wars?
Do you confess 'twas not a zeal for Rome,
Nor love of liberty, nor thirst of honor,
Drew you thus far; but hopes to share the spoil
Of conquer'd towns, and plunder'd provinces?
Fir'd with such motives, you do well to join
With Cato's foes, and follow Cæsar's banners.
Why did I 'scape th' envenom'd asp's rage,
And all the fiery monsters of the desert,
To see this day? Why could not Cato fall
Without your guilt? Behold, ungrateful men,
Behold my bosom naked to your swords,
And let the man that's injur'd strike the blow.
Which of you all suspects that he is wrong'd,
Or thinks he suffers greater ills than Cato?
Am I distinguish'd from you but by toils,
Superior toils, and heavier weight of cares?
Painful pre-eminence!

Sem. By heavens they droop!

Confusion to the villains; all is lost. [Aside.

Cato. Have you forgotten Libya's burning waste, [sand,

Its barren rocks, parch'd earth, and hills of
Its tainted air, and all its broods of poison?

Who was the first to explore th' untrodden
path,

When life was hazarded in every step?

Or, fainting in the long laborious march,

When on the banks of an unlook'd-for stream

You sunk the river with repeated draughts,
Who was the last in all your host that thirsted?

Sem. If some penurious source by chance appear'd,

Scanty of waters, when you scoop'd it dry,
And offer'd the full helmet up to Cato,
Did he not dash th' untasted moisture from him?
Did he not lead you through the mid-day sun,
And clouds of dust? Did not his temples glow,
In the same sultry winds, and scorching heats?

Cato. Hence, worthless men! hence! and complain to Cæsar,

You could not undergo the toil of war,
Nor bear the hardships that your leaders bore.

Luc. See, Cato, see the unhappy men; they weep!

Fear and remorse and sorrow for their crime
Appear in ev'ry look, and plead for mercy.

Cato. Learn to be honest men, give up your leaders,

And pardon shall descend on all the rest.

Sem. Cato, commit these wretches to my
care:

First let 'em each be broken on the rack;
Then with what life remains, impal'd, and left
To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake;
There let 'em hang, and taint the southern wind.

[ence,
The partners of their crime will learn obedi-
When they look up and see their fellow traitors
Stuck on a fork, and black'ning in the sun.

Luc. Sempronius, why, why wilt thou urge
Of wretched men?

[the fate
Sem. How! wouldst thou clear rebellion?
Lucius (good man) pities the poor offenders
That would imbrue their hands in Cato's blood.

Cato. Forbear, Sempronius!—see they suffer
death,

But in their deaths remember they are men:
Strain not the laws to make their tortures grievous.

Lucius, the base degenerate age requires
Severity and justice in its rigor:

This awes an impious, bold, offending world,
Commands obedience, and gives force to laws.
When by just vengeance guilty mortals perish,
The gods behold their punishment with plea-
And lay th' uplifted thunderbolt aside. [sure,

Sem. Cato, I execute thy will with pleasure.

Cato. Meanwhile we'll sacrifice to liberty.
Remember, O my friends, the laws, the rights,
The gen'rous plan of pow'r deliver'd down,
From age to age, by your renown'd forefathers,
(So dearly bought, the price of so much blood:)
O let it never perish in your hands!

But piously transmit it to your children.
Do thou, great Liberty, inspire our souls,
And make our lives in thy possession happy,
Or our deaths glorious in thy just defence.

[Exeunt Cato, &c.

1st Leader. Sempronius, you have acted like yourself.

One would have thought you had been half in earnest.

Sem. Villain, stand off! base grov'ling worthless wretches,

Mongrels in faction, poor faint-hearted traitors!

2d. Lead. Nay, now you carry it too far,
Sempronius; [friends

Throw off the mask, there are none here but Sem. Know, villains, when such paltry slaves presume

To mix in treason, if the plot succeeds,
They're thrown neglected by: but if it fails,
They're sure to die like dogs as you shall do.
Here, take these factious monsters, drag 'em
To sudden death. [forth

1st Lead. Nay, since it comes to this—

Sem. Dispatch 'em quick! but first pluck out their tongues,
Lest with their dying breath they sow sedition.
[Exeunt Guards, with the leaders.

Enter Syphax.

Sy. Our first design, my friend, has prov'd abortive:

Still there remains an after-game to play:
My troops are mounted: their Numidian steeds
Snuff up the wind and long to scour the desert:
Let but Sempronius head us in our flight,
We'll force the gate where Marcus keeps his guard, [sage.

And hew down all that would oppose our pas-
A day will bring us into Cæsar's camp.

Sem. Confusion! I have fail'd of half my purpose.

Marcia, the charming Marcia's left behind!

Sy. How! will Sempronius turn a woman's slave? [soft

Sem. Think not thy friend can ever feel the Unmanly warmth and tenderness of love.

Syphax, I long to clasp that haughty maid,
And bend her stubborn virtue to my passion:
When I have gone thus far, I'd cast her off.

Sy. Well said! that's spoken like thyself, Sempronius.

What hinders, then, but that thou find her out,
And hurry her away by manly force?

Sem. But how to gain admission? For access
Is given to none but Juba, and her brothers.

Sy. Thou shalt have Juba's dress, and Juba's guards;

The doors will open when Numidia's prince
Seems to appear before the slaves that watch
them.

Sem. Heavens, what a thought is there!
Marcia's my own!

How will my bosom swell with anxious joy
When I behold her struggling in my arms,
With glowing beauty and disorder'd charms,
While fear and anger, with alternate grace,
Pant in her breast and vary in her face!

So Pluto, seiz'd of Proserpine, convey'd
To hell's tremendous gloom th' affrighted maid,
There grimly smil'd, pleas'd with the beauteous
prize,

Nor envied Jove his sunshine and his skies.
[Exeunt.

ACT IV.

Enter Lucia and Marcia.

Luc. Now tell me, Marcia, tell me from thy soul,

If thou believ'st 'tis possible for woman
To suffer greater ills than Lucia suffers?

Mar. O Lucia, Lucia! might my big-swoln heart

Vent all its griefs, and give a loose to sorrow,
Marcia could answer thee in sighs, keep pace
With all thy woes, and count out tear for tear.

Luc. I know thou art doom'd alike to be belov'd

By Juba, and thy father's friend Sempronius;
But which of these has power to charm like Portius?

Mar. Still I must beg thee not to name
Sempronius;

Lucia, I like not that loud boist'rous man;
Juba to all the brav'ry of a hero [ness;
Adds softest love and more than female sweet-
Juba might make the proudest of our sex,
Any of womankind, but Marcia, happy.

Luc. And why not Marcia? Come, you strive in vain [too well
To hide your thoughts from one who knows
The inward glowings of a heart in love.

Mar. While Cato lives, his daughter has no
right
To love or hate, but as his choice directs.

Luc. But should this father give you to Sempronius?

Mar. I dare not think he will: but if he should—

Why wilt thou add to all the griefs I suffer
Imaginary ills, and fancied tortures?
I hear the sound of feet! they march this way!
Let us retire, and try if we can drown
Each softer thought in sense of present danger:
When love once pleads admission to our hearts,
(In spite of all the virtue we can boast)
The woman that deliberates is lost. [Exeunt.

Enter Sempronius, dressed like Juba, with Numidian Guards.

Sem. The deer is lodg'd, I've track'd her to her covert.

Be sure you mind the word, and when I give
Rush in at once, and seize upon your prey. [it,
Let not her cries or tears have force to move
you.

—How will the young Numidian rave to see
His mistress lost! If aught could glad my soul,
Beyond the enjoyment of so bright a prize,
'T would be to torture that young gay barbarian.
But hark, what noise! Death to my hopes?
'tis he,

'Tis Juba's self! there is but one way left—
He must be murder'd and a passage cut Through those his guard—Hah, dastards, do you tremble!
Or act like men, or by yon azure heaven—

Enter Juba.

Juba. What do I see? Who's this, that dares usurp

The guards and habit of Numidia's prince?

Sem. One who was born to scourge thy arrogance,
Presumptuous youth.

Jub. What can this mean, Sempronius?

Sem. My sword shall answer thee. Have at thy heart!

Jub. Nay, then beware thy own, proud barbarous man!

[They fight, Sem. falls; his Guards surrender.]

Sem. Curse on my stars! am I then doom'd
By a boy's hand, disfigur'd in a vile [to fall
Numidian dress, and for a worthless woman?
Gods, I'm distracted! this my close of life!
O, for a peal of thunder that would make Earth, sea, and air, and heaven, and Cato tremble. [Dies.

Jub. With what a spring his furious soul broke loose, [ground!
And left the limbs still quivering on the
Hence let us carry off those slaves to Cato,
That we may there at length unravel all
This dark design, this mystery of fate.

[Exit Juba, with Prisoners, &c.

Enter Lucia and Marcia.

Luc. Sure 'twas the clash of swords; my troubled heart
Is so cast down, and sunk amidst its sorrows,
It throbs with fear, and aches at every sound.
O Marcia, should thy brothers for my sake!—
I die away with horror at the thought.

Mar. See, Lucia, see! here's blood! here's blood and murder!

Ha! a Numidian! Heaven preserve the prince!
The face lies muffled up within the garment,
But hah! death to my sight! a diadem,
And royal robes! O gods! 'tis he, 'tis he;
Juba, the loveliest youth that ever warm'd
A virgin's heart, Juba lies dead before us!

Luc. Now, Marcia, call up to thy assistance
Thy wonted strength and constancy of mind;
Thou canst not put it to a greater trial.

Mar. Lucia, look there, and wonder at my patience:
Have I not cause to rave, and beat my breast,
To rend my heart with grief, and run distracted?

Luc. What can I think or say to give thee comfort? [ills;

Mar. Talk not of comfort, 'tis for lighter
Behold a sight that strikes all comfort dead.

Enter Juba, listening.

I will indulge my sorrows, and give way
To all the pangs and fury of despair;
That man, that best of men, deserv'd it from
me.

Jub. What do I hear? and was the false
Sempronius
That best of men? O, had I fallen like him,
And could have thus been mourn'd, I had been happy. [woes,

Luc. Here will I stand companion in thy
And help thee with my tears; when I behold
A loss like thine, I shall forget my own.

Mar. 'Tis not in fate to ease my tortur'd
breast.

This empty world, to me a joyless desert,
Has nothing left to make poor Marcia happy.

Jub. I'm on the rack! was he so near her
heart?

Mar. O, he was all made up of love and
charms:

Whatever maid could wish or man admire:

Delight of every eye ; when he appear'd,
A secret pleasure gladden'd all that saw him ;
But when he talk'd, the proudest Roman blush'd
To hear his virtues, and old age grew wise.

Jub. I shall run mad !— [Aside.

Mar. O Juba ! Juba ! Juba !

Jub. What means that voice ? did she not call on Juba ?

Mar. Why do I think on what he was ? he's dead ! [him.

He's dead, and never knew how much I lov'd
Lucia, who knows but his poor bleeding heart,
Amidst his agonies, remember'd Marcia,
And the last words he utter'd call'd me cruel !
Alas ! he knew not, hapless youth, he knew not Marcia's whole soul was full of love and Juba !

Jub. Where am I ? do I live ? am I indeed
What Marcia thinks ? All is Elysium round me !

[Aside.

Mar. Ye dear remains of the most lov'd of
men,

Nor modesty nor virtue here forbids

A last embrace, while thus——

Jub. See, Marcia, see

[Throwing himself before her.

The happy Juba lives ! He lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love.

Mar. With pleasure and amaze I stand transported ! *

Sure 'tis a dream ! dead and alive at once !
If thou art Juba, who lies there ?

Jub. A wretch,

Disguis'd like Juba, on a curst design.

The tale is long, nor have I heard it out :

Thy father knows it all. I could not bear

To leave thee in the neighbourhood of death,

But flew, in all the haste of love, to find thee ;

I found thee weeping, and confess this once,

Am wrapt with joy to see my Marcia's tears.

Mar. I've been surpris'd in an unguarded
hour,

But must not now go back ; the love that lay
Half smother'd in my breast, has broke through all

Its weak restraints, and burns in its full lustre.
I cannot, if I would, conceal it from thee.

Jub. I am lost in ecstasy : and dost thou
love,

Thou charming maid ?——

Mar. And dost thou live to ask it ?

Jub. This, this is life indeed ! life worth preserving,

Such life as Juba never felt till now !

Mar. Believe me, prince, before I thought thee dead,

I did not know myself how much I lov'd thee.

Jub. O fortunate mistake !

Mar. O happy Marcia !

Jub. My joy, my best belov'd, my only wish !

How shall I speak the transport of my soul !

Mar. Lucia, thy arm. O, let me rest upon
it !

The vital blood that had forsook my heart,

Returns again in such tumultuous tides,

It quite o'ercomes me. Lead to my apartment.—

O prince, I blush to think what I have said,
But fate has wrested the confession from me.
Go on, and prosper in the paths of honor :
Thy virtue will excuse my passion for thee,
And make the gods propitious to our love.

[Exeunt Mar. and Luc.

Jub. I am so blest, I fear 'tis all a dream.

Fortune, thou now hast made amends for all

Thy past unkindness ; I absolve my stars.

What though Numidia add her conquer'd towns

And provinces to swell the victor's triumph,

Juba will never at his fate repine :

Let Cæsar have the world, if Marcia's mine.

A March at a Distance. [Exit.

Enter Cato and Lucius.

Luc. I stand astonish'd ! What, the bold
Sempronius,

That still broke foremost through the crowd of patriots,

And with a hurricane of zeal transported,

And virtuous even to madness——

Cato. Trust me, Lucius,

Our civil discords have produc'd such crimes,

Such monstrous crimes, I am surpris'd at nothing.

—O Lucius, I am sick of this bad world !

The day-light and the sun grow painful to me.

Enter Portius.

But see where Portius comes : what means this

Why are thy looks thus chang'd ? [haste ?

Por. My heart is griev'd,

I bring such news as will afflict my father.

Cato. Has Cæsar shed more Roman blood ?

Por. Not so.

The traitor Syphax, as within the square

He exercis'd his troops, the signal given,

Flew off at once with his Numidian horse

To the south gate where Marcus holds the watch :

I saw, and call'd to stop him, but in vain :

He toss'd his arm aloft, and proudly told me,

He would not stay and perish like Sempronius.

Cato. Perfidious man ! But haste, my son,
and see [Exit Por.

Thy brother Marcus acts a Roman's part.

—Lucius, the torrent bears too hard upon me :

Justice gives way to force ; the conquer'd world

Is Cæsar's ; Cato has no business in it.

Luc. While pride, oppression, and injustice
reign,

The world will still demand her Cato's presence.

In pity to mankind submit to Cæsar,

And reconcile thy mighty soul to life.

Cato. Would Lucius have me live to swell
the number

Of Cæsar's slaves, or by a base submission

Give up the cause of Rome, and own a tyrant ?

Luc. The victor never will impose on Cato

Ungen'rous terms. His enemies confess

The virtues of humanity are Cæsar's.

Cato. Curse on his virtues ! they've undone his country.

Such popular humanity is treason——

But see young Juba ; the good youth appears,

Full of the guilt of his perfidious subjects !

Luc. Alas ! poor prince ! his fate deserves compassion.

Enter Juba.

Jub. I blush, and am confounded to appear Before thy presence, Cato.

Cato. What's thy crime?

Jub. I'm a Numidian. [Roman soul.

Cato. And a brave one too. Thou hast a

Jub. Hast thou not heard of my false countrymen?

Cato. Alas, young prince!

Falsehood and fraud shoot up in ev'ry soil,
The product of all climes—Rome has its Cæsars.

Jub. 'Tis gen'rous thus to comfort the distress'd. [deserv'd:

Cato. 'Tis just to give' applause where 'tis
Thy virtue, prince, has stood the test of fortune,
Like purest gold that, tortur'd in the furnace, Comes out more bright, and brings forth all its weight. [heart

Jub. What shall I answer thee? My ravish'd
O'erflows with secret joy: I'd rather gain
Thy praise, O Cato, than Numidia's empire.

Enter Portius.

Por. Misfortune on misfortune! grief on grief!
My brother Marcus—

Cato. Hah! what has he done?
Has he forsook his post? Has he given way?
Did he look tamely on, and let 'em pass?

Por. Scarce had I left my father, but I met
him

Borne on the shields of his surviving soldiers, Breathless and pale, and cover'd o'er with wounds.

Long at the head of his few faithful friends,
He stood the shock of a whole host of foes,
Till, obstinately brave, and bent on death,
Opprest with multitudes he greatly fell.

Cato. I'm satisfied!

Por. Nor did he fall before
His sword had pierc'd through the false heart of Syphax.

Yonder he lies. I saw the hoary traitor
Grin in the pangs of death and bite the ground.

Cato. Thanks to the gods, my boy has done his duty!

—Portius, when I am dead, be sure you place
His urn near mine.

Por. Long may they keep asunder!

Luc. O Cato, arm thy soul with all its patience;

See where the corpse of thy dead son approaches!
The citizens and senators, alarm'd,
Have gather'd round it, and attend it weeping.

Cato, meeting the Corpse.

Cato. Welcome, my son! here lay him down,
my friends,

Full in my sight, that I may view at leisure
The bloody corse and count those glorious wounds.

—How beautiful is death, when earn'd by virtue!
Who would not be that youth? What pity is it

That we can die but once to serve our country!
—Why sits this sadness on your brows, my friends?

I should have blush'd if Cato's house had stood Secure, and flourish'd in a civil war.

—Portius, behold thy brother, and remember
Thy life is not thy own, when Rome demands it.

Jub. Was ever man like this! [Aside.

Cato. Alas, my friends!

Why mourn you thus? Let not a private loss Afflict your hearts. 'Tis Rome requires our
tears;

The mistress of the world, the seat of empire,
The nurse of heroes, the delight of gods,
That humbled the proud tyrants of the earth,
And set the nations free, Rome is no more.

O liberty! O virtue! O my country!

Jub. Behold that upright man! Rome fills his eyes

With tears that flow'd not o'er his own dead son.
[Aside.

Cato. Whate'er the Roman virtue has sub-du'd, [Cæsar's;

The sun's whole course, the day and year are
For him the self-devoted Decii died,
The Fabii fell, and the great Scipios conquer'd;
Even Pompey fought for Cæsar. O my friends!
How is the toil of fate, the work of ages,
The Roman empire, fallen! O curst ambition!
Fallen into Cæsar's hands? Our great forefathers

Had left him nought to conquer but his country.

Jub. While Cato lives, Cæsar will blush to see

Mankind enslav'd, and be asham'd of empire.

Cato. Cæsar asham'd! has he not seen Phar-salia?

Luc. Cato, 'tis time thou save thyself and us.

Cato. Lose not a thought on me, I'm out of danger,

Heaven will not leave me in the victor's hand.
Cæsar shall never say he conquer'd Cato.

But, O my friends, your safety fills my heart
With anxious thoughts; a thousand secret terrors

Rise in my soul—How shall I save my friends?
'Tis now, O Cæsar, I begin to fear thee.

Luc. Cæsar has mercy, if we ask it of him.

Cato. Then ask it, I conjure you! let him
know

Whate'er was done against him, Cato did it.
And, if you please, that I request it of him,

That I myself, with tears, request it of him,
The virtue of my friends may pass unpunish'd.

Juba, my heart is troubled for thy sake.

Should I advise thee to regain Numidia,

Or seek the conqueror?

Jub. If I forsake thee

Whilst I have life, may Heaven abandon Juba!

Cato. Thy virtues, prince, if I foresee aright,
Will one day make thee great; at Rome, hereafter,

'Twill be no crime to have been Cato's friend.
Portius, draw near: my son, thou oft has seen
Thy sire engag'd in a corrupted state,
Wrestling with vice and faction: now thou seest me

Spent, overpower'd, despairing of success.

Let me advise thee to retreat betimes

To thy paternal seat, the Sabine field,

Where the great Censor toil'd with his own hands,

And all our frugal ancestors were bless'd

In humble virtues, and a rural life;

There live retir'd, pray for the peace of Rome,
Content thyself to be obscurely good.
When vice prevails, and impious men bear sway,
The post of honor is a private station.

Por. I hope my father does not recommend
A life to Portius, that he scorns himself.

Cato. Farewell, my friends! if there be any of you

Who dare not trust the victor's clemency,
Know there are ships prepar'd by my command
(Their sails already op'ning to the winds)
That shall convey you to the wish'd-for port.
Is there aught else, my friends, I can do for you?
The conqueror draws near. Once more farewell!
If e'er we meet hereafter, we shall meet
In happier climes, and on a safer shore,
Where Cæsar never shall approach us more.

[Pointing to his dead Son.]

There the brave youth, with love of virtue fir'd,
Who greatly in his country's cause expir'd,
Shall know he conquer'd. The firm patriot there,
Who made the welfare of mankind his care,
Tho' still by faction, vice, and fortune crost,
Shall find the gen'rous labor was not lost.

[Exeunt.]

ACT V.

Cato solus, sitting in a thoughtful Posture; in his Hand Plato's Book on the Immortality of the Soul.

A drawn Sword on the Table by him.

It must be so—Plato, thou reason'st well—
Else whence this pleasing hope, this fond desire,
This longing after immortality?
Or whence this secret dread, and inward horror
Of falling into nought? Why shrinks the soul
Back on herself, and startles at destruction?
'Tis the divinity that stirs within us;
'Tis heaven itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man:
Eternity! thou pleasing, dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Thro' what new scenes and changes must we pass?
The wide, th' unbounded prospect lies before me,
But shadows, clouds, and darkness rest upon it.
Here will I hold. If there's a power above
(And that there is all nature cries aloud Through all her works), he must delight in virtue;
And that which he delights in must be happy.
But when! or where!—this world was made for Cæsar.

I'm weary of conjectures—this must end 'em.

[Laying his Hand on his Sword.]

Thus am I doubly arm'd: my death and life,
My bane and antidote, are both before me.
This in a moment brings me to an end;
But this informs me I shall never die.
The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.
The stars shall fade away, the sun himself
Grow dim with age, and nature sink in years;
But thou shalt flourish in immortal youth,
Unhurt amid the war of elements,
The wreck of matter, and the crush of worlds.
What means this heaviness that hangs upon me?

This lethargy that creeps thro' all my senses?
Nature oppress'd, and harass'd out with care
Sinks down to rest. This once I'll favor her,
That my awaken'd soul may take her flight,
Renew'd in all her strength, and fresh with life,
An off'ring fit for heaven. Let guilt or fear
Disturb man's rest, Cato knows neither of 'em,
Indiff'rent in his choice to sleep or die.

Enter Portius.

But ah! how's this, my son? Why this intrusion?

Were not my orders that I would be private?
Why am I disobey'd?

Por. Alas, my father!

What means this sword, this instrument of
death!

Let me convey it hence.

Cato. Rash youth, forbear!

Por. O, let the pray'rs, th' entreaties of your friends,

Their tears, their common danger, wrest it from
you!

Cato. Wouldst thou betray me? Wouldst thou give me up,

A slave, a captive into Cæsar's hands?

Retire, and learn obedience to a father,

Or know young man!—

Por. Look not thus sternly on me;

You know I'd rather die than disobey you.

Cato. 'Tis well! again I'm master of myself.

Now, Cæsar, let thy troops beset our gates,

And bar each avenue; thy gathering fleets

O'erspread the sea, and stop up ev'ry port;

Cato shall open to himself a passage,

And mock thy hopes—

Por. O Sir! forgive your son,

Whose grief hangs heavy on him. O my father!

How am I sure it is not the last time

I e'er shall call you so? Be not displeas'd,

O, be not angry with me whilst I weep,

And, in the anguish of my heart, beseech you

To quit the dreadful purpose of your soul!

Cato. Thou hast been ever good and dutiful.

[Embracing him.]

Weep not, my son, all will be well again:

The righteous gods, whom I have sought to please,

Will succour Cato, and preserve his children.

Por. Your words give comfort to my drooping heart.

Cato. Portius, thou mayst rely upon my conduct;

Thy father will not act what misbecomes him.

But go, my son, and see if aught be wanting

Among thy father's friends; see them embark'd,

And tell me if the winds and seas befriend them.

My soul is quite weigh'd down with care, and asks

The soft refreshment of a moment's sleep.

[Exit.]

Por. My thoughts are more at ease, my heart revives.

Enter Marcia.

O Marcia, O my sister, still there's hope

Our father will not cast away a life

So needful to us all, and to his country.

He is retir'd to rest, and seems to cherish
Thoughts full of peace. He has dispatch'd me
hence

With orders that bespeak a mind compos'd,
And studious for the safety of his friends.

Marcia, take care that none disturb his slumbers. [Exit.

Mar. O ye immortal powers that guard the just,

Watch round his couch, and soften his repose,
Banish his sorrows, and becalm his soul
With easy dreams; remember all his virtues!
And show mankind that goodness is your care.

Enter Lucia.

Luc. Where is your father, Marcia, where is Cato!

Mar. Lucia, speak low, he is retir'd to rest.
Lucia, I feel a gentle dawning hope
Rise in my soul. We shall be happy still.

Luc. Alas! I tremble when I think on Cato!
In every view, in every thought I tremble!
Cato is stern and awful as a god;
He knows not how to wink at human frailty,
Or pardon weakness that he never felt.

Mar. Tho' stern and awful to the foes of Rome,
He is all goodness, Lucia, always mild,
Compassionate and gentle to his friends.
Fill'd with domestic tenderness, the best,
The kindest father I have ever found him,
Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes.

Luc. 'Tis his consent alone can make us bless'd.

Marcia, we are both equally involv'd
In the same intricate, perplex'd distress.
The cruel hand of fate, that has destroy'd
Thy brother Marcus, whom we both lament—

Mar. And ever shall lament, unhappy youth!

Luc. Hasset my soul at large, and now I stand Loose of my vow. But who knows Cato's
thoughts?

Who knows how yet he may dispose of Portius,
Or how he has determin'd of thyself?

Mar. Let him but live, commit the rest to Heaven.

Enter Lucius.

Luc. Sweet are the slumbers of the virtuous
man!

O Marcia, I have seen thy godlike father;
Some power invisible supports his soul,
And bears it up in all its wonted greatness.
A kind refreshing sleep is fallen on him:
I saw him stretch'd at ease, his fancy lost
In pleasing dreams: as I drew near his couch,
He smil'd, and cried, Cæsar, thou canst not hurt me.

Mar. His mind still labors with some dreadful thought.

Luc. Lucia, why all this grief, these floods of sorrow?

Dry up thy tears, my child, we all are safe
While Cato lives—his presence will protect us.

Enter Juba.

Jub. Lucius, the horsemen are return'd from viewing
The number, strength, and posture of our foes,
Who now encamp within a short hour's march;

On the high point of yon bright western tower
We ken them from afar; the setting sun
Plays on their shining arms and burnish'd helmets,

And covers all the field with gleams of fire.

Luc. Marcia, 'tis time we should awake thy
father,

Cæsar is still dispos'd to give us terms,
And waits at distance till he hears from Cato.

Enter Portius.

Portius, thy looks speak somewhat of importance,
What tidings dost thou bring? Methinks I see
Unusual gladness sparkling in thine eyes.

Por. As I was hasting to the port, where now
My father's friends, impatient for a passage,
Accuse the ling'ring winds, a sail arriv'd
From Pompey's son, who thro' the realms of Spain

Calls out for vengeance on his father's death,
And rouses the whole nation up to arms.
Were Cato at their head, once more might Rome
Assert her rights, and claim her liberty.
But, hark! what means that groan? O, give me way,

And let me fly into my father's presence. [Exit.

Luc. Cato, amidst his slumbers, thinks on Rome,

And in the wild disorder of his soul
Mourns o'er his country. Hah! a second groan!
Heaven guard us all!

Mar. Alas! 'tis not the voice
Of one who sleeps; 'tis agonizing pain,
'Tis death is in that sound.—

Re-enter Portius.

Por. O sight of woe!
O Marcia, what we fear'd is come to pass!
Cato is fallen upon his sword.—

Luc. O, Portius,
Hide all the horrors of thy mournful tale,
And let us guess the rest.

Por. I've rais'd him up, [faint,
And plac'd him in his chair, where, pale and He gasps for breath, and, as his life flows from
him,

Demands to see his friends. His servants sweeping,
Obsequious to his order, bear him hither.

Mar. O Heaven assist me in this dreadful hour,
To pay the last sad duties to my father!

Jub. These are thy triumphs, thy exploits, O
Cæsar!

Luc. Now is Rome fallen indeed!

Cato brought in on a Chair.

Cato. Here set me down— [bark'd?
Portius, come near me—Are my friends em-
Can any thing be thought of for their service?
Whilst I yet live, let me not live in vain.

—O Lucius, art thou here?—thou art too good—
Let this our friendship live between our children,
Make Portius happy in thy daughter Lucia.

Alas! poor man, he weeps!—Marcia, my daughter—

O, bend me forward! Juba loves thee, Marcia:
A senator of Rome, while Rome surviv'd,
Would not have match'd his daughter with a king;

But Cæsar's arms have thrown down all distinction:

Whoe'er is brave and virtuous, is a Roman—
—I'm sick to death—O, when shall I get loose
From this vain world, the abode of guilt and sorrow!

And yet, methinks, a beam of light breaks in
On my departing soul. Alas! I fear
I've been too hasty. O ye pow'rs, that search
The heart of man and weigh his inmost
thoughts,

If I have done amiss, impute it not!—

The best may err, but you are good and—O!

[Dies.

Luc. There fled the greatest soul that ever warm'd

A Roman breast; O Cato! O my friend!

Thy will shall be religiously observ'd.

But let us bear this awful corse to Cæsar,

And lay it in his sight, that it may stand

A fence betwixt us and the victor's wrath;

Cato, though dead, shall still protect his friends.

From hence, let fierce contending nations
know

What dire effects from civil discord flow.

'Tis this that shakes our country with alarms,

And gives up Rome a prey to Roman arms,

Produces fraud, and cruelty, and strife,

And robs the guilty world of Cato's life.

§ 48. FATAL CURIOSITY, LILLO.

ACT I.

SCENE I.—Wilmot's House.

Old Wilmot alone.

O. Wilm. THE day is far advanced. The cheerful sun

Pursues with vigour his repeated course:

No labour lessens, nor no time decays

His strength or splendour: evermore the
same,

From age to age his influence sustains [tion

Dependent worlds, bestows both life and mo-

On the dull mass that forms their dusky orbs,

Cheers them with heat, and gilds them with his brightness.

Yet man, of jarring elements composed,

Who posts from change to change, from the first hour

Of his frail being to his dissolution,

Enjoys the sad prerogative above him,

To think, and to be wretched! What is life

To him, that's born to die!—

Or, what the wisdom, whose perfection ends

In knowing, we know nothing?—

Mere contradiction all! A tragic farce,

Tedious, though short, elab'rate without art,

Ridiculously sad—

Enter Randal.

Where hast been, Randal?

Rand. Not out of Penryn, sir; but to the strand,

To hear what news from Falmouth, since the storm

Of wind last night.

O. Wilm. It was a dreadful one.

Rand. Some found it so. A noble ship from India.

Ent'ring the harbour, run upon a rock,

And there was lost.

[her?

O. Wilm. What 'came of those on board

Rand. Some few are saved, but much the greater part,

'Tis thought, are perish'd.

O. Wilm. They are past the fear

Of future tempests, or a wreck on shore:

Those who escaped, are still exposed to both.

Where's your mistress?

Rand. I saw her pass the High-street,
t'wards the Minster.

O. Wilm. She's gone to visit Charlotte.
She doth well.

In the soft bosom of that gentle maid [race

There dwells more goodness than the rigid

Of moral pedants e'er believed, or taught.

With what amazing constancy and truth,

Doth she sustain the absence of our son,

Whom more than life she loves! How shun for him, [and great;

Whom we shall ne'er see more, the rich

Who own her charms, and sigh to make her happy! [friend,

Since our misfortunes we have found no

None who regarded our distress, but her;

And she, by what I have observed of late,

Is wearied, or exhausted. Cursed condition!

To live a burden to one only friend,

And blast her youth with our contagious woe!

Who, that had reason, soul, or sense, would
bear it

A moment longer? Then this honest wretch!—

I must dismiss him—Why should I detain

A grateful, gen'rous youth, to perish with me?

His service may procure him bread elsewhere,

Though I have none to give him.—Pr'ythee,

How long hast thou been with me? [Randal,

Rand. Fifteen years.

I was a very child when first ye took me,

To wait upon your son, my dear young master.

I oft have wish'd I'd gone to India with him,

Though you, desponding, give him o'er for lost. [OLD WILMOT wipes his eyes.

I am to blame: this talk revives your sorrow

For his long absence.

O. Wilm. That cannot be revived

Which never died.

Rand. The whole of my intent

Was to confess your bounty, that supplied

The loss of both my parents: I was long

The object of your charitable care.

O. Wilm. No more of that: Thou'st served me longer since

Without reward; so that account is balanced,

Or, rather, I'm thy debtor. I remember,

When Poverty began to show her face

Within these walls, and all my other servants,

Like pamper'd vermin from a falling house,

Retreated with the plunder they had gain'd,

And left me, too indulgent and remiss

For such ungrateful wretches, to be crush'd

Beneath the ruin they had help'd to make,

That you, more good than wise, refused to leave me.

Rand. Nay, I beseech you, sir!—

O. Wilm. With my distress,
In perfect contradiction to the world,
Thy love, respect, and diligence, increased.
Now, all the recompence within my power,
Is to discharge thee, Randal, from my hard,
Unprofitable service.

Rand. Heaven forbid!

Shall I forsake you in your worst necessity?
Believe me, sir, my honest soul abhors
The barb'rous thought!

O. Wilm. What! canst thou feed on air?
I have not left wherewith to purchase food
For one meal more!

Rand. Rather than leave you thus,
I'll beg my bread, and live on others' bounty,
While I serve you.

O. Wilm. Down, down, my swelling heart,
Or burst in silence! 'Tis thy cruel fate
Insults thee by his kindness—He is innocent
Of all the pain it gives thee.—Go thy ways:
I will no more suppress thy youthful hopes
Of rising in the world.

Rand. 'Tis true, I'm young,
And never tried my fortune, or my genius,
Which may, perhaps, find out some happy
means,
As yet unthought of, to supply your wants.

O. Wilm. Thou tortur'st me: I hate all obligations
Which I can ne'er return: and who art thou,
That I should stoop to take 'em from thy
hand?

Care for thyself, but take no thought for me!
I will not want thee—trouble me no more.

Rand. Be not offended, sir, and I will go.
I ne'er repined at your commands before;
But Heaven's my witness, I obey you now,
With strong reluctance, and a heavy heart!
Farewell, my worthy master! [Going.]

O. Wilm. Farewell!—Stay;
As thou art yet a stranger to the world,
Of which, alas! I've had too much experience,
I should, methinks, before we part, bestow
A little counsel on thee.—Dry thy eyes;
If thou weep'st thus, I shall proceed no farther.

Dost thou aspire to greatness, or to wealth?
Quit books, and the unprofitable search
Of wisdom there, and study humankind:
No science will avail thee without that;
But that obtain'd, thou need'st not any other.
This will instruct thee to conceal thy views,
And wear the face of probity and honour,
Till thou hast gain'd thy end: which must be ever

Thy own advantage, at that man's expence
Who shall be weak enough to think thee

Rand. You mock me, sure! [honest.]

O. Wilm. I never was more serious.

Rand. Why should you counsel, what you scorn'd to practise?

O. Wilm. Because that foolish scorn has been my ruin.

I've been an idiot, but would have thee wiser,
And treat mankind, as they would treat thee,
Randal,

As they deserve, and I've been treated by them:
Thou'st seen by me, and those who now
despise me,

How men of fortune fall, and beggars rise;
Shun my example; treasure up my precepts;
The world's before thee—be a knave and prosper.

What, art thou dumb? [After a long pause.]

Rand. Amazement ties my tongue.

Where are your former principles?

O. Wilm. No matter;

Suppose I have renounced them: I have passions, [think,]

And love thee still; therefore would have thee
The world is all a scene of deep deceit,
And he, who deals with mankind on the square,

Is his own bubble, and undoes himself.

Farewell, and mark my counsel, boy. [Exit.]

Rand. Amazement!

Is this the man I thought so wise and just?
What, teach and counsel me to be a villain!
Sure grief has made him frantic, or some fiend
Assumed his shape: I shall suspect my senses.
High-minded he was ever, and improvident,
But pitiful, and generous, to a fault.
Pleasure he loved, but honour was his idol.
O fatal change! O horrid transformation!
So a majestic temple, sunk to ruin,
Becomes the loathsome shelter and abode
Of lurking serpents, toads, and beasts of prey;
And scaly dragons hiss, and lions roar,
Where wisdom taught, and music charm'd before. [Exit.]

SCENE II.—Charlotte's House.

Enter Charlotte and Maria.

Char. What terror and amazement must
Who die by shipwreck! [they feel]

Mar. 'Tis a dreadful thought!

Char. Ay; is it not, Maria?—To descend,
Living, and conscious, to the wat'ry tomb!
Alas! had we no sorrows of our own,
The frequent instances of others' woe,
Must give a gen'rous mind a world of pain.
But you forget you promised me to sing.
Though cheerfulness and I have long been strangers,

Harmonious sounds are still delightful to me.
There's sure no passion in the human soul,
But finds its food in music. I would hear
The song, composed by that unhappy maid,
Whose faithful lover 'scaped a thousand perils
From rocks and sands, and the devouring deep;
And after all, being arrived at home,
Passing a narrow brook, was drowned there,
And perish'd in her sight.

SONG—Maria.

Cease, cease, heart-easing tears!

Adieu, you flatt'ring fears,

Which seven long tedious years

Taught me to bear.

Tears are for lighter woes;

Fear no such danger knows,

As fate remorseless shows,

Endless despair!

Dear cause of all my pain,
On the wide stormy main,
Thou wast preserved in vain,
Though still adored.
Hadst thou died there unseen,
My wounded eyes had been Saved from the direst scene
Maid e'er deplored.

[Charlotte finds a letter.

Char. What's this?—A letter superscribed
to me!

None could convey it here, but you, Maria.
Ungen'rous, cruel maid! to use me thus!
To join with flatt'ring men, to break my
peace,

And persecute me to the last retreat!

Mar. Why should it break your peace, to hear the sighs

Of honourable love? This letter is——

Char. No matter whence: return it back unopen'd:

I have no love, no charms, but for my Wil-
Nor would have any.

Mar. Alas! Wilmot's dead;

Or, living, dead to you.

Char. I'll not despair: Patience shall che-

Nor wrong his honour by unjust suspicion.

I know his truth, and will preserve my own.

But, to prevent all future importunity,

Know, thou incessant foe to my repose,

Whether he sleeps secure from mortal cares,

In the deep bosom of the boist'rous main,

Or, toss'd with tempest, still endures its rage;

No second choice shall violate my vows:

High Heaven, which heard them, and abhors
the perjured,

Can witness, they were made without reserve:

Never to be retracted, ne'er dissolved

By accident or absence, time or death.

Mar. And did your vows oblige you to support

His haughty parents, to your utter ruin?—

Well may you weep, to think on what you've done.

Char. I weep to think that I can do no

For their support. What will become of
them?—

The hoary, helpless, miserable pair!

Mar. What I can't praise, you force me to admire,

And mourn for you, as you lament for them.

Your patience, constancy, and resignation,

Merit a better fate.

Char. So pride would tell me,

And vain self-love, but I believe them not:

And if by wanting pleasure, I have gain'd

Humility, I'm richer for my loss.

Mar. You have the heavenly art still to improve

Your mind by all events—But here comes

Whose pride seems to increase with her misfortunes.

Her faded dress, unfashionably fine,

As ill conceals her poverty, as that

Strain'd complaisance, her haughty, swelling
heart.

Though perishing with want, so far from asking,

She ne'er receives a favor uncompell'd,

And, while she ruins, scorns to be obliged:

Let me depart, I know she loves me not.

[Exit Maria.

Enter Agnes.

Char. This visit's kind.

Agnes. Few else would think it so:

Those, who would once have thought themselves much honor'd

By the least favour, though 'twere but a look,

I could have shown them, now refuse to see

'Tis misery enough to be reduced [me.

To the low level of the common herd,

Who, born to beggary, envy all above them:

But 'tis the curse of curses to endure

The insolent contempt of those we scorn.

Char. By scorning, we provoke them to contempt,

And thus offend, and suffer in our turns:

We must have patience.

Agnes. No, I scorn them yet;

But there's no end of suff'ring: Who can say

Their sorrows are complete? My wretched
husband,

Tired with our woes, and hopeless of relief,

Grows sick of life,

And, urged by indignation and despair,

Would plunge into eternity at once,

By foul self-murder.

Char. Gracious Heaven support him!

Agnes. His fixed love for me,

Whom he would fain persuade to share his fate,

And take the same uncertain, dreadful course,

Alone withholds his hand.

Char. And may it ever! [tremes of life,

Agnes. I've known with him, the two ex-

The highest happiness, and deepest woe,

With all the sharp and bitter aggravations

Of such a vast transition—Such a fall

In the decline of life!—I have as quick,

As exquisite a sense of pain, as he,

And would do any thing, but die, to end it;

But there my courage fails. Death is the worst

That fate can bring, and cuts off ev'ry hope.

Char. We must not chuse but strive to bear our lot

Without reproach or guilt. By one rash act

Of desperation, we may overthrow

The merit we've been raising all our days,

And lose our own reward. And now, me-

thinks,

Now, more than ever, we have cause to fear,

And be upon our guard. The hand of Heaven

Spreads clouds on clouds o'er our benighted

heads,

And, wrapp'd in darkness, doubles our distress.

I had, the night last past, repeated twice,

A strange and awful dream: I would not yield

To fearful superstition, nor despise

The admonition of a friendly power,

That wish'd my good.

Agnes. I have certain plagues enough,

Without the help of dreams, to make me wretched.

Char. I would not stake my happiness or
On their uncertain credit, nor on aught [duty.
But reason, and the known decrees of Heaven.
Yet dreams have sometimes shown events to
come,

And may excite to vigilance and care.
My vision may be such, and sent to warn us,
(Now we are tried by multiplied afflictions)
To mark each motion of our swelling hearts,
Lest we attempt to extricate ourselves,
And seek deliv'rance by forbidden ways—
To keep our hopes and innocence entire,
Till we're dismiss'd to join the happy dead,
Or Heaven relieves us here.

Agnes. Well, to your dream. [night,

Char. Methought, I sat, in a dark winter's
On the wide summit of a barren mountain;
The sharp, bleak winds, pierced through my shiv'ring frame,
And storms of hail, and sleet, and driving rains,
Beat with impetuous fury on my head,
Drench'd my chill'd limbs, and pour'd a deluge round me.

On one hand, ever-gentle Patience sat,
On whose calm bosom I reclined my head;
And on the other, silent Contemplation.
At length, to my unclosed and watchful eyes,
That long had roll'd in darkness, dawn appeared;

And I beheld a man, an utter stranger,
But of a graceful and exalted mien, [me.
Who press'd with eager transport to embrace
I shunn'd his arms: but at some words he spoke,
Which I have now forgot, I turn'd again;
But he was gone—And oh, transporting sight!
Your son, my dearest Wilmot, fill'd his place!

Agnes. If I regarded dreams, I should expect
Some fair event from yours.

Char. But what's to come,
Though more obscure, is terrible indeed.
Methought we parted soon, and when I sought
him,

You and his father—(yes, you both were there)
Strove to conceal him from me. I pursued
you

Both with my cries, and call'd on heaven and
To judge my wrongs, and force you to reveal
Where you had hid my love, my life, my Wilmot! [the rest.

Agnes. Unless you mean to offend me, spare
'Tis just as likely Wilmot should return,
As we become your foes.

Char. Far be such thought [you name
From Charlotte's breast: but when I heard
Self-murder, it revived the frightful image
Of such a dreadful scene!

Agnes. You will persist!— [dream,

Char. Excuse me: I have done. Being a
I thought, at least, it could not give offence.

Agnes. You could not think so, had you thought at all.

But I take nothing ill from thee.—Adieu!
I've tarried longer than I first intended,
And my poor husband mourns the while, alone.

[Exit Agnes.

Char. She's gone abruptly, and I fear, displeased.

The least appearance of advice or caution,
Sets her impatient temper in a flame.
When grief, that well might humble, swells
our pride,
And pride, increasing, aggravates our grief,
The tempest must prevail till we are lost.
Heaven grant a fairer issue to her sorrows! [Exit.

SCENE III.—The Town and Port of Penryn.

Enter Young Wilmot and Eustace, in Indian Habits.

Y. Wilm. Welcome, my friend, to Penryn!
Here we're safe. [the sea,

Eust. Then we're deliver'd twice: first from
And then from men, who, more remorseless, prey [murder
On shipwreck'd wretches, and who spoil, and
Those, whom fell tempests, and devouring waves,
In all their fury, spared.

Y. Wilmot. It is a scandal,
(Though malice must acquit the better sort,)
The rude, unpolish'd people here, in Cornwall,
Have long lain under, and with too much
justice:

For 'tis an evil, grown almost invet'rate,
And asks a bold and skilful hand to cure.

Eust. Your treasure's safe, I hope.

Y. Wilm. 'Tis here, thank Heaven!
Being in jewels, when I saw our danger,
I hid it in my bosom.

Eust. I observed you, [thoughts,
And wonder how you could command your
In such a time of terror and confusion.

Y. Wilm. My thoughts were then at home.
O England! England!

Thou seat of plenty, liberty, and health,
With transport I behold thy verdant fields,
Thy lofty mountains rich with useful ore,
Thy num'rous herds, thy flocks, and winding streams.

After a long and tedious absence, Eustace,
With what delight we breathe our native air,
And tread the genial soil that bore us first!
'Tis said, the world is ev'ry wise man's country;
Yet, after having view'd its various nations,
I'm weak enough, still to prefer my own
To all I've seen beside—You smile, my friend!
And think, perhaps, 'tis instinct more than reason.

Why, be it so: instinct preceded reason
E'en in the wisest men, and may sometimes
Be much the better guide. But, be it either,
I must confess, that even death itself
Appear'd to me with twice its native horrors,
When apprehended in a foreign land.
Death is, no doubt, in ev'ry place the same;
Yet nature casts a look towards home, and most
Who have it in their power, chuse to expire
Where they first drew their breath.

Eust. Believe me, Wilmot, [at;
Your grave reflections were not what I smiled
I own the truth. That we're returned to England,

Affords me all the pleasure you can feel.
Yet I must think a warmer passion moves you;
Thinking of that, I smiled.

Y. Wilm. O Eustace! Eustace!
 Thou know'st, for I've confess'd to thee, I love;
 But having never seen the charming maid,
 Thou canst not know the fierceness of my flame,
 My hopes and fears, like the tempestuous seas
 That we have pass'd, now mount me to the skies,
 Now hurl me down from that stupendous
 height,
 And drive me to the centre. Did you know
 How much depends on this important hour,
 You would not be surprised to see me thus.
 The sinking fortune of our ancient house
 Compell'd me, young, to leave my native country,
 My weeping parents, and my lovely Charlotte,
 Who ruled, and must for ever rule, my fate.
 O, should my Charlotte, doubtful of my truth,
 Or in despair ever to see me more,
 Have given herself to some more happy lover!—
 Distraction's in the thought!—Or, should my parents,
 Griev'd for my absence, and oppress'd with
 want,
 Have sunk beneath their burden, and expired,
 While I, too late, was flying to relieve them;
 The end of all my long and weary travels,
 The hope that made success itself a blessing,
 Being defeated, and for ever lost;
 What were the riches of the world to me?

Eust. The wretch who fears all that is possible,
 Must suffer more than he who feels the worst
 A man can feel, yet lives exempt from fear.
 A woman may be false, and friends are mortal;
 And yet your aged parents may be living,
 And your fair mistress constant.

Y. Wilm. True, they may;
 I doubt, but I despair not. No, my friend!
 My hopes are strong, and lively as my fears;
 They tell me, Charlotte is as true as fair;
 That we shall meet, never to part again;
 That I shall see my parents, kiss the tears
 From their pale hollow cheeks, cheer their sad
 hearts,

And drive that gaping phantom, meagre want,
 For ever from their board; their days to come Crown all with peace, with pleasure, and abundance;

Receive their fond embraces and their blessings,
 And be a blessing to them.

Eust. 'Tis our weakness:
 Blind to events, we reason in the dark,
 And fondly apprehend, what none e'er found
 Or ever shall, pleasure and pain unmix'd;
 And flatter and torment ourselves by turns,
 With what shall never be.

Y. Wilm. I'll go this instant
 To seek my Charlotte, and explore my fate.

Eust. What, in that foreign habit?

Y. Wilm. That's a trifle,
 Not worth my thoughts.

Eust. The hardships you've endured,
 And your long stay beneath the burning zone,
 Where one eternal sultry summer reigns,
 Have marr'd the native hue of your complexion:
 Methinks you look more like a sun-burnt Indian, [dian,

Y. Wilm. Well; 'tis no matter, Eustace!
 I hope my mind's not alter'd for the worse,
 And for my outside—But inform me, friend,
 When I may hope to see you.

Eust. When you please:
 You'll find me at the inn.

Y. Wilm. When I have learn'd my doom,
 Till then, farewell! [expect me there;

Eust. Farewell! success attend you!
 [Exit severally.

ACT II.

SCENE I.—Charlotte's House.

Enter Charlotte thoughtful; and soon after a Servant, from the other Side.

Serv. Madam, a stranger, in a foreign habit, desires to see you.

Char. In a foreign habit!
 'Tis strange, and unexpected. But admit him.
 [Exit Servant.

Who can this stranger be? I know no foreigner—

Enter Young Wilmot.

Nor any man like this.

Y. Wilm. Ten thousand joys!
 [Going to embrace her.

Char. Sir, you are too bold—Forbear, and let me know [place.

What business brought you here, or leave the Y. Wilm. Perfidious maid!—Am I forgot, or scorn'd?

Char. Can I forget a man I never knew?

Y. Wilm. My fears are true; some other has her heart:

She's lost: my fatal absence has undone me!
 [Aside.

O! could thy Wilmot have forgot thee, Charlotte! [words import?

Char. Ha! Wilmot! say, what do your
 O, gentle stranger, ease my swelling heart!
 What dost thou know of Wilmot?

Y. Wilm. This I know— [spire
 When all the winds of heaven seem'd to con-
 Against the stormy main, and dreadful peals
 Of rattling thunder deafen'd ev'ry ear,
 And drown'd the affrighten'd mariners' loud
 cries; [flames

When livid lightning spread its sulphurous
 Through all the dark horizon, and disclosed
 The raging seas incensed to his destruction;
 When the good ship, in which he was em-
 bark'd, [surge,

Broke, and, o'erwhelm'd by the impetuous
 Sunk to the oozy bottom of the deep,
 And left him struggling with the warring waves;
 In that dread moment, in the jaws of death,
 When his strength fail'd, and ev'ry hope forsook him, [bling lips,

And his last breath press'd towards his trem-
 The neighbouring rocks that echo'd to his
 moan,

Return'd no sound articulate but—Charlotte.

Char. The fatal tempest, whose description strikes

The hearer with astonishment, is ceased;

And Wilmot is at rest. The fiercer storm
Of swelling passions, that o'erwhelms the soul,
And rages worse than the mad foaming seas
In which he perish'd, ne'er shall vex him more.

Y. Wilm. Thou seem'st to think he's dead;
enjoy that thought;
Persuade yourself, that what you wish is true,
And triumph in your falsehood. Yes, he's dead,—

You were his fate. The cruel winds and waves,
That cast him pale and breathless on the shore,
Spared him for greater woes—to know his Charlotte,

Forgetting all her vows to him and Heaven,
Had cast him from her thoughts.—Then,
then he died;

But never can have rest. E'en now he wanders,
A sad, repining, discontented ghost—
The unsubstantial shadow of himself;
And pours his plaintive groans in thy deaf
And stalks, unseen, before thee. [ears,

Char. 'Tis enough:
Detested falsehood now has done its worst.
And art thou dead? And wouldst thou die,
my Wilmot,
For one thou thought'st unjust? Thou soul of truth! [press

What must be done? Which way shall I ex-Unutterable woe? Or how convince
Thy dear departed spirit, of the love,
Th' eternal love, and never-failing faith
Of thy much-injured, lost, despairing Charlotte! [hope not too soon!

Y. Wilm. Be still, my flutt'ring heart;
Perhaps I dream, and this is all illusion.

[Aside.
Char. If, as some teach, the spirit after death,
Free from the bounds and ties of sordid earth,
Can trace us to our most conceal'd retreat,
See all we act, and read our very thoughts;
To thee, O Wilmot! kneeling, I appeal,—
If e'er I swerved in action, word, or thought,
Or ever wish'd to taste a joy on earth
That center'd not in thee, since last we parted—
May we ne'er meet again; but thy loud wrongs
So close the ear of mercy to my cries,
That I may never see those bright abodes
Where truth and virtue only have admission,
And thou inhabit'st now!

Y. Wilm. Assist me, Heaven!
Preserve my reason, memory, and sense!
O moderate my fierce tumultuous joys,
Or their excess will drive me to distraction.—
O, Charlotte! Charlotte! lovely, virtuous maid!
Can thy firm mind, in spite of time and absence,

Remain unshaken, and support its truth;
And yet thy frailer memory retain
No image, no idea of thy lover?
Why dost thou gaze so wildly? Look on me;
Turn thy dear eyes this way; observe me well.
Have scorching climes, time, and this strange habit,

So changed and so disguised thy faithful Wilmot,
That nothing in my voice, my face, or mien,
Remains to tell my Charlotte I am he?

[After viewing him some time, she approaches weeping, and gives him her hand; and then, turning towards him, sinks upon his bosom.

Why dost thou weep? Why dost thou tremble
thus?

Why doth thy panting heart, and cautious touch, [thy fears?

Speak thee but half convinced? Whence are Why art thou silent? Canst thou doubt me still?

Char. No, Wilmot! no; I'm blind with too much light:

O'ercome with wonder, and oppress'd with joy.
This vast profusion of extreme delight,
Rising at once, and bursting from despair,
Defies the aid of words, and mocks description.
But, for one sorrow, one sad scene of anguish,
That checks the swelling torrent of my joys,
I could not bear the transport.

Y. Wilm. Let me know it:
Give me my portion of thy sorrow, Charlotte!
Let me partake thy grief, or bear it for thee.

Char. Alas, my Wilmot! these sad tears are
thine;

They flow for thy misfortunes. I am pierced
With all the agonies of strong compassion.
With all the bitter anguish you must feel,
When you shall hear your parents——

Y. Wilm. Are no more.

Char. You apprehend me wrong.

Y. Wilm. Perhaps I do,
Perhaps you mean to say, the greedy grave
Was satisfied with one, and one is left
To bless my longing eyes. But which, my Charlotte?

Char. Afflict yourself no more with groundless fears:

Your parents both are living. Their distress—
The poverty to which they are reduced,
In spite of my weak aid, was what I mourn'd:
That poverty, in age, to them whose youth
Was crown'd with full prosperity, I fear,
Is worse, much worse, than death.

Y. Wilm. My joy's complete!
My parents living, and possess'd of thee!—
From this blest hour, the happiest of my life,
I'll date my rest. My anxious hopes and fears,
My weary travels, and my dangers past,
Are now rewarded all: now I rejoice
In my success, and count my riches gain.
For know, my soul's best treasure! I have wealth

Enough to glut e'en avarice itself:
No more shall cruel want, or proud contempt,
Oppress the sinking spirits, or insult
The hoary heads of those who gave me being.

Char. 'Tis now, O riches, I conceive your worth:

You are not base, nor can you be superfluous,
But when misplaced in base and sordid hands.
Fly, fly, my Wilmot! leave thy happy Char-
Thy filial piety, the sighs and tears [lotte!
Of thy lamenting parents, call thee hence.

Y. Wilm. I have a friend, the partner of my voyage,
Who, in the storm last night, was shipwreck'd
with me.

Char. Shipwreck'd last night!—O, you immortal powers! [ed?

What have you suffer'd! How were you preserv-

Y. Wilm. Let that, and all my other strange escapes,

And perilous adventures, be the theme

Of many a happy winter-night to come.

My present purpose was t'entreat my angel,

To know this friend, this other better Wilmot,

And come with him this evening to my father's:

I'll send him to thee.

Char. I consent with pleasure.

Y. Wilm. Heavens! what a sight! How shall I bear my joy!

My parents, yours, my friends, all will be mine.

If such the early hopes, the vernal bloom,

The distant prospect of my future bliss,

Then what the ruddy autumn? What the fruit,

The full possession of thy heavenly charms?

[Exeunt severally.

SCENE. II.—A Street in Penryn.

Enter Randal.

Rand. Poor! poor! and friendless! whither shall I wander?

And to what point direct my views and hopes?

A menial servant!—No—What, shall I live

Here in this land of freedom, live distinguish'd,

And mark'd the willing slave of some proud subject!

To swell his useless train for broken fragments,

The cold remains of his superfluous board?—

I would aspire to something more and better.

Turn thy eyes then to the prolific ocean,

Whose spacious bosom opens to thy view:

There deathless honour, and unenvied wealth,

Have often crown'd the brave adventurer's toils.

This is the native uncontested right,

The fair inheritance of ev'ry Briton,

That dares put in his claim.—My choice is made:

A long farewell to Cornwall, and to England!

If I return—But stay, what stranger's this,

Who, as he views me, seems to mend his pace?

Enter Young Wilmot.

Y. Wilm. Randal! the dear companion of my youth!—

Sure, lavish fortune means to give me all

I could desire, or ask, for this blest day,

And leave me nothing to expect hereafter!

Rand. Your pardon, sir! I know but one on earth

Could properly salute me by the title

You're pleased to give me; and I would not think

That you are he—that you are Wilmot!

Y. Wilm. Why?

Rand. Because I could not bear the disappointment,

If I should be deceived.

Y. Wilm. I am pleased to hear it:

Thy friendly fears better express thy thoughts

Than words could do.

Rand. O, Wilmot!—O, my master!

Are you return'd?

Y. Wilm. I have not yet embraced

My parents—I shall see you at my father's.

Rand. No, I am discharged from thence—

O, sir, such ruin—

Y. Wilm. I've heard it all, and hasten to relieve them;

Sure, Heaven hath bless'd me to that very end:

I've wealth enough—nor shalt thou want a part.

Rand. I have a part already—I am blest

In your success, and share in all your joys.

Y. Wilm. I doubt it not.—But tell me, dost thou think,

My parents not suspecting my return,

That I may visit them, and not be known?

Rand. 'Tis hard for me to judge.—You are, already,

Grown so familiar to me, that I wonder

I knew you not at first: yet it may be;

For you're much alter'd, and they think you dead.

Y. Wilm. This is certain; Charlotte beheld me long,

And heard my loud reproaches and complaints,

Without rememb'ring she had ever seen me.

My mind, at ease, grows wanton: I would fain

Refine on happiness. Why may I not

Indulge my curiosity, and try

If it be possible, by seeing first

My parents as a stranger, to improve

Their pleasure by surprise?

Rand. It may, indeed,

Enhance your own, to see from what despair

Your timely coming, and unhop'd success,

Have given you power to raise them.

Y. Wilm. I remember,

E'er since we learn'd together, you excell'd

In writing fairly, and could imitate

Whatever hand you saw, with great exactness.

I therefore beg you'll write, in Charlotte's name

And character, a letter to my father;

And recommend me, as a friend of hers,

To his acquaintance.

Rand. Sir, if you desire it—

And yet—

Y. Wilm. Nay, no objections! 'Twill save time, [tion,

Most precious with me now. For the decep-

If doing what my Charlotte will approve,

'Cause done for me, and with a good intent,

Deserves the name, I'll answer it myself.

If this succeeds, I purpose to defer

Discov'ring who I am till Charlotte comes,

And thou, and all who love me. Ev'ry friend

Who witnesses my happiness to-night,

Will, by partaking, multiply my joys.

Rand. You grow luxurious in imagination.

Could I deny you aught, I would not write

This letter. To say true, I ever thought

Your boundless curiosity a weakness.

Y. Wilm. What canst thou blame in this?

Rand. Your pardon, sir!

Perhaps I spoke too freely;

I'm ready to obey your orders.

Y. Wilm. I am much thy debtor,

But I shall find a time to quit thy kindness.

O, Randal! but imagine to thyself
The floods of transport, the sincere delights,
That all my friends will feel, when I disclose
To my astonish'd parents my return,
And then confess, that I have well contrived,
By giving others joy to exalt my own.
[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.—Old Wilmot's House.

Old Wilmot and Agnes discovered.

O. Wilm. Here take this Seneca; this haughty pedant,
Who, governing the master of mankind,
And awing power imperial, prates of patience;
And praises poverty—possess'd of millions:
Sell him, and buy us bread. The scantiest meal

The vilest copy of his book e'er purchased,
Will give us more relief in this distress,
Than all his boasted precepts.—Nay, no tears;
Keep them to move compassion when you beg.

Agnes. My heart may break, but never stoop
to that.

O. Wilm. Nor would I live to see it.—But dispatch. [Exit Agnes.]

Where must I charge this length of misery,
That gathers force each moment as it rolls,
And must at last o'erwhelm me, but on hope:
Vain, flattering, delusive, groundless hope,
That has for years deceived me?—Had I
thought

As I do now,—as wise men ever think,
When first this hell of poverty o'ertook me,
That power to die implies a right to do it,
And should be used when life becomes a pain,
What plagues had I prevented!—True, my wife

Is still a slave to prejudice and fear——
I would not leave my better part, the dear
[Weeps.]

Faithful companion of my happier days,
To bear the weight of age and want alone.—
I'll try once more.—

Enter Agnes, and after her Young Wilmot.
Return'd, my life, so soon!—

Agnes. The unexpected coming of this stranger
Prevents my going yet.

Y. Wilm. You're, I presume,
The gentleman to whom this is directed.
[Gives a letter.]

What wild neglect, the token of despair,
What indigence, what misery, appears
In this once happy house! What discontent,
What anguish and confusion, fill the faces
Of its dejected owners! [Aside.]

O. Wilm. [Having read the letter.] Sir, such welcome
As this poor house affords, you may command.
Our ever friendly neighbour—once we hoped
To have call'd fair Charlotte by a dearer
name—

But we have done with hope—I pray excuse
This incoherence.—We had once a son.
[Weeps.]

Agnes. That you are come from that dear virtuous maid,
Revives in us the mem'ry of a loss,
Which, though long since, we have not learn'd
to bear.

Y. Wilm. The joy to see them, and the bitter pain

It is to see them thus, touches my soul
With tenderness and grief, that will o'er-
flow.—

They know me not—and yet I shall, I fear,
Defeat my purpose, and betray myself. [Aside.]

O. Wilm. The lady calls you, here, her valued friend;

Enough, though nothing more should be implied,

To recommend you to our best esteem,—
A worthless acquisition! May she find
Some means that better may express her kindness!

But she, perhaps, has purposed to enrich
You with herself, and end her fruitless sorrow
For one, whom death alone can justify
For leaving her so long. If it be so,
May you repair his loss, and be to Charlotte
A second, happier Wilmot! Partial nature,
Who only favours youth, as feeble age
Were not her offspring, or below her care,
Has seal'd our doom: no second hope shall
spring

To dry our tears, and dissipate despair.

Agnes. The last, and most abandon'd of our kind!

By Heaven and earth neglected or despised!
The loathsome grave, that robb'd us of our son,
And all our joys in him, must be our refuge.

Y. Wilm. Let ghosts unpardon'd, or devoted fiends, [strains;]

Fear without hope, and wail in such sad
But grace defend the living from despair!

The darkest hours precede the rising sun,
And mercy may appear when least expected.

O. Wilm. This I have heard a thousand times repeated,

And have, believing, been as oft deceived.

Y. Wilm. Behold in me an instance of its truth.

At sea twice shipwreck'd, and as oft the prey
Of lawless pirates; by the Arabs thrice
Surprised, and robb'd on shore; and once reduced

To worse than these, the sum of all distress
That the most wretched feel on this side hell;
Even slavery itself: yet here I stand,
Except one trouble that will quickly end,
The happiest of mankind.

O. Wilm. A rare example
Of fortune's changes; apter to surprise
Or entertain, than comfort or instruct.
If you would reason from events, be just,
And count, when you escaped, how many perish'd;

And draw your inference thence.

Agnes. Alas! who knows,
But we were render'd childless by some storm,
In which you, though preserved, might bear a part?

Y. Wilm. How has my curiosity betray'd me
Into superfluous pain! I faint with fondness;
And shall, if I stay longer, rush upon them;
Proclaim myself their son; kiss, and embrace
them;

Till, with the excess of pleasure and surprise,
Their souls, transported, their frail mansions quit,

And leave them breathless in my longing arms.

By circumstances then, and slow degrees,

They must be let into a happiness

Too great for them to bear at once, and live:

That Charlotte will perform. I need not feign

To ask an hour for rest. [Aside.] Sir, I entreat

The favour to retire; where, for a while,

I may repose myself. You will excuse

This freedom, and the trouble that I give you:

'Tis long since I have slept, and nature calls.

O. Wilm. I pray, no more: Believe we're only troubled,

That you should think any excuse were need-
ful. [encumbrance,

Y. Wilm. The weight of this, to me is some [Takes a casket out of his bosom, and gives it to his mother.

And its contents of value: if you please

To take the charge of it till I awake,

I shall not rest the worse. If I should sleep

Till I am ask'd for, as perhaps I may,

I beg that you would wake me.

Agnes. Doubt it not:

Distracted as I am with various woes,

I shall remember that.

[Exit, with Old Wilmot.

Y. Wilm. Merciless grief!

What ravage has it made! how has it changed

Her lovely form and mind! I feel her anguish,

And dread, I know not what, from her despair.

My father too—O, grant them patience,

Heaven!

A little longer, a few short hours more,

And all their cares, and mine, shall end for ever. [Exit.

ACT III.

SCENE I.—A Room in Old Wilmot's House.

Enter Agnes alone, with the Casket in her hand.

Agnes. Who should this stranger be?—And then this casket—

He says it is of value, and yet trusts it,

As if a trifle, to a stranger's hand.

His confidence amazes me—Perhaps

It is not what he says—I'm strongly tempted

To open it, and see.—No, let it rest!

Why should I pry into the cares of others,

Who have so many sorrows of my own?

With how much ease the spring gives way!—

Surprising!

My eyes are dazzl'd, and my ravish'd heart

Leaps at the glorious sight. How bright's the lustre,

[jewels!—

And how immense the worth of these fair

Ay, such a treasure would expel for ever

Base poverty, and all its abject train;

Famine; the cold neglect of friends; the scorn,

Or more provoking pity of the world. [turn,
Plenty, content, and power, might take their
And lofty pride bare its aspiring head [us.
At our approach, and once more bend before
A pleasing dream!—'Tis past; and now I
For sure it was a happiness to think, [wake:
Though but a moment, such a treasure mine.
Nay, it was more than thought—I saw, and touch'd

The bright temptation; and I see it yet—

'Tis here—'tis mine—I have it in possession—

Must I resign it? Must I give it back?

Am I in love with misery and want?—

To rob myself, and court so vast a loss?

Retain it then—But how?—There is a way—

Why sinks my heart? Why does my blood run cold? [choice,

Why am I thrill'd with horror?—'Tis not

But dire necessity suggests the thought.

Enter Old Wilmot.

O. Wilm. The mind contented, with how little pains

The wand'ring senses yield to soft repose!

He's fallen asleep already—Happy man!

What dost thou think, my Agnes, of our guest?

He seems to me a youth of great humanity:

Just ere he closed his eyes, that swam in tears,

He wrung my hand, and press'd it to his lips,

And with a look, that pierc'd me to the soul,

Begg'd me to comfort thee: And—dost thou hear me?—

What art thou gazing on?—Fie, 'tis not well.

This casket was deliver'd to you closed:

Why have you open'd it? Should this be

How mean must we appear! [known,

Agnes. And who shall know it?

O. Wilm. There is a kind of pride, a decent dignity, [tunes,

Due to ourselves; which, spite of our misfor-

May be maintain'd, and cherish'd to the last.

To live without reproach, and without leave

To quit the world, shows sovereign contempt,

And noble scorn of its relentless malice.

Agnes. Shows sovereign madness, and a scorn of sense.

Pursue no farther this detested theme:

I will not die; I will not leave the world,

For all that you can urge, until compell'd.

O. Wilm. To chase a shadow, when the setting sun

Is darting his last rays, were just as wise

As your anxiety for fleeting life,

Now the last means for its support are failing:

Were famine not as mortal as the sword,

Your warmth might be excused—But take thy choice:

Die how you will, you shall not die alone.

Agnes. Nor live, I hope.

O. Wilm. There is no fear of that.

Agnes. Then, we'll live both.

O. Wilm. Strange folly! where the means?

Agnes. There—those jewels!

O. Wilm. Ah!—Take heed!

Perhaps thou dost but try me—yet take heed!

There's naught so monstrous, but the mind of
man,

In some conditions, may be brought to approve.

Theft, sacrilege, treason, and parricide,
When flatt'ring opportunity enticed,
And desperation drove, have been committed
By those who once would start to hear them named.

Agnes. And add to these detested suicide,
Which, by a crime much less, we may avoid.

O. Wilm. How couldst thou form a thought so very damning,
So advantageous, so secure, and easy,
And yet so cruel, and so full of horror?

Agnes. 'Tis less impiety, less against nature,
To ask another's life, than end our own.

O. Wilm. No matter which, the less or greater crime:
Howe'er we may deceive ourselves or others,
We act from inclination, not by rule,
Or none could act amiss: and that all err,
None but the conscious hypocrite denies.
—Oh! what is man, his excellence and
strength,

When in an hour of trial and desertion,
Reason, his noblest power, may be suborn'd
To plead the cause of vile assassination!

Agnes. You're too severe: Reason may
For our own preservation. [justly plead

O. Wilm. Rest contented:
Whate'er resistance I may seem to make,
I am betray'd within: my will's seduced,
And my whole soul's infected. The desire
Of life returns, and brings with it a train
Of appetites, that rage to be supplied.
Whoever stands to parley with temptation,
Parleys to be o'ercome.

Agnes. Then naught remains,
But the swift execution of a deed
That is not to be thought on, or delay'd—

O. Wilm. Gen'rous, unhappy man! Oh! what could move thee
To put thy life and fortune in the hands
Of wretches mad with anguish!

Agnes. By what means
Shall we effect his death?

O. Wilm. Why, what a fiend!—
How cruel, how remorseless and impatient
Have pride and poverty made thee!

Agnes. Barbarous man!
Whose wasteful riots ruin'd our estate,
And drove our son, ere the first down had spread

His rosy cheeks, spite of my sad presages,
Earnest entreaties, agonies, and tears,
To seek his bread 'mongst strangers, and to
In some remote, inhospitable land— [perish
The loveliest youth, in person and in mind,
That ever crown'd a groaning mother's pains!
Where was thy pity, where thy patience then?
Thou cruel husband! thou unnat'ral father!
Thou most remorseless, most ungrateful man!
To waste my fortune, rob me of my son,
To drive me to despair, and then reproach me
For being what thou'st made me!

O. Wilm. Dry thy tears:
I ought not to reproach thee. I confess
That thou hast suffer'd much: so have we both.
But chide no more; I'm wrought up to thy purpose.

The poor, ill-fated, unsuspecting victim,
Ere he reclined him on the fatal couch,
From which he's ne'er to rise, took off the sash,
And costly dagger, that thou saw'st him wear,
And thus, unthinking, furnish'd us with arms
Against himself. Steal to the door,
And bring me word, if he be still asleep.

[Exit Agnes.

Or I'm deceived, or he pronounced himself
The happiest of mankind. Deluded wretch!
Thy thoughts are perishing, thy youthful joys,
Touch'd by the icy hand of grisly death,
Are with'ring in their bloom.—But, thought extinguish'd,
He'll never know the loss,
Nor feel the bitter pang of disappointment—
Then I was wrong in counting him a wretch:
To die well pleased
Is all the happiest of mankind can hope for.
To be a wretch is to survive the loss
Of every joy, and even hope itself,
As I have done—Why do I mourn him then?
For, by the anguish of my tortured soul,
He's to be envied, if compared with me!

[Exit.

SCENE II.—A Room, with Young Wilmot asleep upon a Bed, in the Distance.

Enter Old Wilmot and Agnes.

Agnes. The stranger sleeps at present; but so restless
His slumbers seem, they can't continue long.
Here, I've secured his dagger.

O. Wilm. Oh, Agnes! Agnes! if there be
'Tis just we should expect it. [a hell,

[Goes to take the dagger, but lets it fall.
Agnes. Shake off this panic, and be more yourself. [we determin'd?

O. Wilm. What's to be done? On what had
Agnes. You're quite dismay'd.

[Takes up the dagger.

O. Wilm. Give me the fatal steel.
'Tis but a single murder,
Necessity, impatience, and despair,
The three wide mouths of that true Cerberus,
Grim Poverty, demand; they shall be stopp'd.
Ambition, persecution, and revenge,
Devour their millions daily: and shall I—
But follow me, and see how little cause
You had to think there was the least remain
Of manhood, pity, mercy, or remorse,
Left in this savage breast.

[Going the wrong way.

Agnes. Where do you go?
The street is that way.

O. Wilm. True! I had forgot.

Agnes. Quite, quite confounded!

O. Wilm. Well, I recover.—I shall find the way. [Retires towards the bed.

Agnes. Oh, softly! softly! The least noise undoes us.

What are we doing? Misery and want
Are lighter ills than this! I cannot bear it!
Stop, hold thy hand!—Inconstant, wretched
woman!

What! doth my heart recoil?—O, Wilmot!
 Wilmot!
 What pow'r shall I invoke to aid thee, Wilmot! [Scene closes.

SCENE III.—Another Room.

Enter Charlotte, Eustace, and Randal.

Char. What strange neglect! The doors are all unbarr'd,
 And not a living creature to be seen!

Enter Old Wilmot and Agnes.

Sir, we are come to give and to receive
 A thousand greetings—Ha! what can this mean?

Why do you look with such amazement on us?
 Are these your transports for your son's return?
 Where is my Wilmot?—Has he not been here?
 Would he defer your happiness so long,
 Or could a habit so disguise your son,
 That you refused to own him?

Agnes. Heard you that?—
 What prodigy of horror is disclosing,
 To render murder venial!

O. Wilm. Pr'ythee, peace:
 The miserable damn'd suspend their howling,
 And the swift orbs are fix'd in deep attention.

Rand. What mean these dreadful words, and frantic air!

That is the dagger my young master wore.

Eust. My mind misgives me. Do not stand to gaze
 On these dumb phantoms of despair and horror!
 Let us search further; Randal, show the way.

[Exeunt Randal, Eustace, and Charlotte.

Agnes. Let life forsake the earth, and light
 the sun,
 And death and darkness bury in oblivion
 Mankind and all their deeds, that no posterity
 May ever rise to hear our horrid tale,
 Or view the grave of such detested parricides!

O. Wilm. Curses and deprecations are in vain: [course,
 The sun will shine, and all things have their
 When we, the curse and burden of the earth,
 Shall be absorb'd, and mingled with its dust.
 Our guilt and desolation must be told,
 From age to age, to teach desponding mortals,
 How far beyond the reach of human thought Heaven, when incensed, can punish—Die thou first. [Stabs Agnes.

I durst not trust thy weakness.

Agnes. Ever kind,
 But most in this!

O. Wilm. I will not long survive thee.

Agnes. Do not accuse thy erring mother,
 Wilmot!

With too much rigour, when we meet above.
 To give thee life for life, and blood for blood,
 Is not enough. Had I ten thousand lives,
 I'd give them all to speak my penitence,
 Deep and sincere, and equal to my crime.
 Oh, Wilmot! oh, my son! my son! [Dies.

Enter Randal and Eustace.

Eust. Oh, Wilmot! Wilmot!

Are these the fruits of all thy anxious cares
 For thy ungrateful parents?—Cruel fiends!

O. Wilm. What whining fool art thou, who wouldst usurp
 My sovereign right of grief?—Was he thy son?— [blood,

Say! canst thou show thy hands, reeking with
 That flow'd, through purer channels, from thy loins? [ocean,

Compute the sands that bound the spacious
 And swell their numbers with a single grain;
 Increase the noise of thunder with thy voice;
 Or, when the raging wind lays nature waste,
 Assist the tempest with thy feeble breath;
 But name not thy faint sorrow with the anguish
 Of a cursed wretch, who only hopes from this [Stabbing himself.

To change the scene, but not relieve his pain.

Rand. A dreadful instance of the last re-
 May all your woes end here! [morse!

O. Wilm. O would they end
 A thousand ages hence, I then should suffer
 Much less than I deserve. Yet let me say,
 You'll do but justice to inform the world,
 This horrid deed, that punishes itself,
 Was not intended, thinking him our son;
 For that we knew not, till it was too late.
 Proud and impatient under our afflictions,
 While Heaven was labouring to make us happy,
 We brought this dreadful ruin on ourselves.
 Mankind may learn—But—oh— [Dies.

Rand. Heaven grant they may!
 And may thy penitence atone thy crime!
 Tend well the hapless Charlotte, and bear
 hence
 These bleeding victims of despair and pride;
 Toll the death-bell! and follow to the grave
 The wretched parents and ill-fated son.

§ 49. The Happiness of a free Government.
 S. JOHNSON.

If there be any land, as fame reports,
 Where common laws restrain the prince and
 subject,
 A happy land, where circulating pow'r
 Flows through each member of th' embodied
 state;
 Sure, not unconscious of the mighty blessing,
 Her grateful sons shine bright with ev'ry
 virtue;
 Untainted with the lust of innovation,
 Sure all unite to hold her league of rule
 Unbroken as the sacred chain of nature,
 That links the jarring elements in peace.

§ 50. The killing of a Boar. OTWAY.

FORTH from the thicket rush'd another boar,
 So large, he seem'd the tyrant of the woods,
 With all his dreadful bristles rais'd up high;
 They seem'd a grove of spears upon his back:
 Foaming he came at me, where I was posted,
 Whetting his huge long tusks, and gaping
 wide,
 As he already had me for his prey;

Till, brandishing my well-pois'd javelin high,
With this bold executing arm I struck
The ugly brindled monster to the heart.

§ 51. Description of a populous City. YOUNG

—THIS ancient city,
How wanton sits she amidst nature's smiles!
Nor from her highest turret has to view
But golden landscapes and luxuriant scenes,
A waste of wealth, the store-house of the
world;
Here fruitful vales far stretching fly the sight;
There sails unnumber'd whiten all the stream;
While from the banks full twenty thousand cities
Survey their pride, and see their gilded towers Float on the waves, and break against the shore.

—Various nations meet
As in the sea, yet not confin'd in space,
But streaming freely through the spacious streets,
Which send forth millions at each brazen gate;
Whene'er the trumpet calls, high over head
On the broad walls the chariots bound along.

§ 52. Rural Courtship. DRYDEN.

—HE preferr'd me
Above the maidens of my age and rank;
Still shunn'd their company, and still sought
mine.
I was not won by gifts, yet still he gave;
And all his gifts though small, yet spoke his
love.
He pick'd the earliest strawberries in the woods,
The cluster'd filberts, and the purple grapes:
He taught a prating stare to speak my name;
And when he found a nest of nightingales,
Or callow linnets, he would show 'em me,
And let me take 'em out.

§ 53. Description of a Person left on a desert Island. THOMSON.

NEXT night—a dreary night!
Cast on the wildest of the Cyclad Isles,
Where never human foot had mark'd the
shore,
These ruffians left me.
Beneath a shade
I sat me down, more heavily oppress'd,
More desolate at heart than e'er I felt
Before; when Philomela o'er my head
Began to tune her melancholy strain,
As piteous of my woes: till, by degrees,
Composing sleep on wounded nature shed
A kind but short relief. At early morn,
Wak'd by the chant of birds, I look'd around
For usual objects: objects found I none,
Except before me stretch'd the toiling main,
And rocks and woods, in savage view, behind.

§ 54. The first Feats of a young Eagle. ROWE.

—So the Eagle,
That bears the thunder of our grandsire Jove,

With joy beholds his hardy youthful offspring
Forsake the nest, to try his tender pinions
In the wide untrack'd air; till, bolder grown,
Now, like a whirlwind on a shepherd's fold,
He darts precipitate, and gripes the prey;
Or fixing on some dragon's scaly hide,
Eager of combat, and his future feast,
Bears him aloft reluctant, and in vain
Wreathing his spiry tail.

§ 55. The true End of Education. ROWE.

AND therefore wert thou bred to virtuous
knowledge,
And wisdom early planted in thy soul,
That thou mightst know to rule thy fiery passions,
To bind their rage and stay their headlong
course;
To bear with accidents, and every change
Of various life; to struggle with adversity;
To wait the leisure of the righteous gods,
Till they, in their own good appointed hour,
Shall bid their better days come forth at once,
A long and shining train; till thou, well pleas'd,
Shalt bow, and bless thy fate, and say the gods are just.

§ 56. Filial Piety. MALLET.

E'ER since reflection beam'd her light upon
me,
You, Sir, have been my study. I have plac'd
Before mine eyes, in every light of life,
The father and the king. What weight of duty
Lay on a son from such a parent sprung,
What virtuous toil to shine with his renown,
Has been my thought by day, my dream by night:
— — — — —
But first and ever nearest to my heart
Was this prime duty, so to frame my conduct
Tow'rd such a father, as were I a father,
My soul would wish to meet with from a son.
And may reproach transmit my name abhorr'd
To latest time—if ever thought was mine
Unjust to filial reverence, filial love!

§ 57. The same. THOMSON.

HAVE I then no tears for thee, my father?
Can I forget thy cares, from helpless years
Thy tenderness for me? an eye still beam'd
With love? A brow that never knew a frown?
Nor a harsh word thy tongue? Shall I for these Repay thy stooping venerable age
With shame, disquiet, anguish, and dishonor?
It must not be!—thou first of angels! come,
Sweet filial piety! and firm my breast:
Yes! let one daughter to her fate submit,
Be nobly wretched—but her father happy.

§ 58. Bad Fortune more easily borne than good. ROWE.

WITH such unshaken temper of the soul
To bear the swelling tide of prosp'rous fortune,

Is to deserve that fortune.—In adversity
The mind grows tough by buffetting the tempest;
But in success dissolving, sinks to ease,
And loses all her firmness.

§ 59. Despair never to be indulged.
PHILIPS.

THOUGH plung'd in ills, and exercis'd in
Yet never let the noble mind despair: [care,
When press'd by dangers, and beset by foes,
The gods their timely succour interpose;
And when our virtue sinks, o'erwhelm'd with
grief,
By unforeseen expedients bring relief.

§ 60. A Friend to Freedom can never be a Traitor. THOMSON.

—HE who contends for freedom,
Can ne'er be justly deem'd his sovereign's foe;
No! 'Tis the wretch who tempts him to subvert it,
The soothing slave, the traitor in the bosom,
Who best deserves that name; he is a worm
That eats out all the happiness of kingdoms.

§ 61. Description of a Hag. OTWAY.

IN a close lane, as I pursu'd my journey,
I spied a wither'd hag, with age grown double,
Picking dry sticks, and mumbling to herself;
Her eyes with scalding rheum were gall'd and red,
Cold palsy shook her head, her hand seem'd
wither'd,
And on her crooked shoulders had she wrapp'd
The tatter'd remnants of an old strip'd hanging,
Which serv'd to keep her carcase from the cold:
So there was nothing of a piece about her.
Her lower weeds were all o'er coarsely patch'd
With different color'd rags, black, red, white, yellow,
And seem'd to speak variety of wretchedness.

§ 62. Happiness the inseparable Companion of Virtue. ROWE.

—To be good is to be happy; angels
Are happier than men, because they're better.
Guilt is the source of sorrow; 'tis the fiend,
Th' avenging fiend, that follows us behind
With whips and stings: the blest know none of this,
But rest in everlasting peace of mind,
And find the height of all their heaven is goodness.

§ 63. Honor superior to Justice.

HONOR, my lord, is much too proud to catch
At every slender twig of nice distinctions.
These for the unfeeling vulgar may do well;
But those whose souls are by the nicer rule
Of virtuous delicacy only sway'd,
Stand at another bar than that of laws.

§ 64. In what Manner Princes ought to be taught. MALLET.

LET truth and virtue be their earliest teachers;
Keep from their ear the syren-voice of flattery,
Keep from their eye the harlot form of vice,
Who spread in every court their silken snares,
And charm but to betray. Betimes instruct
them,
Superior rank demands superior worth;
Pre-eminence of valor, justice, mercy:
But chief, that, though exalted o'er mankind,
They are themselves but men—frail suffering
dust;
From no one injury of human lot
Exempt; but fever'd by the same heat, chill'd
By the same cold, torn by the same disease,
That scorches, freezes, racks, and kills the beggar.

§ 65. True End of Royalty. MALLET.

—O WITNESS, Heaven!
Whose eye the heart's profoundest depth explores,
That if not to perform my regal task;
To be the common father of my people,
Patron of honor, virtue, and religion;
If not to shelter useful worth, to guard
His well-earn'd portion from the sons of rapine,
And deal out justice with impartial hand;
If not to spread on all good men my bounty,
The treasures trusted to me, not my own;
If not to raise anew our English name
By peaceful arts, that grace the land they bless,
And generous war to humble proud oppressors:
Yet more, if not to build the public weal
On that firm base, which can alone resist
Both time and chance, fair liberty and law;
If I for these great ends am not ordain'd—
May I ne'er poorly fill the throne of England.

§ 66. The real Duty of a King. ROWE.

—'TIS true I am a king:
Honor and glory too have been my aim,
But though I dare face death and all the dangers
Which furious war wears in its bloody front;
Yet could I choose to fix my name by peace,
By justice, and by mercy; and to raise
My trophies on the blessings of mankind:
Nor would I buy the empire of the world,
With ruin of the people whom I sway,
Or forfeit of my honor.

§ 67. Character of a good King. THOMSON.

—YES, we have lost a father!
The greatest blessing Heaven bestows on mortals,
And seldom found amidst these wilds of time,
A good, a worthy king!—Hear me, my Tancred!
And I will tell thee in a few plain words,
How he deserv'd that best, that glorious title.
'Tis nought complex, 'tis clear as truth and virtue. [ren,
He lov'd his people, deem'd them all his child-

The beasts, that under the warm hedges slept,
And weather'd out the cold bleak night, are up;
And, looking tow'rd the neighbouring pastures, raise
Their voice, and bid their fellow brutes good-morrow:
The cheerful birds too on the tops of trees
Assemble all in choirs; and with their notes
Salute and welcome up the rising sun.

§ 76. Another. LEE.

FROM amber shrouds I see the morning
rise;
Her rosy hands begin to paint the skies;
And now the city emmets leave their hive,
And rousing hinds to cheerful labor drive;
High cliffs and rocks are pleasing objects now,
And nature smiles upon the mountain brow:
The joyful birds salute the sun's approach:
The sun too laughs, and mounts his gaudy
coach;
While from the car his dropping gems distil,
And all the earth, and all the heavens, do smile.

§ 77. The charming Notes of the Nightingale. LEE.

THUS, in some poplar shade, the nightingale
With piercing moans does her lost young bewail:
Which the rough hind observing, as they lay
Warm in their downy nest had stolen away:
But she in mournful sounds does still complain,
Sings all the night, though all her songs are vain,
And still renews her miserable strain.

§ 78. The same. ROWE.

So when the spring renews the flow'ry field,
And warns the pregnant nightingale to build;
She seeks the safest shelter of the wood,
Where she may trust her little tuneful brood,
Where no rude swains her shady cell may
know,
No serpents climb, nor blasting winds may blow:
Fond of the chosen place, she views it o'er,
Sits there, and wanders through the grove no
more;
Warbling she charms it each returning night,
And loves it with a mother's dear delight.

§ 79. A worthless Person can claim no Merit from the Virtues of his Ancestors. ROWE.

WERE honor to be scann'd by long descent
From ancestors illustrious, I could vaunt
A lineage of the greatest; and recount,
Among my fathers, names of ancient story,
Heroes and godlike patriots, who subdu'd
The world by arms and virtue.
But that be their own praise;
Nor will I borrow merit from the dead,
Myself an undeserver.

§ 80. The Love of our Country the greatest Virtue. THOMSON.

HIS only plot was this: that, much pro-vok'd,
He rais'd his vengeful arm against his country:
And lo! the righteous gods have now chastis'd
him
Even by the hands of those for whom he fought.
Whatever private views and passions plead,
No cause can justify so black a deed:
These, when the angry tempest clouds the soul,
May darken reason and her course control;
But when the prospect clears, her startled eye
Must from the treach'rous gulf with horror fly,
On whose wide wave by stormy passions tost,
So many helpless wretches have been lost.
Then be this truth the star by which we steer:
Above ourselves our country shall be dear.

§ 81. The same. W. WHITEHEAD.

LEARN hence, ye Romans! on how sure a base
The patriot builds his happiness; no stroke,
No keenest, deadliest shaft of adverse fate
Can make his generous bosom quite despair,
But that alone by which his country falls.
Grief may to grief in endless round succeed,
And nature suffer when our children bleed:
Yet still superior must that hero prove,
Whose first, best passion, is his country's love.

§ 82. In what Philosophy really consists. THOMSON.

—PHILOSOPHY consists not
In airy schemes or idle speculations.
The rule and conduct of all social life
Is her great province. Not in lonely cells
Obscure she lurks, but holds her heavenly light
To senates and to kings, to guide their counsels,
And teach them to reform and bless mankind.
All policy but hers is false and rotten;
All valor not conducted by her precepts
Is a destroying fury sent from hell,
To plague unhappy man, and ruin nations.

§ 83. Scipio restoring the captive Princess to her Royal Lover. THOMSON.

—WHAT with admiration
Struck every heart, was this: A noble virgin,
Conspicuous far o'er all the captive dames,
Was mark'd the general's prize. She wept and blush'd,
Young, fresh, and blooming like the morn. An eye,
As when the blue sky trembles through a cloud
Of purest white. A secret charm combin'd
Her features, and infus'd enchantment through
them:
Her shape was harmony.—But eloquence Beneath her beauty fails; which seem'd on purpose

By nature lavish'd on her, that mankind
Might see the virtue of a hero tried
Almost beyond the stretch of human force.
Soft as she pass'd along, with downcast eyes,
Where gentle sorrows swell'd, and now and then
Dropp'd o'er her modest cheek a trickling tear,
The Roman legions languish'd, and hard war
Felt more than pity. E'en their chief himself,
As on his high tribunal rais'd he sat,
Turn'd from the dang'rous sight, and chiding
ask'd

His officers, if by this gift they meant
To cloud his virtue in its very dawn.

She, question'd of her birth, in trembling accents,

With tears and blushes broken, told her tale.
But when he found her royally descended,
Of her old captive parents the sole joy;
And that a hapless Celtiberian prince,
Her lover, and belov'd, forgot his chains,
His lost dominions, and for her alone
Wept out his tender soul; sudden the heart
Of this young, conqu'ring, loving, godlike Roman

Felt all the great divinity of virtue.

His wishing youth stood check'd, his tempting
pow'r

Restrain'd by kind humanity.—At once
He for her parents and her lover call'd.
The various scene imagine; how his troops Look'd dubious on, and wonder'd what he meant;

While stretch'd below the trembling suppliants lay

Rack'd by a thousand mingling passions, fear,
Hope, jealousy, disdain, submission, grief,
Anxiety, and love, in every shape;

To these as different sentiments succeeded,
As mix'd emotions: when the man divine
Thus the dread silence to the lover broke:

"We both are young, both charm'd. The right of war

Has put thy beauteous mistress in my pow'r,
With whom I could in the most sacred ties
Live out a happy life: but know that Romans
Their hearts, as well as enemies, can conquer.
Then take her to thy soul; and with her take Thy liberty and kingdom. In return
I ask but this:—when you behold these eyes,
These charms, with transport, be, a friend to Rome."

§ 84. The Blessings of Peace. THOMSON.

—O BEAUTEOUS Peace!

Sweet union of a state! what else but thou
Gives safety, strength, and glory, to a people?
I bow, Lord Constable, beneath the snow
Of many years; yet in my breast revives
A youthful flame. Methinks I see again
Those gentle days renew'd, that bless'd our isle
Ere by this wasteful fury of division,
Worse than our Ætna's most destructive fires,
It desolated sunk. I see our plains
Unbounded waving with the gifts of harvest:

Our seas with commerce throng'd, our busy ports

With cheerful toil. Our Enna blooms afresh;
Afresh the sweets of thymy Hybla blow.

Our nymphs and shepherds, sporting in each
vale,

Inspire new song, and wake the pastoral reed.

§ 85. Providence. THOMSON:

—THERE is a Pow'r

Unseen, that rules th' illimitable world,
That guides its motions from the brightest star
To the least dust of this sin-tainted mould;
While man, who madly deems himself the
lord

Of all, is nought but weakness and dependence.

This sacred truth, by sure experience taught,
Thou must have learnt when wandering all
alone,

Each bird, each insect, flitting through the sky,
Was more sufficient for itself than thou.

§ 86. Prudence. THOMSON.

—LET us

Act with cool prudence, and with manly temper,

As well as manly firmness.

'Tis godlike magnanimity to keep,
When most provok'd, our reason calm and clear,
And execute her will, from a strong sense
Of what is right, without the vulgar aid
Of heat and passion, which, tho' honest, bear us
Often too far.

§ 87. Description of Ships appearing at a Distance, and approaching the Shore. DRYDEN.

Guion. As far as I could cast my eyes
Upon the sea, something, methought, did rise
Like blueish mists, which still appearing more,
Took dreadful shapes, and thus mov'd tow'rd's
the shore:

The object I could first distinctly view,
Was tall, straight trees, which on the water flew:

Wings on their sides instead of leaves did grow,
Which gather'd all the breath the winds could
blow;

And at their roots grew floating palaces,
Whose out-blow'd bellies cut the yielding seas.

Montezuma. What divine monsters, O ye gods! are these,

That float in air, and fly upon the seas?
Came they alive, or dead, upon the shore?

Guion. Alas! they liv'd too sure: I heard them roar:

All turn'd their sides, and to each other spoke:
I saw their words break out in fire and smoke.
Sure 'tis their voice that thunders from on high,
And these the younger brothers of the sky:
Deaf with the noise, I took my hasty flight;
No mortal courage can support the fright.

§ 88. Virtue preferable to Rank. ROWE.

WHAT tho' no gaudy titles grace my birth;
Titles, the servile courtier's lean reward!

Sometimes the pay of virtue, but more oft
The hire which greatness gives to slaves and sy-cophants :
Yet Heaven, that made me honest, made me
more
Than e'er a king did when he made a lord.

§ 89. Description of an ancient Cathedral.
CONGREVE.

—'Tis dreadful :
How rev'rend is the face of this tall pile
Whose ancient pillars rear their marble heads,
To bear aloft its arch'd and ponderous roof,
By its own weight made steadfast and immove-
able !
Looking tranquillity ; it strikes an awe
And terror to my aching sight ! The tombs
And monumental caves of death look cold,
And shoot a chillness to my trembling heart.

§ 90. Description of a Triumph. LEE.

—HE comes, and with a port so proud,
As if he had subdu'd the spacious world :
And all Sinope's streets are fill'd with such
A glut of people, you would think some god
Had conquer'd in their cause, and them thus rank'd, [heads !
That he might make his entrance on their While from the scaffolds, windows, tops of houses,
Are cast such gaudy show'rs of garlands down,
That e'en the crowd appear like conquerors,
And the whole city seems like one vast meadow Set all with flow'rs, as a clear heaven with stars.
Nay, as I have heard, ere he the city enter'd,
Your subjects lin'd the way for many furlongs ;
The very trees bore men : and as our God,
When from the portal of the east he dawns,
To welcome him with all their warbling throats
And prune their feathers in his golden beams ;

So did your subjects, in their gaudy trim,
Upon the pendant branches speak his praise.
Mothers, who cover'd all the banks beneath,
Did rob the crying infants of the breast,
Pointing Ziphares out, to make them smile ;
And climbing boys stood on their fathers' shoulders, [cries,
Answering their shouting sires with tender
To make the concert up of general joy.

§ 91. A Shepherd's Life happier than a King's.
HILL.

TH' unbusied shepherd, stretch'd beneath the hawthorn,
His careless limbs thrown out in wanton ease,
With thoughtless gaze perusing the arch'd heavens,
And idly whistling while his sheep feed round
him,
Enjoys a sweeter shade than that of canopies Hemm'd in with cares, and shook by storms of treason.

§ 92. Virtue its own Reward. ROWE.

GREAT minds, like Heav'n, are pleas'd with doing good,
Though the ungrateful subjects of their favors
Are barren in return. Virtue does still
With scorn the mercenary world regard,
Where abject souls do good, and hope reward.
Above the worthless trophies man can raise,
She seeks not honor, wealth, nor airy praise,
But with herself, herself the goddess pays.

§ 93. No Difficulties insuperable to the Prudent and Brave. ROWE.

THE wise and active conquer difficulties
By daring to attempt them : sloth and folly
Shiver and shrink at sight of toil and hazard,
And make th' impossibility they fear.

ODES, SONNETS, CLASSICAL SONGS, ANCIENT AND MODERN BALLADS, COMIC TALES, EPIGRAMS, EPITAPHS, VARIOUS AMUSING LITTLE POEMS, PROLOGUES, AND EPILOGUES.

§ 1. L'ALLEGRO. MILTON.

HENCE, loathed Melancholy,
Of Cerberus and blackest Midnight born,
In Stygian cave forlorn,
'Mongst horrid shapes, and shrieks, and sights unholy;
Find out some uncouth cell,
Where brooding darkness spreads his jealous
wings,
And the night-raven sings;
There, under ebon shades, and low-brow'd
As ragged as thy locks, [rocks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.
But come, thou goddess, fair and free,
In heav'n yclep'd Euphrosyne,
And by men heart-easing Mirth,
Whom lovely Venus at a birth,
With two sister Graces more,
To ivy-crowned Bacchus bore;
Or whether (as some sages sing)
The frolic wind that breathes the spring,
Zephyr, with Aurora playing,
As he met her once a-Maying,
There on beds of violets blue,
And fresh-blown roses wash'd in dew,
Fill'd her with thee, a daughter fair,
So buxom, blithe, and debonair;
Haste thee, nymph, and bring with thee
Jest and youthful jollity,
Quips and cranks, and wanton wiles,
Nods, and becks, and wreathed smiles,
Such as hang on Hebe's cheek,
And love to live in dimple sleek;

Sport, that wrinkled care derides,
And Laughter holding both his sides:
Come, and trip it as you go,
On the light fantastic toe,
And in thy right hand lead with thee
The mountain nymph, sweet Liberty;
And, if I give thee honor due,
Mirth, admit me of thy crew,
To live with her and live with thee,
In unreprieved pleasures free;
To hear the lark begin his flight,
And singing, startle the dull night,
From his watch-tow'r in the skies,
Till the dapple dawn doth rise;
Then to come, in spite of sorrow,
And at my window bid good-morrow,
Through the sweet-brier or the vine,
Or the twisted eglantine:
While the cock with lively din
Scatters the rear of darkness thin,
And to the stack, or the barn-door,
Stoutly struts his dames before;
Oft list'ning how the hounds and horn
Cheerly rouse the slumb'ring morn,
From the side of some hoar hill,
Through the high wood echoing shrill:
Some time walking, not unseen,
By hedge-row elms, on hillocks green,
Right against the eastern gate,
Where the great sun begins his state,
Rob'd in flames, and amber light,
The clouds in thousand liveries dight;
While the ploughman near at hand
Whistles o'er the furrow'd land,

And the milk-maid singing blithe,
 And the mower whets his sithe,
 And ev'ry shepherd tells his tale
 Under the hawthorn in the dale.
 Straight mine eye hath caught new pleasures
 Whilst the landscape round it measures;
 Russet lawns, and fallows gray,
 Where the nibbling flocks do stray;
 Mountains, on whose barren breast
 The lab'ring clouds do often rest;
 Meadows trim, with daisies pied,
 Shallow brooks, and rivers wide.
 Tow'rs and battlements it sees,
 Bosom'd high in tufted trees,
 Where perhaps some beauty lies,
 The Cynosure of neighb'ring eyes.
 Hard by, a cottage-chimney smokes
 From betwixt two aged oaks,
 Where Corydon and Thyrsis met,
 Are at their savory dinner set
 Of herbs, and other country messes,
 Which the neat-handed Phyllis dresses:
 And then in haste her bow'r she leaves,
 With Thestylis to bind the sheaves;
 Or, if the earlier season lead,
 To the tann'd haycock in the mead.
 Sometimes with secure delight
 The upland hamlets will invite,
 When the merry bells ring round,
 And the jocund rebecks sound
 To many a youth and many a maid,
 Dancing in the chequer'd shade;
 And young and old come forth to play
 On a sunshine holiday.
 Till the live-long day-light fail;
 Then to the spicy nut-brown ale,
 With stories told of many a feat,
 How fairy Mab the junkets eat;
 She was pinch'd and pull'd, she said,
 And he by friar's lanthorn led;
 Tells how the drudging goblin sweat,
 To earn his cream-bowl duly set,
 When, in one night, ere glimpse of morn,
 His shadowy flail hath thresh'd the corn,
 That ten day lab'ers could not end;
 Then lies him down the lubber fiend,
 And, stretch'd out all the chimney's length,
 Basks at the fire his hairy strength;
 And crop-full out of doors he flings,
 Ere the first cock his matin rings.
 Thus done the tales, to bed they creep,
 By whisp'ring winds soon lull'd asleep.
 Tow'rd cities please us then,
 And the busy hum of men,
 Where throngs of knights and barons bold
 In weeds of peace high triumphs hold,
 With store of ladies, whose bright eyes
 Rain influence, and judge the prize
 Of wit, or arms, while both contend
 To win her grace whom all commend:
 There let Hymen oft appear
 In saffron robe, with taper clear,
 And pomp, and feast, and revelry,
 With mask, and antique pageantry,
 Such sights as youthful poets dream
 On summer eves by haunted stream.

Then to the well-trod stage anon,
 If Jonson's learned sock be on,
 Or sweetest Shakspeare, Fancy's child,
 Warble his native wood-notes wild.
 And ever against eating cares,
 Lap me in soft Lydian airs,
 Married to immortal verse,
 Such as the meeting soul may pierce,
 In notes with many a winding bout
 Of linked sweetness long drawn out,
 With wanton heed, and giddy cunning,
 The melting voice through mazes running;
 Untwisting all the chains that tie
 The hidden soul of harmony;
 That Orpheus' self may heave his head
 From golden slumber on a bed
 Of heap'd Elysian flowers, and hear
 Such strains as would have won the ear
 Of Pluto, to have quite set free
 His half-regain'd Eurydice.
 These delights, if thou canst give,
 Mirth, with thee I mean to live.

§ 2. IL PENSEROSO. MILTON.

HENCE, vain deluding joys,
 The brood of folly, without father bred,
 How little you bestead,
 Or fill the fixed mind with all your toys!
 Dwell in some idle brain,
 And fancies fond with gaudy shapes possess,
 As thick and numberless
 As the gay motes that people the sun-beams,
 Or likest hovering dreams,
 The fickle pensioners of Morpheus' train.
 But hail, thou Goddess sage and holy!
 Hail, divinest Melancholy!
 Whose saintly visage is too bright
 To hit the sense of human sight;
 And therefore to our weaker view
 O'erlaid with black, staid Wisdom's hue;
 Black, but such as in esteem
 Prince Memnon's sister might beseeem:
 Or that starr'd Ethiop queen that strove
 To set her beauty's praise above
 The sea-nymphs, and their powers offended:
 Yet thou art higher far descended;
 Thee bright-hair'd Vesta long of yore
 To solitary Saturn bore;
 His daughter she (in Saturn's reign
 Such mixture was not held a stain.)
 Oft in glimmering bowers and glades
 He met her, and in secret shades
 Of woody Ida's inmost grove,
 While yet there was no fear of Jove.
 Come, pensive Nun, devout and pure,
 Sober, steadfast, and demure,
 All in a robe of darkest grain,
 Flowing with majestic train,
 And sable stole of Cyprus lawn,
 Over thy decent shoulders drawn.
 Come, but keep thy wonted state,
 With even step, and musing gait,
 And looks commercing with the skies,
 Thy rapt soul sitting in thine eyes:

There, held in holy passion still,
 Forget thyself to marble, till
 With a sad leaden downward cast
 Thou fix them on the earth as fast :
 And join with thee calm Peace and Quiet,
 Spare Fast, that oft with Gods doth diet,
 And hears the Muses in a ring
 Ay round about Jove's altars sing :
 And add to these retired Leisure,
 That in trim gardens takes his pleasure.
 But first and chiefest with thee bring
 Him that yon soars on golden wing,
 Guiding the fiery-wheeled throne,
 The cherub Contemplation ;
 And the mute Silence hist along,
 'Less Philomel will deign a song,
 In her sweetest, saddest plight,
 Smoothing the rugged brow of night,
 While Cynthia checks her dragon yoke,
 Gently o'er th' accusom'd oak ;
 Sweet bird that shunn'st the noise of folly,
 Most musical, most melancholy !
 Thee, chantress, oft the woods among
 I woo, to hear thy even-song,
 And missing thee, I walk unseen
 On the dry smooth-shaven green,
 To behold the wand'ring moon,
 Riding near her highest noon,
 Like one that had been led astray
 Through the heaven's wide pathless way,
 And oft, as if her head she bow'd,
 Stooping through a fleecy cloud.
 Oft, on a plat of rising ground,
 I hear the far-off curfew sound
 Over some wide-water'd shore,
 Swinging slow with sullen roar ;
 Or, if the air will not permit,
 Some still removed place will fit,
 Where glowing embers through the room
 Teach light to counterfeit a gloom,
 Far from all resort of mirth,
 Save the cricket on the hearth,
 Or the bellman's drowsy charm,
 To bless the doors from nightly harm :
 Or let my lamp at midnight hour,
 Be seen in some high lonely tow'r,
 Where I may oft out-watch the Bear
 With thrice great Hermes, or unsphere
 The spirit of Plato, to unfold
 What worlds, or what vast regions hold
 The immortal mind that hath forsook
 Her mansion in this fleshly nook :
 And of those demons that are found
 In fire, air, flood, or under ground,
 Whose power hath a true consent
 With planet, or with element.
 Sometime let gorgeous tragedy
 In sceptred pall come sweeping by,
 Presenting Thebes' or Pelops' line,
 Or else the tale of Troy divine,
 Or what (though rare) of later age
 Ennobled hath the buskin'd stage.
 But, O sad Virgin, that thy pow'r
 Might raise Musæus from his bow'r,
 Or bid the soul of Orpheus sing
 Such notes as warbled to the string,
 Drew iron tears down Pluto's check,
 And made Hell grant what love did seek.

Or call up him that left half told
 The story of Cambuscan bold,
 Of Camball, and of Algarsife,
 And who had Canacé to wife,
 That own'd the virtuous ring and glass,
 And of the wondrous horse of brass,
 On which the Tartar king did ride ;
 And if aught else great bards beside
 In sage and solemn tunes have sung,
 Of turneys and of trophies hung,
 Of forests, and enchantments drear,
 Where more is meant than meets the ear.
 Thus, night, oft see me in thy pale career,
 Till silver-suited morn appear,
 Nor trickt and frounc'd as she was wont
 With the Attic boy to hunt,
 But kercheft in a comely cloud,
 While rocking winds are piping loud,
 Or usher'd with a shower still
 When the gust hath blown his fill,
 Ending on the rustling leaves,
 With minute drops from off the caves.
 And when the sun begins to fling
 His flaring beams, me, goddess, bring
 To arched walks of twilight groves,
 And shadows brown that Sylvan loves,
 Of pine, or monumental oak,
 Where the rude axe with heaved stroke
 Was never heard the nymphs to daunt,
 Or fright them from their hallow'd haunt.
 There in close covert by some brook,
 Where no profaner eye may look,
 Hide me from day's garish eye,
 While the bee with honied thigh,
 That at her flow'ry work doth sing,
 And the waters murmuring,
 With such concert as they keep,
 Entice the dewy-feather'd sleep ;
 And let some strange, mysterious dream
 Wave at his wings an airy stream
 Of lively portraiture display'd
 Softly on my eye-lids laid.
 And, as I wake, sweet music breathe
 Above, about, or underneath,
 Sent by some spirit to mortals good,
 Or th' unseen Genius of the wood.
 But let my due feet never fail
 To walk the studious cloisters pale,
 And love the high embowed roof,
 With antique pillars massy proof,
 And storied windows richly dight,
 Casting a dim, religious light.
 There let the pealing organ blow,
 To the full-voic'd quire below,
 In service high, and anthems clear,
 As may with sweetness, through mine ear,
 Dissolve me into ecstasies,
 And bring all Heaven before mine eyes.
 And may at last my weary age
 Find out the peaceful hermitage,
 The hairy gown and mossy cell,
 Where I may sit and rightly spell
 Of ev'ry star that heav'n doth shew,
 And ev'ry herb that sips the dew ;
 Till old experience do attain
 To something like prophetic strain.
 These pleasures, Melancholy, give,
 And I with thee will choose to live.

§ 3. LYCIDAS. MILTON.

YET once more, O ye Laurels, and once more,
Ye Myrtles brown, with Ivy never sere,
I come to pluck your berries harsh and crude,
And with forc'd fingers rude,
Shatter your leaves before the mellowing year;
Bitter constraint, and sad occasion dear,
Compels me to disturb your season due;
For Lycidas is dead, dead ere his prime,
Young Lycidas, and hath not left his peer:
Who would not sing for Lycidas? he knew
Himself to sing, and build the lofty rhyme.
He must not float upon his wat'ry bier
Unwept, and welter to the parching wind,
Without the meed of some melodious tear.

Begin then, sisters of the sacred well,
That from beneath the seat of Jove doth
spring,
Begin, and somewhat loudly sweep the string.
Hence with denial vain, and coy excuse,
So may some gentle Muse
With lucky words favor my destin'd urn;
And, as she passes, turn,
And bid fair peace be to my sable shroud.
For we were nurst upon the self-same hill,
Fed the same flock, by fountain, shade and rill.

Together both, ere the high lawns appear'd
Under the opening eye-lids of the morn,
We drove a-field, and both together heard
What time the grey-fly winds her sultry horn, Batt'ning our flocks with the fresh dews of
night,

Oft till the star that rose at evening bright
Tow'rd heaven's descent had slop'd his west-
'ring wheel.

Meanwhile the rural ditties were not mute,
Temper'd to the oaten flute;
Rough Satyrs danc'd, and Fauns with cloven heel

From the glad sound would not be absent long,
And old Damætas lov'd to hear our song.

But, O the heavy change! now thou art gone,

Now thou art gone, and never must return!
Thee, Shepherd, thee the woods, and desert caves

With wild thyme and the gadding vine o'er-grown,

And all their echoes, mourn.

The willows and the hazel copses green,
Shall now no more be seen

Fanning their joyous leaves to thy soft lays.

As killing as the canker to the rose,
Or taint-worm to the weaning herds that graze;
Or frost to flow'rs, that their gay wardrobe
wear,

When first the white-thorn blows;

Such, Lycidas, thy loss to shepherds' ear.

Where were ye, Nymphs, when the remorseless deep

Clos'd o'er the head of your lov'd Lycidas?

For neither were ye playing on the steep,

Where your old bards, the famous Druids, lie,

Nor on the shaggy top of Mona high,

Nor yet where Deva spreads her wisard stream:

Ah me, I fondly dream!

Had ye been there—for what could that have
done?

What could the Muse herself that Orpheus bore,

The Muse herself for her enchanting son,
Whom universal nature did lament,
When by the rout that made the hideous roar,
His gory visage down the stream was sent,
Down the swift Hebrus to the Lesbian shore?

Alas! what boots it with incessant care
To tend the homely, slighted shepherd's trade,
And strictly meditate the thankless Muse?
Were it not better done, as others use,
To sport with Amaryllis in the shade,
Or with the tangles of Neæra's hair?

Fame is the spur that the clear spirit doth raise (That last infirmity of noble minds)

To scorn delights, and live laborious days;
But the fair guerdon when we hope to find,
And think to burst out into sudden blaze,
Comes the blind Fury with th' abhorred shears,
And slits the thin-spun life. But not the
praise,

Phœbus replied, and touch'd my trembling
ears;

Fame is no plant that grows on mortal soil,
Nor in the glist'ring foil,

Set off to th' world: nor in broad rumor lies,
But lives and spreads aloft by those pure eyes,
And perfect witness of all-judging Jove:

As he pronounces lastly on each deed,
Of so much fame in heaven expect thy meed.

O fountain Arethuse, and thou honor'd flood,
Smooth-sliding Mincius, crown'd with vocal
reeds,

That strain I heard was of a higher mood:

But now my oat proceeds,
And listens to the herald of the sea

That came in Neptune's plea;
He ask'd the waves, and ask'd the felon winds,
What hard mishap hath doom'd this gentle
swain?

And question'd ev'ry gust of rugged winds
That blows from off each beaked promontory;

They knew not of his story,
And sage Hippodates their answer brings,

That not a blast was from his dungeon stray'd,
The air was calm, and on the level brine

Sleek Panope with all her sisters play'd.

It was that fatal and perfidious bark
Built in th' eclipse, and rigg'd with curses dark,
That sunk so low that sacred head of thine.

Next Camus, reverend sire! went footing
slow,

His mantle hairy, and his bonnet sedge,
Inwrought with figures dim, and on the edge
Like to that sanguine flow'r inscrib'd with
woe. [pledge?

Ah! who hath reft (quoth he) my dearest
Last came, and last did go,

The pilot of the Galilean lake:

Two massy keys he bore of metals twain,
(The golden opes, the iron shuts amain,)

He shook his mitred locks, and stern bespake,
How well could I have spar'd for thee, young
swain,

Enow of such as for their bellies' sake

Creep, and intrude, and climb into the fold!
Of other care they little reck'ning make,
Than how to scramble at the shearer's feast,
And shove away the worthy bidden guest;
Blind mouths! that scarce themselves know how to hold

[least
A sheep-hook, or have learn'd aught else the
That to the faithful herdman's art belongs!
What reck's it them? What need they? They are sped;

And, when they list, their lean and flashy songs
Grate on their scrannel pipes of wretched straw:
The hungry sheep look up, and are not fed,
But swoln with wind, and the rank mist they
draw,

Rot inwardly, and foul contagion spread:
Besides what the grim wolf with privy paw
Daily devours apace, and nothing said,
But that two-handed engine at the door
Stands ready to smite once, and smite no more.

Return, Alpheus, the dread voice is past,
That shrunk thy streams; return, Sicilian
Muse,

And call the vales, and bid them hither cast
Their bells, and flow'rets of a thousand hues.
Ye valleys low, where the mild whispers use
Of shades, and wanton winds, and gushing
brooks,

On whose fresh lap the swart star sparely looks,
Throw hither all your quaint enamell'd eyes,
That on the green turf suck the honied show'rs,
And purple all the ground with vernal flow'rs.
Bring the rathe primrose that forsaken dies,
The tufted crow-toe, and pale jessamine,
The white-pink, and the pansy freckt with jet,
The glowing violet,

The musk-rose, and the well attir'd woodbine,
With cowslips wan that hang the pensive head,
And every flow'r that sad embroidery wears:
Bid Amaranthus all his beauty shed,
And daffadillies fill their cups with tears,
To strew the laureat herse where Lycid lies.

For so to interpose a little ease,
Let our frail thoughts dally with false surmise.
Ah me! Whilst thee the shores, and sounding seas

Wash far away, where'er thy bones are hurl'd,
Whether beyond the stormy Hebrides,
Where thou perhaps under the whelming tide
Visit'st the bottom of the monstrous world;
Or whether thou, to our moist vows denied,
Sleep'st by the fable of Bellerus old,
Where the great vision of the guarded mount
Looks tow'rd Namancos and Bayona's hold;
Look homeward, Angel now, and melt with ruth:

And, O ye Dolphins, waft the hapless youth.

Weep no more, woeful shepherds, weep no
For Lycidas your sorrow is not dead; [more,
Sunk though he be beneath the wat'ry floor;
So sinks the day-star in the ocean bed,
And yet anon repairs his drooping head, [ore
And tricks his beams, and with new-spangled
Flames in the forehead of the morning sky;
So Lycidas sunk low, but mounted high,
Through the dear might of him that walk'd
the waves,

Where other groves and other streams along,
With nectar pure his oozy locks he laves,
And hears the unexpressive nuptial song,
In the blest kingdoms meek of joy and love.
There entertain him all the Saints above,
In solemn troops, and sweet societies,
That sing, and singing in their glory move,
And wipe the tears for ever from his eyes.
Now, Lycidas, the shepherds weep no more;
Henceforth thou art the genius of the shore,
In thy large recompense, and shalt be good
To all that wander in that perilous flood.

Thus sang the uncouth swain to th' oaks and rills,

While the still morn went out with sandals grey,
He touch'd the tender stops of various quills,
With eager thought warbling his Doric lay:
And now the sun had stretch'd out all the hills,
And now was dropt into the western bay;
At last he rose and twitch'd his mantle blue:
To-morrow to fresh woods and pastures new.

§ 4. Virtue, Wisdom, and Contemplation.

MILTON.

VIRTUE could see to do what Virtue would
By her own radiant light, though sun and
moon

Were in the flat sea sunk. And Wisdom's self
Oft seeks to sweet retired solitude,
Where with her best nurse, Contemplation,
She plumes her feathers and lets grow her wings,
That in the various bustle of resort
Were all too ruffled, and sometimes impair'd.
He that hath light within his own clear breast
May sit i' th' centre, and enjoy bright day:
But he that hides a dark soul, and foul thoughts,
Benighted walks under the mid-day sun;
Himself is his own dungeon.

§ 5. Meditation and Beauty. MILTON.

MUSING Meditation most affects
The pensive secrecy of desert cell,
Far from the cheerful haunt of men and herds,
And sits as safe as in a senate-house;
For who would rob a hermit of his weeds,
His few books, or his beads, or maple dish,
Or do his grey hairs any violence?
But Beauty, like the fair Hesperian tree
Laden with blooming gold, had need the guard
Of dragon watch, with unincharmed eye,
To save her blossoms, and defend her fruit
From the rash hand of bold incontinence.

§ 6. Chastity. MILTON.

SHE that has that, is clad in complete steel,
And like a quiver'd nymph with arrows keen
May trace huge forests, and unharbour'd heaths,
Infamous hills, and sandy perilous wilds,
Where through the sacred rays of chastity,
No savage, fierce bandite, or mountaineer,
Will dare to soil her virgin purity:
Yea there, where very desolation dwells,
By grotts, and caverns shagg'd with horrid
shades,
She may pass on with unblench'd majesty,
Be it not done in pride, or in presumption.

Some say no evil thing that walks by night,
In fog or fire, by lake, or moorish fen,
Blue meagre hag, or stubborn unlaid ghost,
That breaks his magic chains at curfeu time,
No goblin, or swart fairy of the mine,
Hath hurtful pow'r o'er true virginity.
Do you believe me yet, or shall I call
Antiquity from the old schools of Greece
To testify the arms of chastity?
Hence hath the huntress Dian' her dread bow,
Fair silver-shafted queen, for ever chaste,
Wherewith she tam'd the brindled lioness
And spotted mountain pard, but set at nought
The frivolous bolt of Cupid; gods and men
Fear'd her stern frown, and she was queen o' th'
woods.

What was the snaky-headed Gorgon shield,
That wise Minerva wore, unconquer'd virgin,
Wherewith she freez'd her foes to congeal'd stone,

But rigid looks of chaste austerity,
And noble grace that dash'd brute violence
With sudden adoration and blank awe?
So dear to Heaven is saintly Chastity,
That, when a soul is found sincerely so,
A thousand liveried angels lackey her,
Driving far off each thing of sin and guilt,
And in clear dream and solemn vision,
Tell her of things that no gross ear can hear,
Till oft converse with heavenly habitants
Begin to cast a beam on th' outward shape,
The unpolluted temple of the mind,
And turn it by degrees to the soul's essence,
Till all be made immortal: but when lust,
By unchaste looks, loose gestures, and foul talk,
But most by lewd and lavish act of sin,
Lets in defilement to the inward parts,
The soul grows clotted by contagion,
Imbodies, and imbrutes, till she quite lose
The divine property of her first being.
Such are those thick and gloomy shadows damp
Oft seen in charnel vaults, and sepulchres,
Ling'ring and sitting by a new-made grave,
As loth to leave the body that it lov'd,
And link'd itself by carnal sensuality
To a degenerate and degraded state.

§ 7. Philosophy. MILTON.

How charming is divine Philosophy!
Not harsh and crabbed, as dull fools suppose,
But musical as is Apollo's lute,
And a perpetual feast of nectar'd sweets,
Where no crude surfeit reigns!

§ 8. True Liberty. MILTON.

—TRUE Liberty
Is lost, which always with right reason dwells
Twinn'd, and from her hath no dividual being:
Reason in man obscur'd or not obey'd,
Immediately inordinate desires
And upstart passions catch the government
From reason, and to servitude reduce
Man, till then free.

§ 9. Powers of Body and Mind. MILTON.

OH how comely it is, and how reviving
To the spirits of just men, long oppress'd,
When God into the hands of their deliverer
Puts invincible might,
To quell the mighty of the earth, th' oppressor,
The brute and boisterous force of violent men,
Hardy and industrious to support
Tyrannic power, but raging to pursue
The righteous, and all such as honor truth!
He all their ammunition
And feats of war defeats;
With plain heroic magnitude of mind,
And celestial vigor arm'd,
Their armories and magazines contemns,
Renders them useless, while
With winged expedition,
Swift as the lightning glance, he executes
His errand on the wicked, who, surpris'd,
Lose their defence, distracted and amaz'd.

§ 10. On Shakspeare. MILTON.

WHAT needs my Shakspeare for his honor'd
bones
The labor of an age in piled stones,
Or that his hallow'd reliques should be hid
Under a starry-pointing pyramid?
Dear son of memory! great heir of fame!
What need'st thou such weak witness of thy
Thou in our wonder and astonishment [name?
Hast built thyself a live-long monument.
For whilst to th' shame of slow-endeavouring
art
Thy easy numbers flow, and that each heart
Hath from the leaves of thy unvalued book
Those Delphic lines with deep impression took,
Then thou our fancy of itself bereaving,
Dost make us marble with too much conceiv-
ing;
And so sepulchred in such pomp dost lie,
That kings for such a tomb would wish to die.

§ 11. Song: on May Morning. MILTON.

Now the bright morning-star, day's harbinger,
Comes dancing from the east, and leads with her
The flow'ry May, who from her green lap
throws
The yellow cowslip, and the pale primrose.
Hail, bounteous May, that dost inspire
Mirth, and youth, and warm desire!
Woods and groves are of thy dressing,
Hill and dale doth boast thy blessing.
Thus we salute thee with our early song,
And welcome thee, and wish thee long.

§ 12. Virtue and Evil. MILTON.

VIRTUE may be assail'd, but never hurt,
Surpris'd by unjust force, but not enthrall'd:
Yea, even that which mischief meant most harm,
Shall in the happy trial prove most glory;
But even on itself shall back recoil,
And mix no more with goodness, when at last,
Gather'd like scum, and settled to itself,
It shall be in eternal restless change

Self fed, and self-consumed: if this fail,
The pillar'd firmament is rottenness,
And earth's base built on stubble.

§ 13. Patience. MILTON.

MANY are the sayings of the wise,
In ancient and in modern books inroll'd,
Extolling Patience as the truest fortitude;
And to the bearing well of all calamities,
All chances incident to man's frail life,
Consolatories writ [sought,
With studied argument, and much persuasion
Lenient of grief and anxious thought;
But with th' afflicted, in his pangs, their sound
Little prevails, or rather seems a tune
Harsh, and of dissonant mood from his com-
Unless he feel within [plaint;
Some source of consolation from above,
Secret refreshings, that repair his strength,
And fainting spirits uphold.

§ 14. Sonnet: on his deceased Wife. MILTON.

METHOUGHT I saw my late espoused saint
Brought to me like Alcestis from the grave,
Whom Jove's great son to her glad husband gave, [faint.
Rescued from death by force, though pale and
Mine, as whom wash'd from spot of child-bed
Purification in the old law did save, [taint
And such, as yet once more I trust to have Full sight of her in heaven without restraint,
Came vested all in white, pure as her mind:
Her face was veil'd, yet to my fancied sight
Love, sweetness, goodness, in her person shin'd
So clear, as in no face with more delight.
But, oh! as to embrace me she inclin'd, [night.
I wak'd, she fled, and day brought back my § 15. Spirits. MILTON.

—SPIRITS, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Not tied or manacled with joint or limb,
Nor founded on the brittle strength of bones,
Like cumbrous flesh; but in what shape they choose,
Dilated or condens'd, bright or obscure,
Can execute their airy purposes,
And works of love or enmity fulfil.

§ 16. Pain. MILTON.

—WHAT avails [with pain,
Valour or strength, though matchless, quell'd
Which all subdues, and makes remiss the hands
Of mightiest? Sense of pleasure we may well
Spare out of life, perhaps, and not repine;
But live content, which is the calmest life:
But pain is perfect misery, the worst
Of evils! and, excessive, overturns
All patience.

§ 17. Hypocrisy. MILTON.

NEITHER man nor angel can discern
Hypocrisy, the only evil that walks
Invisible, except to God alone,
By his permissive will thro' heaven and earth:

And oft though Wisdom wake, Suspicion sleeps
At Wisdom's gate, and to Simplicity [ill
Resigns her charge, while Goodness thinks no
Where no ill seems.

§ 18. The Lady reproving Comus. MILTON.

I HATE when vice can bolt her arguments,
And virtue has no tongue to check her pride.
Impostor! do not charge most innocent Nature,
As if she would her children should be riotous
With her abundance! she, good cateress,
Means her provision only to the good,
That live according to her sober laws,
And holy dictate of spare Temperance:
If every just man, that now pines with want,
Had but a moderate and beseeching share
Of that which lewdly-pamper'd luxury
Now heaps upon some few with vast excess,
Nature's full blessings would be well dispens'd
In unsuperfluous even proportion,
And she no whit encumber'd with her store,
And then the giver would be better thank'd,
His praise due paid; for swinish gluttony
Ne'er looks to Heav'n amidst his gorgeous feast,
But with besotted, base ingratitude
Crams, and blasphemes his feeder. Shall I go on?

Or have I said enough? To him that dares Arm his profane tongue with contemptuous
words

Against the sun-clad pow'r of Chastity,
Fain would I something say, yet to what end?
Thou hast not ear, nor soul to apprehend
The sublime notion, and high mystery
That must be utter'd to unfold the sage
And serious doctrine of Virginity, [know
And thou art worthy that thou shouldst not
More happiness than this thy present lot.
Enjoy your dear wit, and gay rhetoric, [fence,
That hath so well been taught her dazzling
Thou art not fit to hear thyself convinc'd;
Yet should I try, the uncontrolled worth
Of this pure cause would kindle my rapt spirits
To such a flame of sacred vehemence, [thize,
That dumb things would be mov'd to sym-
And the brute earth would lend her nerves,
and shake,
Till all the magic structures, rear'd so high,
Were shatter'd into heaps o'er thy false head.

§ 19. Sonnet to the Nightingale. MILTON.

O NIGHTINGALE, that on yon bloomy spray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still,
Thou with fresh hope the lover's heart dost fill,
While the jolly hours lead on propitious May.
Thy liquid notes, that close the eye of day,
First heard before the shallow cuckoo's bill,
Portend success in love; oh if Jove's will
Have link'd that amorous pow'r to thy soft lay,
Now timely sing, ere the rude bird of hate
Foretel my hopeless doom in some grove nigh;
As thou from year to year hast sung too late
For my relief, yet hadst no reason why:
Whether the muse or love call thee his mate,
Both them I serve, and of their train am I.

§ 20. Echo: A Song. MILTON.

SWEET Echo, sweetest nymph! that liv'st
 Within thy airy shell, [unseen
 By slow Meander's margent green,
 And in the violet-embroider'd vale,
 Where the love-lorn nightingale
 Nightly to thee her sad song mourneth well;
 Canst thou not tell me of a gentle pair
 That likest thy Narcissus are?
 Oh if thou have
 Hide them in some flow'ry cave,
 Tell me but where, [sphere!
 Sweet queen of parley, daughter of the
 So mayst thou be translated to the skies,
 And give resounding grace to all Heav'n's harmonies.

VARIOUS DESCRIPTIONS FROM SPENSER.§ 21. Adonis's Garden.

BUT were it not that Time their troubler is,
 All that in this delightful garden grows
 Should happy be, and have immortal bliss:
 For here all plenty and all pleasure flowes,
 And sweet love gentle fits emongst them throws,
 Without fell rancour, or fond jealousy;
 Frankly each paramour his leman knows,
 Each bird his mate; ne any does envie
 Their goodly merriment, and gay felicitie.

Right in the midst of that paradise
 There stood a stately mount, on whose round top

A gloomy grove of myrtle trees did rise,
 Whose shadie boughs sharp steele did never lop,
 Nor wicked beasts their tender buds did crop:

But, like a girlond compassed the hight,
 And from their fruitfull sides sweet gumes did drop,

That all the ground with precious dew bedight,
 Threw forth most dainty odours, and most sweet delight!

And, in the thickest covert in that shade,
 There was a pleasant arbour, not by art,

But of the trees own inclination made,
 Which knitting their ranke branches part to
 part,

With wanton ivie-twine entail'd athwart,
 And eglantine and caprisole emong,

Fashion'd above within her inmost part,
 That neither Phœbus' beams could through them throng,

Nor Æolus' sharp blast could work them any wrong.

And all about grew every sort of flowre,
 To which sad lovers were transform'd of yore;

Fresh Hyacinthus, Phœbus' paramoure,
 And dearest love;

Foolish Narcisse, that likes the wat'ry shore;
 Sad Aramanthus, made a flowre but late;

Sad Aramanthus, in whose purple gore
 Meseemes I see Amintas' wretched fate,
 To whom sweet poets verse hath given endless
 date.

§ 22. Affections.

How great a toil to stem the raging flood,
 When beauty stirs the mass of youthful blood!
 When the swoln veins with circling torrents
 rise,

And softer passions speak through wishing eyes!
 The voice of reason's drown'd; in vain it speaks,
 When hasty anger dyes the gloomy cheeks;
 And vengeful pride hurries the mortal on
 To deeds unheard, and cruelties unknown.

Then 'gan the Palmer thus: Most wretched
 man,

That to affections does the bridle lend:

In their beginning they are weak and wan,
 But soon, thro' suffrance, growe to fearfull end;
 Whiles they are weak, betimes with them contend:

For when they once to perfect strength do
 growe,
 Strong warres they make, and cruel batt'ry bend

'Gainst fort of reason, it to overthrowe:
 Wrath, jealousy, grief, love, this 'squire have laid thus lowe.

Wrath, jealousy, grief, love, do thus expell:
 Wrath is a fire, and jealousy a weed;

Grief is a flood, and love a monster fell;
 The fire of sparke, the weed of little seed,
 The flood of drops, the monster filth did breed:
 But sparks, seed, drops, and filth do thus
 decay;

The sparks soon quench, the springing seed
 outweed,

The drops dry up, and filth wipe clean away;
 So shall wrath, jealousy, grief, love, die and decay.

§ 23. Ambition.

A ROUT of people there assembled were,
 Of every sort and nation under sky,

Which with great uprore preassed, to draw
 near

To th' upper part, where was advanced hie
 A stately seat of soveraigne majestie,

And thereon sate a woman gorgeous gay,
 And richly clad in robes of royaltie.

That never earthly prince in such array
 His glory did enchaunce, and pompous pride display.

Her face right wondrous faire did seem to be,
 That her broad beauties beam great brightness threw

Through the dim shade, that all men here might see:

Yet was not that same her own native hew,
 But wrought by art; and counterfeited shew,
 Thereby more lovers unto her to call;

Nath'less, more heavenly faire in deed and view
 She by creation was, till she did fall;

Thenceforth she sought for helps to cloke her crimes withall.

There, as in glist'ring glory she did sit,
 She held a great gold chain ylinked well,

Whose upper end to highest heaven was knit,
 And lower part did reach to lowest hell;

And all that prease did round about her swell,
 To catchen hold of that long chaine, thereby

To climb aloft, and others to excell;
That was Ambition, rash desire to stie;
And ev'ry link thereof a step of dignitie.

Some thought to raise themselves to high degree
By riches and unrighteous reward;
Some by close should'ring, some by flatteree;
Others through friends, others for base reward;
And all, by wrong ways, for themselves pre-
par'd.

Those that were up themselves, kept others
lowe;
Those that were lowe themselves held others
hard,
Ne suffer'd them to rise, or greater growe;
But every one did strive his fellow down to throwe.

O sacred hunger of ambitious mindes,
And impotent desire of men to raigne!
Who neither dread of God, that devils bindes,
Nor lawes of men that commonweals containe,
Nor bands of nature, that wild beasts restraine,
Can keep from outrage, and from doing wrong,
Where they may hope a kingdom to obtaine,
No faith so firm, no trust can be so strong,
No love so lasting then, that may endure long.

§ 24. Anguish.

WHAT equal torment to the grieve of minde,
And pyning anguish hid in gentle heart,
That inly feeds itself with thoughts unkinde,
And nourisheth her own consuming smart?
What medicine can any leache's art
Yield such a sore, that doth her grievance
And will to none her maladie impart? [hide,

§ 25. Arbour.

AND over him art striveing to compaire
With nature, did an arbour green dispred,
Framed with wanton ivie, flowering faire,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread
His pricking armes, entayl'd with roses red,
Which dainty odours round about him threw;
And all within with flowres was garnished,
That, when mild Zephyrus emongst them
blew,
Did breathe out bounteous smells, and painted colors shew.

§ 26. Avarice.

AND greedy Avarice by him did ride,
Upon a camel loaden all with gold;
Two iron coffers hung on either side,
With precious metall full as they might hold,
And in his lap a heap of coin he told;
For of his wicked pelf his god he made,
And unto hell himself for money sold:
Accursed usury was all his trade, [waide.
And right and wrong ylike in equall balance
At last he came into a gloomy glade, [light,
Cover'd with boughs and shrubs from heaven's
Whereas he sitting found, in secret shade,
An uncouth, salvage, and uncivill wight,

Of griesly hew, and foul ill-favour'd sight;
His face with smoake was tann'd, and eyes
were blear'd;
His head and beard with soot were ill bedight;
His coale-black hands did seem to have been sear'd
In smithe's fire-spiting forge, and nails like claws appear'd.

His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Whose glistring gloss, darkened with filthy
dust,

Well it appeared to have been of old
A work of rich entaile, and curious mould,
Woven with anticks, and wild imagery;
And in his lap a mass of coine he told,
And turn'd upside down, to feed his eye,
And covetous desire, with his huge treasury.

And round about him lay, on every side,
Great heaps of gold, that never could be spent;
Of which, some were ore not purifide
Of Mulciber's devouring element;
Some others were new driven, and distent
Into great ingots, and to wedges square;
Some in round plates withouten monument;
But most were stamp'd, and in their metall bare
The antick shapes of kings and Cæsars strange and rare.

§ 27. Bashfulness.

THE whiles the fairie knight did entertaine
Another damsel of that gentle crew
That was right faire, and modest of demaine,
But that too oft she chang'd her native hue.
Strange was her tire, and all her garments blue,
Close round about her tuckt, with many a plight:

Upon her fist, the bird that shunneth view,
And keeps in coverts close from living wight,
Didsit, as if asham'd how rude Dandid herdight.
So long as Guyon with her commun'd,
Unto the ground she cast her modest eye,
And ever and anone, with rosie red,
The bashfull blood her snowy cheeks did die,
And her became as polish'd ivorie,
Which cunning craftsman's hand hath overlaid

With fair vermillion, or pure lastery.
Great wonder had the knight to see the maid
So strangely passioned, and to her gently said;

Fair damsell, seemeth by your troubled cheare
That either me too bold yee weene, this wise
You to molest, or other ill to feare,
That in the secret of your heart close lyes,
From whence it doth, as cloud from sea, arise.
If it be I, of pardon I you pray;
But if ought else that I mote not devise,
I will (if please you it discrue) assay
To ease you of that ill, so wisely as I may.

She answer'd nought, but more abasht for
shame,
Held down her head, the whiles her lovely face
The flushing blood with blushing did inflame,
And the strong passion marr'd her modest grace,

That Guyon marvail'd at her uncouth case:
Till Alma him bespake, Why wonder yee,
Fair sir, at that which you so much imbrace?
She is the fountaine of your modestee:
You shame-fac'd are, but Shame-fac'dness itself is shee.

Another.

AND next to her sate goodly Shame-fac'dness;
Ne ever durst her eyes from ground up-reare,
Ne ever once did look up from her dress,
As if some blame of evil she did feare,
That in her cheek made roses oft appeare.

§ 28. Beauty.

NOUGHT is there under heav'n's wide hollow-
ness
That moves more dear compassion of mind,
Than beauty brought t' unworthy wretched-
ness

By envy's snares or fortunes's freaks unkind:
I, whether lately through her brightness blind,
Or through allegiance and fast fealty,
Which I do owe unto all womankind,
Feel my heart pierc'd with so great agony,
When such I see, that all for pity I could die.
Eftsoons there stepped forth
A goodly lady, clad in hunter's weed,
That seem'd to be a woman of great worth,
And by her stately portance borne of heavenly birth.

Her face so fair, as flesh it seemed not,
But heavenly portraict of bright angels hiew,
Clear as the sky withouten blame or blot,
Through goodly mixture of complexions dew,
And in her cheeks the vermill' red did shew
Like roses in a bed of lillies shed,
The which ambrosial odours from them threw,
And gazers sense with double pleasure fed,
Able to heal the sick, and to revive the dead.

In her fair eyes two living lamps did flame,
Kindled above, at th' heavenly Maker's light,
And darted fiery beams out of the same,
So passing pearceant, and so wondrous bright,
That quite bereav'd the rash beholders of their
sight:

In them the blinded god his lustful fire
To kindle oft assay'd, but had no might;
For, with dread majesty, and awful ire,
She broke his wanton darts, and quenched base
desire.

Nought under heaven so strongly doth allure
The sense of man, and all his mind possess,
As beauty's love-bait, that doth procure
Great warriors of their rigour to repress,
And mighty hands forget their manliness,
Drawn with the pow'rofan heart-robbing eye,
And wrapt in fetters of a golden tress,
That can with melting pleasance mollify
Their harden'd hearts, enur'd to blood and
